DOCKET

SUPREME COURT OF THE UNITED STATES

No. 10-277
Title: Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., Petitioner
v.
Betty Dukes, et al.
Docketed: August 25, 2010
Linked with 10A19
Lower Ct: United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit
Case Nos.: (04-16688, 04-16720)
Decision Date: April 26, 2010
Questions Presented

---Date---	-------Proceedings and Orders---------------------
Jul 2 2010	Application (10A19) to extend the time to file a petition for a writ of certiorari from July 25, 2010 to August 25, 2010, submitted to Justice Kennedy.
Jul 7 2010	Application (10A19) granted by Justice Kennedy extending the time to file until August 25, 2010.
Aug 25 2010	Petition for a writ of certiorari filed. (Response due September 24, 2010)
Sep 3 2010	Order extending time to file response to petition to and including October 25, 2010.
Sep 13 2010	Consent to the filing of amicus curiae briefs, in support of either party or of neither party, received from counsel for the petitioner.
Sep 14 2010	Consent to the filing of amicus curiae briefs, in support of either party or of neither party, received from counsel for the respondents.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amicus curiae of Intel Corporation filed.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amicus curiae of Chamber of Commerce of the United States filed.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amicus curiae of DRI - The Voice of the Defense Bar filed.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amicus curiae of Equal Employment Advisory Council filed.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amicus curiae of Washington Legal Foundation filed.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amici curiae of Altria Group, Inc., et al. filed.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amicus curiae of Pacific Legal Foundation filed.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amicus curiae of Retail Litigation Center, Inc. filed.
Sep 24 2010	Brief amicus curiae of California Employment Law Council filed.
Oct 21 2010	Brief of respondents Betty Dukes, et al. in opposition filed.
Oct 29 2010	Reply of petitioner Wal-Mart Stores, Incorporated filed.
Nov 1 2010	DISTRIBUTED for Conference of November 23, 2010.
Nov 29 2010	DISTRIBUTED for Conference of December 3, 2010.
Dec 6 2010	Petition GRANTED limited to Question I presented by the petition. In addition to Question I: the parties are directed to brief and argue the following question: "Whether the class certification ordered under Rule 23(b)(2) was consistent with Rule 23(a)."

Dec 23 2010	SET FOR ARGUMENT Tuesday, March 29, 2011
Dec 29 2010	Consent to the filing of amicus curiae briefs, in support of either party or of neither party, received from counsel for the petitioner.
Jan 12 2011	Consent to the filing of amicus curiae briefs, in support of either party or of neither party, received from counsel for the respondents.
Jan 20 2011	Joint appendix filed. (Jt appendix in 3 volumes) (Statement of costs filed)
Jan 20 2011	Brief of petitioner Wal-Mart Stores, Incorporated filed.
Jan 25 2011	CIRCULATED.
Jan 25 2011	Brief amicus curiae of California Employment Law Council filed. (Distributed)
Jan 26 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Pacific Legal Foundation filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Intel Corporation filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Association of Global Automakers, Inc. filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Chamber of Commerce of the United States filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amici curiae of Society for Human Resource Management and HR Policy Association filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of International Association of Defense Counsel filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amici curiae of Altria Group, Inc., et al. filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Costco Wholesale Corporation filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Equal Employment Advisory Council filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Securities Industry and Financial Markets Association filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Retail Litigation Center, Inc. filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Washington Legal Foundation filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amicus curiae of DRI - The Voice of the Defense Bar filed. (Distributed)
Jan 27 2011	Brief amici curiae of Atlantic Legal Foundation and New England Legal Foundation filed. (Distributed)
Feb 4 2011	Record received from U.S.C.A. for 9th Circuit. (1 box)
Feb 20 2011	Record received from U.S.D.C. for Northern District of San Francisco. (12 boxes)
Feb 22 2011	Brief of respondents Betty Dukes, et al. filed. (Distributed)
Feb 25 2011	Brief amici curiae of Labor Economists and Statisticians filed. (Distributed)
Feb 28 2011	Brief amicus curiae of American Association for Justice filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amici curiae of U.S. Women's Chamber of Commerce, et al. filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Law and Economics Professors filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amici curiae of Public Justice, P.C., et al. filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amici curiae of Consumers Union of United States, Inc., et al. filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amici curiae of National Employment Lawyers Association, et al. filed. (Distributed)

Mar 1 2011	Brief amici curiae of American Sociological Association, et al. filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Institute for Women's Policy Research filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Public Citizen, Inc. filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amici curiae of United Food and Commercial Workers International Union, et al. filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amici curiae of NAACP Legal Defense and Educational Fund, Inc., et al. filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amicus curiae of Civil Procedure Professors filed. (Distributed)
Mar 1 2011	Brief amici curiae of American Civil Liberties Union and National Women's Law Center, et al. filed. (Distributed)
Mar 17 2011	Reply of petitioner Wal-Mart Stores, Incorporated filed.
Mar 29 2011	Argued. For petitioner: Theodore J. Boutrous, Jr., Los Angeles, Cal. For respondents: Joseph M. Sellers, Washington, D. C.

PETITION
FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI

169 ①

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED

10-277 AUG 25 2010

No. OFFICE OF THE CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,

Respondents.

On Petition For A Writ Of Certiorari To The United States Court Of Appeals For The Ninth Circuit

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

THEODORE B. OLSON
MARK A. PERRY
AMIR C. TAYRANI
GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER LLP
1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 955-8500

THEODORE J. BOUTROUS, JR.
Counsel of Record
RACHEL S. BRASS
THEANE EVANGELIS KAPUR
GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER LLP
333 South Grand Avenue
Los Angeles, CA 90071
(213) 229-7000
tboutrous@gibsondunn.com

Counsel for Petitioner

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

In a sharply divided 6-5 decision that conflicts with many decisions of this Court and other circuits, the en banc Ninth Circuit affirmed the certification of the largest employment class action in history. This nationwide class includes every woman employed for any period of time over the past decade, in any of Wal-Mart's approximately 3,400 separately managed stores, 41 regions, and 400 districts, and who held positions in any of approximately 53 departments and 170 different job classifications. The millions of class members collectively seek billions of dollars in monetary relief under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, claiming that tens of thousands of Wal-Mart managers inflicted monetary injury on each and every individual class member in the same manner by intentionally discriminating against them because of their sex, in violation of the company's express anti-discrimination policy.

The questions presented are:

I. Whether claims for monetary relief can be certified under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2)—which by its terms is limited to injunctive or corresponding declaratory relief—and, if so, under what circumstances.

II. Whether the certification order conforms to the requirements of Title VII, the Due Process Clause, the Seventh Amendment, the Rules Enabling Act, and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23.

PARTIES TO THE PROCEEDING AND RULE 29.6 STATEMENT

The caption contains the names of all the parties to the proceeding below.

Pursuant to this Court's Rule 29.6, undersigned counsel state that Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. has no parent corporation and that no other publicly held corporation owns 10% or more of its stock.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

OPINIONS BELOW 1

JURISDICTION 1

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED 1

STATEMENT 1

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION 8

I. THIS COURT SHOULD GRANT REVIEW TO DECIDE WHETHER AND HOW RULE 23(B)(2) APPLIES TO MONETARY CLAIMS AND RESOLVE THE THREE-WAY CONFLICT ON THIS QUESTION 9

  A. The Circuits Have Split Three Ways 10

  B. The Ninth Circuit's Standard Is Clearly Wrong 12

  C. The Question Is Important And Recurring 16

II. THE DECISION BELOW CREATES OR EXACERBATES NUMEROUS ADDITIONAL CONFLICTS CONCERNING RULE 23, TITLE VII, THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE, THE SEVENTH AMENDMENT, AND THE RULES ENABLING ACT 17

  A. The Ninth Circuit Improperly Relieved Plaintiffs Of Their Burden Of Proof 18

  B. The Ninth Circuit Improperly Stripped Wal-Mart Of Its Right Of Defense 27

  C. The Issues Are Important and Recurring 33

CONCLUSION 34

APPENDIX A: Opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit 1a

APPENDIX B: Order of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California Granting in Part and Denying in Part Motion for Class Certification 162a

APPENDIX C: Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit Granting Rehearing En Banc 284a

APPENDIX D: Statutory Provisions Involved 286a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page(s)

CASES

Adams v. Robertson,
520 U.S. 83 (1997) 10

Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth,
300 U.S. 227 (1937) 15

Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp.,
151 F.3d 402 (5th Cir. 1998) .... passim

In re Allstate Ins. Co.,
400 F.3d 505 (7th Cir. 2005) 29

Am. Honda Motor Co. v. Allen,
600 F.3d 813 (7th Cir. 2010) 25

Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor,
521 U.S. 591 (1997) .... passim

Ashcroft v. Iqbal,
129 S. Ct. 1937 (2009) 22

Bacon v. Honda of Am. Mfg., Inc.,
370 F.3d 565 (6th Cir. 2004) 23

Barnes v. Am. Tobacco Co.,
161 F.3d 127 (3d Cir. 1998) 13

Bolin v. Sears, Roebuck & Co.,
231 F.3d 970 (5th Cir. 2000) 14

Broussard v. Meineke Disc. Muffler Shops, Inc.,
155 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1998) 27

Brown v. Nucor Corp.,
576 F.3d 149 (4th Cir. 2009) 21

City of Los Angeles v. Lyons,
461 U.S. 95 (1983) 15

Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank of Richmond,
467 U.S. 867 (1984) 27

Cooper v. Southern Co.,
390 F.3d 695 (11th Cir. 2004) 11, 21, 23, 31

Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms., Inc.,
509 U.S. 579 (1993) 24, 25

E. Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez,
431 U.S. 395 (1977) 21

Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin,
417 U.S. 156 (1974) 22

Eubanks v. Billington,
110 F.3d 87 (D.C. Cir. 1997) 16

Feltner v. Columbia Pictures Television, Inc.,
523 U.S. 340 (1998) 31

Firefighters Local Union No. 1784 v. Stotts,
467 U.S. 561 (1984) 31

Garcia v. Johanns,
444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 20, 23

Gen. Tel. Co. of the Sw. v. Falcon,
457 U.S. 147 (1982) .... passim

Goodman v. Lukens Steel Co.,
777 F.2d 113 (3d Cir. 1985) 21

Great-West Life & Annuity Ins. Co. v. Knudson,
534 U.S. 204 (2002) 15

Griffin v. Dugger,
823 F.2d 1476 (11th Cir. 1987) 21

Harris v. Nelson,
394 U.S. 286 (1969) 14

Hilao v. Estate of Marcos,
103 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 1996) 6, 30, 32

Hohider v. United Parcel Serv., Inc.,
574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009) .... passim

Holsey v. Armour & Co.,
743 F.2d 199 (4th Cir. 1984) 21, 23

In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig.,
552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2009) 22, 25, 26, 32

Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States,
431 U.S. 324 (1977) 6, 23, 27, 28

In re IPO Sec. Litig.,
471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006) 22, 25, 26

Jefferson v. Ingersoll Int'l Inc.,
195 F.3d 894 (7th Cir. 1999) 14

Koon v. United States,
518 U.S. 81 (1996) 17

Leatherman v. Tarrant Cnty. Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit,
507 U.S. 163 (1993) 14

Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.,
550 U.S. 618 (2007) 19, 23

Lemon v. Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs,
216 F.3d 577 (7th Cir. 2000) 11, 14, 29, 31

Lindsey v. Normet,
405 U.S. 56 (1972) 30

Love v. Johanns,
439 F.3d 723 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 21

Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife,
504 U.S. 555 (1992) 15

McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co.,
522 F.3d 215 (2d Cir. 2008) .... passim

Molski v. Gleich,
318 F.3d 937 (9th Cir. 2003) 11, 17

In re Monumental Life Ins. Co.,
365 F.3d 408 (5th Cir. 2004) 15

In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 2008) 15

Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp.,
527 U.S. 815 (1999) .... passim

Philip Morris USA v. Williams,
549 U.S. 346 (2007) 31

Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts,
472 U.S. 797 (1985) 14

In re PolyMedica Corp. Sec. Litig.,
432 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2005) 26

Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins,
490 U.S. 228 (1989) 13

Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr.,
435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006) 11, 20, 28, 31

Richards v. Delta Air Lines, Inc.,
453 F.3d 525 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 10

Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R. Co.,
267 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 2001) 11, 17

Rossini v. Ogilvy & Mather, Inc.,
798 F.2d 590 (2d Cir. 1986) 21

Segar v. Smith,
738 F.2d 1249 (D.C. Cir. 1984) 31

Shipes v. Trinity Indus.,
987 F.2d 311 (5th Cir. 1993) 21

Stastny v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co.,
628 F.2d 267 (4th Cir. 1980) 23

Sullivan v. DB Invs., Inc.,
__ F.3d __, 2010 WL 2736947
(3d Cir. July 13, 2010) 29

Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co.,
445 F.3d 311 (4th Cir. 2006) 11, 14, 16, 29

Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown,
511 U.S. 117 (1994) .... passim

Tull v. United States,
481 U.S. 412 (1987) 31

Unger v. Amedisys Inc.,
401 F.3d 316 (5th Cir. 2005) 25

United States v. Armour & Co.,
402 U.S. 673 (1971) 30

Vuyanich v. Republic Nat'l Bank of Dallas,
723 F.2d 1195 (5th Cir. 1984) 21

Wachtel v. Guardian Life Ins. Co.,
453 F.3d 179 (3d Cir. 2006) 32

Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust,
487 U.S. 977 (1988) 19, 20, 24, 33

West v. Prudential Sec., Inc.,
282 F.3d 935 (7th Cir. 2002) 26

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

U.S. Const. amend. V .... passim

U.S. Const. amend. VII 2, 17, 31

STATUTES

28 U.S.C. § 1254 1

28 U.S.C. § 2072(b) .... passim

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(3) 26

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(A) 28

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B) 28

Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act of 2009,
Pub. L. No. 111-2, 123 Stat. 5 19

RULES

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 .... passim

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Note, Certifying Classes & Subclasses in Title VII Suits, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 619 (1986) 21

Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary (11th ed. 2004) 12

John Monahan et al., Essay, Contextual Evidence of Gender Discrimination: The Ascendance of "Social Frameworks," 94 Va. L. Rev. 1715 (2008) 24

Richard A. Nagareda, Class Certification in the Age of Aggregate Proof, 84 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 97 (2009) 33

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI

OPINIONS BELOW

The opinion of the en banc court of appeals (App. 1a–161a) is published at 603 F.3d 571. Superseded panel opinions are reported at 509 F.3d 1168 and 474 F.3d 1214. The district court's certification order (App. 162a–283a) is published at 222 F.R.D. 137. A related evidentiary order is published at 222 F.R.D. 189.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the court of appeals was entered on April 26, 2010. On July 7, 2010, Justice Kennedy extended the time for filing this petition to August 25, 2010. No. 10A19. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Pertinent provisions of Title VII, the Rules Enabling Act, and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 are reproduced in the Appendix (at 286a–302a).

STATEMENT

The district court certified a sprawling nationwide class consisting of all current and former female employees of Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., estimated at the time to comprise at least 1.5 million women. The Ninth Circuit's 6-5 en banc decision upholding the certification order adopts standards that violate the rights of both defendants and absent class members and contradicts decisions of this Court and other circuits.

The Ninth Circuit created an acknowledged three-way circuit split on the standard for determining when claims for monetary relief can be certified as a class action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2), which on its face applies only to claims for injunctive or corresponding declaratory relief. The majority expressly rejected both of the standards previously articulated in the circuits (one of which had been applied by the district court) and announced a new standard, thus exacerbating the longstanding conflict and confusion on this issue in the lower courts. This Court has previously granted review to address variants of this issue, but has never decided it. It is now time to do so.

The Ninth Circuit also departed from this Court's precedents, and created conflicts with virtually every other circuit, on several other important and recurring issues in class action and employment law. The majority absolved plaintiffs from adducing "significant proof" of an unlawfully discriminatory practice or policy that affected all class members in the same manner, as required by this Court and other circuits. The court then swept aside the need to determine millions of individual issues by relieving plaintiffs of their burden of proving intent and injury and by stripping Wal-Mart of its right to assert crucial defenses explicitly established by Title VII. This approach, which violates the Rules Enabling Act, the Due Process Clause, and the Seventh Amendment, contradicts numerous decisions of this Court and other circuits and warrants review.

1. Wal-Mart is the Nation's largest private employer. At the time of certification (in 2004), it operated approximately 3,400 stores in the United States and employed more than a million people. App. 163a.

At the time of certification, Wal-Mart's complex retail operation functioned as follows: It was divided into seven divisions, which were split into 41 separate regions and then further divided into approximately 400 individual districts. App. 114a (Ikuta, J., dissenting). Each of Wal-Mart's regions consisted of 80 to 85 stores, employing 80 to 500 people per store. Ibid. Store managers who ran individual stores were responsible for hiring and promoting hourly employees in their respective stores. Ibid. Within each store, assistant managers (who were salaried) reported to store managers. Ibid. The company's hourly retail employees worked in 53 different departments and 170 different job classifications, including cashiers, team leads, and department managers. Ibid.

Wal-Mart's company-wide policy bars discrimination based on gender. As the district court recognized, "Wal-Mart has earned national diversity awards and its executives discuss diversity and include it in company handbooks and trainings. The company has diversity goals, performance assessments, and penalties for EEO violations." App. 195a (citations omitted).

The six class representatives are current or former Wal-Mart employees. They allege that, by delegating substantial discretion to individual managers, Wal-Mart "fosters or facilitates gender stereotyping and discrimination, . . . and that this discrimination is common to all women who work or have worked in Wal-Mart stores." App. 5a. On behalf of all women employed at any Wal-Mart retail store since 1998, they seek "injunctive and declaratory relief, back pay, and punitive damages, but not traditional 'compensatory' damages." Ibid.

Over Wal-Mart's objections, the district court determined that plaintiffs' evidence satisfied the requirements of Rule 23(a) and (b)(2) and certified a class of "[a]ll women employed at any Wal-Mart domestic retail store at any time since December 26, 1998, who have been or may be subjected to Wal-Mart's challenged pay and management track promotions policies and practices." App. 283a.

2. On Rule 23(f) review, the Ninth Circuit issued three sharply divided decisions—a 2-1 panel decision, a 2-1 amended panel decision, and a 6-5 en banc decision—in which the majority voted to affirm, in substantial part, the certification order. App. 111a; see also 509 F.3d 1168; 474 F.3d 1214. The dissenters maintained that this unprecedented certification "departs from the language and intent of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, ignores Supreme Court mandates, and neglects the rights of defendants." App. 113a (Ikuta, J., dissenting). And "[i]t sacrifices the rights of women injured by sex discrimination." 509 F.3d at 1200 (Kleinfeld, J., dissenting).

a. With respect to Rule 23(a)'s "commonality" requirement, the en banc majority concluded that "[e]vidence of Wal-Mart's subjective decision-making policies suggests a common legal or factual question regarding whether Wal-Mart's policies or practices are discriminatory." App. 78a. While acknowledging "the absence of a specific discriminatory policy," the majority held that plaintiffs were not required to establish such a policy at the certification stage, and that Wal-Mart's objections went to the "merits" of plaintiffs' claims. Id. at 59a.

As to the "typicality" requirement of Rule 23(a), the majority simply declared: "Even though individual employees in different stores with different managers may have received different levels of pay or may have been denied promotion or promoted at different rates, because the discrimination they claim to have suffered occurred through alleged common practices—e.g., excessively subjective decision making in a corporate culture of uniformity and gender stereotyping— . . . their claims are sufficiently typical . . . ." App. 80a.

Regarding Rule 23(b)(2)'s applicability to monetary relief claims, the majority recognized that the Ninth Circuit had "previously joined the Second Circuit in adopting a test that focuses on the plaintiffs' subjective intent in bringing a lawsuit," while "several other circuits use the 'incidental damages standard' that was first enunciated by the Fifth Circuit." App. 85a. Rather than reconciling this conflict, however, the majority rejected the Ninth Circuit's previous standard and "instead" adopted a third standard under which monetary claims may be certified under Rule 23(b)(2) if they are not "superior in strength" (as determined using a new multi-factor test) to the requested injunction. Id. at 86a. Although most of the class members are former employees who lack standing even to secure injunctive or declaratory relief and collectively seek to recover billions of dollars in backpay, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the certification order, announcing a categorical rule that Title VII backpay claims are "fully consistent with the certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class action." Id. at 92a.

While the majority vacated the certification of plaintiffs' claims for punitive damages, it suggested that those claims might be certifiable on remand under Rule 23(b)(2) or (b)(3) (App. 99a), rejecting the need for any "individualized punitive damages determinations." Id. at 98a.

The court also rejected Wal-Mart's argument that, by eliminating traditional individual hearings regarding entitlement to monetary relief, the district court's trial plan violated its "due process rights, as well as section 706(g)(2) of Title VII, the Rules Enabling Act, and the Supreme Court's decision in [International Brotherhood of] Teamsters [v. United States], 431 U.S. [324], 359–60 [(1977)]." App. 104a & nn.51–53. The court "express[ed] no opinion regarding Wal-Mart's objections to the district court's tentative trial plan (or that trial plan itself)," but instead noted that "there are a range of possibilities." Id. at 105. The court suggested that a statistical sampling method or the district court's formula plan might be invoked. It nevertheless declined to endorse either approach. Id. at 105a–110a & n.57 (citing Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767, 782–87 (9th Cir. 1996)).

b. Judge Graber concurred on the ground that it makes no difference for class certification purposes whether the employer had 500 or 500,000 female employees. App. 111a–112a.

c. Judge Ikuta, dissenting, demonstrated that each of the majority's principal holdings is inconsistent with this Court's precedents or in conflict with the decisions of other circuits. See, e.g., App. 121a–122a, 138a–139a, 154a–157a. She showed that the decision is irreconcilable with General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982), which is both "the sole Supreme Court case addressing Rule 23(a) in the Title VII discrimination context" and "directly on point in this case." App. 122a. She explained that "[a]ny reasonable scrutiny of the evidence in this case compels the conclusion that although the six plaintiffs here may have individualized claims of discrimination, they cannot represent a class of 1.5 million past and present employees." Id. at 138a.

Judge Ikuta also challenged the majority's invocation of Rule 23(b)(2), not only because it "br[oke] with the Second Circuit . . . as well as the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eleventh Circuits" and "creat[ed a] three-way circuit split" (App. 154a n.25), but also because it conflicts with the Rule's language and history and with this Court's precedents and the Rules Enabling Act. Id. at 154a–160a. And she established that this case cannot be tried in a manner that protects the statutory and constitutional rights of Wal-Mart and the absent class members. Id. at 145a–147a.

d. Chief Judge Kozinski also wrote a separate dissent, directly responding to Judge Graber's concurrence:

> Maybe there'd be no difference between 500 employees and 500,000 employees if they all had similar jobs, worked at the same half-billion square foot store and were supervised by the same managers. But the half-million members of the majority's approved class held a multitude of jobs, at different levels of Wal-Mart's hierarchy, for variable lengths of time, in 3,400 stores, sprinkled across 50 states, with a kaleidoscope of supervisors (male and female), subject to a variety of regional policies that all differed depending on each class member's job, location and period of employment.

App. 161a. "They have little in common," he concluded, "but their sex and this lawsuit." Ibid.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

The class certified by the district court was estimated to include over 1.5 million former and current female Wal-Mart employees who held different jobs in different stores in different States under the supervision of different managers. The class is larger than the active-duty personnel in the Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines, and Coast Guard combined—making it the largest employment class action in history by several orders of magnitude. See App. 244a. The majority decision conflicts with every pertinent decision of this Court and many decisions of other circuits on numerous important, recurring issues in class-action litigation, both in discrimination cases and generally.

This Court has cautioned against "judicial inventiveness" in class-action procedure, warning that "the rulemakers' prescriptions for class actions may be endangered by those who embrace Rule 23 too enthusiastically just as they are by those who approach the Rule with distaste." Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 620, 629 (1997) (internal quotation marks and alterations omitted). The Court has therefore "call[ed] for caution" where, as here, "individual stakes are high and disparities among class members great." Id. at 625. The majority's decision demonstrates that "the certification in this case does not follow the counsel of caution." Ibid.

As attested by the widespread attention this case has received in the national and academic press, it is one of the most important class-action decisions since the modern Rule 23 was adopted in 1966 and warrants this Court's review.

I. THIS COURT SHOULD GRANT REVIEW TO DECIDE WHETHER AND HOW RULE 23(B)(2) APPLIES TO MONETARY CLAIMS AND RESOLVE THE THREE-WAY CONFLICT ON THIS QUESTION

The majority decision expressly created a three-way circuit split on the standard for determining whether claims for monetary relief can be certified under Rule 23(b)(2). App. 85a–88a. The Ninth Circuit rejected the minority standard (applied now only in the Second Circuit) as well as the majority standard (applied in every other circuit to have considered the issue) in favor of a new multi-factor inquiry. This conflict warrants review, and all the more so because the Ninth Circuit's decision is so problematic. The issue frequently arises in class-action litigation and should be resolved consistently regardless of the forum in which suit is brought.

Rule 23(b)(2) allows class certification if the defendant "has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) (emphases added). Certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is "mandatory"—it does not require notice to absent class members, and it does not permit them to opt out of the class. See Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 842–47 (1999).

This Court has recognized the constitutional problems inherent in an overbroad application of mandatory certifications, id. at 842, and it has suggested that "actions seeking monetary damages . . . can be certified only under Rule 23(b)(3), which permits opt-out," requires notice to absent class members, and imposes strict requirements of predominance, superiority, and manageability, "and not under [Rule 23(b)(2)], which do[es] not," Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117, 121 (1994) (per curiam); see also Amchem, 521 U.S. at 614–17. The Court has explained that Rule 23(b)(3)'s "predominance" requirement—which provides that common issues must "predominate" over individual issues—is a "vital prescription" governing monetary claims that is "far more demanding" than Rule 23(a)'s commonality requirement. Amchem, 521 U.S. at 622–24. Plaintiffs here cannot meet the Rule 23(b)(3) requirements, which is why they are invoking Rule 23(b)(2).

This Court has twice granted certiorari to consider variants of this issue. Adams v. Robertson, 520 U.S. 83 (1997) (per curiam); Ticor, 511 U.S. 117. In neither case, however, did the Court ultimately decide whether, or in what circumstances, Rule 23(b)(2) can be used to certify monetary claims.

This case is an ideal vehicle for providing much-needed clarity to the lower courts on this important and recurring question of class-action procedure.

A. The Circuits Have Split Three Ways

Although Rule 23(b)(2) authorizes certification only of claims for "injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief," some courts have relied on an Advisory Committee Note—which says that this provision does not apply where the relief sought "relates . . . predominantly to money damages"—to conclude that Rule 23(b)(2) allows certification of some monetary claims. Even before the Ninth Circuit's decision in this case, there was an acknowledged "split among circuits on how a court determines whether monetary relief predominates in a Rule 23(b)(2) class suit." Richards v. Delta Air Lines, Inc., 453 F.3d 525, 531 n.8 (D.C. Cir. 2006). The Ninth Circuit's decision "aggravate[d] the already-existing inconsistency between the circuits" by creating a "three-way circuit split." App. 154a n.25 (Ikuta, J., dissenting).

The Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eleventh Circuits have adopted the so-called "incidental damages" test, which prohibits certification under Rule 23(b)(2) where plaintiffs seek monetary relief unless the relief sought will "flow directly from liability to the class as a whole on the claims forming the basis of the injunctive or declaratory relief." Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 415 (5th Cir. 1998); see also Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 649–50 (6th Cir. 2006); Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695, 720 (11th Cir. 2004); Lemon v. Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs, 216 F.3d 577, 580–81 (7th Cir. 2000); cf. Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 445 F.3d 311, 330 n.25 (4th Cir. 2006).

The Second Circuit, in contrast, has expressly rejected Allison's "incidental damages" standard, adopting instead a standard that turns on plaintiffs' subjective intent in bringing suit. Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R. Co., 267 F.3d 147, 164 (2d Cir. 2001). Until the decision below, the Ninth Circuit agreed, Molski v. Gleich, 318 F.3d 937, 949–50 (9th Cir. 2003), and both the district court and the three-judge panel followed Molski. See App. 237a; 509 F.3d at 1186; 474 F.3d at 1234.

The Ninth Circuit criticized and expressly rejected both of these conflicting lines of authority—deriding its own Robinson-Molski standard as "fatally flawed," "troubling," "nebulous," "incomplete," and "imprecise" (App. 86a)—but nonetheless affirmed the certification order. Id. at 86a–87a; id. at 154a n.25 (Ikuta, J., dissenting). For a new test, the court looked not to the language of Rule 23(b)(2) itself, but instead to what it described as the "advisory committee requirement" that "the appropriate final relief" not relate "exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Id. at 85a (emphasis added).

The majority announced that, to satisfy Rule 23(b)(2), "a class must seek only monetary damages that are not 'superior in strength, influence, or authority' to injunctive and declaratory relief" (App. 86a (quoting Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 978 (11th ed. 2004))), as determined using "[f]actors such as whether the monetary relief sought determines the key procedures that will be used, whether it introduces new and significant legal and factual issues, whether it requires individualized hearings, and whether its size and nature—as measured by recovery per class member—raise particular due process and manageability concerns." Id. at 88a. Under this amorphous new test, "no single factor would be determinative" (ibid.), and the court "should also consider any other factors relevant to whether monetary relief predominates." Id. at 97a (emphasis added).

The majority, however, deemed one factor irrelevant: the total amount of monetary relief sought. See App. 89a. In other words, in deciding whether the "strength, influence, or authority" of the monetary relief request outweighs that of injunctive relief, it is irrelevant that the class members are seeking billions of dollars for their alleged individual injuries.

B. The Ninth Circuit's Standard Is Clearly Wrong

None of the three existing standards is wholly consistent with Rule 23(b)(2)'s language and structure. Limited by its terms to injunctive or corresponding declaratory relief, this provision does not authorize certification of any claims for monetary relief. Cf. Ticor, 511 U.S. at 121. But the Ninth Circuit's new standard marks the most dramatic departure from the Rule's text and history and cannot be squared with this Court's decision in Ortiz.

Ortiz, which defined the bounds and characteristics of a permissible Rule 23(b)(1) "limited fund" class action, teaches that the mandatory provisions of Rule 23(b) must be applied carefully to ensure that the procedural class-action device does not impair the rights of either the defendant or absent class members. App. 138a–140a (Ikuta, J., dissenting). The mandatory provisions can be used to certify only classes that rest comfortably within the historical antecedents of Rule 23(b). Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 842–45. The cases cited by the Advisory Committee to illustrate the mandatory Rule 23(b)(2) category are vintage, Brown-era desegregation actions. App. 149a n.22 (Ikuta, J., dissenting) (citing cases). They bear no relation to a modern intentional discrimination case, which is essentially a tort claim for unliquidated damages. See ibid.; Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 264 (1989) (O'Connor, J., concurring in judgment).

Rule 23(b)(2) expressly permits certification only of claims brought on "grounds that apply generally to the class" such that prospective relief "is appropriate respecting the class as a whole"; appellate courts have construed these requirements under the rubric of "cohesion." Barnes v. Am. Tobacco Co., 161 F.3d 127, 143 (3d Cir. 1998) (collecting cases). Especially where, as here, monetary relief depends on the unique circumstances of each individual class member's case and does not automatically flow from a class-wide finding of liability, no such natural cohesiveness exists and certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is inappropriate. Allison, 151 F.3d at 413; see also Thorn, 445 F.3d at 330; Lemon, 216 F.3d at 580.

Moreover, due process requires both notice and the opportunity to opt out of the class in actions seeking monetary relief. See Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 848; Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 811–12 (1985). No provision of Rule 23 authorizes opt-outs in (b)(2) actions—in sharp contrast to (b)(3), which requires opt-outs. See Ticor, 511 U.S. at 121. Although some courts, including the district court here (App. 243a), have purported to confer opt-out rights on (b)(2) class members, Rule 23 does not authorize this procedure and this Court has repeatedly warned the lower courts against re-writing the Rule. Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620; see also Leatherman v. Tarrant Cnty. Narcotics Intelligence & Coordination Unit, 507 U.S. 163, 168–69 (1993); Harris v. Nelson, 394 U.S. 286, 298 (1969).

Indeed, the very fact that the district court saw the need to create opt-out rights (App. 243a) signals that this case is not appropriate for (b)(2) certification. See Bolin v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 231 F.3d 970, 976 (5th Cir. 2000); Jefferson v. Ingersoll Int'l Inc., 195 F.3d 894, 897–99 (7th Cir. 1999). The Ninth Circuit's ruling that the district court could dispense with such notice and opt-out rights as to billions of dollars of backpay claims (see App. 99a–100a) does not cure the problem; rather, it violates due process.

In any event, even if some monetary claims could be certified under Rule 23(b)(2), the claims for monetary relief "predominate" in this case under any standard because at least two-thirds of the class members are former employees who lack standing to secure injunctive or declaratory relief. City of Los Angeles v. Lyons, 461 U.S. 95, 103 (1983); Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Haworth, 300 U.S. 227, 241 (1937). As other circuits hold, "certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is appropriate only if members of the proposed class would benefit from the injunctive relief they request." In re Monumental Life Ins. Co., 365 F.3d 408, 416 (5th Cir. 2004); see also, e.g., In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 15–16 (1st Cir. 2008). Although the majority of the class is constitutionally precluded from seeking the injunctive or corresponding declaratory relief that is actually authorized by Rule 23(b)(2), the Ninth Circuit purported to "solve" this problem by limiting the class to those persons who were employed on or after the date the operative complaint was filed. App. 100a–102a. But a plaintiff who left the company the day after the complaint was filed has no more standing to obtain injunctive or declaratory relief than a person who quit the day before; each plaintiff must have standing to secure the requested relief throughout the lawsuit. See, e.g., Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 561 (1992).

The fact that plaintiffs are seeking monetary relief in the form of backpay, as opposed to compensatory damages, does not alter the predominance inquiry. While backpay is a form of monetary relief that has been characterized by some courts as equitable, it is simply monetary compensation for lost pay. "Congress treated backpay as equitable in Title VII only in the narrow sense that [Title VII] allowed backpay to be awarded together with equitable relief." Great West Life & Annuity Ins. Co. v. Knudson, 534 U.S. 204, 218 n.4 (2002) (internal quotation marks, alteration and citation omitted). Although the majority held that backpay is always available in a 23(b)(2) class (App. 92a), it recognized that other courts hold that backpay "weighs on the monetary side of the scale." Id. at 91a n.40. See Thorn, 445 F.3d at 331; Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87, 95 (D.C. Cir. 1997). Even the panel in this very case held that "Plaintiffs' request for back pay weighs against certification under Rule 23(b)(2)." 509 F.3d at 1187. As the Fourth Circuit explained, "certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is improper when the predominant relief sought is not injunctive or declaratory, even if [it] is equitable in nature." Thorn, 445 F.3d at 331.

This Court has strongly suggested that claims for monetary relief can proceed only under Rule 23(b)(3), with its attendant procedural protections and stricter certification standards. Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 861–62; Amchem, 521 U.S. at 623–24. The Court has recognized that the constitutional dimensions of this question require absolute fidelity to the text of Rule 23. Ticor, 511 U.S. at 121. And the Court has held that courts may not alter the Rule to fit a particular case. Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620. The Ninth Circuit's approval of the mandatory certification of claims collectively seeking billions of dollars in monetary relief cannot be reconciled with these precedents.

C. The Question Is Important And Recurring

The three-way circuit conflict on the applicability of Rule 23(b)(2) to claims for monetary relief warrants review. Rule 23 is a uniform federal standard that should apply equally regardless of where a lawsuit is filed. Now, however, class claims for monetary relief are subject to one standard in New York, another in California, and yet another virtually everywhere in between. This case could not have been certified under the "incidental damages" standard. The district court certified the case under a different standard (Robinson-Molski) (App. 237a–240a) that the majority held was fatally flawed. Id. at 86a–87a. Although the district court plainly abused its discretion in applying the wrong standard, Koon v. United States, 518 U.S. 81, 100 (1996), the majority nonetheless affirmed certification under a third, newly announced, multi-factor approach that had never been applied before.

The question whether and when monetary claims can be certified under Rule 23(b)(2) recurs repeatedly in class-action litigation. The mature and acknowledged circuit conflict will encourage forum shopping. Plaintiffs who cannot satisfy the stringent requirements of Rule 23(b)(3) (like plaintiffs here) have an incentive to bring suit under Rule 23(b)(2), in the hopes of securing a mandatory certification under the Ninth Circuit's malleable multi-factor test. Nationwide class actions will therefore gravitate to the Ninth Circuit. This Court has expressed an interest in resolving this conflict in some case. Cf. Ticor, 511 U.S. at 121. The Court should do so here, especially because the Ninth Circuit's test is incorrect and raises grave constitutional concerns.

II. THE DECISION BELOW CREATES OR EXACERBATES NUMEROUS ADDITIONAL CONFLICTS CONCERNING RULE 23, TITLE VII, THE DUE PROCESS CLAUSE, THE SEVENTH AMENDMENT, AND THE RULES ENABLING ACT

The overarching question posed by this certification is whether (as the majority thought) the procedural class device can trump the demands of the substantive law, or whether (as Congress has required, and this Court has repeatedly held) a class can be certified only if such certification protects the substantive rights of plaintiffs, defendants, and absent class members. See Amchem, 521 U.S. at 629 (Rule 23 "must be interpreted with fidelity to the Rules Enabling Act and applied with the interests of absent class members in close view"). The Ninth Circuit's subordination of the substantive law to the procedural class device runs counter to this Court's decisions construing Rule 23 and Title VII.

The Rules Enabling Act provides that procedural rules may not "abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b). In holding that the widely diverging intentional discrimination claims that might be held by more than a million individual employees meet Rule 23(a)'s requirements of commonality, typicality, and adequacy, the majority impermissibly relieved plaintiffs of their burden of proving an unlawfully discriminatory practice or policy that affected all class members in the same manner. And to avoid what otherwise would be intractable manageability problems, the majority approved stripping Wal-Mart of its statutory and constitutional rights to defend itself against plaintiffs' accusations of intentional misconduct. In both respects the majority's decision remakes the substantive law in violation of the Rules Enabling Act. Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 845 ("no reading of [Rule 23] can ignore the Act's mandate"); Amchem, 521 U.S. at 612-13.

A. The Ninth Circuit Improperly Relieved Plaintiffs Of Their Burden Of Proof

According to the Ninth Circuit majority, "the district court found that Plaintiffs here have provided evidence sufficient to support their contention that company-wide corporate practices and policies—including [1] excessive subjectivity in personnel decisions, [2] gender stereotyping, and [3] maintenance of a strong corporate culture—affected both compensation and promotion of all Plaintiffs in a common manner." App. 83a. The court's rulings on these three aspects of plaintiffs' theory produced a bevy of additional conflicts.

1. Evidence of Excess Subjectivity. The district court certified plaintiffs' disparate treatment claim, which "comprises two elements: [a] an employment practice, and [b] discriminatory intent." Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 550 U.S. 618, 631 (2007), superseded on other grounds by statute, Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act of 2009, Pub. L. No. 111-2, § 3, 123 Stat. 5, 5–6.

a. The Employment Practice Element. Although "plaintiff[s] must begin by identifying the specific employment practice that is challenged," Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 994 (1988) (plurality), the Ninth Circuit majority acknowledged "the absence of a specific discriminatory policy promulgated by Wal-Mart." App. 59a. In fact, Wal-Mart's company-wide policy expressly bars discrimination based on gender and affirmatively promotes diversity. Id. at 195a. The majority nonetheless accepted plaintiffs' theory that the millions of pay and promotion decisions made by tens of thousands of Wal-Mart managers in thousands of stores over the course of a decade or more were all made pursuant to a company-wide "policy" of discretionary decision-making, which plaintiffs call "excessive subjectivity." Id. at 163a–164a, 173a. But this Court has held that "an employer's policy of leaving promotion decisions to the unchecked discretion of lower level supervisors should itself raise no inference of discriminatory conduct." Watson, 487 U.S. at 990; see also id. at 991 (plurality) ("standardized testing techniques" cannot measure "common sense, good judgment, originality, ambition, loyalty, and tact").

Accordingly, plaintiffs who premise a Title VII disparate treatment claim on a policy of "excess subjectivity" must come forward with "[s]ignificant proof that an employer operated under a general policy of discrimination" before a class can be certified; simply pointing to excess subjectivity is not enough. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15 (rejecting class certification and establishing certification requirements for Title VII claims); see Watson, 487 U.S. at 990. As Judge Ikuta explained, such proof is required because, "to maintain a company-wide class action based on discrimination, the plaintiff must bridge the 'wide gap' between: (1) the plaintiff's own discriminatory treatment; and (2) the existence of a class that has suffered the same injury as the plaintiff as a result of a company-wide discriminatory policy." App. 119a (quoting Falcon, 457 F.3d at 157).

The majority, however, dismissed Falcon's "significant proof" standard as a "hypothetical in clear dicta" (App. 42a n.15), thereby creating a conflict with numerous decisions from other circuits, which faithfully apply Falcon in the context of "excess subjectivity" challenges. Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625, 631–32 (D.C. Cir. 2006) ("Following Falcon, we have required a plaintiff seeking to certify a disparate treatment class under Title VII to make a significant showing to permit the court to infer that members of the class suffered from a common policy of discrimination that pervaded all of the employer's challenged employment decisions." (internal quotation marks omitted)); Reeb, 435 F.3d at 644 (plaintiffs must adduce "significant proof that [the employer] operated under a general policy of gender discrimination manifesting itself in the same general fashion" (internal quotation marks omitted)); Griffin v. Dugger, 823 F.2d 1476, 1490 (11th Cir. 1987) (same); see also Love v. Johanns, 439 F.3d 723, 729–30 (D.C. Cir. 2006); Cooper, 390 F.3d at 716; Rossini v. Ogilvy & Mather, Inc., 798 F.2d 590, 598 (2d Cir. 1986); Goodman v. Lukens Steel Co., 777 F.2d 113, 124 (3d Cir. 1985).

Although the majority asserted that its refusal to follow Falcon was consistent with the decisions of "nearly every Court of Appeals to consider the question" (App. 41a), it failed to cite any of the contrary decisions collected above and relied instead on outlier decisions from two circuits that themselves are internally conflicted. Compare Brown v. Nucor Corp., 576 F.3d 149, 153 (4th Cir. 2009) (cited at App. 43a), cert. denied, 130 S. Ct. 1720 (2010), with Holsey v. Armour & Co., 743 F.2d 199, 216 (4th Cir. 1984); and Shipes v. Trinity Indus., 987 F.2d 311, 316 (5th Cir. 1993) (cited at App. 78a), with Vuyanich v. Republic Nat'l Bank of Dallas, 723 F.2d 1195, 1200 (5th Cir. 1984).

The Ninth Circuit thus exacerbated a split that has existed for over two decades. See Note, Certifying Classes & Subclasses in Title VII Suits, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 619, 630–31 (1986). The majority of the circuits correctly read Falcon as requiring class plaintiffs to adduce "significant proof" of an unlawful employment policy as an element of Rule 23(a)'s commonality and typicality requirements, which ensure that the class representatives are sufficiently aligned with the absent class members to bring the asserted claims on behalf of the entire class. 457 U.S. at 157 n.13; E. Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403 (1977).

The majority rejected Falcon's "significant proof" standard because it mistakenly concluded that the existence of a class-wide discriminatory policy is a "merits" issue that cannot be resolved on certification. App. 43a–44a & nn.16–17. The majority's decision therefore conflicts with those from numerous other circuits, which require district courts to definitively resolve factual and legal disputes relevant to certification notwithstanding any overlap with the merits. See In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 317 & n.17 (3d Cir. 2009) (collecting cases including In re IPO Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24, 41 (2d Cir. 2006)). The majority departed from these authorities on the ground that they were brought under the securities and antitrust laws (App. 32a–39a), but the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure do not vary depending on the substantive law. See Ashcroft v. Iqbal, 129 S. Ct. 1937, 1953 (2009). In any event, the majority decision squarely conflicts with Hohider v. United Parcel Service, Inc., 574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009), which required resolution of factual disputes going to each of the Rule 23 elements in the context of an employment discrimination claim certified under Rule 23(b)(2). Id. at 171, 196–98.

The district court explicitly said that it was "not called upon to make any determination on the merits of Plaintiffs' allegations of gender discrimination" at the certification stage. App. 166a (emphasis added) (citing Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177 (1974)); see also id. at 170a–171a & n.5. The majority admitted that this approach conflicted with the standard applied by every circuit to have addressed the issue (id. at 52a n.20), but it affirmed the certification on the ground that a "close reading" (id. at 49a) of the order somehow revealed that the district court in fact did something other than what it said it was doing. E.g., id. at 192a–193a, 198a & n.21. The majority's refusal to apply the correct standard to the central issue in this case places the Ninth Circuit squarely at odds with appellate courts in the rest of the country.

b. The Intent Element. "[T]he central element of [a disparate treatment claim] is discriminatory intent." Ledbetter, 550 U.S. at 624; see Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 335 n.15.

The Ninth Circuit majority opinion and the district court's certification order comprise 283 pages in the printed appendix, yet nowhere is the intent element of a disparate treatment claim addressed. Numerous other courts, however, have recognized that determining whether "excess subjectivity" was exercised in an intentionally discriminatory fashion requires individualized proof. See, e.g., Garcia, 444 F.3d at 632 ("[e]stablishing commonality . . . is particularly difficult where, as here, multiple decisionmakers with significant local autonomy exist").

The Ninth Circuit's decision therefore squarely conflicts with the decisions of other circuits that refuse to certify multi-facility discrimination class actions where the claim asserted requires proof of decisionmaking by managers in separate facilities. See Garcia, 444 F.3d at 632; Cooper, 390 F.3d at 715; Bacon v. Honda of Am. Mfg., Inc., 370 F.3d 565, 571 (6th Cir. 2004); Holsey, 743 F.2d at 216; Stastny v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 628 F.2d 267, 279 (4th Cir. 1980). Indeed, no other court has ever certified a class of employees who challenge the exercise of delegated discretion at thousands of facilities where the claim requires proof of decisionmaking by managers in separate facilities. This is because the essential elements of the claim, including discriminatory intent and actual injury, could never be proven on a classwide basis, as Chief Judge Kozinski succinctly explained. App. 161a; see also id. at 113a (Ikuta, J., dissenting).

The majority's failure to take into account the intent element before certifying the class conflicts with decisions of the Second and Third Circuits. Hohider, 574 F.3d at 184 ("it is necessary to . . . assess what elements must be demonstrated for the court to reach . . . a determination of unlawful discrimination and a finding of classwide liability and relief"); see McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215, 223–25 (2d Cir. 2008). Just as it "does not follow . . . that the particular supervisors to whom this discretion is delegated always act without discriminatory intent," Watson, 487 U.S. at 990, it simply cannot be assumed that each of them acted with discriminatory intent regarding millions of pay and promotion decisions. Proof that an individual store manager intended to treat a woman or group of women differently because of their sex—a necessary element of plaintiffs' disparate treatment claim—therefore destroys commonality and typicality under Rule 23(a).

2. Evidence of Gender Stereotyping. Plaintiffs relied heavily on the notion, propounded by one of their experts, that Wal-Mart and other large organizations are "vulnerable to gender bias." App. 55a. In response to Wal-Mart's objection that this "opinion" is unreliable and inadmissible (see John Monahan et al., Essay, Contextual Evidence of Gender Discrimination: The Ascendance of "Social Frameworks," 94 Va. L. Rev. 1715, 1747–48 (2008)), the majority held that Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579 (1993), does not have "exactly the same application at the class certification stage as it does to expert testimony . . . at trial." App. 57a n.22. But as the dissent pointed out, "the majority never . . . explain[ed] why the district court can rely on an expert's testimony that is not reliable, at the class certification stage or any other." Id. at 136a n.16. By "erroneously approv[ing] the district court's reliance on an arguably unreliable expert opinion" (id. at 137a), the majority created a conflict with the Second, Third, Fifth, and Seventh Circuits, which hold that Daubert applies with equal force at class certification. See, e.g., Am. Honda Motor Co. v. Allen, 600 F.3d 813, 817–18 (7th Cir. 2010) (per curiam); Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 315 n.13; McLaughlin, 522 F.3d at 232; IPO, 471 F.3d at 42; Unger v. Amedisys Inc., 401 F.3d 316, 323 n.6 (5th Cir. 2005); see also App. 135a (Ikuta, J., dissenting). This too warrants review by this Court.

3. Evidence of "Corporate Culture." According to the majority, "Plaintiffs produced substantial evidence of Wal-Mart's centralized firm-wide culture and policies, thus providing a nexus between the subjective decision making and the considerable statistical evidence demonstrating a pattern of lower pay and fewer promotions for female employees." App. 78a (citation omitted). This observation obscures a key dispute between the parties' statistical experts: Although plaintiffs' theory centers on decisions made by individual store managers, their expert aggregated the data at the national or regional level. Wal-Mart's expert, however, concluded that "when data is considered at the store level, over 90 percent of Wal-Mart's stores showed no statistical difference in the hourly pay rates between men and women associates with similar work-related characteristics." Id. at 130a–131a (Ikuta, J., dissenting) (emphasis added).

The district court refused to resolve the appropriate level of aggregation (calling it a "merits" issue, App. 197a–198a), and the Ninth Circuit majority approved this refusal on the ground that "[t]he disagreement [between the parties' experts] is the common question," and certified the class without resolving this critical dispute. Id. at 71a. As the dissent explained, "[t]he district court's superficial examination of [plaintiffs'] statistics constituted legal error." Id. at 129a. The Ninth Circuit's approval of the district court's approach "amounts to a delegation of judicial power to the plaintiffs, who can obtain class certification just by hiring a competent expert." West v. Prudential Sec., Inc., 282 F.3d 935, 938 (7th Cir. 2002). It conflicts with the decisions of numerous other circuits, which recognize that disputes among the experts relating to the Rule 23 factors must be resolved on certification. See, e.g., Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 323–24; McLaughlin, 522 F.3d at 232; IPO, 471 F.3d at 42; In re PolyMedica Corp. Sec. Litig., 432 F.3d 1, 5–6, 19 (1st Cir. 2005); West, 282 F.3d at 938.

This is not simply an issue of the size of the company or the class. Compare App. 112a (Graber, J., concurring), with id. at 161a (Kozinski, C.J., dissenting). Rather, where (as here) a disparate treatment claim is premised on discretionary decisionmaking, the class at a minimum must bear some relation to the decisionmaking unit (region, store, department, etc.). Cf. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(f)(3). The Ninth Circuit, however, certified a class that is not so limited; on the contrary, it is precisely the type of "across-the-board" class that this Court condemned in Falcon. 457 U.S. at 157.

B. The Ninth Circuit Improperly Stripped Wal-Mart Of Its Right Of Defense

1. Aggregated disparate treatment claims typically proceed in two stages. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 336, 361–62; Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank of Richmond, 467 U.S. 867, 876 n.9 (1984). First, the plaintiffs must prove that "discrimination was the company's standard operating procedure." Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 336. If they carry this burden, a rebuttable presumption arises that each class member is entitled to appropriate relief. Id. at 361. At the second stage, "a district court must usually conduct additional proceedings . . . to determine the scope of individual relief" and afford the employer the opportunity "to demonstrate that the individual . . . was denied an employment opportunity for lawful reasons." Id. at 362.

The district court acknowledged that "holding individual hearings for the number of women potentially entitled to backpay in this case is impractical on its face, and thus the traditional Teamsters mini-hearing approach is not feasible here." App. 251a (emphases added). But rather than refusing to certify the class, the court did away with individualized hearings altogether, concluding that Wal-Mart's insistence on individualized proceedings "is inconsistent with the fundamental character of the class action proceeding." Id. at 245a. "That this shortcut was necessary in order for this suit to proceed as a class action should have been a caution signal to the district court that class-wide proof of damages was impermissible." Broussard v. Meineke Disc. Muffler Shops, Inc., 155 F.3d 331, 343 (4th Cir. 1998).

An employer has a statutory, as well as a constitutional, right to an individualized defense. Congress has expressly provided that, if the employer proves that it took an employment action "for any reason other than discrimination on account of . . . sex," a court shall not order the "hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(A) (emphases added). And even if the adverse employment action was partially motivated by unlawful discrimination, a court may not award damages or backpay to that employee if the employer can prove that it "would have taken the same action in the absence of the impermissible motivating factor." Id. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B). Thus, even where class plaintiffs can satisfy the first step of the Teamsters framework, the employer is entitled to an opportunity to rebut the claims of each individual class member under the substantive law. See Reeb, 435 F.3d at 651.

"An employer cannot be deprived of its statutory right to raise individualized defenses to claims for monetary relief merely because plaintiffs characterize their claim as a pattern or practice of discrimination and bring the suit on behalf of a class." App. 141a (Ikuta, J., dissenting). Similarly, the Rules Enabling Act prohibits the courts from eliminating statutory defenses to accommodate Rule 23 procedure. See Amchem, 521 U.S. at 612–13; Hohider, 574 F.3d at 185. Yet that is precisely what the district court did here, in so many words: Wal-Mart "is not . . . entitled to circumvent or defeat the class nature of the proceeding by litigating whether every individual store discriminated against individual class members." App. 247a. As the dissent noted, it is hard to imagine a clearer violation of the Rules Enabling Act, which "prohibits a district court from depriving an employer of this right simply to facilitate the certification of a class action." Id. at 145a.

Yet the Ninth Circuit majority nowhere grappled with the Rules Enabling Act—a statute that this Court has twice held must be applied by reviewing courts in considering challenges to class certification. Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 845; Amchem, 521 U.S. at 612–13. Indeed, as the dissent explained, "the majority fail[ed] to address the specific legal and factual framework of Title VII or consider how it impacts the certification of plaintiffs' proposed class." App. 139a–140a. In fact, the majority expressly recognized that, as to some class members, "unequal pay or non-promotion was due to something other than gender discrimination," but nonetheless endorsed procedures that barred Wal-Mart from presenting its ordinarily available defenses to those claims. Id. at 110a n.56.

The majority's approach directly conflicts with the decisions of other circuits, which refuse to certify a class if the substantive law would preclude class-wide treatment. See, e.g., Sullivan v. DB Invs., Inc., __ F.3d __, 2010 WL 2736947, at *11 (3d Cir. July 13, 2010) (vacating certification "extend[ing] antitrust remedies that . . . have no root in state substantive law"); McLaughlin, 522 F.3d at 225; Thorn, 445 F.3d at 323–24. It also conflicts with decisions recognizing that certification is inappropriate where numerous individualized hearings would be necessary. In re Allstate Ins. Co., 400 F.3d 505, 508 (7th Cir. 2005) (reversing (b)(2) certification where "more than a thousand individual hearings" would be required regarding damages); Lemon, 216 F.3d at 581; Allison, 151 F.3d at 419–20. As the dissent points out, the answer is not to dispense with the element that is incompatible with class certification, but rather to deny certification. App. 146a.

2. The majority's decision also violates Wal-Mart's "right to litigate the issues raised," which is "guaranteed . . . by the Due Process Clause." United States v. Armour & Co., 402 U.S. 673, 682 (1971), and includes the right "to present every available defense," Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 66 (1972) (internal quotation marks omitted). The consequences are dire. Wal-Mart will be precluded from proving that its managers did not discriminate against individual class members, and uninjured class members will be allowed to collect backpay at the expense of the actually injured. The district court recognized as much, labeling this "rough justice." App. 254a.

a. The district court's suggested approach of trying the case through use of formulas to estimate the amount of monetary relief (App. 251a–258a), and the Ninth Circuit's invocation of the statistical sampling method used in Hilao, 103 F.3d at 782–87 (App. 105a–110a), to estimate the number of people injured squarely conflict with the Second Circuit's decision in McLaughlin, which held that "[r]oughly estimating the gross damages to the class as a whole and only subsequently allowing for the processing of individual claims would inevitably alter defendants' substantive right to pay damages reflective of their actual liability" in violation of the Rules Enabling Act and due process. 522 F.3d at 231–32.

b. In addition, while the Ninth Circuit vacated and remanded the portion of the certification order related to punitive damages, it suggested that the district court nonetheless might be able to certify the punitive damages claims under Rule 23(b)(2) or (b)(3) and resolve such claims without regard to individual issues. App. 98a–99a. This ruling conflicts with numerous decisions that have rejected adjudication of punitive damages on a class-wide basis because it requires individualized and fact-specific inquiries. See, e.g., Reeb, 435 F.3d at 651; Cooper, 390 F.3d at 721; Lemon, 216 F.3d at 581; Allison, 151 F.3d at 418. And in Philip Morris USA v. Williams, 549 U.S. 346 (2007), this Court squarely held that "the Due Process Clause prohibits a State from punishing an individual without first providing that individual with an opportunity to present every available defense." Id. at 353 (emphasis added) (internal quotation marks omitted).

It would also violate Wal-Mart's Seventh Amendment rights if a jury did not resolve all factual issues related to punitive damages. See Tull v. United States, 481 U.S. 412, 422–23 (1987); see also Feltner v. Columbia Pictures Television, Inc., 523 U.S. 340, 355 (1998). Other circuits have held that adjudicating claims for compensatory and punitive damages in a Rule 23(b)(2) class raises Seventh Amendment problems. See Hohider, 574 F.3d at 202 n.26; Allison, 151 F.3d at 419–22.

c. Absent class members fare no better. Without individualized hearings, non-victims would be overcompensated at the expense of anyone who was actually injured, as the district court recognized. App. 254a; 474 F.3d at 1244, 1249 (Kleinfeld, J., dissenting). The majority's acknowledgement that "a few nonvictims might also benefit from the relief" (App. 110a n.57 (quoting Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1984))) hardly commends the approach. See Firefighters Local Union No. 1784 v. Stotts, 467 U.S. 561, 579 (1984) (Title VII relief limited to "actual victims" of illegal discrimination).

3. Finally, the majority's failure to require a trial plan conflicts with decisions of other circuits. Hohider, 574 F.3d at 202; Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 311–12; Wachtel v. Guardian Life Ins. Co., 453 F.3d 179, 189 (3d Cir. 2006). Rule 23(c)(1)(B) requires the certification order to set forth the "class claims, issues, [and] defenses." Yet the Ninth Circuit found no error in the district court's failure to adhere to this mandatory provision.

The Ninth Circuit wrongly held that Rule 23(a) does not require the district court to determine "how the facts at issue would play out . . . in the merits of the litigation." App. 38a. Contrary to the Ninth Circuit's conclusion (id. at 31a), it is not enough for the case to present mere common "questions"; the answers to those questions must be found in a lawful and fair trial proceeding. The impracticability of allowing Wal-Mart to present statutory and constitutional defenses does not mean that the defenses can be eliminated; rather, it means that the class is not manageable and should not be certified. See McLaughlin, 522 F.3d at 223–25.

The district court's trial plan was hopelessly deficient, yet the majority (after refusing to address Wal-Mart's objections) said that "the option proposed by the district court may also remain viable." App. 110a n.57. The majority also encouraged the district court, on remand, to consider the statistical sampling approach adopted in Hilao, 103 F.3d at 782–87 (App. 105a–110a)—an approach that violates basic due process principles and has never been adopted by any other court. See App. 124a–128a (Ikuta, J., dissenting). For the majority even to suggest that Hilao, an "extraordinarily unusual" case involving claims against a foreign dictator who pillaged his country and terrorized its population, 103 F.3d at 786, has any applicability whatsoever in a Title VII case against America's largest private employer underscores the need for this Court's review.

C. The Issues Are Important and Recurring

The unprecedented certification order here stands at the intersection of Title VII and Rule 23, in the shadow of the Rules Enabling Act and constitutional constraints. It implicates numerous circuit splits on important and recurring issues.

The plaintiffs secured mandatory certification of this unprecedented class on the ground that Wal-Mart's delegation of decentralized decisionmaking authority to local managers opened a "conduit" for gender bias, a charge that can be levied against every organization of any size (including the federal government). See Richard A. Nagareda, Class Certification in the Age of Aggregate Proof, 84 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 97, 159 (2009) ("[T]he disparities in pay or promotion at Wal-Mart roughly track those across the economy more broadly"). If the Ninth Circuit decision in this case stands, virtually every employer in the land could be subject to a similar suit. App. 160a (Ikuta, J., dissenting) ("the door is now open to Title VII lawsuits targeting national and international companies, regardless of size and diversity, based on nothing more than general and conclusory allegations"). And although Title VII does not require employers to adopt "quotas and preferential treatment" to "avoid[] expensive litigation and potentially catastrophic liability," the Ninth Circuit's decision will have precisely the "chilling effect on legitimate business practices" that the Court has sought to avoid. Watson, 487 U.S. at 993 (plurality). This Court's guidance is needed in this case to chart the future course of class litigation in the employment context and beyond.

As the sharp division in the court below establishes, this case exposes widespread conflict and uncertainty regarding the appropriate standards for certifying class actions. This uncertainty is unfair and unjust for all involved, including class representatives, absent class members, and defendants. This Court's review is necessary to provide much-needed clarity and to ensure that the ends of justice are served.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted.

THEODORE J. BOUTROUS, JR.
Counsel of Record
RACHEL S. BRASS
THEANE EVANGELIS KAPUR
GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER LLP
333 South Grand Avenue
Los Angeles, CA 90071
(213) 229-7000
tboutrous@gibsondunn.com

THEODORE B. OLSON
MARK A. PERRY
AMIR C. TAYRANI
GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER LLP
1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 955-8500

August 25, 2010

APPENDIX

APPENDIX A

FOR PUBLICATION

UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

BETTY DUKES; PATRICIA SURGESON; EDITH ARANA; KAREN WILLIAMSON; DEBORAH GUNTER; CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI; CLEO PAGE; on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs-Appellees / Cross-Appellants v. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant-Appellant / Cross-Appellee.	Nos. 04-16688 04-16720 D.C. No. CV-01-02252-MJJ OPINION

Appeals from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California
Martin J. Jenkins, District Judge, Presiding

Argued and Submitted
March 24, 2009—San Francisco, California

Filed April 26, 2010

Before: Alex Kozinski, Chief Judge,
Stephen Reinhardt, Pamela Ann Rymer,
Michael Daly Hawkins, Barry G. Silverman,
Susan P. Graber, Raymond C. Fisher,
Richard A. Paez, Marsha S. Berzon, Carlos T. Bea and Sandra S. Ikuta, Circuit Judges.

Opinion by Judge Hawkins;
Concurrence by Judge Graber;
Dissent by Judge Ikuta;
Dissent by Chief Judge Kozinski

COUNSEL

Theodore J. Boutrous, Jr., Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Los Angeles, California, for the defendant/appellant/cross-appellee.

Brad Seligman, The Impact Fund, Berkeley, California, for the plaintiffs/appellees/cross-appellants.

Joel E. Krischer, Latham & Watkins, LLP, Los Angeles, California, on behalf of amicus curiae Employers Group.

Rae T. Vann, Norris, Tysse, Lampley & Lakis, LLP, Washington, D.C., on behalf of amicus curiae Equal Employment Advisory Council.

John H. Beisner, O'Melveny & Myers, LLP, Washington, D.C., on behalf of amicus curiae Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

Daniel J. Popeo, Washington Legal Foundation, Washington, D.C., on behalf of amicus curiae Washington Legal Foundation.

Laura C. Fentonmiller, Constantine Cannon LLP, Washington, D.C., on behalf of amicus curiae The Retail Industry Leaders Association.

Pamela Coukos, Mehri & Skalet, Washington, D.C., on behalf of amici curiae The National Employment Lawyers Association, The National Partnership for Women & Families, and The National Women's Law Center.

Daniel B. Kohrman, AARP Foundation Litigation, Washington, D.C., on behalf of amicus curiae AARP.

Bill Lann Lee, Lewis, Feinberg, Lee, Renaker & Jackson, P.C., Oakland, California, on behalf of amici curiae Consumers Union, National Consumer Law Center, Center for Constitutional Rights, and Communities for a Better Environment.

Audrey J. Wiggins, Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, Washington, D.C., on behalf of amici curiae Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law, Asian American Justice Center, Asian Pacific American Legal Center of Southern California, Legal Aid Society-Employment Law Center, Mexican American Legal Defense & Educational Fund, NAACP Legal Defense & Educational Fund, Inc., National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Public Advocates, Inc. & Women Employed.

David R. Bruce, Santa Rose, California, on behalf of amicus curiae California Employment Law Council.

James M. Beck, Dechert LLP, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, on behalf of amicus curiae Product Liability Advisory Council, Inc.

Mark Etheredge Burton, Hersh & Hersh, San Francisco, California, on behalf of amicus curiae U.S. Women's Chamber of Commerce.

Joe R. Whatley, Whatley, Drake & Kallas, New York, New York, on behalf of amicus curiae Public Justice, P.C.

Barbara L. Sloan, Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Office of the General Counsel, Washington, D.C., on behalf of amicus curiae Equal Employment Opportunity Commission.

OPINION

HAWKINS, Circuit Judge:

Plaintiffs allege that Wal-Mart, Inc., discriminates against women in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. After detailed briefing and hearing, the district court certified a class encompassing all women employed by Wal-Mart at any time after December 26, 1998, and encompassing all Plaintiffs' claims for injunctive relief, declaratory relief, and back pay, while creating a separate opt-out class encompassing the same employees for punitive damages. We affirm[1] the district court's certification of a Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2) class of current employees with respect to their claims for injunctive relief, declaratory relief, and back pay. With respect to the claims for punitive damages, we remand so that the district court may consider whether to certify the class under Rule 23(b)(2) or (b)(3). We also remand with respect to the claims of putative class members who no longer worked for Wal-Mart when the complaint was filed so that the district court may consider whether to certify an additional class or classes under Rule 23(b)(3).

---

[1] We have jurisdiction under 28 U.S.C. § 1292(e).

BACKGROUND

Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint,[2] brought on behalf of certain named plaintiffs and those similarly situated, asserts claims against Wal-Mart for sex discrimination under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act. Plaintiffs allege that women employed in Wal-Mart stores: (1) are paid less than men in comparable positions, despite having higher performance ratings and greater seniority; and (2) receive fewer—and wait longer for—promotions to in-store management positions than men. Plaintiffs contend that Wal-Mart's strong, centralized structure fosters or facilitates gender stereotyping and discrimination, that the policies and practices underlying this discriminatory treatment are consistent throughout Wal-Mart stores, and that this discrimination is common to all women who work or have worked in Wal-Mart stores.

Plaintiffs sought to certify a nationwide class of women who have been subjected to these allegedly discriminatory pay and promotion policies. The proposed class consists of women employed in a range of Wal-Mart positions, from part-time entry-level hourly employees to salaried managers. The class seeks injunctive and declaratory relief, back pay, and punitive damages, but not traditional "compensatory" damages. Plaintiffs proposed that the district court certify the following class pursuant to Rule 23:

> All women employed at any Wal-Mart domestic retail store at any time since Decem> ber 26, 1998 who have been or may be subjected to Wal-Mart's challenged pay and management track promotions policies and practices.

---

[2] The action was originally filed on June, 21, 2004.

Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 222 F.R.D. 137, 141-42 (N.D. Cal. 2004).

After the parties had conducted extensive discovery and filed copious briefs, the district court heard oral argument. At the hearing, Wal-Mart emphasized the "historic" nature of Plaintiffs' motion, including the size of the putative class, involving women employees at Wal-Mart's 3,400 stores in 41 regions. The court acknowledged Wal-Mart's concerns but noted that, while the class size was large, the issues were not unusual.[3] [3] Ten times the dissent points out the large class size, referring to the "1.5 million" women alleging discrimination as a reason to reject certification. However, at oral argument, counsel for Wal-Mart conceded that if past employees are excluded the class to be certified would be less than 1.5 million, perhaps two-thirds less than the figure the dissent cites. Further, the dissent emphasizes that this is the largest class that we have ever certified "based on a small number of incidents." Dissent at 6249 n.11 (all references in this Opinion to the dissent refer to Judge Ikuta's dissent). As an initial matter, we do not find 120 claims of illegal sex discrimination a small number. Nevertheless, given that the class is suing by far the largest employer in the United States, we are unsurprised that Plaintiffs are seeking to represent such a large class. Of course, this should not change the analysis the Supreme Court required in General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 157-59 (1982), nor should it necessitate that we take an even harder look at the merits, essentially conducting a trial, as the dissent proposes.

---

DISTRICT COURT PROCEEDINGS

The district court issued an eighty-four-page order granting in part and denying in part Plaintiffs' motion for class certification. See id. at 187-88. With respect to Plaintiffs' claims for equal pay, the district court granted Plaintiffs' certification motion as to issues of alleged discrimination and all forms of requested relief. With respect to Plaintiffs' promotion claim, the court's holding was mixed. The court certified the proposed class with respect to issues of alleged discrimination (including liability for punitive damages, as well as injunctive and declaratory relief); however, the court rejected the proposed class with respect to the request for back pay, determining that data relating to the challenged promotions were not available for all class members. The court also exercised its discretion to provide for notice and an opportunity for employees to opt-out of the punitive damages portion of the class.

THE APPEAL

Pursuant to Rule 23(f), Wal-Mart appealed, contending that the district court erred by: (1) concluding that the class met Rule 23(a)'s commonality and typicality requirements; (2) eliminating Wal-Mart's ability to respond to individual Plaintiff's claims; and (3) failing to recognize that Plaintiffs' claims for monetary relief predominated over their claims for injunctive or declaratory relief. Plaintiffs cross-appealed from the district court's limitation of back pay relief for many of Plaintiffs' promotion claims.

DISCUSSION

I. STANDARD AND SCOPE OF REVIEW

A district court's decision regarding class certification is not only reviewed for abuse of discretion, Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 953 (9th Cir.

2003), but also subject to "very limited" review, to be reversed "only upon a strong showing that the district court's decision was a clear abuse of discretion," Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 867 (9th Cir. 2001) (internal quotation marks omitted). See also Millowitz v. Citigroup Global Mkts., Inc. (In re Salomon Analyst Metromedia Litig.), 544 F.3d 474, 480 (2d Cir. 2008) ("When reviewing a grant of class certification, we accord the district court noticeably more deference than when we review a denial of class certification."); Gonzales v. Free Speech Coal., 408 F.3d 613, 618 (9th Cir. 2005) ("Abuse of discretion is a highly deferential standard, under which the appellate court cannot substitute its view of what constitutes substantial justification for that of the district court; rather, the review is limited to assuring that the district court's determination has a basis in reason." (internal quotation marks omitted)); Blyden v. Mancusi, 186 F.3d 252, 269 (2d Cir. 1999) ("A district court's decision to certify a class is reviewed for abuse of discretion, and '[a] reviewing court must exercise even greater deference when the district court has certified a class than when it has declined to do so.'" (quoting Marisol A. v. Giuliani, 126 F.3d 372, 375 (2d Cir. 1997) (per curiam))); Doninger v. Pac. Nw. Bell, Inc., 564 F.2d 1304, 1309 (9th Cir. 1977) (stating that "the judgment of the trial court should be given the greatest respect and the broadest discretion" (internal quotation marks omitted)).

A court abuses its discretion if its decision is premised on legal error. Hawkins v. Comparet-Cassani, 251 F.3d 1230, 1237 (9th Cir. 2001). Moreover, the district court's factual findings as to the applicability of Rule 23 criteria are entitled to the traditional deference given such determinations. See Local Joint Executive Bd. of Culinary/Bartender

Trust Fund v. Las Vegas Sands, Inc., 244 F.3d 1152, 1161 (9th Cir. 2001).

Rule 23 "provides district courts with broad discretion to determine whether a class should be certified, and to revisit that certification throughout the legal proceedings before the court." Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 871 n.28. If evidence not available at the time of certification disproves Plaintiffs' contentions that common issues predominate, the district court has the authority to modify or even decertify the class, Gen. Tel. Co. of Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 160 (1982) ("Even after a certification order is entered, the judge remains free to modify it in the light of subsequent developments in the litigation."), or use a variety of management devices to address the individualized issues that have arisen, see 2 Alba Conte & Herbert B. Newberg, Newberg on Class Actions § 4.26 (4th ed. 2002).[4]

Our review is limited to whether the district court correctly selected and applied Rule 23 criteria. Bogus v. Am. Speech & Hearing Ass'n, 582 F.2d 277, 289 (3d Cir. 1978); see also Waste Mgmt. Holdings, Inc. v. Mowbray, 208 F.3d 288, 295 (1st Cir. 2000) ("An abuse occurs when a court, in making a discretionary ruling, relies upon an improper factor, omits consideration of a factor entitled to substantial weight, or mulls the correct mix of factors but makes a clear error of judgment in assaying them."). Thus, if Plaintiffs demonstrate that they meet Rule 23's requirements, they should be allowed to pursue their action as a class.

---

[4] As the district court acknowledged, Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 143, although federal courts are no longer permitted to engage in "conditional certification," see Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 advisory committee's note to 2003 amends., district courts retain the authority to amend or decertify a class if, based on information not available or circumstances not anticipated when the class was certified, the court finds that either is warranted.

II. STANDARDS FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION UNDER RULE 23

[1] A district court may certify a class only if:

> (1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a).

[2] The district court must also find that at least one of the following three conditions is satisfied: (1) the prosecution of separate actions would create a risk of: (a) inconsistent or varying adjudications, or (b) individual adjudications dispositive of the interests of other members not a party to those adjudications; (2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class; or (3) questions of law or fact common to the members of the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy. See id. 23(b).

The party seeking certification bears the burden of showing that each of the four requirements of Rule 23(a) and at least one requirement of Rule 23(b) have been met. Zinser v. Accufix Research Inst., Inc., 253

F.3d 1180, 1186 (9th Cir.), amended by 273 F.3d 1266 (9th Cir. 2001).

[3] The parties vigorously contest the standards governing the district court in finding the Rule 23 requirements satisfied. For a number of reasons, we must clarify this standard. First, the parties' briefs demonstrate the degree of debate over the standard in this circuit. Second, a number of recent cases in other circuits have endeavored to clarify the standard, and we find it prudent to follow suit given evidence of confusion. Third, it is only very recently that any case in this circuit has interpreted language under the standard that drifts away from our clear case law, and we write to clarify our precedent. Fourth, we are not aware of a circuit that has detailed the issue in the Title VII context, and the typical situation presented in such a case implicates significant differences in the doctrine that require explanation to reach a resolution here and in future Title VII class action certification decisions.

A. Supreme Court Authority

The Supreme Court has provided clear, if sometimes misunderstood, guidance on the issue of what standards a district court applies when deciding whether to certify a class.

The leading case describing these standards is Falcon, where the plaintiff successfully certified a class of Mexican-Americans claiming racial discrimination. After a full trial on the merits, however, the district court's findings distinguishing the named representative's claims from those of the class called the propriety of continued class certification into question.[5] On appeal, the Supreme Court held that because of the district court's findings at trial, Falcon's "complaint provided an insufficient basis for concluding that the adjudication of his claim of discrimination in promotion would require the decision of any common question concerning the failure of [General Telephone] to hire more Mexican-Americans." Id. at 158.

[4] The Court described the implications of its holding, noting that "[s]ometimes the issues are plain enough from the pleadings to determine whether the interests of the absent parties are fairly encompassed within the named plaintiff's claim, and sometimes it may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings before coming to rest on the certification question." Id. at 160. In either case, the Court held, "a Title VII class action, like any other class action, may only be certified if the trial court is satisfied, after a rigorous analysis, that the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied." Id. at 161. In conducting this rigorous analysis, the Court explained that "the class determination generally involves considerations that are enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action." Id. at 160 (internal quotation marks omitted).

---

[5] After a trial, the district court in Falcon made converse findings regarding Falcon, who was the named plaintiff, and the class he sought to represent. The district court found that the defendant, General Telephone Company of the Southwest, had not discriminated against Falcon when it hired him, but had discriminated against him when it failed to promote him. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 152. But the district court also found the defendant had not discriminated against Mexican Americans generally in promotion decisions, but had discriminated against them in hiring. Id. This disconnect created a potential typicality problem under Rule 23(a)(3).

Illustrating further, the Court approvingly cited Judge Godbold's concurring opinion in the Fifth Circuit case that had announced the "across-the-board" rule the Court was reviewing in Falcon. Judge Godbold's concurrence addressed the role of the district court in understanding the likely course of the litigation, and the Supreme Court praised his focus on "the need for more precise pleadings." Id. at 160 (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court approved of his statement that " 'without reasonable specificity the court cannot define the class, cannot determine whether the representation is adequate, and the employer does not know how to defend.' " Id. at 161 (quoting Johnson v. Ga. Highway Express, Inc., 417 F.2d 1122, 1126 (5th Cir. 1969) (Godbold, J., specially concurring)).

[5] Falcon thus provides relatively straightforward guidance. When considering class certification under Rule 23, district courts are not only at liberty to, but must, perform a rigorous analysis to ensure that the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied. See id. at 160-61. It does not mean that a district court must conduct a full-blown trial on the merits prior to certification. A district court's analysis will often, though not always, require looking behind the pleadings, even to issues overlapping with the merits of the underlying claims. See id. As we describe in more detail below, every circuit to have considered this issue, including our own previous decisions, has reached essentially the same conclusion: Falcon's central command requires district courts to ensure that Rule 23 requirements are actually met, not simply presumed from the pleadings.

We also agree with the Second Circuit's recent decision in Miles v. Merrill Lynch & Co. (In re Initial Pub. Offerings Securities Litigation) ("IPO"), which explained that, to the extent lower courts have evidenced confusion regarding the Rule 23 standard after Falcon, this confusion has existed because those courts have misread a Supreme Court statement made eight years before the Court handed down Falcon. See 471 F.3d 24, 33-34 (2d Cir. 2006). Specifically, courts have misunderstood Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, in which the Supreme Court stated, "We find nothing in either the language or history of Rule 23 that gives a court any authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action." 417 U.S. 156, 177 (1974). "This statement has led some courts to think that in determining whether any Rule 23 requirement is met, a judge may not consider any aspect of the merits . . . ." IPO, 471 F.3d at 33. It has "led other courts to think that a judge may not do so at least with respect to a prerequisite of Rule 23 that overlaps with an aspect of the merits of the case." Id.

As the IPO court recognized, the distinguishing features of Falcon and Eisen are the purposes for which the certifying court is using the underlying facts — whether to address a merits issue unnecessarily or to determine whether, for example, the plaintiffs have demonstrated questions of law or fact common to their proposed class. See IPO, 471 F.3d at 32-35. An easy way to understand this distinction is to analogize to a familiar dispute over the admissibility of alleged hearsay evidence. Offered for the truth of the matter asserted, an out-of-court statement by someone not testifying is, of course, inadmissible hearsay. However, that same evidence used to impeach a witness may be properly admitted. So, too, with inquiries into facts overlapping with merits issues in the Rule 23 context. It is whether courts are using the facts to probe the plaintiffs' claims of compliance with Rule 23, or to hear either parties' claims directed to stand-alone merits issues, that renders a court's use of the facts proper or improper. Courts have thus strayed from Falcon when they have myopically invoked Eisen to avoid considering facts properly relevant to the Rule 23 determination because the facts happen to be relevant to the later merits inquiry as well.

B. Case Law in Other Circuits

Like our decision today, and in part because of courts' misunderstanding of Eisen, many of our sister circuits have recently been called upon to clarify the standard that a district court applies when deciding whether to certify a class under Rule 23.

Though IPO is the most notable of these decisions, other courts often trace the explanatory effort back to the Seventh Circuit's decision in Szabo v. Bridgeport Machines, Inc., 249 F.3d 672 (7th Cir. 2001). In Szabo, the court rejected a nationwide products liability class because the class was generally unsuitable for class-wide resolution because of choice of law problems on the state breach-of-warranty and fraud claims. Id. at 674. The Seventh Circuit also found that the district court below had "certified the class without resolving factual and legal disputes that strongly influence the wisdom of class treatment" because the district court had stated that the plaintiffs' "allegations in the complaint are accepted as true for purposes of the class motion." Id. at 675. Analogizing to the preliminary jurisdictional inquiries that district courts routinely make under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 12(b)(1) and 12(b)(2), the court explained that, "[b]efore deciding whether to allow a case to proceed as a class action, therefore, a judge should make whatever factual and legal inquiries are necessary under Rule 23." Id. at 676.

The Second Circuit's decision in IPO agreed with Szabo, providing what is now the leading case on the extent to which a district court must resolve Rule 23 issues that overlap with the merits of the case. IPO held that factual disputes concerning each of the Rule 23 factors must be analyzed and resolved. 471 F.3d at 41. This is a similar holding to our previous explanation—discussed in more detail below—that a district court must make "determinations" that the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied before it certifies a class, "which may require review of the same facts and the same law presented by review of the merits." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 161; Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891, 897 (9th Cir. 1975). IPO explained that "the obligation to make such determinations is not lessened by overlap between a Rule 23 requirement and a merits issue." 471 F.3d at 41. IPO expressly rejected the Second Circuit's approach in Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter Railroad, 191 F.3d 283, 291-93 (2d Cir. 1999), and Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. Visa U.S.A. Inc. (In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation) ("Visa Check"), 280 F.3d 124, 135 (2d Cir. 2001), which had permitted class certification based on "some showing" that the Rule 23 factors were met, obviating the need to assess conflicting expert testimony pertinent to the Rule 23 inquiries. IPO, 471 F.3d at 40.

Since IPO, a number of other circuits have detailed the issue. The First Circuit has reviewed these appellate cases, noting that "[o]ur sister circuits agree that when class criteria and merits overlap, the district court must conduct a searching inquiry regarding the Rule 23 criteria, but how they articulate the necessary degree of inquiry ranges along a spectrum which suggests substantial differences." Brown v. Am. Honda (In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig.), 522 F.3d 6, 24 (1st Cir. 2008) ("New Motor Vehicles").

Though, of course, different circuits have used different words in articulating the review necessary, we think New Motor Vehicles overstates the degree of difference among the circuits. The core holding across circuits that have considered the issue is essentially unanimous: district courts must satisfy themselves that the Rule 23 requirements have been met before certifying a class, which will sometimes, though not always, require an inquiry into and preliminary resolution of disputed factual issues, even if those same factual issues are also, independently, relevant to the ultimate merits of the case. See, e.g., 1 Joseph M. McLaughlin, McLaughlin on Class Actions § 3:12 (6th ed. 2009) ("Consensus is rapidly emerging among the United States Courts of Appeal. The First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, Seventh, Eighth, Tenth and Eleventh Circuits have expressly adopted certification standards that require rigorous factual review and preliminary factual and legal determinations with respect to the requirements of Rule 23 even if those determinations overlap with the merits.").

A closer discussion of the cases the First Circuit has cited demonstrates the truly narrow range in which this "spectrum" actually exists. Requiring the district court to "make specific findings that each Rule 23 criterion is met" represents, the First Circuit has claimed, "around the more rigorous end of [the] spectrum," and has been embraced by the Second, Fourth, Fifth, Seventh—and we would add Ninth—Circuits. New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 24 (citing IPO, 471 F.3d at 33, 41; Unger v. Amedisys Inc., 401 F.3d 316, 321-22 (5th Cir. 2005) (requiring courts to find facts favoring class certification through the use of "rigorous, though preliminary, standards of proof"); Gariety v. Grant Thornton, LLP, 368 F.3d 356, 366 (4th Cir. 2004) (requiring that "the factors spelled out in Rule 23 . . . be addressed through findings"); Szabo, 249 F.3d at 675-76)); see Blackie, 524 F.2d at 897.

On the other end of this "spectrum," according to the New Motor Vehicles court, are cases in "the Third and Eighth Circuits [which] sometimes require an inquiry into and preliminary resolution of disputes, but they do not require findings and do not hold that such inquiry will always be necessary." New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 24 (citing Blades v. Monsanto Co., 400 F.3d 562, 566-67 (8th Cir. 2005)); Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 166 (3d Cir. 2001)).

In our review of these cases, we find this "spectrum" of certification standards narrower and more internally consistent than does the First Circuit. To begin with, we respectfully disagree with New Motor Vehicles's characterization of the Third Circuit's approach. The case New Motor Vehicles cited, Newton, 259 F.3d at 174-77, only discussed a "presumption" of conformity with Rule 23 in the context of the fraud-on-the-market presumption in a securities class action.

The Third Circuit has since provided clarification. It has noted that Newton does not hold that a district court can presume Rule 23 requirements met from contested pleadings outside the fraud-on-the-market context. Vallies v. Sky Bank, No. 08-4160, 2009 WL 5154473, at *7 (3d Cir. Dec. 31, 2009). It has also demonstrated its conformity with the other circuits' standard more broadly. In In re Constar International Inc. Securities Litigation, the court explained that "we require that each Rule 23 component be satisfied." 585 F.3d 774, 780 (3d Cir. 2009) (emphasis added) (citing In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 310 (3d Cir. 2009) ("Hydrogen Peroxide")). Recognizing the importance of the class certification decision, the court emphasized that "district courts, where appropriate, [are] to 'delve beyond the pleadings to determine whether the requirements for class certification are satisfied.'" Id. (quoting Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 316; Newton, 259 F.3d at 167). It further elucidated, "[a]n overlap between a class certification requirement and the merits of a claim is no reason to decline to resolve relevant disputes when necessary to determine whether a class certification requirement is met." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). The Third Circuit thus requires a district court "determination" that the "requirements" of Rule 23 have been "satisfied." Id. While we readily recognize the benefit of the additional cases available to us in conducting our review, we respectfully disagree with the First Circuit's conclusion that the Third Circuit allows a more lax standard of review than do other circuits.

New Motor Vehicles is on firmer ground describing the Eighth Circuit's decision in Blades, though we find the language in that case more nuanced than New Motor Vehicles describes, and we disagree that Blades "suggests substantial differences" from other circuits. New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 24. The Blades court cited Falcon in describing the standard as follows:

> To determine whether common questions predominate, a court must conduct a limited preliminary inquiry, looking behind the pleadings. In conducting this preliminary inquiry, however, the court must look only so far as to determine whether, given the factual setting of the case, if the plaintiffs [sic] general allegations are true, common evidence could suffice to make out a prima facie showing for the class. . . .
>
> The preliminary inquiry at the class certification stage may require the court to resolve disputes going to the factual setting of the case, and such disputes may overlap with the merits of the case. See Szabo v. Bridgeport Machs., Inc., 249 F.3d 672, 676-77 (7th Cir. 2001). Nonetheless, such disputes may be resolved only insofar as resolution is necessary to determine the nature of the evidence that would be sufficient, if the plaintiff's general allegations were true, to make out a prima facie case for the class.

Blades, 400 F.3d at 566-67 (some citations omitted) (emphasis added).

While this language is not as definitive as that used by the Second Circuit in IPO, for example, it sets up essentially the same standard. Under Blades, district courts in the Eighth Circuit must "resolve" factual disputes going to the "setting of the case," which we understand to mean the factual circumstances dictating whether the plaintiffs have met the Rule 23 requirements. Id. at 567. Supporting this understanding is Blades's later statement explaining that "[t]o certify a class action under Rule 23(b)(3), the Court must find that: 1) common questions predominate . . . and 2) class resolution is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy." Id. at 569 (emphasis added). Finally, like IPO, Blades understands Eisen as prohibiting the district court from making preliminary findings on merits issues not related to the Rule 23 resolution. See id. at 566-67; see also Richard A. Nagareda, Class Actions in the Administrative State: Kalven and Rosenfield Revisited, 75 U.Chi. L. Rev. 603, 616 (2008) ("Nagareda, Class Actions"). Not surprisingly, then, IPO cited Blades as a key case supporting its conclusion to require district court determinations that each of the Rule 23 requirements is met. IPO, 471 F.3d at 38.

We thus view whether an appellate court requires district courts to "resolve," id.; "find," Unger, 401 F.3d at 319-20; or "determine," IPO, 471 F.3d at 40-41, that Rule 23 requirements have been met, as essentially, even if not precisely, the same standard.[6] To characterize such usage as embodying "substantial differences" seems to create a distinction where none exists. See New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 24; see also Richard A. Nagareda, Class Certification in [6] We recognize that these words imply slightly different approaches, and we agree with the IPO court's thoughtful discussion of resisting use of the word " 'findings' because the word usually implies that a district judge is resolving a disputed issue of fact," and the Rule 23 inquiry, though it may require findings in some cases, "is really a mixed question of fact and law." 471 F.3d at 40. We cannot, however, agree that the difference in usage is significant enough that circuit courts using these various words employ substantially different standards. Cf. New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 24.

---

the Age of Aggregate Proof, 84 N.Y.U. L. Rev. 97, 113-14 (2009) (Nagareda, Aggregate Proof) (describing federal courts as moving toward an "essentially uniform" standard that is "now-settled law"). Under any of these articulations, the charge to the district court follows the analysis the IPO court explained, and we agree, that Falcon and Eisen require. IPO, 471 F.3d at 41. The district court must analyze underlying facts and legal issues going to the certification questions regardless of any overlap with the merits. However, this does not mean a district court should put the actual resolution of the merits cart before the motion to dismiss, summary judgment, and trial horses by reaching out to decide issues unnecessary to the Rule 23 requirements.

Having discussed our sister circuits' treatment of this issue, we now turn to the standard in our circuit as established by our previous cases.

C. Ninth Circuit Precedent

[6] Since we first addressed the issue in the wake of the Eisen and Falcon decisions, our cases have made clear that a district court inquiry overlapping with the merits is permissible, and often required, under Rule 23. See Moore v. Hughes Helicopters, Inc., 708 F.2d 475, 480 (9th Cir. 1983) ("Although some inquiry into the substance of a case may be necessary to ascertain satisfaction of the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a), it is improper to advance a decision on the merits to the certification stage." (citation omitted)). Later, we said that a district court is "at liberty to consider evidence which goes to the requirements of Rule 23 even though the evidence may also relate to the underlying merits of the case." Hanon v. Dataproducts Corp., 976 F.2d 497, 509 (9th Cir.

1992) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 954 (9th Cir. 2003) ("The court may not go so far, of course, as to judge the validity of [the merits] claims. . . . But the breadth and consistency of class counsel's initial evidence places the district court's finding of commonality well within that court's discretion." (citation omitted)). We have also specifically cited Eisen in rejecting a party's argument that Eisen prohibits any inquiry overlapping with the merits and explaining that such an overlapping inquiry is sometimes necessary under Rule 23. See Blackie, 524 F.2d at 897 ("Nor is the class issue separable from the merits in all cases (including this one). The common questions, typicality, conflicts and adequacy of representation, and predominance tests, are determinations . . . which may require review of the same facts and the same law presented by review of the merits." (citations omitted)).[7]

---

[7] Many other decisions have similarly shown this circuit's proper, narrow reading of the "no merits inquiry" passage from Eisen to prohibit only merits inquiries unnecessary for the class certification decision. See, e.g., McElmurry v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n, 495 F.3d 1136, 1141-42 (9th Cir. 2007) (rejecting the appellants' broad claim relying on misunderstood language from Eisen); Staton, 327 F.3d at 954 (citing Eisen in explaining that a merits inquiry is improper at the class certification stage though the district court was "well within" its discretion in considering overlapping issues); Valentino v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 97 F.3d 1227, 1232 (9th Cir. 1996) (discussing Eisen as prohibiting "a separate hearing to consider the merits of the plaintiffs' claims when determining class certification"); Hanon, 976 F.2d at 509 (describing Eisen as holding "a motion for class certification is not the appropriate point at which to resolve the merits of a plaintiff's claim"); Wright v. Schock, 742 F.2d 541, 544-45 (9th Cir. 1984) (understanding Eisen narrowly to allow a sum-

[7] We have adhered to the Supreme Court's guidance in holding that "[a] class may only be certified if we are 'satisfied, after a rigorous analysis, that the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied.'" Hanon, 976 F.2d at 509 (quoting Falcon, 457 U.S. at 161). We have also, however, recognized that Falcon contemplated cases in which "the issues are plain enough from the pleadings" and do not require analysis beyond those papers. 457 U.S. at 160; Chamberlan v. Ford Motor Co., 402 F.3d 952, 961 (9th Cir. 2005) (per curiam) ("The Supreme Court thus recognized over twenty years ago that a rigorous analysis does not always result in a lengthy explanation or in-depth review of the record."); Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1023 (9th Cir. 1998). Thus, in some cases, the pleadings will be sufficient to render the certification decision, and in others, the district court must make determinations on facts overlapping with the merits.

In addition, our cases have understood that Falcon, like Rule 23 itself, requires "questions of law or fact that were common to the claims." 457 U.S. at 158 (emphasis added). Therefore, we have found class certification proper where a "plaintiff is attack-mary judgment motion before the class certification decision); Moore, 708 F.2d at 480 ("Although some inquiry into the substance of a case may be necessary to ascertain satisfaction of the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a), it is improper to advance a decision on the merits to the class certification stage."); Jordan v. County of Los Angeles, 669 F.2d 1311, 1321-22 (9th Cir.), (characterizing Eisen as confirming the narrow rule that "the class representative need not demonstrate a likelihood of success on the merits in order to maintain a class action"), vacated on other grounds, 459 U.S. 810 (1982).

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

ing defendants' discriminatory practices against females, and this is not just as it applied to plaintiff only," because such a claim "identifies a common legal issue, discrimination against women, and a common factual problem, discrimination as applied" by the defendant. Bouman v. Block, 940 F.2d 1211, 1232 (9th Cir. 1991) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Rodriguez v. Hayes, No. 08-56156, 2010 WL 6394, at *12 (9th Cir. Jan. 4, 2010) ("[T]he commonality requirements ask[s] us to look only for some shared legal issue or a common core of facts."). We have also, of course, rejected the "across-the-board" claims that Falcon prohibited, and we have denied class certification when a rigorous analysis did not show the class would implicate common questions. See, e.g., Lozano v. AT&T Wireless Servs., Inc., 504 F.3d 718, 730 (9th Cir. 2007) (citing Falcon in rejecting certification of a class action based on the unconscionability of a class action waiver because the district court did not perform the requisite analysis). As one example, we have explained that "commonality is satisfied where the lawsuit challenges a system-wide practice or policy that affects all of the putative class members," because such a system implicates common factual questions. Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 868.

[8] Our most recent statement considering Falcon and Eisen comports with this understanding as well. Writing for the court in United Steel Workers v. ConocoPhillips Co., Judge Bybee explained that it is the plaintiff's theory that matters at the class certification stage, not whether the theory will ultimately succeed on the merits. See No. 09-56578, 2010 WL 22701, at *5 (9th Cir. Jan. 6, 2010). We thus found reversible error because the district court did not consider whether the plaintiff's legal theory "was one in which common issues of law and or fact did not predominate," and instead found the class did not meet Rule 23's requirements because " 'there can be no assurances that [plaintiffs] w[ould] prevail on this theory.' " Id. (citing the district court) (first emphasis added). In short, we have consistently held that when considering how the facts and legal issues apply to a class under Rule 23(a), the district court must focus on common questions and common issues, not common proof or likely success on the questions commonly raised. See id.

For the most part, the dozens of district court cases in this circuit parsing Eisen, Falcon, and our precedent, have considered Eisen's language in context, concluding that they must make determinations that the requirements of Rule 23 have been met, and acknowledging that these determinations will sometimes require examining issues that overlap with the merits. See, e.g., Endres v. Wells Fargo Bank, No. C 06-7019, 2008 WL 344204, at *2 (N.D. Cal. Feb. 6, 2008) ("[T]he court is not permitted to make a preliminary inquiry into the merits of the plaintiffs' claims at that stage of the litigation. Nevertheless, the court must consider evidence relating to the merits if such evidence also goes to the requirements of Rule 23." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)); West-ways World Travel, Inc. v. AMR Corp., 218 F.R.D. 223, 230 (C.D. Cal. 2003) ("Although the Supreme Court once stated that courts have no authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action, [citing Eisen] later cases make clear that a preliminary inquiry into the merits is sometimes necessary to make a meaningful determination of class certification issues. At the same time, the court is required to take the allegations of the plaintiff's complaint as true. Plaintiff bears the burden of showing that the elements of Rule 23 are met." (citations omitted)).[8] [8] That district courts must consider questions overlapping with the merits, if doing so is necessary to find the Rule 23 requirements met, is the understanding of the majority of district court orders considering the issue in this circuit. See Colvin v. Citigroup Global Mkts., Inc., No. C 09-00238, 2009 WL 1657331, at *1-2 (N.D. Cal. June 11, 2009) (hearing issues overlapping with merits before class certification motion); In re First Am. Corp. ERISA Litig., 258 F.R.D. 610, 616 (C.D. Cal. 2009) (citing Eisen but also noting Falcon's statement that class determinations are often "enmeshed" with merits issues); In re Cooper Cos. Sec. Litig., 254 F.R.D. 628, 641 n.7 (C.D. Cal. 2009) (noting the obligation to consider evidence relating to the Rule 23 determination, but stating that "[a]t the same time, the inclusion of evidence that may speak to the merits of a case does not mean that a district court should mistake class action certification for summary judgment"); Ballew v. Matrixx Initiatives, Inc., No. CV-07-267, 2008 WL 4831481, at *2 (E.D. Wash. Oct. 31, 2008) ("It is true that at this stage of the proceedings the Court is not resolving whether Plaintiff can establish that she can prove her case. Rather, the narrow question before the Court is whether, under Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, a class action is a proper vehicle for litigating the products liability claims brought by Plaintiff."); Bishop v. Petro-Chem. Transp., LLC, 582 F. Supp. 2d 1290, 1305 (E.D. Cal. 2008) ("[T]he Court has evaluated the evidence of the Motor Carrier exemption, not to determine whether plaintiff will ultimately prevail at trial, but to determine, again, whether the proposed class members are similarly situated."); Lindquist v. Farmers Ins. Co. of Ariz., No. CV 06-597, 2008 WL 343299, at *6 (Feb. 6, 2008 D. Ariz. 2008) ("While preliminary inquiry into the merits is sometimes appropriate to the extent necessary to evaluate class certification issues that happen to be intertwined with facts relating to the underlying merits . . . the general rule followed by federal courts [is] that trial courts may not decide the merits of the case or consider the likelihood of success on the merits in determining whether the requirements of Rule 23 class certification are

---

These cases have correctly threaded the needle between Eisen, Falcon, and our precedent.

In the less typical instances in which district courts in this circuit have been led astray, a common reason seems to have been a misreading of our met."); Alexander v. JBC Legal Group, P.C., 237 F.R.D. 628, 630 (D. Mont. 2006) ("It is improper for this Court to consider the merits of the complaint beyond what is necessary to decide whether the requirements of Rule 23 have been met."); In re Seagate Tech. II Sec. Litig., 843 F. Supp. 1341, 1367 (N.D. Cal. 1994) (noting that "district courts must examine some of the merits" because "the adequacy of the representation cannot be ascertained without examining the composition of the class"); Hernandez v. Alexander, 152 F.R.D. 192, 194 (D. Nev. 1993) ("The determination of whether to certify a class does not permit or require a preliminary inquiry into the merits. Only the class certification requirements of Rule 23 need be considered at the class certification stage. However, before certifying a class action the trial court must be satisfied, after a rigorous analysis, that the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been met." (citations to Eisen and Falcon omitted)); Lim v. Citizens Sav. & Loan Ass'n, 430 F. Supp. 802, 805-06 (N.D. Cal. 1976) ("Although the Eisen rule has evolved into a wedge for broad class certification by plaintiffs, a close reading of the Eisen case indicates the Supreme Court's contrary intention . . . ."); El Concilio v. Modesto Elementary Sch. Dist., No. C-76-2479, 1978 WL 56, at *1 (N.D. Cal. May 11, 1978) ("While the Court is foreclosed from a preliminary inquiry into the merits in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action, it must determine whether plaintiffs have met their burden of establishing the existence of a claim of unlawful employment practices affecting an ascertainable class of persons of which they are members." (internal quotation marks and citation omitted)); Nguyen Da Yen v. Kissinger, 70 F.R.D. 656, 661 (N.D. Cal. 1976) ("In determining whether a matter should proceed as a class action the court is required to make findings concerning each essential element of the class action rule.").

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

statement in footnote 17 of Blackie v. Barrack, in which we explained that district courts are "bound to take the substantive allegations of the complaint as true, thus necessarily making the class order speculative in the sense that the plaintiff may be altogether unable to prove his allegations." 524 F.2d at 901 n.17; see also Edwards v. City of Long Beach, 467 F. Supp. 2d 986, 991 (C.D. Cal. 2006) ("The court is bound to take the substantive allegations in the complaint as true."). But, that statement is taken out of context when relied on in this manner.[9] The subsequent sentences in Blackie, which the erring district courts almost universally neglect to include, explained that, although "the court may not put the plaintiff to preliminary proof of his claim, it does require sufficient information to form a reasonable judgment. Lacking that, the court may request the parties to supplement the pleadings with sufficient material to allow an informed judgment on each of the Rule's requirements." 524 F.2d at 901 n.17 (emphasis added). Discussing when a certification inquiry overlaps with the merits, we further explained in Blackie:

---

[9] District courts in this circuit have quoted this passage somewhat out of context on a number of occasions. See Mateo v. V.F. Corp., No. C 08-05313, 2009 WL 3561539, at *4 (N.D. Cal. Oct. 27, 2009) (citing Blackie though noting that the defense's arguments addressed only the merits and not the Rule 23 inquiry); Perez v. Safety-Kleen Sys., Inc., 253 F.R.D. 508, 511 (N.D. Cal. 2008) (noting that "the court must accept the substantive allegations contained in plaintiffs' complaints as true"); Nw. Fruit Co. v. A. Levy & J. Zentner Co., 116 F.R.D. 384, 388 (E.D. Cal. 1986) (same); see also Steig D. Olson, "Chipping Away": The Misguided Trend Toward Resolving Merits Disputes as Part of the Class Certification Calculus, 43 U.S.F. L. Rev. 935, 949 n.89 (2009) (understanding Blackie as requiring acceptance of a plaintiff's claims as to not only merits questions, but Rule 23 requirements as well).

> Nor is the class issue separable from the merits in all cases (including this one). The common questions, typicality, conflicts and adequacy of representation, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a), and predominance tests, Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3), are determinations . . . which may require review of the same facts and the same law presented by review of the merits.

524 F.2d at 897.

[9] A better reading of Blackie, then, is to understand it as having the meaning that our cases, and the majority of district court opinions, have ascribed to it: Blackie is entirely consistent with the Supreme Court's guidance, explicitly requiring a district court to probe behind the pleadings if doing so is necessary to make findings on the Rule 23 certification decision. Thus, Blackie does not, and could not, require the district court to unquestioningly accept a plaintiff's arguments as to the necessary Rule 23 determinations. The sense in which Blackie referred to class certification as speculative is the same way in which we most recently, and more artfully, described the inquiry:

> [A] court can never be assured that a plaintiff will prevail on a given legal theory prior to a dispositive ruling on the merits, and a full inquiry into the merits of a putative class's legal claims is precisely what both the Supreme Court and we have cautioned is not appropriate for a Rule 23 certification inquiry.

United Steel Workers, 2010 WL 22701, at *5.

In short, the explanation we provide today is not a new standard at all. Though a small number of district courts in this circuit have misunderstood Blackie and relied on Eisen in the way that the Second Circuit has cautioned against, and that we now reject, the precedent from this court is consistent. We are unable to find a single case in our court that incorrectly relied on the "no merits inquiry" language from Eisen in certifying a class without examining necessary issues because they overlapped with the merits. Cf. Caridad, 191 F.3d at 291-92 (applying the "no merits inquiry" language from Eisen out of context to prohibit the proper Rule 23 analysis). Our explanation confirms what our decisions have held for more than twenty-five years: A district court must sometimes resolve factual issues related to the merits to properly satisfy itself that Rule 23's requirements are met, but the purpose of the district court's inquiry at this stage remains focused on, for example, common questions of law or fact under Rule 23(a)(2), or predominance under Rule 23(b)(3), not the proof of answers to those questions or the likelihood of success on the merits. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 158 (requiring a "specific presentation identifying the questions of law or fact that were common to the claims of respondent and of the members of the class he sought to represent" (emphasis added)); United Steel Workers, 2010 WL 22701, at *5 (district court erred in basing its decision on whether the plaintiffs could prove merits rather than whether their claims implicated common questions of law or fact). Of course, for class certification to be proper, the common questions cannot simply arise from artful pleading. Plaintiffs must raise questions that the district court concludes, after a rigorous analysis, are susceptible to common resolution at a later stage.

D. Clarifying the Standard

1. The Proper Standard of Rule 23 Adjudication

This review of Supreme Court dictates, as well as our own and other circuits' treatment of the issue, leads us to recognize a number of constant holdings across circuits that we must incorporate into our clarification of the proper standard governing a district court in considering a Rule 23 motion for class certification.

To begin with, at the class certification stage, while Eisen prohibits a court from making determinations on the merits that do not overlap with the Rule 23 inquiry, district courts must make determinations that each requirement of Rule 23 is actually met. This bedrock rule is consistent with the Supreme Court's statements, other circuits' decisions, and our long-standing precedent. While plaintiffs need not make more than allegations as to their substantive claims, whether the suit is appropriate for class resolution must be actually demonstrated, not just alleged, to the district court's satisfaction.

In addition, in the cases such as IPO in which courts have recognized how Eisen is sometimes misunderstood, those circuits have uniformly reserved discretion with the district court to avoid a trial-level inquiry at the certification stage despite the need to find the Rule 23 requirements met.[10] See, e.g.,

---

[10] IPO's "release valve" reads as follows:

> [W]e reach the following conclusions: . . . (5) a district judge has ample discretion to circumscribe both the extent of discovery concerning Rule 23 requirements and the extent of a hearing to determine whether such re-

Blades, 400 F.3d at 567 ("The closer any dispute at the class certification stage comes to the heart of the claim, the more cautious the court should be in ensuring that it must be resolved in order to determine the nature of the evidence the plaintiff would require."). District courts must maintain the ability to cut off discovery to avoid either party bootstrapping a trial or summary judgment motion into the certification stage. Nearly every circuit to consider the issue, including our own, has recognized the practical importance of the certification decision as leverage for settlement, yet Rule 23 gives neither party the right to turn the certification decision into a trial.

When reading recent class certification cases, one also notices the prevalence of securities fraud cases, and particularly the fraud-on-the-market presumption, in the evolution of the Rule 23 standard. See, e.g., Oscar Private Equity Invs. v. Allegiance Telecom, Inc., 487 F.3d 261, 264 (5th Cir. 2007); IPO, 471 F.3d at 30-31; Bowe v. PolyMedica Corp. (In re PolyMedica Corp. Secs. Litig.), 432 F.3d 1, 6-7 (1st Cir. 2005); Unger, 401 F.3d at 323-24; Gariety, 368 F.3d at 364-66; West v. Prudential Sec., Inc., 282 F.3d 935, 937-38 (7th Cir. 2002).

It is an interesting feature of the case law's development that it has occurred largely in these fraud-on-the-market cases, in which a plaintiff typically must show the six "basic elements" of a securi-> quirements are met in order to assure that a class certification motion does not become a pretext for a partial trial of the merits.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

471 F.3d at 41.

ties fraud action, Dura Pharms., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 341-42 (2005), and the efficient market component of the causation element overlaps with the merits. We must, then, be aware that applying the same procedural rules, such as Rule 23, can lead to different outcomes when the underlying legal and factual framework is different. See, e.g., Hohider v. United Parcel Serv., Inc., 574 F.3d 169, 182-85 (3d Cir. 2009) (describing how the pattern and practice evidentiary framework from Title VII cases is not perfectly applicable in the context of the Americans with Disabilities Act).

Thus, in contrast to a securities class action based on a fraud-on-the-market theory, in a pattern and practice discrimination case, a plaintiff will typically not come to court in the first place without anecdotal evidence. For practical purposes, assuming a plaintiff possesses anecdotal evidence, the plaintiff's statistical evidence does not overlap with the merits, it largely is the merits. See Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 986-87 (1988); Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 337-39 (1977). This means that disputes over whose statistics are more persuasive are often not disputes about whether the plaintiffs raise common issues or questions, but are really arguments going to proof of the merits. See Nagareda, Class Actions, supra, at 619-20 ("Nowhere is this [disputed statistics] problem more acute than in employment discrimination class actions centered on statistical analysis of an aggregate nature."). Of course, if one party argued that the other party's statistics were unreliable or based on an unaccepted method, this may be an issue the district court would have to resolve to determine whether the potentially problematic statistics were even capable of raising a common question.

In fact, after IPO, but before his recent elevation to the Second Circuit, Judge Gerard Lynch recognized this problem in a Title VII gender discrimination case in which the plaintiffs were seeking to certify on the same grounds as those here. Predictably faced with a dispute regarding whether the plaintiffs' statistics demonstrated commonality, Judge Lynch addressed IPO's application in a Title VII, gender discrimination context.[11]

The problem, the district court explained, was that "[i]n deciding that the class certification order complied with In re IPO, it is important to note that disparate impact cases present unique difficulties in analyzing the commonality requirement of Rule 23(a). Plaintiffs in disparate impact cases often rely on statistical evidence to prove the merits of their claim." Hnot v. Willis Group Holdings Ltd., 241 F.R.D. 204, 210-11 (S.D.N.Y. 2007). The court continued, "[i]n such a case, however, the same evidence must be considered to determine whether a plaintiff has satisfied the commonality requirement." Id. at 211.

In resolving this problem and certifying the class, the district court noted, "[c]ontrary to defendants' assertions, In re IPO does not stand for the proposition that the Court should, or is even authorized to, determine which of the parties' expert reports is more persuasive. Defendants ignore the fact that In re IPO specifically rejected this interpretation of Rule 23." Id. at 210. Instead, Judge Lynch explained, "In re IPO reiterated that 'experts' disagreement on the merits—whether a discriminatory impact [can] be shown—[is] not a valid basis for denying class certification.'" Id. (alterations in original) (quoting IPO, 471 F.3d at 35). Thus, the court could only "examine the expert reports as far as they bear on the Rule 23 determination." Id.

---

[11] The plaintiffs in Hnot pled both disparate impact and disparate treatment theories of discrimination under Title VII. See Hnot v. Willis Group Holdings Ltd., 228 F.R.D. 476, 486 (S.D.N.Y. 2005).

Judge Lynch similarly clarified, with regard to the disparate treatment issue in the case before him, that "plaintiffs and defendants disagree on whose statistical findings and observations are more credible, but this disagreement is relevant only to the merits of plaintiffs' claim—whether plaintiffs actually suffered disparate treatment—and not to whether plaintiffs have asserted common questions of fact or law; plaintiffs' ultimate success at trial on the merits requires an answer to that question, specifically that defendants actually did discriminate against plaintiffs." Id. at 210-11. "By asking the Court to decide which expert report is more credible, defendants are requesting that the Court look beyond the Rule 23 requirements and decide the issue on the merits, a practice In re IPO specifically cautions against." Id. at 210.

Thus, in addition to demonstrating Rule 23's proper implementation in various legal contexts (securities class actions versus Title VII claims), Hnot also illustrates a second feature of the certification cases that we must address. Because the fraud-on-the-market cases are typically decided under Rule 23(b)(3)'s predominance requirement, a related feature of the circuit court cases considering the proper standard a district court applies, when deciding whether to certify a class, is the difference between cases describing review of evidence under Rule 23(a) and those under Rule 23(b).[12] We are unaware of any argument claiming that a different standard should apply in the two inquiries, and the cases generally treat the precedent as applying equally to both contexts. We do, however, note that the inquiry cannot be divorced from the text of Rule 23, which, of course, requires plaintiffs to make different showings under different parts of the rule. This distinction helps order the doctrine, keeping in mind the different requirements under Rule 23(a) and (b) and how those requirements may play out in a district court's certification decision.

This insight derives from the Supreme Court's explanation of the predominance test under Rule 23(b)(3). Predominance, the Court explained, "tests whether proposed classes are sufficiently cohesive to warrant adjudication by representation," Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 623 (1997), a standard "far more demanding" than the commonality requirement of Rule 23(a), id. at 623-24. Thus, we would expect that cases in which the parties are contesting facts underlying the Rule 23(b)(3) determination may often require more determinations by the district court than those in which Rule 23(a)(2) is the primarily contested issue. Rule 23(a)(2) is about invoking common questions, see Falcon, 457 U.S. at 158, whereas Rule 23(b)(3) requires a district court to formulate "some prediction as to how specific issues will play out in order to determine whether common or individual issues predominate in a given case." New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 20 (internal quotation marks omitted). We thus should not be surprised that a district court will have to make more precise factual determinations under Rule 23(b)(3) than under Rule 23(a)(2). This insight does not apply a procedural rule differently in two like contexts; it applies the text of Rule 23 itself to the district court's task.

---

[12] More specifically, as the cases demonstrate, is the standard for evidence under Rule 23(a)(2), commonality, versus Rule 23(b)(3), predominance.

While we find the case law across circuits more uniform than some courts have implied, see id. at 24, to the extent it is not, this result may be because of courts' failure to recognize this key difference between a district court's job under Rule 23(a)(2) and its job under Rule 23(b)(3).[13] This conclusion is further supported when one notices that Falcon's primary inquiry was under Rule 23(a), 457 U.S. at 156-58, whereas many of the circuit courts discussed above were concerned with Rule 23(b)'s predominance test and, thus, required the district court to make more detailed determinations as to how the facts at issue would play out—whether they would predominate—in the merits of the litigation. See, e.g., Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 310 (Rule 23(b)(3) predominance); New Motor Vehicles, 522 F.3d at 26 (same); IPO, 471 F.3d at 45 (same); In re PolyMedica Corp. Secs. Litig., 432 F.3d at 3 & n.4

---

[13] Even commentators who clearly recognize this difference often lapse into speaking about Rule 23 as requiring a single showing, minimizing the differences between Rule 23(a)(2) and Rule 23(b)(3). See, e.g., Nagareda, Class Actions, supra, at 622 ("To task the court at the class certification stage here with the making of a 'definitive assessment' of compliance with Rule 23 would be to call, as a practical matter, for an assessment of which side is right on the merits with regard to the existence of a company-wide policy.").

(same); Unger, 401 F.3d at 320, 324-25 (same); Blades, 400 F.3d at 566 (same); Gariety, 368 F.3d at 364-65 (same); Szabo, 249 F.3d at 676-77 (same).

Though some courts have noted the difference between Rule 23(a) and 23(b) in passing, see Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 310-11,[14] we are not aware of any decisions detailing the difference, and some courts have failed to note the distinction at all. See, e.g., IPO, 471 F.3d at 33 n.3 ("We see no reason to doubt that what the Supreme Court said about Rule 23(a) requirements applies with equal force to all Rule 23 requirements, including those set forth in Rule 23(b)(3)."). We think a great deal of any disparity in different courts' explication of the Rule 23 standard can be explained by this difference. The lesson for future district courts is that, in a given case, the text of Rule 23(a), as compared to Rule 23(b), may require them to determine more or different facts (typically more under Rule 23(b)(3)) to determine whether the plaintiffs have met their Rule 23 burden.

[10] In short, these observations, which include the Supreme Court's direction, long-standing precedent in this court, and treatment from other circuits, lead us to the following explanation of the proper standards governing a district court's adjudication of a Rule 23 motion for class certification. First, when considering class certification under Rule 23, district courts are not only at liberty to, but must, perform a rigorous analysis to ensure that the prerequisites of Rule 23 have been satisfied, and this analysis will often, though not always, require looking behind the pleadings to issues overlapping with the merits of the underlying claims. It is important to note that the district court is not bound by these determinations as the litigation progresses. Second, district courts may not analyze any portion of the merits of a claim that do not overlap with the Rule 23 requirements. Relatedly, a district court performs this analysis for the purpose of determining that each of the Rule 23 requirements has been satisfied. Third, courts must keep in mind that different parts of Rule 23 require different inquiries. For example, what must be satisfied for the commonality inquiry under Rule 23(a)(2) is that plaintiffs establish common questions of law and fact, and answering those questions is the purpose of the merits inquiry, which can be addressed at trial and at summary judgment. Fourth, district courts retain wide discretion in class certification decisions, including the ability to cut off discovery to avoid a mini-trial on the merits at the certification stage. Fifth, different types of cases will result in diverging frequencies with which the district court will properly invoke its discretion to abrogate discovery. As just one example, we would expect a district court to circumscribe discovery more often in a Title VII case than in a securities class action resting on a fraud-on-the-market theory, because the statistical disputes typical to Title VII cases often encompass the basic merits inquiry and need not be proved to raise common questions and demonstrate the appropriateness of class resolution. Plaintiffs pleading fraud-on-the-market, on the other hand, may have to establish an efficient market to even raise common questions or show predominance.

---

[14] See also Olson, supra, at 947 (noting that class certification must be particularly predictive under Rule 23(b)(3)).

2. The Dissent's "Significant Proof" Standard

In addition to setting out our own review, we feel compelled to discuss the dissent's consideration of this issue. The Supreme Court's decisions in Falcon and Eisen are the primary guides to our ruling in this case. The dissent, in suggesting that we are unfaithful to Falcon, seeks to create a new class action requirement based on a hypothetical in one sentence of Supreme Court dicta; conflates, or at least fails to distinguish, the posture of Falcon and the present case; ignores the weight of the many cases in other circuits arriving at the same standard we have described above; and renders itself unpersuasive by critiquing the district court's eighty-four-page analysis as insufficiently rigorous. In doing so, the dissent is unfaithful to the actual distinctions the Supreme Court relied upon in Falcon, and variously depicts Falcon as instituting a "significant proof" "burden" or " 'significant proof' requirement" that Falcon did not create. Dissent at 6247, 6454.

We read Falcon, as has nearly every Court of Appeals to consider the question, as creating the standard we describe above. But in discussing what it views as the analysis required by Falcon, the dissent quotes a portion of a sentence of Falcon dicta in footnote 15 as standing for the requirement that plaintiffs cannot prevail at the certification stage without showing "[s]ignificant proof that an employer operated under a general policy of discrimination." Id. at 6244. However, the entire footnote sentence reads as follows: "Significant proof that an employer operated under a general policy of discrimination conceivably could justify a class of both applicants and employees if the discrimination manifested itself in hiring and promotion practices in the same general fashion, such as through entirely subjective decisionmaking processes." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15 (emphasis added).[15]

Falcon's discussion of two distinct processes—hiring and promotion—for which "significant proof" could prove sufficient to certify a single class, is an unusually high standard that Plaintiffs here need not meet because they did not present the distinct legal theories of recovery that the Falcon plaintiffs, both employees and applicants, had pursued together in one class. "The question before the district court was not whether [Plaintiffs] have definitively proven disparate treatment and a disparate impact; rather, the question was whether the basis of [Plaintiffs'] discrimination claims was sufficient to support class certification." Brown v. Nucor Corp., 576 F.3d 149, 156 (4th Cir. 2009), cert. denied, No. 09-981, 2010 WL 285702 (Mar. 1, 2010).

---

[15] The dissent chides us for ignoring the " 'significant proof' requirement" from Falcon, an approach the dissent finds troubling, particularly because Falcon is "directly on point." Dissent at 6245-46. Putting aside the fact that, unlike here, the problem in Falcon was a proposed class consisting of members of the general public who had sought employment, represented by an employee who had sought promotion, alleging different theories of discrimination, see Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157-58, ignoring relevant Supreme Court guidance would indeed be troubling if that was in fact what we were doing. But the dissent mischaracterizes the role that "significant proof" played in the Falcon analysis. The statement was a hypothetical in clear dicta. Id. at 159 n.15. It is important not to apply Supreme Court dicta "to create a new rule—one [the Court] never envisioned." Lopez-Rodriguez v. Holder, 560 F.3d 1098, 1099 (9th Cir. 2009) (order) (Bea, J., dissenting from denial of reh'g en banc). Further, here, we are not taking Supreme Court statements and "blandly shrug[ging] them off because they were not a holding." Newdow v. U.S. Congress, 328 F.3d 466, 480 (9th Cir. 2003) (order) (O'Scannlain, J., dissenting from denial of reh'g en banc). Instead, we are considering the statements and avoiding creating a new rule of law, noting that we should be particularly wary of conceiving such a rule from dicta when the facts underlying the dicta are easily distinguished from the present case and when the dicta relied upon was in the form of a hypothetical.

Contrary to the dissent,[16] Falcon does not say that Plaintiffs must show a common policy of proven discrimination at the class action stage, rather than just a common policy alleged to be discriminatory. 457 U.S. at 158-59. Of course, as we have already explained, named plaintiffs must do more than merely allege discriminatory practices against themselves. Id. As we demonstrate below, Plaintiffs here do so, making showings through their expert testimony and statistical evidence, which further distinguishes the certification decision here from that decision in Falcon. In maintaining otherwise in its discussion, the dissent confuses merits decisions such as Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 336, and class action certification decisions.[17] It also ignores our previous statement examining Falcon footnote 15 in which we explained that "[w]e understand footnote fifteen of Falcon to present a demonstrative example rather than a limited exception to the overall skepticism toward broad discrimination class actions." Staton, 327 F.3d at 955. In other words, as we have previously described Falcon, the Supreme Court "does not generally ban all broad classes but rather precludes a class action that, on the basis of one form of discrimination against one or a handful of plaintiffs, seeks to adjudicate all forms of discrimination against all members of a group protected by Title VII, § 1981, or a similar statute." Id.

---

[16] The dissent reads Falcon to require a showing of evidence "sufficient to carry plaintiffs' burden of adducing significant proof." Dissent at 6259. However, the dissent's encapsulating all of Falcon into this one phrase in dicta ignores other key distinctions on which the Court was actually relying. Falcon does not hold that a plaintiff must prove a widespread policy of discrimination to obtain class certification nor, of course, does it allow a district court to certify a class based on a plaintiff's mere allegations of discriminatory practices. 457 U.S. at 157-58. Rather, Falcon only says that an individual who, on his own behalf, does not allege any overall policy cannot, by proving his own case, establish on the merits an inference relevant to the group, thus remedying his failure to otherwise make a showing of commonality. Id. Such a statement is a far cry from suggesting, as does the dissent, see Dissent at 6247, 6249-50, that a class cannot be certified unless the plaintiffs prove a discriminatory overall policy — in which case there would be no reason to have a trial at all.

The dissent also largely ignores Supreme Court guidance by failing to recognize that Falcon addressed the claim that the allegations of an employee subject to discrimination in promotion decisions "fairly encompassed" the claims of non-employees allegedly subject to discrimination in a discrete hiring process. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 158. Such a determination under Rule 23 is clearly distinct from an inquiry where, as here, a class consists entirely of individuals actually employed under the same corporate policies.[18] Critically, in Falcon, the individual plaintiff's claim was based on promotion practices for his allegations and hiring practices for the putative class members, yet Falcon's "complaint contained no factual allegations concerning petitioner's hiring practices," id. at 150, despite the fact that the class members' claims depended on pattern or practice in hiring, id. at 159. In contrast, where the individual plaintiffs seek to prove their own cases through pattern or practice methods, they are necessarily dependent on proving facts relevant to others of the same protected group subject to the same policy, class action or no class action. See Watson, 487 U.S. at 994-95; see also Nagareda, Aggregate Proof, supra, at 150 ("The terms 'pattern' and 'practice' themselves imply an aggregate perspective.").

---

[17] The dissent's claim that Plaintiffs must prove discrimination at this stage, Dissent at 6247, conflates the class certification and merits phases of the litigation. See Brown, 576 F.3d at 153 ("[A]llegations of a practice of disparate treatment in the exercise of unbridled discretion raises questions of law and fact common to all subject black employees." (emphasis added) (internal quotation marks omitted))); Shipes v. Trinity Indus., 987 F.2d 311, 316 (5th Cir. 1993) ("The threshold requirements of commonality and typicality are not high . . . . Allegations of similar discriminatory employment practices, such as the use of entirely subjective personnel processes that operate to discriminate, satisfy the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a)." (emphasis added)).

---

[18] Indeed, the record provides significant evidence of central control. The district court found that, "[h]aving reviewed the extensive evidence submitted by the parties, . . . Wal-Mart's systems for compensating and promoting in-store employees are sufficiently similar across regions and stores to support a finding that the manner in which these systems affect the class raises issues that are common to all class members." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 149. Yet the dissent seems to assume that central control was not a pervasive feature of Wal-Mart's baseline promotion policies, or that if it was, such control undercuts Plaintiffs' case. Dissent at 6253 (rejecting Plaintiffs' claim that " 'the subjective decision-making in compensation and promotions takes place within parameters and guidelines that are highly uniform, and within a strong corporate culture,' " because "this argument is contrary to the thrust of plaintiffs' legal theory") (citing Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 157). Such a view ignores the precise contours of Plaintiffs' claims. Questioning the degree of central control over the framework policies is particularly surprising given the district court's findings, see Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 145-54, and additional evidence in the record that, for example, Wal-Mart posted employees in the "Rising Star Program" who were eligible for promotion on a wall in the Bentonville Home Office.

Finally, Plaintiffs here are unlike the plaintiff in Falcon, who failed to "otherwise [ ]support[his] allegation that the company ha[d] a policy of discrimination" except by claiming that he himself had been denied a promotion on discriminatory grounds. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157-58. As we detail below, Plaintiffs here have introduced "significant proof" of Wal-Mart's policies, and their effects on the certified class, and have introduced evidence of far more than "the validity of [their] own claim[s]." Id. Even if the dissent were correct in creating a "significant proof" standard (or burden, or requirement), which it is not, it would not apply to Plaintiffs in this case. "Subjective decisionmaking processes" are exactly what the Plaintiffs allege here and what the Supreme Court's hypothetical expressed concern with in Falcon. Id. at 159 n.15. In addition, it is not clear that such a standard, if it existed, need apply to Plaintiffs—everyone of whom was or is an employee—at all because they are not situated as the Falcon plaintiffs, who were both employees seeking promotion and job applicants pursuing a position and thus needed to show different facts and allege diverging legal theories.

Again unlike in Falcon, and as discussed in detail below, the district court here did not presume or fail "to evaluate carefully the legitimacy [of Plaintiffs' claims to be] proper class representative[s]," id. at 160, but rather found Rule 23 satisfied only after undertaking the "rigorous analysis" the Supreme Court requires, see Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 143-69. The specific recognition of Falcon's "rigorous analysis" requirement guided the district court's analysis throughout its lengthy order, and the court made determinations that each of Rule 23's requirements were satisfied. Id. at 143-44, 166-68 (applying Falcon). The dissent's attenuated claim that the district court abused its discretion by failing to require a "specific presentation identifying the questions of law or fact that were common to the claims of respondent and of the members of the class he sought to represent," see Falcon, 457 U.S. at 158, is vitiated by the twenty-four pages in which the district court exhaustively performed exactly that analysis, explicitly considering questions of law and fact that were common to the members of the class and the named representatives,[19] see Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 145-69. In short, and as we will now explain, at the certification stage, it is difficult for us to envision a more rigorous analysis than the one the district court conducted.

III. CERTIFICATION OF THIS CLASS

Unsurprisingly, the class in this case is broad and diverse, encompassing both salaried and hourly employees in a range of positions, who are or were employed at one or more of Wal-Mart's 3,400 stores across the country. The district court found that the large class is united by a complex array of company-wide practices, which Plaintiffs contend discriminate against women.

---

[19] These common issues of law and fact, necessary to bridge the gap from the class representatives to the entire class, are discussed in Part III.A. For now, it is sufficient to note that they include an analysis of similar promotion and compensation policies Wal-Mart applied to all employees, a dominant corporate culture Wal-Mart maintained throughout its stores, and statistical evidence showing class-wide gender disparities in compensation. Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 145-69.

A. Rule 23(a)

At the outset of considering the district court's certification order in light of the above-clarified standard, we note two facets of the district court's review.

First, this case reached us after a significantly more searching review than cases in other circuit courts explaining the Rule 23 standard. In Szabo, for example, the district court "assumed that whatever [the plaintiff] allege[d] must be true," and it "[p]roceed[ed] as if class certification under Rule 23 were governed by the same principles as evaluating the sufficiency of the complaint under Rule 12(b)(6)." 249 F.3d at 674-75. In Gariety, the case came to the Fourth Circuit after the district court had concluded that "the fact that the plaintiffs have asserted that the Keystone market was efficient is enough at the certification stage to find the market efficient." 368 F.3d at 361 (emphasis added); see also Vallario v. Vandehey, 554 F.3d 1259, 1265-66 (10th Cir. 2009) (district court abused its discretion in thinking it was barred from any consideration of action's merits); IPO, 471 F.3d at 30 (district court finding that only "plaintiffs—who have the burden of proof at class certification—must make 'some showing' ").

In other words, previous circuit courts addressing similar issues have been faced with district courts making the same mistake that we described a small number of district courts in this circuit have made in citing Blackie out of context: refusing to consider any issue overlapping with the merits, and assuming the plaintiffs' substantive allegations as true for the Rule 23 inquiry. As we demonstrate below, such review is entirely dissimilar from the district court's review in this case.

Second, we also note that resolving this case requires a close reading of the district court's lengthy opinion to determine the standard the district court applied in deciding to certify the class. Contrary to the claims of Wal-Mart and the dissent, such a reading of the district court's individual determinations on Rule 23(a) shows that the district court actually weighed evidence and made findings sufficient under the standard we have described above.

[11] In broadly discussing the standard of review, the district court stated the following:

> A party seeking to certify a class must demonstrate that it has met all four requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a), and at least one of the requirements of Rule 23(b). Rule 23(a) requires that all of the following four factors be met . . . . In short, the class must satisfy the requirements of numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy. . . .
>
> The party seeking certification must provide facts sufficient to satisfy Rule 23(a) and (b) requirements. In turn, the district court must conduct a rigorous analysis to determine that the prerequisites of Rule 23 have been met. Gen. Tel. Co. v. Falcon., 457 U.S. 147, 161 (1982). If a court is not fully satisfied, certification should be refused. . . . See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 advisory committee's note to 2003 amends.

. . . .

> . . . "[A]lthough some inquiry into the substance of a case may be necessary to ascertain satisfaction of the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a), it is improper to advance a decision on the merits to the certification stage." Moore v. Hughes Helicopters, Inc., 708 F.2d 475, 480 (9th Cir. 1983) (citation omitted); see also Nelson v. United States Steel Corp., 709 F.2d 675, 679-80 (11th Cir. 1983) (plaintiffs' burden at class certification "entails more than the simple assertion of [commonality and typicality] but less than a prima facie showing of liability") (citation omitted).

Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 143-44 (some citations omitted) (last alteration in original) (emphasis added). Unlike some other district courts, which have assumed facts in a complaint, the district court here spent significant effort explaining a nuanced standard that clearly comprehended the need to look well beyond the pleadings in the case.

[12] Most importantly, as we will now explain, the district court's standard led to a review that complies with Falcon and with our herein-described standards that a district court must follow when deciding whether to certify a class.

1. Numerosity

Rule 23(a)(1) requires that the class be "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." Wal-Mart does not contest this point.

2. Commonality

Rule 23(a)(2) requires that "there are questions of law or fact common to the class." Commonality focuses on the relationship of common facts and legal issues among class members. See, e.g., Conte & Newberg, supra, § 3:10, at 271. We noted in Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1019:

> Rule 23(a)(2) has been construed permissively. All questions of fact and law need not be common to satisfy the rule. The existence of shared legal issues with divergent factual predicates is sufficient, as is a common core of salient facts coupled with disparate legal remedies within the class.

The commonality test is "qualitative rather than quantitative"—one significant issue common to the class may be sufficient to warrant certification, see, e.g., Savino v. Computer Credit, Inc., 173 F.R.D. 346, 352 (E.D.N.Y. 1997), aff'd, 164 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 1998); see also Conte & Newberg, supra, § 3:10, at 272-74, a standard that dovetails with our discussion above, requiring plaintiffs to show common questions or issues.

The district court found that Plaintiffs had provided evidence sufficient to support their contention that significant factual and legal questions are common to all class members. After analyzing Plaintiffs' evidence, the district court stated:

> Plaintiffs have exceeded the permissive and minimal burden of establishing commonality by providing: (1) significant evidence of company-wide corporate practices and policies, which include (a) excessive subjectivity in personnel decisions, (b) gender stereotyping, and (c) maintenance of a strong corporate culture; (2) statistical evidence of gender disparities caused by discrimination; and (3) anecdotal evidence of gender bias. Together, > this evidence raises an inference that Wal-Mart engages in discriminatory practices in compensation and promotion that affect all plaintiffs in a common manner.

Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 166. Discussing commonality, the district court alluded to the determinations Rule 23 requires in certifying a class. The court stated, "Rule 23(a)(2) requires that common questions of law or fact exist among class members." Id. at 144. Recognizing this requirement of Rule 23, the district court went on to make reasoned determinations that commonality was met, concluding that "th[e] evidence more than satisfies plaintiffs' burden to demonstrate commonality under Rule 23(a)(2)." Id. at 145. The district court then detailed the four categories of commonality evidence to which we now turn. Id. We conclude, as explained in more detail below, that it was within the district court's discretion, and in line with Falcon and the standard we have clarified today, to determine that the commonality prerequisite to class certification was satisfied. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2).[20] [20] Of course, returning to the standard discussed above, if the district court had rejected Wal-Mart's arguments regarding commonality solely because they overlapped with "merits issues," that would have been error. However, as we explain in the following sections, the district court did not do this but, instead, conducted a "rigorous analysis" of the conflicting evidence presented on the commonality question and ultimately concluded that Plaintiffs raised "questions of law or fact common to the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2); see Falcon, 457 U.S. at 161; Hanon, 976 F.2d at 509.

---

a. Evidence of a Common Policy of Discrimination

[13] Pursuant to Falcon, 457 U.S. at 161, Plaintiffs presented four categories of commonality evidence that the district court subjected to a "rigorous analysis": (1) facts supporting the existence of company-wide policies and practices that, in part through their subjectivity, provide a potential conduit for discrimination; (2) expert opinions supporting the existence of company-wide policies and practices that likely include a culture of gender stereotyping; (3) expert statistical evidence of class-wide gender disparities attributable to discrimination; and (4) anecdotal evidence from class members throughout the country of discriminatory attitudes held or tolerated by management. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 145-66. Wal-Mart contends this evidence is insufficient to suggest a common factual or legal question related to the existence of discrimination.

(1) Factual Evidence

As factual evidence, Plaintiffs presented evidence of the following: (1) uniform personnel and management structure across stores; (2) Wal-Mart headquarters's extensive oversight of store operations, company-wide policies governing pay and promotion decisions, and a strong, centralized corporate culture; and (3) consistent gender-related disparities in every domestic region of the company. Such evidence supports Plaintiffs' contention that Wal-Mart operates a highly centralized company that promotes policies common to all stores and maintains a single system of oversight. Wal-Mart does not challenge this evidence.

(2) Expert Opinion

Plaintiffs presented evidence from Dr. William Bielby, a sociologist, to interpret and explain the facts that suggest that Wal-Mart has and promotes a strong corporate culture — a culture that may include gender stereotyping. Dr. Bielby based his opinion on, among other things, Wal-Mart managers' deposition testimony; organizational charts; correspondence, memos, reports, and presentations relating to personnel policy and practice, diversity, and equal employment opportunity issues; documents describing the culture and history of the company; and a large body of social science research on the impact of organizational policy and practice on workplace bias.

Dr. Bielby testified that he employed a social framework analysis to examine the distinctive features of Wal-Mart's policies and practices and evaluated them "against what social science shows to be factors that create and sustain bias and those that minimize bias."[21] In Dr. Bielby's opinion, "social science research demonstrates that gender stereotypes are especially likely to influence personnel decisions when they are based on subjective factors, because substantial decision-maker discretion tends to allow people to seek out and retain stereotyping-confirming information and ignore or minimize information that defies stereotypes." Id. at 153 (internal quotation marks omitted). Dr. Bielby concluded that: (1) Wal-Mart's centralized coordination, reinforced by a strong organizational culture, sustains uniformity in personnel policy and practice; (2) there are significant deficiencies in Wal-Mart's equal employment policies and practices; and (3) Wal-Mart's personnel policies and practices make pay and promotion decisions vulnerable to gender bias. See id. at 153-54.

---

[21] For a description of the "social framework analysis," see Melissa Hart & Paul M. Secunda, A Matter of Context: Social Framework Evidence in Employment Discrimination Class Actions, 78 Fordham L. Rev. 37, 41-55 (2009).

The district court reviewed Plaintiffs' and Wal-Mart's competing claims as to Wal-Mart's uniform culture and determined that "the evidence indicates that in-store pay and promotion decisions are largely subjective and made within a substantial range of discretion by store or district level managers, and that this is a common feature which provides a wide enough conduit for gender bias to potentially seep into the system." Id. at 152. Having evaluated this evidence in detail, the court determined "that given the evidence regarding strong uniform culture and policies, the degree and impact of this practice is a significant question of fact common to the class as a whole." Id. at 153. Such a reasoned determination is what our standard for Rule 23 requires.

Wal-Mart vigorously challenges Dr. Bielby's third conclusion as vague and imprecise because he concluded that Wal-Mart is "vulnerable" to bias or gender stereotyping but failed to identify a specific discriminatory policy at Wal-Mart. Specifically, Wal-Mart contends that Dr. Bielby's testimony does not meet the standards for expert testimony set forth in Federal Rule of Evidence 702 and Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 597 (1993), which held that a trial court must act as a "gatekeeper" in determining whether to admit or exclude expert evidence.

Wal-Mart made an identical argument to the district court and the district court properly rejected it. A close reading of the district court's order demonstrates its correct understanding of its role at the Rule 23(a)(2) certification stage — to make factual determinations regarding evidence as it relates to common questions of fact or law but not to decide which parties' evidence is ultimately more persuasive as to liability. The court stated, "Dr. Bielby presents enough of a basis, both in his review of the scientific literature and on the facts of the case, to provide a foundation for his opinions." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 154. The court correctly explained that whether the jury was ultimately persuaded by those opinions was a question on the merits. For the class certification, however, Dr. Bielby's opinions, for which Wal-Mart did not challenge the methodology, raised a question "of corporate uniformity and gender stereotyping that is common to all class members." Id. We cannot say that considering Dr. Bielby's opinions in this method was an abuse of discretion.

This conclusion is furthered by the fact that Wal-Mart did not (and does not) challenge Dr. Bielby's methodology or contend that his findings lack relevance because they "do[ ] not relate to any issue in the case," Daubert, 509 U.S. at 591 (internal quotation marks omitted). Wal-Mart challenges only whether certain inferences can be persuasively drawn from his data. But because Daubert does not require a court to admit or exclude evidence based on its persuasiveness, but rather requires a court to admit or exclude evidence based on its scientific reliability and relevance, id. at 587-92 (relevance standard "is a liberal one," under which evidence is relevant if it has " 'any tendency to make the existence of any fact that is of consequence to the determination of the action more probable or less probable than it would be without the evidence' " (quoting Fed. R. Evid. 401)), testing Dr. Bielby's testimony for "Daubert reliability" would not have addressed Wal-Mart's objections. It would have simply revealed what Wal-Mart itself has admitted and courts have long accepted: that properly analyzed social science data, like that offered by Dr. Bielby, may support a plaintiff's assertions that a claim is proper for class resolution. See Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 235-36, 255 (1989) (considering similar evidence offered by expert social psychologist).

[14] Accordingly, Wal-Mart's contention that the district court was required to strike Dr. Bielby's testimony under the Daubert test at the class certification stage, simply because the conclusion he reached seemed unpersuasive absent certain corroborating evidence, is misplaced.[22] See Daubert, 509 U.S. at [22] We are not convinced by the dissent's argument that Daubert has exactly the same application at the class certification stage as it does to expert testimony relevant at trial. Dissent at 6255. However, even assuming it did, the district court here was not in error. Thus we need not resolve this issue here.

---

In accepting Dr. Bielby's social framework analysis, the district court stated:

> The Court is further guided by Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharm., Inc. (Daubert II), 43 F.3d 1311, 1316 (9th Cir. 1995), in which the Ninth Circuit stated that scientific knowledge "does not mean absolute certainty," and that expert testimony should be admitted when "the proffered testimony is 'based on scientifically valid principles.' " Id., quoting Daubert I, 509 U.S. 579, 113 S. Ct. 2786. The Ninth Circuit contin> ued: "Our task, then, is to analyze not what the experts say, but what basis they have for saying it." Daubert II, 43 F.3d at 1316. The Court is satisfied that Dr. Bi[e]lby's opinion—while subject to critique—is based on valid principles. Thus, it is sufficiently probative to assist the Court in evaluating the class certification requirements at issue in this case. Accordingly, Defendant's motion to strike Dr. Bilby's declaration is denied.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

Dukes v. Wal-Mart, Inc., 222 F.R.D. 189, 192 (N.D. Cal. 2004) ("Dukes II").

On this review, regardless of whether full Daubert review is required at the class certification stage, we cannot say that admitting Dr. Bielby's social framework analysis was an abuse of discretion. The district court specifically considered Daubert's applicability to Dr. Bielby and was within its discretion to limit its inquiry. As the district court observed, Dr. Bielby's testimony could be admissible even without reaching "definitive[ ]" conclusions, because tentative rather than "conclusive determination[s]" are in "the nature of this particular field of science." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 154.

Other cases support this conclusion. The Third Circuit, citing IPO, has noted that when the plaintiffs' ability to prove their case "is genuinely disputed, the district court must resolve it after considering all relevant evidence. Here [in Hydrogen Peroxide], the District Court apparently believed it was barred from resolving" these expert disputes. Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 325. Unlike Hydrogen Peroxide and other cases Wal-Mart cites, in the present case the district court heard, rather than excluded, the bulk of the relevant evidence. As a general rule, " '[d]istrict courts are not required to hold a Daubert hearing before ruling on the admissibility of scientific evidence.' " Millenkamp v. Davisco Foods Int'l, Inc., 562 F.3d 971, 979 (9th Cir. 2009) (quoting Jaros v. E.I. DuPont (In re Hanford Nuclear Reservation Litig.), 292 F.3d 1124, 1138 (9th Cir. 2002)). Plaintiffs clearly established foundation for Dr. Bielby's testimony

595 ("The focus, of course, must be solely on principles and methodology, not on the conclusions that they generate."). While a jury may ultimately agree with Wal-Mart that, in the absence of a specific discriminatory policy promulgated by Wal-Mart, it is not more likely than not, based solely on Dr. Bielby's analysis, that Wal-Mart engaged in actual gender discrimination, that question must be left to the merits stage of the litigation (and presumably will not have to be decided as there will be other evidence). At the class certification stage, it is enough that Dr. Bielby presented scientifically reliable evidence tending to show that a common question of fact—i.e., "Does Wal-Mart's policy of decentralized, subjective employment decision making operate to discriminate against female employees?"—exists with respect to all members of the class.[23] This he did and, thus, we and statistics. It was not an abuse of discretion for the district court not to exclude them, under Daubert or otherwise.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[23] As discussed below in Part II.A.2.b, this court and many others have held that "delegation to supervisors, pursuant to company-wide policies, of discretionary authority without sufficient oversight . . . gives rise to common questions of fact warranting certification of the proposed class." Caridad, 191 F.3d at 291, overruled on other grounds by IPO, 471 F.3d at 39-42; see Hnot, 241 F.R.D. at 210 (explaining that IPO did not overrule this aspect of Caridad); see also Staton, 327 F.3d at 955-56 (rejecting argument that "decisionmaking at Boeing is too decentralized to permit a class that combines plaintiffs from disparate locales"); Shipes v. Trinity Indus., 987 F.2d 311, 316 (5th Cir. 1993) (upholding commonality finding where all of company's plants "utilized the same subjective criteria in making personnel decisions"); Cox v. Am. Cast Iron Pipe Co., 784 F.2d 1546, 1557 (11th Cir. 1986) (holding that " '[a]llegations of similar discriminatory employment practices, such as . . . [the] use find no error in the district court's acceptance of Dr. Bielby's evidence to support a finding of commonality.

(3) Statistical Evidence

It is well established that plaintiffs may demonstrate commonality by presenting statistical evidence, which survives a "rigorous analysis," sufficient to fairly raise a common question concerning whether there is class-wide discrimination. See Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15, 161; Caridad, 191 F.3d at 292;[24] see also Stastny v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 628 F.2d 267, 278 (4th Cir. 1980) (recognizing that statistical data showing comparable disparities experienced by protected employees may indicate a policy or practice that commonly affects the class members and raises a common question concerning whether the pattern or practice is discriminatory).

[Footnote continued from previous page]

of entirely subjective personnel processes that operated to discriminate, would satisfy the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a)'" (alterations in original) (quoting Carpenter v. Stephen F. Austin State Univ., 706 F.2d 608, 617 (5th Cir. 1983))); Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249, 1276 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (explaining that "subjective criteria may well serve as a veil of seeming legitimacy behind which illegal discrimination is operating").

[24] See Hnot, 241 F.R.D. at 210 ("Caridad held, in part, that class challenges to subjective employment practices, like other disparate treatment and disparate impact claims, may satisfy the commonality requirement. In re IPO did not even address this aspect of Caridad. . . . [I]t did not question Caridad's holding that statistical evidence can demonstrate commonality in a challenge to subjective employment practices, which remains controlling authority." (citation omitted)).

[15] A careful reading of the district court's treatment of the competing statistical evidence demonstrates that, in conducting its analysis, the district court followed the correct standard as explained in Falcon and our earlier cases, and clarified today.

Dr. Richard Drogin, Plaintiffs' statistician, analyzed data at a regional level. He ran separate regression analyses for each of the forty-one regions[25] containing Wal-Mart stores.[26] He concluded that "there are statistically significant disparities between men and women at Wal-Mart in terms of compensation and promotions, that these disparities are wide-spread across regions, and that they can be explained only by gender discrimination." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 154. Dr. Marc Bendick, Plaintiffs' labor economics expert, conducted a "benchmarking" study comparing Wal-Mart with twenty of its competitors, concluding Wal-Mart promotes a lower percentage of women than its competitors.[27] See id.

---

[25] Each region contains approximately 80 to 85 stores.

[26] Regression analyses, in general terms, provide estimates of the effect of independent variables on a single dependent variable. See Hemmings v. Tidyman's Inc., 285 F.3d 1174, 1183-84 & n.9 (9th Cir. 2002). The purpose of this methodology is to estimate the extent to which a particular independent variable (in this case, gender) has influenced the dependent variables of compensation and promotion. See id.; see also Rudebusch v. Hughes, 313 F.3d 506, 511-12 (9th Cir. 2002). As long as the analyses include enough relevant non-discriminatory independent variables (e.g., education, experience, performance, etc.), the results will indicate whether any salary disparities are attributable to gender (thereby raising an inference of discrimination) or whether the disparities are attributable to other factors (and thereby refuting such an inference). See Hemmings, 285 F.3d at 1183-84 & n.9; see also EEOC v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Nw., Inc., 885 F.2d 575, 577 n.3 (9th Cir. 1989) ("A regression analysis is a common statistical tool . . . designed to isolate the influence of one particular factor — [e.g.,] sex—on a dependent variable—[e.g.,] salary." (internal quotation marks omitted)).

Wal-Mart challenges Dr. Drogin's findings and faults his decision to conduct his research on the regional level, rather than analyze the data store-by-store.[28] However, the proper test of whether workforce statistics should be viewed at the macro (regional) or micro (store or sub-store) level depends largely on the similarity of the employment practices and the interchange of employees at the various facilities. See Kirkland v. N.Y. State Dep't of Corr. Servs., 520 F.2d 420, 425 (2d Cir. 1975) (recognizing that the focus of analysis depends on the nature of a defendant's employment practices); 2 Barbara Lindemann & Paul Grossman, Employment Discrimination Law 1598, 1723 (3d ed. 1996).

Here, Dr. Drogin explained that a store-by-store analysis would not capture: (1) the effect of district, regional, and company-wide control over Wal-Mart's uniform compensation policies and procedures; (2) the dissemination of Wal-Mart's uniform compensation policies and procedures resulting from the frequent movement of store managers; or (3) Wal-Mart's strong corporate culture. Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 157.

---

[27] "Specifically, Dr. Bendick compared, or 'benchmarked,' Wal-Mart against twenty other [similar] general merchandise retailers by comparing workforce data provided by the companies to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 164. Dr. Bendick analyzed the data "to determine the extent to which women in the relevant market sought promotion, so that an inference could be made that roughly the same percentage of women would have [sought promotion] at Wal-Mart if given the opportunity." See id. As Dr. Bendick explained, "The logic in benchmarking is that, if retail chains comparable to Wal-Mart are successfully employing women at some rate, then women are presumably available, interested, and qualified to hold comparable positions at Wal-Mart at a similar rate." Id.

[28] This argument is unsurprising, and is the statistical argument similarly situated defendants make as a matter of course.

In conducting its rigorous analysis of these claims, the district court first re-stated its standard of review. Its decision makes clear that the district court made determinations that Plaintiffs' statistics raised common questions of fact or law only after it rigorously analyzed them, probing significantly behind the pleadings and resolving facts necessary to make determinations on Rule 23(a)(2).

Discussing the proper standard for evaluating the statistics, the district court said it rejected a full-blown merits evaluation of the evidence but had to "view[ ] the statistical evidence and testimony through the proper lens of the standards applicable to a class certification motion." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 155. Though noting it would not decide the actual merits of the claims, the court did "delve[ ] into the substance of the expert testimony . . . to the extent necessary to determine if it [wa]s sufficiently probative of an inference of discrimination to create a common question as to the existence of a pattern and practice of gender discrimination at Wal-Mart." Id. This is the precise inquiry that cases such as IPO have required, and it clearly meets the standard we outline above, particularly given the depth of the district court's review, the evidentiary posture of the case as a Title VII pattern and practice case, and the underlying procedural standard where the district court here was reviewing evidence under Rule 23(a)(2), to raise a common question, rather than, like the cases Wal-Mart cites, Rule 23(b)(3), to determine predominance. See Hnot, 241 F.R.D. at 210.

In addition to formulating a review that complied with Falcon and our precedent, the district court, contrary to Wal-Mart's claims, did not improperly rely on out-of-circuit cases the Second Circuit overruled in IPO. Specifically, Wal-Mart cites Visa Check and Caridad as decisions IPO rejected, noting the district court's supposed reliance on this reasoning renders its decision error. As an initial matter, the district court did not cite Visa Check at all. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. 137 passim. While it did cite to Caridad, nothing about its citation to Caridad was erroneous.

The district court cited Caridad five times. Two instances of this reliance can be immediately set aside as unproblematic because they relied on Caridad's holding that excessive subjectivity in corporate policies can contribute to a finding of commonality. Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 149-50, 154. IPO neither addressed nor overruled this holding in Caridad, and it still remains "controlling authority" in the Second Circuit. Hnot, 241 F.R.D. at 210. A third citation to Caridad supported the district court's statement that, "although some inquiry into the substance of a case may be necessary to ascertain satisfaction of the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a), it is improper to advance a decision on the merits to the class certification stage." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 144 (internal quotation marks omitted) (citing Caridad, 191 F. 3d at 292). This statement is entirely consistent with Falcon, our precedent, and our ruling today. The two other citations to Caridad equally show that the district court did not adopt the "some showing" standard that the Second Circuit properly rejected. Instead, the district court refused to consider the merits—it would not conclusively find whether Wal-Mart had discriminated—but it analyzed the evidence to the extent, under Rule 23(a)(2), that it had to determine whether "there are questions of law or fact common to the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2); Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 143.[29]

[16] Critically, the district court did not shy away from issues overlapping with the merits; rather it devoted fifteen pages of its opinion to probing the parties' statistics. The district court merely refused to decide the underlying merits themselves and examined evidence only to the extent necessary to satisfy itself under Rule 23(a)(2) that Plaintiffs raised common questions. In doing so, it joined dozens of other district courts in this circuit that have engaged the proper analysis, all using different wording, but all probing behind the pleadings to make determinations on the Rule 23 requirements. See, e.g., In re Cooper Cos. Sec. Litig., 254 F.R.D. 628, 641 n.7 (C.D. Cal. 2009); Bishop v. Petro-Chem. Transp., LLC, 582 F. Supp. 2d 1290, 1305 (E.D. Cal. 2008); Alexander v. JBC Legal Group, P.C., 237 F.R.D. 628, 629 (D. Mont. 2006); Westways World Travel, Inc., 218 F.R.D. at 230.

---

[29] The district court's other two citations to Caridad supported its statements that, first, "[d]efendant's arguments seek to engage the Court in a merits evaluation of the expert opinions. The Court rejects this approach, and views the statistical evidence and testimony through the proper lens of the standards applicable to a class certification motion." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 155 & n. 21 (citing Caridad, 191 F.3d at 292). Second, "[t]he ultimate question of whether subjective decision-making and a uniform culture contribute to a nation-wide pattern of gender discrimination will, of course, be for a jury to decide. At this stage, however, these factors are apparent enough to support Dr. Drogin's regional approach as at least a reasonable means of conducting a statistical analysis." Id. at 159 & n.29 (citing Caridad, 191 F.3d at 292-93). These are determinations of the type we require for Rule 23(a)(2) certification. Though we have used different language in clarifying the standard today, the district court examined the evidence and made a determination, over Wal-Mart's evidence, that Plaintiffs' evidence raised questions of law or fact common to the class. That is what Rule 23(a)(2), the Supreme Court, and we require.

Turning to the factual assertions in Plaintiffs' evidence, the court made a preliminary determination, based on the following "largely uncontested" statistics:

> [W]omen working in Wal-Mart stores are paid less than men in every region, that pay disparities exist in most job categories, that the salary gap widens over time even for men and women hired into the same jobs at the same time, that women take longer to enter into management positions, and that the higher one looks in the organization the lower the percentage of women.

Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 155. Importantly, and as instructed by Falcon, these factual determinations were arrived at after looking beyond the pleadings to Plaintiffs' expert's deposition. Id.

Correctly noting that descriptive statistics do not address causation, the district court then analyzed not the pleadings, but Plaintiffs' and Wal-Mart's statistics, finding, "In short, all of Dr. Drogin's regressions show that gender is a statistically significant variable in accounting for the salary differentials between female class members and male employees at Wal-Mart stores." Id. at 156.

The court specifically analyzed whether aggregation of statistics for regional units was proper or whether Wal-Mart was correct to insist upon a store-level evaluation. The district court first stated the relevant sub-standard: "The proper test of whether workforce statistics should be viewed at the macro (regional) or micro (store or sub-store) level depends largely on the similarity of the employment practices, and the interchange of employees, at the various facilities." Id. at 157 (citation omitted). It continued, "Dr. Drogin contends that it is proper to conduct the analysis on a regional level because the subjective decision-making in compensation and promotions takes place within parameters and guidelines that are highly uniform . . . . Plaintiffs also have shown, as discussed above, that the primary salary decision-makers, Store Managers, experience frequent relocation among the various stores." Id. at 157.

[17] On appeal, Wal-Mart contends that the district court erred by not finding Wal-Mart's statistical evidence more persuasive than Plaintiffs' evidence because, according to Wal-Mart, its analysis was conducted store-by-store. However, contrary to Wal-Mart's characterization of its analysis, and the dissent's concerns regarding statistical aggregation,[30]

---

[30] Contrary to the dissent's characterization, the district court was cognizant of the possibility of aggregation problems in the data. Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 155-59 & n.22. The dissent's invocation of "Simpson's Paradox" to discount Plaintiffs' statistical evidence is not compelling, particularly at the class certification stage. See Dissent at 6253 n.12. First, Simpson's Paradox is a problem of incorrect causation inferences as much as it is the result of an aggregation problem, see Judea Pearl, Causality: Models, Reasoning, and Inference 130 (2000) (noting that the study the dissent cites, while not "defective," highlights "that no adjustment is guaranteed to give an unbiased estimate of causal effects, direct or indirect, absent a careful examination of Wal-Mart's own research was not conducted at the individual store level. Dr. Joan Haworth, Wal-Mart's expert, did not conduct a store-by-store analysis; instead she reviewed data at the sub-store level by comparing departments to analyze the pay differential between male and female hourly employees.[31] Moreover, our task here is to determine whether the district court abused its discretion in finding that, based on all the evidence presented, there existed common questions of fact sufficient to justify class certification. See Gonzales v. Free Speech Coal., 408 F.3d 613, 618 (9th Cir. 2005); Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 867. We are not to re-examine the relative strength or persuasiveness of the commonality evidence ourselves. Thus, even if we were to find, based on an independent review of the record, that Wal-Mart's statistical evidence was more persuasive than Plain-the causal assumptions that ensure identification"), and the district court considered potential problems and causation inferences in its discussion of the competing regression analyses. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 155-56 & n.22. Second, at trial, Wal-Mart is free to further argue the unpersuasiveness of Plaintiffs' statistics, but lacking evidence showing a likelihood of a Simpson's Paradox, and given the many causal factors the statistical analyses addressed, see id.; Marios G. Pavlides & Michael D. Perlman, How Likely is a Simpson's Paradox, 63 Am. Statistician 226, 229-30 (2009), we find the district court properly considered Plaintiffs' statistics probative after a rigorous analysis. See Falcon, 457 U.S. at 161; Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 156-59.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[31] This means that Dr. Haworth ran separate regression analyses for: (1) each of the specialty departments in the store, (2) each grocery department in the store, and (3) the store's remaining departments. She did not run regression analyses to examine pay differential between male and female salaried employees.

tiffs'—which we do not, in any event—this alone would not allow us to find that the district court improperly relied on Dr. Drogin's testimony as a valid component of its commonality analysis or that the district court erred in its ultimate conclusion that the commonality prerequisite was satisfied. That the jury might later find Wal-Mart's statistical evidence more persuasive does not detract from the district court's determination, after extensive review, that Dr. Drogin's regional analysis raises common issues appropriate for class adjudication.

Here, again, the district court followed the Supreme Court's guidance to thoughtfully "probe behind the pleadings," Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160, and did not abuse its discretion when it relied on Dr. Drogin's use and interpretation of statistical data as a valid component of its determination that Plaintiffs raised common questions. It considered Wal-Mart's challenges to Dr. Drogin's statistics and made the specific determination that "the Court is not persuaded that Dr. Drogin's aggregated statistical analysis should be rejected because he did not choose to utilize the Chow test," as Wal-Mart had urged. Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 158. In other words, for the purposes of class certification, the district court reasonably made the determination to credit Plaintiffs' statistics.

Wal-Mart also claims the district court erred in determining that Wal-Mart provided little or no proper legal or factual challenge to Dr. Drogin's analysis,[32] and that, contrary to Wal-Mart's contention, Dr. Haworth's Store Manager survey evidence—which was stricken for failing to satisfy the standards of Rules 702 and 703 of Evidence[33] —did not undermine or contradict Dr. Drogin's evidence.

---

[32] For example, Wal-Mart maintains that the district court erred by not requiring Dr. Drogin to perform a "Chow test" to determine whether data could be properly aggregated. We have

In rejecting the inclusion of Wal-Mart's Store Manager surveys as a challenge to Dr. Drogin's statistics because they were not based on a scientifically valid reasoning or methodology, Dukes II, 222 F.R.D. at 197-98 (discussing Rules 702 and 703), see Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592-93, the court noted that even if the evidence were included, "[t]he survey would not provide sufficient additional weight to Defendant's challenge to Dr. Drogin's analysis to sway the Court from its conclusion that his testimony supports an inference of discrimination, and thus the existence of substantial questions common to the class." Dukes II, 222 F.R.D. at 198 n.9 (emphasis added). In so ruling, the district court went even fur-not found a single case suggesting or requiring use of such a test.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[33] In addition to her sub-store analysis, Dr. Haworth conducted a survey of store managers. After reviewing the survey and its methodology, the district court concluded that the Store Manager survey was biased both "on its face" and in the way that it was conducted. Dukes II, 222 F.R.D. at 196-97 (noting that the survey's results "are not the 'product of reliable principles and methods,' and therefore are not the type of evidence that would be 'reasonably relied upon by experts'" (quoting Fed. R. Evid. 702, 703)). Dr. Haworth's disaggregated analysis created pools too small to yield any meaningful results. Wal-Mart has not appealed this issue. Accordingly, this evidence is not properly before us. See Kohler v. Inter-Tel Techs., 244 F.3d 1167, 1179 n.8 (9th Cir. 2001) (recognizing that the appellant waived a claim by failing to raise it in her briefs).

ther into the merits than necessary to make a reasoned, justifiable determination, after proper review under the correct standard, that Plaintiffs' claims were appropriate for class adjudication due to common questions.

Thus, because Dr. Drogin adequately explained, and the district court rigorously analyzed, why his statistical method best reflected the alleged discrimination, the court did not abuse its discretion when it credited Dr. Drogin's analysis of statistical evidence of common discrimination questions. Nor did the district court abuse its discretion when it concluded that Dr. Drogin's analysis supported Plaintiffs' contention that there is a common core of facts flowing from Wal-Mart's corporate structure and policies that affects class members generally with regard to their discrimination claims. While Plaintiffs and Wal-Mart disagree on whose findings are more persuasive, the disagreement is not one of whether Plaintiffs have asserted "common questions of law or fact." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157, 159. The disagreement is the common question, and deciding which side has been more persuasive is an issue for the next phase of the litigation. Requiring even more findings and further analysis from the district court would be to force a trial on the merits at the certification stage.

Finally, and discussed further below, the district court's review of statistics showing discrimination regarding promotions was also not an abuse of discretion. Plaintiffs and Defendant disagree over whether Dr. Drogin's analysis of internal promotion data was proper. Specifically, both sides agreed that Wal-Mart's actual applicant flow data for promotions during the class period was limited and contained significant gaps. Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 162. Dr.

Drogin's statistics estimated the applicant flow by "tabulating 'the incumbents in historical feeder jobs for each promotion.' " Id. Wal-Mart argued that the data, "while limited, is nonetheless sufficient to justify an extrapolation for all job openings during the entire class period." Id.

The district court, addressing this statistical dispute, found Plaintiffs' statistics "sufficient to create an inference of discrimination." Id. at 164. In doing so, the district court found Dr. Drogin's reasoning and methodology valid and applicable in the case. While the court noted in passing that Dr. Drogin's statistics were "reasonable," the court also, and more appropriately, stated that "it is well recognized that where actual applicant flow data is inadequate or unavailable, other measures of applicant flow—including but not limited to "feeder pools"—are deemed acceptable so long as they are used in a reliable manner." Id. at 162-63. In doing so the district court cited an evidence treatise, Ninth Circuit precedent, and a district court case that had accepted the same type of feeder pool methodology in a dispute of the very same experts—Dr. Drogin and Dr. Haworth. Id. at 163 & n.37 (citing Hemmings v. Tidyman's Inc., 285 F.3d 1174, 1185-86 (9th Cir. 2002); R. Paetzold and S. Willborn, The Statistics of Discrimination §§ 4.02-4.04 (2002); Stender v. Lucky Stores, Inc., 803 F. Supp. 259, 333-34 (N.D. Cal. 1992)).

Thus, properly considering Dr. Drogin's statistics, the court made a determination on the applicant pool data. It found that "Defendant's assertion that its approach is necessarily superior does not withstand scrutiny. Rather, Defendant's arguments, which go to the weight of the evidence [i.e., the persuasiveness on the merits], merely highlight the presence of a significant issue affecting all class members which supports, rather than defeats, granting class certification." Id. at 164. This determination was thus made after a rigorous analysis of the parties' statistical claims.

[18] In short, the district court stated the legal standard, analyzed Plaintiffs' and Wal-Mart's competing claims to the propriety of aggregating statistics on a regional level and addressing Wal-Mart's missing applicant flow data, noted Plaintiffs have "shown" reasons to accept their statistics, dismissed Wal-Mart's statistical challenges, demonstrated these finding were supported by relevant Ninth Circuit precedent (and an identical dispute involving the same two experts), rejected Wal-Mart's reliance on a district court case purportedly explaining why the sub-store statistical analysis was proper, and, finally, determined that at the class certification stage all of this analysis was sufficient to support Dr. Drogin's analysis and raise questions of law or fact common to the class. This searching analysis was solid, well founded and in no way an abuse of discretion.

(4) Anecdotal Evidence

Circumstantial and anecdotal evidence of discrimination is commonly used in Title VII "pattern and practice" cases to bolster statistical proof by bringing "the cold numbers convincingly to life." Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 339; see also Rudebusch v. Hughes, 313 F.3d 506, 517 (9th Cir. 2002). Wal-Mart contends that the district court erred by concluding that the anecdotal evidence, presented by Plaintiffs in the form of sworn declarations, supported a finding of commonality.[34] Wal-Mart maintains that the declarations depict a handful of "widely divergent" events that cannot be deemed probative or representative of discrimination in pay or management-track promotions.

In their declarations, the potential class members testified to being paid less than similarly situated men, being denied or delayed in receiving promotions in a disproportionate manner when compared with similarly situated men, working in an atmosphere with a strong corporate culture of discrimination, and being subjected to various individual sexist acts. The district court credited this evidence.

[19] Wal-Mart argues that 120 declarations cannot sufficiently represent a class of this size. However, we find no authority requiring or even suggesting that a plaintiff class submit a specific number of declarations for such evidence to have any value. Moreover, the district court did not state that this anecdotal evidence provided sufficient proof to establish commonality by itself, but merely noted such evidence provides support for Plaintiffs' contention that commonality is present. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 166 ("This anecdotal evidence, in combination with the other evidence previously discussed, further supports an inference that [Wal-Mart's] policies and procedures have the effect of discriminating against Plaintiffs in a common manner.").[35] Because the combination of these declarations and Plaintiffs' other evidence, discussed below, raise an inference of common discriminatory experiences, the district court did not abuse its discretion when it considered Plaintiffs' anecdotal evidence.[36]

---

[34] Plaintiffs submitted declarations from each of the class representatives, as well as 114 declarations from putative class members around the country. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 165.

[35] Of course, the district court made no finding that Plaintiffs' anecdotal declarations alone would raise an inference of com-

Finally, in arguing against certification based on affidavits, Plaintiffs' personal allegations, statistics, and expert testimony, the dissent intersperses references of Falcon immediately with discussion of Cooper v. Federal Reserve Bank, 467 U.S. 867, 879 (1984), claiming "individual stories do not constitute significant proof that Wal-Mart has adopted a general policy of discrimination or that such a policy mon discriminatory experiences. Therefore, contrary to the dissent's mischaracterization of our holding, Dissent at 6244-45, this case does not present the opportunity for us to consider, let alone affirm, such a hypothetical finding.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[36] The dissent's accusation that both we and the district court are playing the "proverbial shell game," is unpersuasive given the weight of the evidence the district court considered. See Dissent at 6259. Not surprisingly, the dissent's implication that a single form of evidence must, by itself, be able to support a commonality finding to satisfy the standard of significance set forth in Falcon, cites no authority for its proposition. Id. Even under a preponderance of the evidence standard, see, e.g., Teamsters Local 445 Freight Div. Pension Fund v. Bombardier Inc., 546 F.3d 196, 202 (2d Cir. 2008), the district court's review here would have been sufficient, finding Plaintiffs' "evidence more than satisfies plaintiffs' burden to demonstrate commonality under Rule 23(a)(2)." See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 143, 145 ("The party seeking certification must provide facts sufficient to satisfy Rule 23(a) and (b) requirements. In turn, the district court must conduct a rigorous analysis to determine that the prerequisites of Rule 23 have been met. If a court is not fully satisfied, certification should be refused." (citations omitted)).

prevails" at Wal-Mart. Dissent at 6250. This criticism, and particularly its temporary suspension of consideration of the statistical evidence, is indicative of the dissent's repeated attempts to go beyond the Supreme Court's concern with the need for "more precise pleadings" in class actions, Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160-61 (citing Johnson, 417 F.2d at 1125), and the Court's command that "sometimes it may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings before coming to rest on the certification question," id. at 160, in an effort to reframe the question as one on whether Plaintiffs can actually succeed on the merits. Cf. Eisen, 417 U.S. at 177-78 (explaining that the plaintiffs' likelihood of success on the merits is not part of deciding whether certification is proper).

Contrary to the dissent's proposed standard, Plaintiffs here need not "establish a prima facie case" on the merits. Dissent at 6263. Class certification in Cooper had already taken place and, in fact, the case had gone through a trial. 467 U.S. at 872. The decision for the Supreme Court was whether the class's loss at trial precluded a class member from maintaining his own, separate civil action subsequent to the loss. Id. at 869. This is an entirely different posture than the present case presents, and the standard for winning a claim under McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973), is, of course, different than that for certifying a class action. See Cooper, 467 U.S. at 875-76; Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160-61.

b. Subjective Decision Making

As discussed above, the district court found substantial evidence suggesting common pay and promotion policies among Wal-Mart's many stores. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 148-51. The court also reasoned that Wal-Mart's decision to permit its managers to utilize subjectivity in interpreting those policies offers additional support for a commonality finding. See id. Relying on Sperling v. Hoffman-LaRoche, Inc., 924 F. Supp. 1346 (D.N.J. 1996), Wal-Mart challenges the latter conclusion, contending that managers' discretionary authority does not support a finding of commonality because "[d]ecentralized, discretionary decisionmaking is not inherently discriminatory."

It is well established that subjective decision making is a "ready mechanism[ ] for discrimination" and that courts should scrutinize it carefully. Sengupta v. Morrison-Knudsen Co., 804 F.2d 1072, 1075 (9th Cir. 1986) (internal quotation marks omitted). Wal-Mart is correct that discretionary decision making by itself is insufficient to meet Plaintiffs' burden. The district court recognized this, noting that managerial discretion is but one of several factors that supported a finding of commonality. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 149-50 ("And while the presence of excessive subjectivity, alone, does not necessarily create a common question of fact, where, as here, such subjectivity is part of a consistent corporate policy and supported by other evidence giving rise to an inference of discrimination, courts have not hesitated to find that commonality is satisfied.").

Wal-Mart is incorrect, however, that decentralized, subjective decision making cannot contribute to a common question of fact regarding the existence of discrimination. See Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15. Indeed, courts from around the country have found "[a]llegations of similar discriminatory employment practices, such as the use of entirely subjective personnel processes that operate to discriminate, [sufficient to] satisfy the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a)." Shipes v. Trinity Indus., 987 F.2d 311, 316 (5th Cir. 1993); see also supra note 7 and cases cited therein.

[20] Plaintiffs produced substantial evidence of Wal-Mart's centralized firm-wide culture and policies, see Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 151-54, thus providing a nexus between the subjective decision making and the considerable statistical evidence demonstrating a pattern of lower pay and fewer promotions for female employees. See id. at 154-65; see also Reid v. Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Co., 205 F.R.D. 655, 670-72 (N.D. Ga. 2001) (subjective decision making may give rise to an inference of discrimination where evidence shows a nexus between decision making and discrimination). Therefore, for the reasons stated above, there was no abuse of discretion in determining that Wal-Mart's subjective decision-making policy provides support for Plaintiffs' contention that commonality exists among potential class members.

c. Commonality Conclusion

[21] The district court's analysis of Rule 23(a)(2) complies with the standard the Supreme Court has set down and we have explained today for a district court adjudicating a motion for class certification. Plaintiffs' factual evidence, expert opinions, statistical evidence, and anecdotal evidence provide sufficient support to raise the common question whether Wal-Mart's female employees nationwide were subjected to a single set of corporate policies (not merely a number of independent discriminatory acts) that may have worked to unlawfully discriminate against them in violation of Title VII. Evidence of Wal-Mart's subjective decision-making policies suggests a common legal or factual question regarding whether Wal-Mart's policies or practices are discriminatory.

Many other courts have reached the same conclusion based on similar evidence. See, e.g., Staton, 327 F.3d at 955; Shipes, 987 F.2d at 316; Cox v. Am. Cast Iron Pipe Co., 784 F.2d 1546, 1557 (11th Cir. 1986); Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249, 1276 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

3. Typicality

As an initial matter, Plaintiffs contend that Wal-Mart has waived a challenge to the district court's typicality finding by failing to offer specific objections to the district court's typicality determination. However, because Wal-Mart refers, somewhat obliquely, to the typicality factor in its opening brief and because typicality and commonality are similar and tend to merge, see Falcon, 457 at 157 n.13,[37] we conclude that Wal-Mart did not waive its opportunity to challenge the district court's findings with regard to typicality.

Thus, although Wal-Mart did not raise a specific challenge, it nevertheless raised a general objection to the district court's conclusion that Plaintiffs' evidence satisfies the typicality requirement. As discussed below, to satisfy the typicality prerequisite, Plaintiffs must demonstrate that their claims and their class representatives are sufficiently typical of the class.

---

[37] Although the "commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a) tend to merge," see Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157 n.13, each factor serves a discrete purpose. Commonality examines the relationship of facts and legal issues common to class members, while typicality focuses on the relationship of facts and issues between the class and its representatives. See Newberg on Class Actions § 3.13, at 317.

a. Plaintiffs' Claims Are Sufficiently Typical

Rule 23(a)(3) requires that "the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3). We stated in Hanlon that, "[u]nder the rule's permissive standards, representative claims are 'typical' if they are reasonably coextensive with those of absent class members; they need not be substantially identical." 150 F.3d at 1020; see also Staton, 327 F.3d at 957 (stating that "a class representative [from each job category] for each type of discrimination claim alleged . . . is not necessary").

Thus, we must consider whether the injury allegedly suffered by the named plaintiffs and the rest of the class resulted from the same allegedly discriminatory practice. See Staton, 327 F.3d at 957. Even though individual employees in different stores with different managers may have received different levels of pay or may have been denied promotion or promoted at different rates, because the discrimination they claim to have suffered occurred through alleged common practices—e.g., excessively subjective decision making in a corporate culture of uniformity and gender stereotyping—the district court did not abuse its discretion by finding that their claims are sufficiently typical to satisfy Rule 23(a)(3).

b. Plaintiffs' Representatives Are Sufficiently Typical of the Class

Typicality requires that the named plaintiffs be members of the class they represent. See Falcon, 457 U.S. at 156. There is no dispute that the class representatives are "typical" of the hourly class members, because almost all of the class representatives hold hourly positions. Instead, Wal-Mart contends that the class representatives are not typical of all female in-store managers because only one of the class representatives holds a salaried management position, and she holds a somewhat low-level position.

However, because all female employees faced the same alleged discrimination, the lack of a class representative for each management category does not undermine Plaintiffs' certification goal. See Hartman v. Duffey, 19 F.3d 1459, 1471 (D.C. Cir. 1994) (An employee can challenge discrimination in "different job categories where the primary practices used to discriminate in the different categories are themselves similar. While it may be prudent to have the class divided into sub-classes represented by a named plaintiff from each of the differing job categories, it would not be necessary to the validity of the class certification to do so."); Paxton v. Union Nat'l Bank, 688 F.2d 552, 562 (8th Cir. 1982) ("Typicality is not defeated because of the varied promotional opportunities at issue, or the differing qualifications of the plaintiffs and class members.").

In addition, because the range of managers in the proposed class is limited to managers working in Wal-Mart's stores and excludes those at regional or national offices, it is not an excessively diverse class; a named plaintiff occupying a lower-level, salaried, in-store management position is sufficient to satisfy the "permissive" typicality requirement. Staton, 327 F.3d at 957 (recognizing that, " '[u]nder the rule's permissive standards,' " plaintiffs are not required to offer a class representative for each type of discrimination claim alleged (quoting Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1020)).

[22] Because Plaintiffs' claims and Plaintiffs' representatives are sufficiently typical of the class, the district court acted within its discretion when it found that Plaintiffs satisfied the typicality prerequisite.

4. Adequate Representation

Rule 23(a)(4) permits certification of a class action only if "the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(4). This factor requires: (1) that the proposed representative Plaintiffs do not have conflicts of interest with the proposed class, and (2) that Plaintiffs are represented by qualified and competent counsel. See Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1020; see also Molski v. Gleich, 318 F.3d 937, 955 (9th Cir. 2003).

Before the district court, Wal-Mart argued that Plaintiffs cannot satisfy this factor because of a conflict of interest between female in-store managers who are both plaintiff class members and decision-making agents of Wal-Mart. Relying on Staton, the district court recognized that courts need not deny certification of an employment class simply because the class includes both supervisory and non-supervisory employees. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 168; see also Staton, 327 F.3d at 958-59. This decision was not an abuse of discretion. Finally, because Wal-Mart does not challenge the district court's finding that Plaintiffs' class representatives and counsel are adequate, we need not analyze this factor.

5. Commonality, Typicality, and Manageability of Promotion Claims

The district court certified Plaintiffs' promotion claims for injunctive and declaratory relief and punitive damages, but concluded that "manageability concerns" required that "any lost pay remedy on Plaintiffs' promotion claim would be limited to that subset of the class for whom objective applicant data exists." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 183. Wal-Mart objects to the certification of Plaintiffs' promotion claims, even with this limitation, on commonality and manageability grounds. Plaintiffs, on the other hand, object to the district court's limitation of eligibility for back pay to positions for which objective applicant data exist.

[23] Title VII pattern and practice class actions frequently include both salary and promotion claims. See, e.g., Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385, 406 (1986) (per curiam); Cooper, 467 U.S. at 870. As discussed above, the district court found that Plaintiffs here have provided evidence sufficient to support their contention that company-wide corporate practices and policies—including excessive subjectivity in personnel decisions, gender stereotyping, and maintenance of a strong corporate culture—affected both compensation and promotion of all Plaintiffs in a common manner. Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 166. Although there may be some variation among individual promotion decisions, variation does not prevent class certification of common issues of fact. See Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1019 ("Rule 23(a)(2) has been construed permissively. All questions of fact and law need not be common to satisfy the rule."). Given its findings regarding Wal-Mart's company-wide promotion policies and minimum guidelines, see Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 148-49, the district court did not abuse its discretion by concluding that there was a sufficient common factual basis among putative class members' promotion claims to satisfy Rule 23(a)(2).

[24] We also affirm the district court's conclusion that a back pay remedy for promotion claims would be manageable only "with respect to those positions for which objective applicant data is available to document class member interest." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 183. Wal-Mart's extensive database containing information on each employee individually with respect to job history, seniority, job review ratings, and many other factors, see id. at 183-85, would enable a determination of each class member's qualifications for promotion without the need for potentially unmanageable individualized hearings. The district court did not abuse its discretion by limiting eligibility for back pay, however, because allowing class members to demonstrate post hoc their previous interest in promotions might indeed be unmanageable. See id. at 181-82.

6. Rule 23(a) Conclusion

[25] Based on the evidence before the district court, which it rigorously analyzed pursuant to Falcon, 457 U.S. at 161, and the standard herein described, the district court did not abuse its discretion when it found that the Rule 23(a) elements were satisfied.

B. Rule 23(b)

As mentioned earlier, Plaintiffs moved to certify the class under Rule 23(b)(2), which requires showing that "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief . . . is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2).[38] The district court agreed with Plaintiffs. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 170-71. Wal-Mart argues the district court merely "paid lip service" to Rule 23(b)(2) and erred in certifying the class under Rule 23(b)(2) because claims for monetary relief predominate over claims for injunctive and declaratory relief.

---

[38] The purported class need only satisfy one of Rule 23(b)'s prongs to be sustainable. See Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1186.

[26] Rule 23(b)(2) is not appropriate for all classes and "does not extend to cases in which the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) advisory committee's note to 1966 amends., 39 F.R.D. 69, 102; see also Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1195 ("Class certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is appropriate only where the primary relief sought is declaratory or injunctive."). An interpretation of Rule 23(b)(2) that prevented any claim for monetary relief would render this advisory committee requirement redundant or irrelevant.

We first turn to the appropriate standard for determining when monetary relief "predominates" over declaratory and injunctive relief and therefore precludes certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class. We have previously joined the Second Circuit in adopting a test that focuses on the plaintiffs' subjective intent in bringing a lawsuit. See Molski, 318 F.3d at 950; Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R. Co., 267 F.3d 147, 164 (2d Cir. 2001). In contrast, several other circuits use the "incidental damages standard" that was first enunciated by the Fifth Circuit in Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 415-16 (5th Cir. 1998). See, e.g., Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 646-51 (6th Cir. 2006); Murray v. Auslander, 244 F.3d 807, 812 (11th Cir. 2001); Lemon v. Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs Local No. 139, 216 F.3d 577, 580-81 (7th Cir. 2000). Under the Allison approach, monetary relief predominates over other forms of relief "unless it is incidental to requested injunctive or declaratory relief." See Allison, 151 F.3d at 415.

We see no need to employ either approach, which are both, essentially, glosses on the text of the Advisory Committee's Note's statement that Rule 23(b)(2) "does not extend to cases in which the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Merriam-Webster defines "predominant" as "having superior strength, influence, or authority: prevailing." Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 978 (11th ed. 2004). To be certified under Rule 23(b)(2), therefore, a class must seek only monetary damages that are not "superior [in] strength, influence, or authority" to injunctive and declaratory relief.

An analysis of a plaintiff's subjective intent in bringing a suit, as required by the standard set forth in Molski, is, at best, an incomplete method for answering this question. By eschewing consideration of the practical impact of a request for monetary relief on the litigation itself, the sole emphasis on the plaintiff's intent ignores important indicators of the "strength, influence, [and] authority" of a request for specific monetary relief. In short, Molski's focus on subjective intent and its concomitant failure to consider the pragmatic impact of a request for monetary relief render it fatally flawed.

The Molski approach is troubling for the additional reason that it requires courts to engage in a nebulous and imprecise inquiry into the plaintiffs' intent in bringing a particular suit. Only in those cases in which a request for injunctive relief is obviously a ruse will this inquiry provide a clear answer. More often than not, we suspect that the answer will be equivocal and, therefore, essentially an entirely discretionary one.

Although the standard set forth in Allison is an objective one that does consider the practical effect of a request for monetary damages, it suffers from a different deficiency. By requiring monetary relief to be no more than "incidental" to injunctive or declaratory relief, the Allison approach is in direct conflict with the text of the Advisory Committee's Note, which forbids certification under Rule 23(b)(2) if monetary relief is the "predominant" form of relief. See 151 F.3d at 412-16. "Predominant" is not synonymous with "more than incidental." As a result, the Allison approach would preclude the certification of some Rule 23(b)(2) classes that the drafters of the Rules intended to allow.

Allison's standard also "usurps the district courts' authority granted by Rule 23 . . . to rigorously analyze the case, probe behind the pleadings if necessary, and exercise its own discretion within the framework of the rules in determining whether the action is to be so maintained." Id. at 431 (Dennis, J., dissenting); see also Robinson, 267 F.3d at 165 (describing Allison's incidental damages test as a "one-size-fits-all approach"). Such a limitation is in direct conflict with the Federal Rules' intention that district courts be afforded discretion. The predominance test suggested by the Advisory Committee's Note, by contrast, is consistent with the wide discretion given to district courts in making the class certification decision and accomplishing Title VII's remedial objectives.

[27] To the extent Molski required the district court to inquire only into the intent of the plaintiffs and focus primarily on determining whether reasonable plaintiffs would bring suit to obtain injunctive or declaratory relief even in the absence of a possible monetary recovery, see Molski, 318 F.3d at 950 & n.15, it is overruled. In light of the inadequacy of both the Allison and Molski approaches, we adopt instead the standard that Rule 23(b)(2)'s drafters straightforwardly indicated: Rule 23(b)(2) certification is not appropriate where monetary relief is "predominant" over injunctive relief or declaratory relief. To determine whether monetary relief predominates, a district court should consider, on a case-by-case basis, the objective "effect of the relief sought" on the litigation. See Allison, 416 F.3d at 416. Factors such as whether the monetary relief sought determines the key procedures that will be used, whether it introduces new and significant legal and factual issues, whether it requires individualized hearings, and whether its size and nature—as measured by recovery per class member—raise particular due process and manageability concerns would all be relevant, though no single factor would be determinative.

[28] Under this standard, as discussed more fully below, the district court's decision to include claims for back pay in a class certified under Rule 23(b)(2) was not an abuse of its discretion. On the other hand, the district court did abuse its discretion by failing to analyze whether certifying Plaintiffs' punitive damages claims under Rule 23(b)(2) caused monetary damages to predominate, notwithstanding its decision to require notice and an opportunity for Plaintiffs to opt-out of the punitive damages claims.

1. Wal-Mart's Evidence Does Not Undermine Plaintiffs' Claim That Injunctive and Declaratory Relief Predominate

Wal-Mart first asserts that the district court "failed to even evaluate" Rule 23(b)'s requirement that the challenged conduct be generally applicable to the class. Wal-Mart's contention that its "unrebutted" statistics demonstrate that there is no evidence of pervasive discrimination that would justify injunctive relief and that, therefore, the "challenged conduct" does not affect all members, is simply not persuasive. As explained above, Wal-Mart's evidence was rebutted by Plaintiffs to the extent that Plaintiffs' evidence and theories remain viable at this premerits analysis stage. Further, the issue before us is whether monetary relief predominates, not whether Plaintiffs will ultimately prevail.

2. The Large Size of the Class Does Not Undermine Plaintiffs' Claim That Injunctive and Declaratory Relief Predominate

Wal-Mart contends that monetary claims necessarily predominate because this case involves claims that may amount to billions of dollars. However, such a large amount is principally a function of Wal-Mart's size, and the predominance test turns on the primary goal and nature of the litigation—not the theoretical or possible size of the total damages award. A comparison between the amount of monetary damages available for each plaintiff and the importance of injunctive and declaratory relief for each is far more relevant to establishing predominance than the total size of a potential monetary award for the class as a whole. As the district court stated, "focusing on the potential size of a punitive damage award would have the perverse effect of making it more difficult to certify a class the more egregious the defendant's conduct or the larger the defendant. Such a result hardly squares with the remedial purposes of Title VII." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 171. Because Wal-Mart has not shown that the size of the monetary request undermines Plaintiffs' claim that injunctive and declaratory relief predominate, we find that Wal-Mart's argument fails.

3. Request for Back Pay Does Not Undermine Plaintiffs' Claim That Injunctive and Declaratory Relief Predominate

Wal-Mart asserts that Plaintiffs' request for back pay weighs against certification because it proves that claims for monetary relief predominate. The district court reasoned that back pay "is recoverable as an equitable, make-whole remedy in employment class actions notwithstanding its monetary nature." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 170. Wal-Mart contends that the district court erred by failing to recognize that back pay, whether "equitable" or not, is still a form of monetary relief.

Wal-Mart's argument is without merit. Although the circuits have adopted different tests for determining when monetary relief predominates, every circuit to have addressed the issue has acknowledged that Rule 23(b)(2) does allow for some claims for monetary relief.[39] More to the point, it is equally well accepted, even by circuits that are generally restrictive in certifying classes seeking monetary damages under Rule 23(b)(2), that a request for back pay in a Title VII case is fully compatible with the certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class. See, e.g., Allison, 151 F.3d at 415; see also Thorn, 445 F.3d at 331; Cooper, 390 F.3d at 720; Coleman, 296 F.3d at 449. As the Fifth Circuit stated in Allison, "final injunctive relief [was] appropriate and the defendant's liability for back pay [was] rooted in grounds applicable to all members of the defined class. Under these circumstances the award of back pay, as one element of the equitable remedy, conflicts in no way with the limitations of Rule 23(b)(2)." 151 F.3d at 415 (internal quotation marks omitted).[40] [39] See, e.g., Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 445 F.3d 311, 331 (4th Cir. 2006) (awards of back pay do not predominate over the injunctive remedies because their calculation generally involves relatively uncomplicated factual determinations); In re Monumental Life Ins. Co., 365 F.3d 408, 418 (5th Cir. 2004) (same); Cooper v. S. Co., 390 F.3d 695, 720 (11th Cir. 2004), overruled on other grounds by Ash v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 546 U.S. 454, 457-58 (2006) (noting that back pay can be awarded in a case certified under Rule 23(b)(2)); see also Reeb, 435 F.3d at 650 (same); Coleman v. GMAC, 296 F.3d 443, 449 (6th Cir. 2002) (same); Robinson, 267 F.3d at 164 (holding compensatory or punitive damages sometimes permissible under Rule 23(b)(2)); Thomas v. Albright, 139 F.3d 227 (D.C. Cir. 1998) (upholding a settlement in which claims for compensatory damages were included in a class certified under Rule 23(b)(2)).

---

---

[40] Athough some circuits have held that a request for back pay technically weighs on the monetary side of the scale, even though it is also an equitable form of relief, none has held that this prevents requests for back pay from being certified under Rule 23(b)(2). See, e.g., Thorn, 445 F.3d at 3332 ("Rule 23(b)(2) class certification is proper in the Title VII context not because backpay is an equitable form of relief, but because injunctive or declaratory relief predominates despite the presence of a request for back pay."); Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87, 95 (D.C. Cir. 1997); see also In re Monumental Life Ins. Co., 365 F.3d at 418 ("[E]quitable monetary remedies are less likely to predominate over a class's claim for injunctive relief, but this has more to do with the uniform character of the relief rather than with its label.").

We need not decide whether to adopt the view that a request for equitable relief such as back pay weighs against certification because here, even assuming without deciding that it does, Plaintiffs' request for back pay does not predominate over their request for the injunctive and declaratory relief and therefore does not prevent certification under Rule 23(b)(2).

Courts have provided two justifications for the conclusion that a request for back pay is consistent with certification under Rule 23(b)(2). First, appellate courts have noted that, "in the Title VII context, awards of backpay do not predominate over the injunctive remedies available because the 'calculation of back pay generally involves [relatively un]complicated factual determinations and few[ ] individualized issues.'" Thorn, 445 F.3d at 331-32 (alterations in original) (quoting Coleman, 296 F.3d at 449). The second rationale is that back pay is "an integral component of Title VII's 'make whole' remedial scheme," see Allison, 151 F.3d at 415, a scheme to which the drafters of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure clearly intended Rule 23(b)(2) to apply. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) advisory committee's note to 1966 amends., 39 F.R.D. at 102 (stating that the principal category of cases certifiable under Rule 23(b)(2) are "actions in the civil-rights field where a party is charged with discriminating unlawfully against a class").

We find this reasoning persuasive and therefore join the consensus view that a request for back pay in a Title VII case is fully consistent with the certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class action.[41] Accordingly,

---

[41] The dissent claims that "the majority misses the point" in citing Coleman for the Sixth Circuit's statement "that back pay is a permissible remedy in a Rule 23(b)(2) class," 296 F.3d at 449, because "the issue is not that plaintiffs seek back pay, " but whether "individualized treatment makes class-wide relief improper." Dissent at 6275 n.28. While it is true that the Sixth Circuit rejected certification of the class in Coleman, it did so by distinguishing the plaintiff's claim for back pay and compensatory damages from previous cases that upheld certification of a class under Rule 23(b)(2) that sought back pay but not compen-

The dissent's claim of error is equally misguided to Thorn where the concern with individualized inquiries related to the subjective state of mind requirement for the Fourth Circuit's accrual rule for a statute of limitations. See Thorn, 445 F.3d at 317, 320. The Fourth Circuit addressed an earlier ruling in apparent conflict by explaining the previous case had dealt with constructive notice and was thus amenable to class resolution, but under the subjective, actual notice claim presented in Thorn there was no way around individualized inquiries. Id. at 325. Here, back pay and other claims can be calculated on a class-wide basis, and because this is a pattern and practice case, discrimination must be shown at a group level. See Domingo v. New England Fish Co., 727 F.2d 1429, 1444 (9th Cir. 1984) (per curiam); infra notes 49 and 53. Further, the Thorn court, in discussing Title VII cases, stated that "in the Title VII context, awards of back pay do not predominate over the injunctive remedies available because the calculation of back pay generally involves relatively uncomplicated factual determinations and few individualized issues . . . . Rule 23(b)(2) class certification is proper in the Title VII context not because back pay is an equitable form of relief, but because injunctive or declaratory relief predominates despite the presence of a request for back pay." Thorn, 445 F.3d at 331-32 (brackets, citation, and internal quotation marks omitted). Again, given these statements satory damages. Id. at 449 ("[C]alculation of back pay generally involves less complicated factual determinations and fewer individualized issues."). Further, the Coleman court took issue with the plaintiff's own calculations of compensatory damages, which she sought to calculate "by reference to the markup [on a car loan] charged to each individual member of the class." Id. Given that Plaintiffs here are not seeking compensatory damages, and that, unlike here, there was no way in Coleman to calculate damages other than an individualized framework that, in fact, the plaintiff proposed, we find Coleman instructive for its statement "that back pay is a permissible remedy in a Rule 23(b)(2) class." Id. (citing Alexander v. Aero Lodge No. 735, 565 F.2d 1364, 1372 (6th Cir. 1977) ("A request for back pay does not preclude certification under [23(b)(2)].")).

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

we hold that the district court did not abuse its discretion when it concluded, like many courts before it, that this discrimination class action was certifiable under Rule 23(b)(2) notwithstanding Plaintiffs' prayer for back pay relief.

4. Monetary Relief May Predominate With Respect to Plaintiffs' Bifurcated Punitive Damages Claims

In determining whether "appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages," Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2), advisory committee's note to 1996 amends., 39 F.R.D. at 102, claims for punitive damages weigh against certification under Rule 23(b)(2) because punitive damages are, of course, neither injunctive nor declaratory relief. The view that punitive damages can never be awarded consistent with Rule 23(b)(2), however, has not been adopted by this circuit.[42] On the other hand, this and distinguishing contexts, we find Thorn supportive of our conclusion that a request for back pay in a Title VII case is fully consistent with the certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class action.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[42] Neither Williams v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., 665 F.2d 918, 928-29 (9th Cir. 1982), nor Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1195-96, supports Wal-Mart's argument that this circuit will not certify a class action that involves punitive damages. Rather, this court merely held that it was not an abuse of discretion to deny class certification based on the specific facts presented in those cases. See Williams, 665 F.2d at 929 (holding that damages requests were not incidental to the request for injunctive relief where requested compensatory damages were not clearly compatible with class injunctive relief); Zinser, 253 F.3d at 1195-96 (same, holding that a request for medical monitoring against manufacturer of pacemaker is not certifiable under Rule 23(b)(2) in the specific circumstances of the case, where the class primarily sought establishment of a reserve fund for past and future court also has not approved class certification under Rule 23(b)(2) involving the potential for substantial punitive damages.

To decide whether certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is appropriate, per the standard described in Part II, a district court must squarely face and resolve the question of whether the monetary damages sought by the plaintiff class predominate over the injunctive and declaratory relief. If so, then the court may either deny certification under Rule 23(b)(2) or bifurcate the proceedings by certifying a Rule 23(b)(2) class for equitable relief and a separate Rule 23(b)(3) class for damages. See Molski, 318 F.3d at 951 n.16 (citing Jefferson v. Ingersoll Int'l Inc., 195 F.3d 894, 897-98 (7th Cir. 1999)).[43]

Here, the district court certified Plaintiffs' punitive damages claims as a separate class, but did so under Rule 23(b)(2) rather than Rule 23(b)(3), exercising its discretion to impose additional requirements for notice and the opportunity to opt-out of this separate Rule 23(b)(2) class. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 173 ("[N]otice and the opportunity to opt-out can be provided in a (b)(2) class action" and "shall be provided to the plaintiff class with respect to Plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages."). As the damages, compensation for future medical treatment, and other compensatory and punitive damages).

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[43] Relying on Rule 23(c)(4), our own precedent also generally allows class treatment of common issues even when not all issues may be treated on a class basis. See Valentino v. Carter-Wallace, Inc., 97 F.3d 1227, 1234 (9th Cir. 1996); see also Augustin v. Jablonsky (In re Nassau County Strip Search Cases), 461 F.3d 219, 226 (2d Cir. 2006) (same).

district court noted, its discretion to require notice and the opportunity to opt-out in a Rule 23(b)(2) class action is well established. Id. (citing In re Monumental Life Ins. Co., 365 F.3d at 417; Molski, 318 F.3d at 951 n.16; Robinson, 267 F.3d at 165-67; Jefferson, 195 F.3d at 898-99).[44]

Notwithstanding its decision to require notice and an opportunity for opt-out, the district court abused its discretion by certifying the punitive damages claims under Rule 23(b)(2) without first undertaking an analysis of whether certification of the claim for punitive damages (in addition to injunctive and declaratory relief as well as back pay) rendered the final relief "predominantly" related to monetary damages. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2), advisory committee's note to 1996 amends., 39 F.R.D. at 102. Although notice and an opportunity for Plaintiffs to opt-out of the punitive damages claims alleviated some of the concerns regarding cohesiveness and due process that substantial punitive damages claims potentially raise, requiring these procedures does not remove the district court's obligation to determine whether each of the requirements of certification under either Rule 23(b)(2) or (b)(3) is met.

---

[44] The dissent argues that Ticor Title Insurance Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117 (1994) (per curiam), precludes district courts from granting notice and opt-out rights in class actions certified under Rule 23(b)(2). Dissent at 6270-71. Ticor involved the res judicata effect of a prior case certified under Rule 23(b)(2) without an opportunity for opt out, so the Court's attention, quite understandably, was not focused on the extent of the district court's discretion to provide for such measures. Ticor's reference to typical Rule 23(b)(2) procedures also was contained in an order dismissing a grant of certiorari and therefore was not even dictum, let alone a holding. See id.

[29] On remand, the district court must determine whether certification under Rule 23(b)(2) of the punitive damages claims would cause monetary relief to predominate. As discussed above, the district court should not limit its inquiry to the former Molski factors, but should also consider any other factors relevant to whether monetary relief predominates when determining if certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is appropriate.[45] We note at least four factors present in this case that are relevant to the question whether monetary relief predominates, but the district court need not limit its inquiry to these factors alone.

First, the inclusion of a punitive damages request means that the key issue in this case, Wal-Mart's liability, will be decided by a jury, rather than a judge. This significant procedural change weighs in favor of finding that monetary relief would predominate if the punitive damages claims are certified, although it is not dispositive.[46]

Second, Plaintiffs' request for punitive damages introduces a new and substantial factual issue. To recover punitive damages, Plaintiffs must show not only that Wal-Mart engaged in a pattern or practice of discrimination, but also that it did so "with malice or with reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of" Plaintiffs. 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(b)(1). This additional factual question will likely require the Plaintiffs to introduce significant evidence and legal argument that would not have otherwise been necessary; the need for such extra evidence and argument weighs in favor of a finding that monetary relief predominates.

---

[45] The dissent largely ignores the limits herein imposed on the district court's certification order, particularly regarding the mode of proof described below. Dissent at 6271, 6277-78.

[46] We do not mean to suggest that the issue of Wal-Mart's liability could not ultimately be decided by a jury. If the district court concludes that the punitive damages class can be certified as a Rule 23(b)(3) class and adopts a hybrid approach, then a jury would have to decide the liability issue for both the Rule 23(b)(2) and the (b)(3) class.

Third, the size of a potential punitive damages award, measured on an individual basis, could be quite significant. Title VII permits a punitive damage award of up to $300,000 per employee. See id. § 1981a(b)(3). Such a large potential award raises due process and manageability concerns. Although the district court's decision to provide notice and opt-out to class members alleviates some of these concerns, the size of the potential award per class member in this case militates in favor of a finding that monetary relief predominates, triggering the need for other safeguards applicable when a class is certified under Rule 23(b)(3), rather than Rule 23(b)(2).

Finally, we note that, unlike in other punitive and compensatory damages cases, this case does not require individualized punitive damages determinations. Plaintiffs' theory of liability is a class-wide theory that is based on a company policy that allegedly affects all class members in a similar way. See Allison, 151 F.3d at 417 (leaving open the possibility that a punitive damage class could be certified under 23(b)(2) where the "plaintiffs challenge broad policies and practices" and "contend that each plaintiff was affected by th[o]se polices and practices in the same way"). While this factor counsels against a finding that punitive damages predominate, it also is not necessarily dispositive.

In sum, we hold that the district court abused its discretion when it certified a Rule 23(b)(2) class including punitive damages without first undertaking a comprehensive analysis of whether the inclusion of such damages in this case causes monetary relief to predominate. To allow for further pertinent fact-finding, we remand the certification of the bifurcated punitive damages claims to the district court to consider whether certification is proper under Rule 23(b)(2). We decline to prejudge the outcome of this determination because the question of whether monetary relief predominates should be answered by the district court in the first instance, consistent with the Federal Rules' intention to vest district courts with significant discretion.

[30] If the district court concludes that the punitive damage class in this action cannot be certified under Rule 23(b)(2), it should also consider whether class certification of the punitive damages claims is appropriate under Rule 23(b)(3). We and a number of other courts of appeals have endorsed such "hybrid certification" of Rule 23(b)(2) and Rule 23(b)(3) classes in one action, particularly in civil rights cases that may involve significant monetary damages. See, e.g., Molski, 318 F.3d at 951 n.16; Jefferson, 195 F.3d at 898; Eubanks, 110 F.3d at 96.

Under this hybrid approach, the highly cohesive Rule 23(b)(2) phase of the proceedings, including liability, can be adjudicated without the costly class notice and opt-out process required under Rule 23(b)(3). In order to protect the due process interests of absent class members, however, notice and opt-out is required for the Rule 23(b)(3) punitive damages proceedings. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2), advisory committee's note to 2003 amends. ("If a Rule 23(b)(3) class is certified in conjunction with a (b)(2) class, the (c)(2)(B) notice requirements must be satisfied as to the (b)(3) class." (emphasis added)); Eubanks, 110 F.3d at 96 ("[Hybrid certification] effectively grant[s] (b)(3) protections . . . at the monetary relief stage."); Diaz v. Hillsborough County Hosp. Auth., 165 F.R.D. 689, 695 (M.D. Fla. 1996) (explaining that in Stage I, the court will resolve liability using Rule 23(b)(2) procedures and, if liability is established, adjudicate damages using "opt out" procedures in Rule 23(b)(3)). This procedure retains the benefits of Rule 23(b)(2) and Rule 23(b)(3) for all parties, and "promotes both ease of administration and the underlying principles of Rule 23." See Williams v. Local No. 19, Sheet Metal Workers Int'l Ass'n, 59 F.R.D. 49, 56 (E.D. Pa. 1973) (explaining that the liability issue will be litigated first and, if the plaintiffs are successful, notice will be given for the damages proceeding).

We do not express a view on whether the punitive damages claims in this case meet the Rule 23(b)(3) requirements or, if so, how the district court should manage the class proceedings in order to comply with Seventh Amendment principles. We believe, however, that this might be a case in which "[d]ivided certification also is worth consideration." Jefferson, 195 F.3d at 898.

5. Class Certification May Not be Proper as to Class Members Who Were Not Wal-Mart Employees as of the Date Plaintiffs' Complaint Was Filed

Wal-Mart's final contention is that, because a substantial number of the putative class members no longer work for Wal-Mart—and, thus, no longer have standing to seek injunctive or declaratory relief—such relief cannot possibly predominate over monetary relief for purposes of certifying this class under Rule 23(b)(2).

[31] We agree with Wal-Mart to this extent: those putative class members who were no longer Wal-Mart employees at the time Plaintiffs' complaint was filed do not have standing to pursue injunctive or declaratory relief. See Walsh v. Nev. Dep't of Human Res., 471 F.3d 1033, 1037 (9th Cir. 2006) (recognizing that former employees lack standing to seek injunctive relief because they "would not stand to benefit from an injunction requiring the anti-discriminatory policies [to cease] at [their] former place of work"); ACLU of Nev. v. Lomax, 471 F.3d 1010, 1015 (9th Cir. 2006) ("When evaluating whether [the standing] elements are present, we must look at the facts 'as they exist at the time the complaint was filed.' " (quoting Lujan v. Defenders of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555, 569 n.4 (1992))). Under these circumstances, it is difficult to say that monetary relief does not predominate with respect to claims by plaintiffs who lack standing to seek injunctive or declaratory relief.

[32] However, this does not mean that former employees are ineligible to receive any form of relief. Although women who were not employed by Wal-Mart as of June 8, 2001, the date on which the complaint was filed, do not have standing to seek injunctive or declaratory relief, they may be eligible to receive back pay and punitive damages. The district court may, in its discretion, certify a separate Rule 23(b)(3) class of former employees for back pay and punitive damages.

Putative class members who were still Wal-Mart employees as of June 8, 2001, do have standing to seek the injunctive and declaratory relief requested in the complaint.[47] See Lomax, 471 F.3d at 1015. We are satisfied that class certification under Rule 23(b)(2) was not an abuse of discretion, at least as to those Plaintiffs' claims, for the reasons explained in Parts II.B.1-II.B.4.

In summary, we affirm the district court's certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class insofar as the class consists of current employees (as of the date the complaint was filed), with respect to claims for injunctive relief, declaratory relief, and back pay. On remand, the district court should analyze whether certification under Rule 23(b)(2) or Rule 23(b)(3) is appropriate for the punitive damages claims and whether an additional class or classes may be appropriate under Rule 23(b)(3) with respect to the claims of former employees. The court may, if appropriate, certify an additional class or classes under Rule 23(b)(3).

IV. CLASS ACTION CAN PROCEED IN A WAY THAT IS BOTH MANAGEABLE AND IN ACCORDANCE WITH DUE PROCESS

[33] The district court was cognizant of the large size of the class when it concluded that the class size was not unmanageable. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 173. Indeed, the district court acknowledged that, "[w]hile courts possess wide discretion to flexibly respond to manageability issues that may arise during the course of a class action, this Court must be confident that such issues will not be of such a magnitude as to defy its ability to oversee this case in a responsible and reasonable manner." Id. (citation omitted). After "giv[ing] these matters considerable thought and deliberation," the district court concluded that, with one minor exception,[48] "the size of the class would not present undue obstacles to managing" this class action. Id.

---

[47] For this reason, the dissent's observation, Dissent at 6240, that four of the lead plaintiffs have left Wal-Mart since filing their complaint, is irrelevant. Their standing was established as of that date and they were under no obligation to continue to work for Wal-Mart throughout several years of subsequent litigation in order to maintain their legal rights.

To demonstrate the manageability of the class action, the district court outlined a trial plan based, in large part, on how other courts have handled similarly large and complex class action suits.[49] Wal-

---

[48] This one exception related to Plaintiffs' promotion claim. The district court determined that it would be unmanageable to fashion a remedy for the subset of the class for whom objective applicant data did not exist. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 183. As discussed above, the district court did not abuse its discretion in its analysis and resolution of this issue.

[49] The trial plan described by the district court involved two stages. In Stage I, Plaintiffs would attempt to prove that Wal-Mart engaged in a pattern and practice of discrimination against the class via its company-wide employment policies and that the pattern or practice "was undertaken maliciously or recklessly in the face of a perceived risk that defendant's actions would violate federal law." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 173. If Plaintiffs prevailed in Stage I, the case would move to Stage II, the remedy phase. The first task in Stage II would be to fashion class-wide injunctive relief. The second task would be to calculate and distribute the back pay award. As to Plaintiffs' promotional claim, a formula would be used to calculate the "lump sum" in back pay that Wal-Mart owes to the class (a procedure similar to that employed in Domingo, 727 F.2d at 1444-45). As to Plaintiffs' equal pay claim, the court would examine Wal-Mart's employment records to determine which class members were victims of this form of discrimination (and how much in back pay each is owed) to determine a second "lump sum" owed by Wal-Mart. Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 174-86. A separate

Mart, supported by a number of business-related amici,[50] contend that at least some aspects of this trial plan violate their due process rights, as well as section 706(g)(2) of Title VII,[51] the Rules Enabling Act,[52] and the Supreme Court's decision in Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 359-60.[53] procedure would then be used to distribute these lump sums to those class members entitled to share in them — a stage in which Wal-Mart would no longer have an interest. Id. at 179 n.49.

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[50] The court was favored with an extraordinary variety of amicus briefs that were both thoughtful and helpful to it in its deliberations.

[51] This section states that "[n]o order of the court shall require . . . the payment to [a person] of any back pay, if such individual . . . was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than [unlawful] discrimination" and that, "[o]n a claim in which an individual proves a violation under section 2000e-2(m) of this title and a respondent demonstrates that the respondent would have taken the same action in the absence of the impermissible motivating factor, the court . . . shall not award damages." Title VII, § 706(g)(2) (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)).

[52] This statute states that the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, including Rule 23 regarding class actions, "shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right. All laws in conflict with such rules shall be of no further force or effect after such rules have taken effect." 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b).

[53] The dissent also argues that Wal-Mart "has a statutory right, recognized by the Supreme Court, to prove that its actions against individual employees were not discriminatory," which the dissent understands to mean that the district "court must allow up to 1.5 million individual determinations of liability." Dissent at 6238, 6265. However, as the dissent recognizes, this case is at least largely one for prospective relief,

[34] At this stage, we express no opinion regarding Wal-Mart's objections to the district court's tentative trial plan (or that trial plan itself), but simply note that, because there are a range of possibilities—which may or may not include the district court's proposed course of action—that would allow this class action to proceed in a manner that is both manageable and in accordance with due process, manageability concerns present no bar to class certification here.

For example, in Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767, 782-87 (9th Cir. 1996), the district court employed the following procedure to determine the which is available once a pattern and practice of discriminatory conduct is proven. The dissent ignores that the pattern and practice has to be proven on a group basis. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 336 (Plaintiffs have "to prove more than the mere occurrence of isolated or 'accidental' or sporadic discriminatory acts. [They] ha[ve] to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that [gender] discrimination was the company's standard operating procedure—the regular rather than the unusual practice."). It is both uneconomical and inefficient to do so in individual actions. In fact, since Teamsters, we have affirmatively held that the district court may award class-wide relief at the damages phase of a Title VII class action without individualized hearings. See Domingo, 727 F.2d at 1444 ("The facts of this case justify a departure from an individualized remedy for each claimant . . . [because the defendant's] lack of objective hiring criteria and use of word-of-mouth recruitment . . . makes it difficult to determine precisely which of the claimants would have been given a better job absent discrimination, but it is clear that many should have." (citations omitted)). The dissent's view would thus essentially preclude class members from either obtaining relief that is available or proving the prima facie portion of the damages case under Teamsters.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

amount of compensatory damages due the plaintiffs in a large class action:[54]

> In all, 10,059 claims were received. The district court ruled 518 of these claims to be facially invalid, leaving 9,541 claims. From these, a list of 137 claims was randomly selected by computer. This number of randomly selected claims was chosen on the basis of the testimony of James Dannemiller, an expert on statistics, who testified that the examination of a random sample of 137 claims would achieve "a 95 percent statistical probability that the same percentage determined to be valid among the examined claims would be applicable to the totality of claims filed." . . . .
>
> The district court then appointed Sol Schreiber as a special master (and a court-appointed expert under Rule 706 of the Federal Rules of Evidence). Schreiber supervised the taking of depositions . . . of the 137 randomly selected claimants . . . .

Id. at 782 (subheading omitted)." Schreiber then reviewed the claim[s]," and "[h]e recommended that 6 claims of the 137 in the sample be found not valid." Id. at 782-83." Schreiber then recommended the amount of damages to be awarded to the 131 [remaining] claimants." Id. at 783.

---

[54] Hilao was a 10,000+ plaintiff class action filed by Philippine nationals and their descendants who were allegedly victims of torture, summary execution, and "disappearance" at the hands of Ferdinand E. Marcos, the Philippines' former president.

Based on his recommendation that 6 of the 137 claims in the random sample (4.37%) be rejected as invalid, he recommended the application of a five-per-cent invalidity rate to the remaining claims.

. . . .

He recommended that the award to the class be determined by multiplying the number of valid remaining claims . . . by the average award recommended for the . . . claims . . . .

. . . .

By adding the recommended awards . . . Schreiber arrived at a recommendation for a total compensatory damage award . . . .

. . . .

A jury trial on compensatory damages was [then] held . . . [Hilao's statistical expert] testified that the selection of the random sample met the standards of inferential statistics, that the successful efforts to locate and obtain testimony from the claimants in the random sample "were of the highest standards" in his profession, that the procedures followed conformed to the standards of inferential statistics, and that the injuries of the random-sample claimants were representative of the class as a whole. Testimony from the 137 random-sample claimants and their witnesses was introduced. Schreiber testified as to his recommendations, and his report was supplied to the jury. The jury was instructed that it could accept, modify or reject Schreiber's recommendations and that it could independently, on the basis of the evidence of the random-sample claimants, reach > its own judgment as to the actual damages of those claimants and of the aggregate damages suffered by the class as a whole.

>
> The jury deliberated for five days before reaching a verdict. Contrary to the master's recommendations, the jury found against only two of the 137 claimants in the random sample. As to the sample claims, the jury generally adopted the master's recommendations, although it did not follow his recommendations in 46 instances. As to the claims of the remaining class members, the jury adopted the awards recommended by the master. The district court subsequently entered judgment for 135 of the 137 claimants in the sample in the amounts awarded by the jury, and for the remaining plaintiffs . . . in the amounts awarded by the jury, to be divided pro rata.

Id. at 783-84 (subheadings and footnotes omitted).

On appeal, the Hilao court was presented with some of the same objections to its trial plan as Wal-Mart presents here.[55] After a lengthy discussion, however, the Hilao court rejected these challenges and approved of the trial plan, addressing the due process issue as follows:

> While the district court's methodology in determining valid claims is unorthodox, it

---

[55] For example, the defendant in Hilao argued that the trial plan "violated its rights to due process because individual questions apply to each subset of claims, i.e., whether the action was justified, the degree of injury, proximate cause, etc." 103 F.3d at 785 (internal quotation marks omitted).

> can be justified by the extraordinarily unusual nature of this case. " 'Due process,' unlike some legal rules, is not a technical conception with a fixed content unrelated to time, place and circumstances." Cafeteria and Restaurant Workers Union, Local 473 v. McElroy, 367 U.S. 886, 895 . . . (1961).
>
> . . . .
>
> The interest of the [defendant] that is affected is at best an interest in not paying damages for any invalid claims. . . . The statistical method used by the district court obviously presents a somewhat greater risk of error in comparison to an adversarial adjudication of each claim, since the former method requires a probabilistic prediction (albeit an extremely accurate one) of how many of the total claims are invalid. . . . Hilao's interest in the use of the statistical method, on the other hand, is enormous, since adversarial resolution of each class member's claim would pose insurmountable practical hurdles. The "ancillary" interest of the judiciary in the procedure is obviously also substantial, since 9,541 individual adversarial determinations of claim validity would clog the docket of the district court for years. Under the balancing test set forth in Mathews [v. Eldridge, 424 U.S. 319 (1976),] and [Connecticut v.] Doehr[, 501 U.S. 1 (1991)], the procedure used by the district court did not violate due process.

Hilao, 103 F.3d at 786-87 (footnote and citations omitted).

Because we see no reason why a similar procedure to that used in Hilao could not be employed in this case,[56] we conclude that there exists at least one method of managing this large class action that, albeit somewhat imperfect, nonetheless protects the due process rights of all involved parties.[57] Accordingly, we find no manageability-based reason to find this otherwise-certifiable class unsuited to class certification.

---

[56] We note that this procedure would allow Wal-Mart to present individual defenses in the randomly selected "sample cases," thus revealing the approximate percentage of class members whose unequal pay or non-promotion was due to something other than gender discrimination. The "invalid claim rate" revealed by this process would, as it did in Hilao, come very close to the invalid claim rate one would expect to find among the entire class.

[57] We do not suggest that this is the only conceivable way in which this class action could lawfully progress. Indeed, the district court may want to consider whether a more limited "test case" procedure similar to that employed in In re TMI Litig. Consol. Proceedings, 927 F. Supp. 834, 837 & n.5 (M.D. Pa. 1996), would aid the parties in evaluating the strength of their respective claims.

And, of course, the option proposed by the district court may also remain viable; indeed, it appears that a number of circuits have approved of similar trial plans in discrimination cases. See, e.g., Segar, 738 F.2d at 1291 (explaining why a similar trial plan did not violate § 706(g)(2) of Title VII and commenting that, "[i]f effective relief for the victims of discrimination necessarily entails the risk that a few nonvictims might also benefit from the relief, then the employer, as a proven discriminator, must bear that risk"); see also Shipes, 987 F.2d at 316-19; Catlett v. Mo. Highway & Transp. Comm'n, 828 F.2d 1260, 1266-67 (8th Cir. 1987). We point to the Hilao procedure above solely because this circuit has already considered and approved of that procedure.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, we hold that the district court acted within its broad discretion in concluding that it would be better to handle some parts of this case as a class action instead of clogging the federal courts with innumerable individual suits litigating the same issues repeatedly. The district court did not abuse its discretion in finding the requirements of Rule 23 satisfied with respect to those Plaintiffs who were still Wal-Mart employees on June 8, 2001, and with respect to claims for injunctive and declaratory relief and back pay. Given the tentative nature of the district court's trial plan, we decline to address Wal-Mart's due process and manageability challenges to that plan. We note, however, that the district court has the discretion to modify or decertify the class should it become unmanageable. Although the size of this class action is large, mere size does not render a case unmanageable.

We deny Plaintiffs' cross-appeal, because the district court did not abuse its discretion when it found that back pay for promotions may be limited to those Plaintiffs for whom proof of qualification and interest exists. Finally, we must reiterate that our findings relate only to class action procedural questions; we neither analyze nor reach the merits of Plaintiffs' allegations of gender discrimination.

AFFIRMED in part; REMANDED in part. Each party to bear its own costs on appeal.

GRABER, Circuit Judge, concurring:

The majority and the dissent have written scholarly and complete explanations of their positions.

What the length of their opinions may mask is the simplicity of the majority's unremarkable holding:

> Current female employees may maintain a Rule 23(b)(2) class action against their employer, seeking injunctive and declaratory relief and back pay on behalf of all the current female employees, when they challenge as discriminatory the effects of their employer's company-wide policies.

If the employer had 500 female employees, I doubt that any of my colleagues would question the certification of such a class. Certification does not become an abuse of discretion merely because the class has 500,000 members.

I therefore concur fully in the majority opinion.

IKUTA, Circuit Judge, with whom Chief Judge KOZINSKI and Judges RYMER, SILVERMAN, and BEA join, dissenting:

No court has ever certified a class like this one, until now. And with good reason. In this case, six women who have worked in thirteen of Wal-Mart's 3,400 stores seek to represent every woman who has worked in those stores over the course of the last decade—a class estimated in 2001 to include more than 1.5 million women. According to the plaintiffs' theory, Wal-Mart has a corporate policy of discrimination which it implements through the discretionary decisions of store managers, resulting in class-wide injury in violation of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

But while the six plaintiffs allege they have suffered discrimination at the hands of a few individual store managers, they fail to present "[s]ignificant proof" of a discriminatory policy or practice of Wal-Mart that would make it possible to conclude that 1.5 million members of the proposed class suffered similar discrimination. See Gen. Tel. Co. of Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 159 n.15 (1982). Without evidence of a company-wide discriminatory policy implemented by managers through their discretionary decisions, or other evidence of a discriminatory company-wide practice, there is nothing to bind these purported 1.5 million claims together in a single action. See id. at 158-59.

Then there is the problem of individual hearings. Under Title VII, Wal-Mart has the right to raise affirmative defenses as to each class member's claim. This means the court must allow up to 1.5 million individual determinations of liability. On its face, a class action of this sort makes no sense.

In certifying the class despite these obstacles, the district court abused its discretion. In affirming most of the district court's determinations, the majority compounds the error, and creates a precedent for class action suits that departs from the language and intent of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, ignores Supreme Court mandates, and neglects the rights of defendants. I respectfully dissent.

I

A brief review of the facts highlights the obstacles to certifying this class. Wal-Mart is the largest private employer in the world, Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (Dukes I), 222 F.R.D. 137, 141 (N.D. Cal. 2004), and the largest retail chain in the United States. At year-end 2001, when this suit was filed, Wal-Mart employed over 930,000 retail employees in hundreds of different jobs at roughly 3,400 stores nationwide.

Wal-Mart's corporate structure is complex. The company divides its retail operation into seven divisions, six for Wal-Mart and one for Sam's Club.[1] Those divisions are split into 41 separate regions, each of which is overseen by a regional vice president. The regions are further divided into roughly 400 individual districts, which are headed by district managers. Each of Wal-Mart's regions consists of 80 to 85 stores, with Wal-Mart employing anywhere from 80 to 500 people per store.

Individual stores are run by store managers who are responsible for hiring and promoting the hourly employees in their respective stores. At each store, assistant managers report to store managers; these management positions are salaried, and employees may be promoted to these positions after first working as entry-level, non-salaried management trainees. Wal-Mart's retail employees work hourly in 53 different departments and 170 different job classifications; these positions include cashiers, associates, team leads, and department managers.

Wal-Mart gives its managers substantial discretion in both pay and promotion decisions. Store managers make pay decisions for hourly employees, subject only to a general pay structure. Id. at 146. Store managers "are allowed to depart from the minimum start rates, within a two dollar per hour range, without being constrained by objective criteria and with limited oversight." Id. at 146-47. Wal-Mart also allows store managers to increase pay for exceptional performance. Id. at 147. District managers set the pay for salaried employees. They have "discretion to set pay rates with little guidance and limited oversight." Id.

---

[1] Sam's Club is a separate corporate division within Wal-Mart, but operates in roughly the same manner and with a similar organizational structure as Wal-Mart.

Managers likewise have substantial discretion in making promotion decisions. Wal-Mart has corporate guidelines regarding entrance requirements for its management trainee program, but individual store managers may apply their own subjective criteria in selecting employees who will be invited to enter the program. Id. at 148. Decisions regarding advancement into the highest store-level managerial positions (assistant manager, co-manager, and store manager) are "similarly based on subjective assessments beyond adherence to corporate minimum guidelines." Id. Discretion is "further compounded by the fact that the company does not monitor the promotion decisions being made or otherwise systematically review the grounds on which candidates are selected for promotion." Id. at 149.

This action was brought by six women on behalf of all women who were employed in any retail store position throughout Wal-Mart. Two of these six women still work at Wal-Mart. Of the other four, one was terminated,[2] and three left Wal-Mart before the complaint was even filed.[3] In the aggregate, these six plaintiffs worked at ten stores in California, one store in Texas, one store in Oklahoma, and one store in Missouri. Three plaintiffs allege that they expressed interest in, or applied for, various promotions at the store in which they were then employed, but did not receive them. These three women allege that men were promoted instead. Only one of these plaintiffs, Christine Kwapnoski, has held a management position. Two plaintiffs allege that similarly situated men received higher pay. One plaintiff alleges that a less-qualified man received the same pay as she did.

---

[2] Edith Arana was terminated in October 2001 for falsifying her time sheets.

[3] The complaint was filed in June 2001. Patricia Surgeson left Wal-Mart in March 2001 to take another job, Cleo Page resigned in November 2000 after she received a written warning

Together, these six women assert that they are adequate class representatives of a class comprising "[a]ll women employed at any Wal-Mart domestic retail store at any time since December 26, 1998 who have been or may be subjected to Wal-Mart's challenged pay and management track promotions policies and practices." Id. at 141-42. The class includes every woman working in Wal-Mart's retail stores, which by definition encompasses salaried store managers who were responsible for the allegedly discriminatory hiring decisions,[4] assistant managers for performance issues, and Deborah Gunter resigned in August 1999 after Wal-Mart reduced her hours.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[4] For example, proposed class representative Page alleges that she was passed over for promotion by her store manager, Monique Taylor. Proposed class representative Gunter complained about being passed over for a promotion by her store manager, Kathy Bishop, who Gunter also alleges brushed off allegations Gunter made about sexual harassment. Proposed class representative Kwapnoski discussed her interest in promotion with her assistant manager, Nancy Hom. Taylor, Bishop, and Hom are all members of the proposed class. This and co-managers who were also responsible for much of the alleged discriminatory treatment, and hourly workers whose in-store positions range from personnel clerk to deli manager. At the time the suit was filed, the class was estimated to include 1.5 million women.[5]

II

Before it can certify a class, a court must ensure that the proposed class meets the standards set forth in Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Rule 23 is a procedural rule that permits courts to aggregate the legal claims of multiple parties when it is efficient and fair to do so.[6] It does not alter the substance of claims or the plaintiffs' burden to prove their claims. See 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b).

[Footnote continued from previous page]

case features the unusual distinction of placing victims and their alleged victimizers on the same side of the counsel table.

[5] The majority criticizes the dissent for pointing out the large size of the class, reasoning that the class size may decrease by up to two-thirds if past employees are excluded. See Maj. Op. at 6148 n.3. In determining whether the district court abused its discretion, however, we must consider the class actually certified by the district court, which included past employees. Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 188. Moreover, as explained below, the reasons this class cannot be certified apply with equal force regardless of whether the class represents 1.5 million individuals or the class of 500,000 envisioned by the majority.

[6] Rule 23(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure provides that "[o]ne or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all members only if" the class meets the prerequisites of numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation.

We review the district court's class certification decisions for abuse of discretion. Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 953 (9th Cir. 2003). Abuse of discretion occurs when the district court commits a legal error, or when it "relies upon an improper factor, omits consideration of a factor entitled to substantial weight, or mulls the correct mix of factors but makes a clear error of judgment in assaying them." Vinole v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., 571 F.3d 935, 939 (9th Cir. 2009) (citation and internal quotation marks omitted).

Here, the district court abused its discretion in two ways. First, it failed to follow the Supreme Court's direction to "evaluate carefully the legitimacy of the named plaintiff's plea that he is a proper class representative under Rule 23(a)." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160, and to ensure "after a rigorous analysis" that the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been met, id. at 161. Second, the district court erred in ignoring Wal-Mart's statutory right to raise defenses to liability for back pay and punitive damages under Title VII, see 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2); Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b), and therefore abused its discretion in holding that the proposed class could be certified under Rule 23(b)(2). I would reverse and remand this action to the district court to correct these errors, which I address below in turn.

A

In Falcon, the Supreme Court held that when a small number of plaintiffs allege company-wide discrimination and attempt to certify a company-wide class, the district court must undertake a "rigorous analysis" to determine whether the Rule 23(a) commonality and typicality factors exist.[7] Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157, 161; see Staton, 327 F.3d at 953-54 (calling a proposed class of 15,000 members throughout six facilities an "ambitious" claim for commonality that was "therefore especially worthy of scrutiny"). As Falcon explained, the plaintiff's own experience of discrimination does not allow the district court to infer that "discriminatory treatment is typical of [the employer's employment] practices." 457 U.S. at 158; see E. Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403-04 (1977). Indeed, the Court warned, "if one allegation of specific discriminatory treatment were sufficient to support an across-the-board attack, every Title VII case would be a potential company-wide class action." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159. Instead, to maintain a company-wide class action based on discrimination, the plaintiff must bridge the "wide gap" between: (1) the plaintiff's own discriminatory treatment; and (2) the existence of a class that has suffered the same injury as the plaintiff as a result of a company-wide discriminatory policy. Id. at 157.

This principle is simple common sense. A female employee in a store in California, for example, may have a valid claim that her supervisor discriminated against her when making decisions regarding promotion opportunities. But this individual claim would not by itself entitle the California employee to bring the alleged discrimination claims of female employees in a store in Wyoming. Absent evidence that the Wyoming employees had been subject to the same sort of discrimination and could bring the same sort of claims, such a proposed class would clearly fail the Rule 23(a) commonality and typicality requirements. A fortiori, a female employee in California could not represent a class of all female employees in Wal-Mart absent similar proof to bridge the gap between her claim and the existence of company-wide discrimination.

---

[7] The term "commonality" refers to the requirement in Rule 23(a) that "there are questions of law or fact common to the class"; "typicality" refers to the requirement that "the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a). Falcon noted that "[t]he commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a) tend to merge. Both serve as guideposts for determining whether under the particular circumstances maintenance of a class action is economical and whether the named plaintiff's claim and the class claims are so interrelated that the interests of the class members will be fairly and adequately protected in their absence." 457 U.S. at 158 n.13.

The Supreme Court has identified two situations in which a plaintiff could potentially bridge this gap. The first is where a plaintiff alleges that an employer "used a biased testing procedure" to evaluate all members of the proposed class. Id. at 159 n.15. This makes sense because if the employer used a biased testing procedure throughout the company, then every employee subject to the test would have a similar claim.

The Court's second example applies directly to this case: a plaintiff "conceivably" could bring a company-wide Title VII action if the plaintiff adduced "[s]ignificant proof that an employer operated under a general policy of discrimination" and the discriminatory policy was implemented through "entirely subjective decision making processes" in a manner that affected all members of the class. Id. This example also makes sense. As the majority acknowledges, Maj. Op. at 6208, subjective decision making by itself is not a discriminatory practice. See Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 988, 990 (1988) ("It is true, to be sure, that an employer's policy of leaving promotion decisions to the unchecked discretion of lower level supervisors should itself raise no inference of discriminatory conduct."). But if an employer has a company-wide policy of discrimination against women, and the employer implements this policy through company-wide subjective decision making, then the plaintiff could reasonably claim that all female employees were subject to the same discriminatory employment practice. As in our prior example, if the female employee in the California store could offer proof of a company-wide policy of discrimination against women, she would be able to allege that female employees in stores throughout the country suffered a similar discriminatory injury as she did.

Although Falcon did not spell out what constitutes "significant proof" of the existence of a general policy of discrimination, it did make one thing clear: Evidence of discrete instances of discrimination are insufficient to sustain an inference of an employer's general policy and do not rise to the level of "significant proof." See 457 U.S. at 158 (holding that evidence that the plaintiff "was passed over for promotion when several less deserving whites were advanced" may support a claim of individual discrimination, but "would not necessarily justify" a company-wide claim of discrimination). This is the standard that must be applied to the claims here.

B

The majority offers several reasons for concluding it is not bound by Falcon's "significant proof" requirement. First, the majority claims that this requirement has little weight because it was a "hypothetical in clear dicta."[8] Maj. Op. at 6178 n.15. This contention has no merit. We are bound by the Supreme Court's instructions whether they are stated in the first sentence of an opinion or in the final footnote. Falcon's analysis of Rule 23(a) is controlling here, given that it is the sole Supreme Court case addressing Rule 23(a) in the Title VII discrimination context and is directly on point in this case. Moreover, the significant proof requirement is clearly a reasonable interpretation of Rule 23(a); a plaintiff cannot bring a company-wide discrimination class action unless there is sufficient evidence that the alleged discriminatory injury actually affected employees throughout the company.

Second, the majority attempts to cabin Falcon to its facts, asserting that the "significant proof" requirement applies only when the plaintiff is an employee of the company and other members of the purported class are job applicants. In such a case, the majority asserts, the plaintiff and the purported members of the class have "distinct legal theories of recovery." Maj. Op. at 6179. The majority's efforts to distinguish Falcon on this ground are unpersuasive. Falcon's determination that the district court erred in certifying a class of existing employees and job applicants was based on the general principle that a plaintiff's claims must "fairly encompass" those of the class to meet the Rule 23(a) commonality and typicality requirements. See Falcon, 458 U.S. at 156. In elaborating further on this principle, the Supreme Court explained that plaintiffs who seek to bridge the gap between their claims and those of the class members by alleging a general company-wide policy of discrimination must adduce "significant proof" that such a policy exists. Id. at 159 n.15. The Supreme Court did not limit this principle to classes combining plaintiffs with hiring and promotion claims.

---

[8] To support this point, the majority cites to a dissent from the denial of rehearing en banc, Lopez-Rodriguez v. Holder, 560 F.3d 1098 (9th Cir. 2009), which provides no support. See Maj. Op. 6178-79 n.15. Lopez-Rodriguez merely stated that the Supreme Court's language should not be applied "to create a new rule—one [the Court] never envisioned." Maj. Op. at 6178 n.15 (quoting Lopez-Rodriguez, 560 F.3d at 1099). This truism does not support the majority's position that we have the option to ignore the Supreme Court's guidance on an issue directly before the Court, as in Falcon.

Finally, the majority claims that Falcon's "significant proof" requirement conflates the class certification and merits phases of the litigation. Maj. Op. at 6180 n.17. This is incorrect. Falcon does not require plaintiffs to prove the merits of their claim; here, for example, plaintiffs need not establish a prima facie case of discrimination that can survive the employer's rebuttal evidence, nor need they prove their claims for individual relief. See Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 360 (1977). But Falcon does require the plaintiffs to put forth some significant proof, i.e., evidence beyond allegations, that a general policy of discrimination exists. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15. More important, as Falcon states (and as the majority acknowledges), courts at the class certification stage must "probe behind the pleadings" to examine evidence which goes to the requirements of Rule 23, even if such evidence also relates to the underlying merits of the case. Id. at 160. In this context, the degree of overlap between the merits determination and the determination that the class meets the Rule 23 requirements is largely irrelevant. Id. Rather, Falcon's principle that a handful of individual incidents of discrimination are insufficient for class certification is applicable both at the merits stage and the class certification stage. See Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank, 467 U.S. 867, 876-77 (1984). If plaintiffs cannot demonstrate that the proposed class was subject to a general policy of discrimination, then the class action is not an efficient mechanism for pursuing relief, and the district court may not certify the class.

C

We must consider plaintiffs' motion for class certification under Rule 23(a) in light of Falcon's requirements. In this case, the plaintiffs asked the district court to certify a class of 1.5 million women based on: (i) 120 anecdotes; (ii) statistical evidence; and (iii) expert testimony.[9] In light of Falcon, the district court's responsibility to conduct a rigorous scrutiny of this evidence was clear. As explained below, the evidence does not come close to meeting the Falcon requirements for demonstrating commonality and typicality.

1

On its face, 120 anecdotes, or one anecdote for every 12,500 class members, does not support plaintiffs' claim that Wal-Mart had a company-wide policy of discrimination. The affidavits describe the affiants' experiences in, at most, 235 of Wal-Mart's 3,400 stores, meaning that the affidavits provide no information about working conditions in over 3,100 stores. A single affidavit from a single store in Michigan tells little about whether there is discrimination at each of the other 72 stores in Michigan, let alone the rest of the company. Cooper, 467 U.S. at 877-78; see Cooper v. S. Co., 390 F.3d 695, 714-15 (11th Cir. 2004) (holding that evidence of discrimination in one part of a company does not necessarily give rise to an inference of discrimination in a different part of the company), overruled on other grounds by Ash v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 546 U.S. 454, 457-58 (2006) (per curiam).

---

[9] As pointed out by the majority, the plaintiffs also produced "facts supporting the existence of company-wide policies and practices." Maj. Op. at 6187. Because it is undisputed that Wal-Mart maintains uniform company-wide policies, and because the mere existence of company-wide policies says nothing about whether such policies are discriminatory, there is no need to discuss such "facts" separately from plaintiffs' other purported evidence.

Nor are the 120 affidavits geographically representative of Wal-Mart as a whole. See Cooper, 390 F.3d at 719 (upholding the district court's determination that, "given the sheer size and geographically dispersed nature of the defendants' workforce, the anecdotal evidence—disturbing as some of it may have been—was inadequate to establish discrimination class-wide"). Here, more than half of the 120 women who submitted affidavits are concentrated in only six states—Alabama, California, Florida, Missouri, Texas, and Wisconsin—where less than a third of Wal-Mart stores are located. There are no more than one or two affidavits relating to Wal-Mart operations in half the states, and 14 states are not represented at all.[10]

---

[10] The number of Wal-Mart stores and managers set forth in this paragraph are based on information provided by plaintiffs' expert, Dr. Marc Bendick, and are current as of 1999.

The Supreme Court has held that a court may find a company-wide policy of discrimination where plaintiffs have offered a substantial number of affidavits compared to the size of the class, along with sufficient statistical evidence.[11] Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 339. In Teamsters, for example, 40 anecdotes of discrimination out of a class of some 334 employees (one out of every eight class members) were held probative of a pattern or practice of discrimination. See United States v. T.I.M.E.-D.C., Inc., 517 F.2d 299, 308 (5th Cir. 1975), overruled by Teamsters, 431 U.S. 324. These 40 anecdotes were from employees spread throughout the company and represented seven of the company's ten largest operations. See id. at 315 & n.30.

On the other hand, the Supreme Court has concluded that a handful of discriminatory incidents is insufficient evidence of a company-wide policy of discrimination to justify certification of a company-wide class. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159. A plaintiff's individual experience of discriminatory treatment does not itself raise the inference that such treatment is typical of the employer's practices. Id. at 158; see Cooper, 467 U.S. at 877-78 ("[A] class plaintiff's attempt to prove the existence of a companywide policy, or even a consistent practice within a given department, may fail even though discrimination against one or two individuals has been proved.").

---

[11] Until today, this circuit's largest stretch to uphold certification in an employment discrimination class action based on a small number of incidents of discrimination occurred in Staton, where 237 individuals sought to represent a class of 15,000 African American employees. 327 F.3d at 948 n.4, 953. Cautioning that this was an "ambitious" claim for commonality that was "especially worthy of scrutiny," id. at 954, we nevertheless upheld the district court's class certification. In doing so, we noted that plaintiffs' lawyers interviewed more than 1,300 employees from facilities across the country, filed detailed documentation of discrimination experienced by 200 of those employees, and produced a company-wide internal survey to support their claims of class-wide racial discrimination. Id. Accordingly, at a minimum, the plaintiffs presented anecdotal evidence from one out of every 75 class members. No court, however, has ever held that one anecdote could suffice to represent the experiences of as vast a number as 12,500 class members.

Here, 120 affidavits compared to 1.5 million members of the class amount to nothing more than evidence of "isolated or sporadic" incidents of discrimination, Cooper, 468 U.S. at 876, which are insufficient to show a company-wide policy of discrimination. See Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159. The affiants claim discrimination in different forms, at the hands of different people, in different stores, in different parts of the country, at different times, and under a constellation of facts unique to each individual. Whether or not these 120 employees have actionable discrimination claims against the store and management where they worked, their individual stories do not constitute significant proof that Wal-Mart has adopted a general policy of discrimination or that such a policy prevails in the remaining 3,100 stores. In relying on such scanty anecdotal evidence to support class certification, the district court failed to "probe behind the pleadings" to determine whether the six plaintiffs actually did "possess the same interest and suffer the same injury" as the proposed class members. Id. at 160.

The majority makes the same mistake. Discarding Wal-Mart's objection that the district court abused its discretion in considering the 120 affidavits to be an adequate basis for certifying the class, the majority states, "we find no authority requiring or even suggesting that a plaintiff class submit a specific number of declarations for such evidence to have any value." Maj. Op. at 6205. This is a straw-man argument. The Supreme Court has not specified a threshold number of affidavits that a plaintiff alleging company-wide discrimination must have in hand. But if the plaintiff's affidavits do not raise the inference that the employer's practices are "motivated by a policy of [gender] discrimination" pervading the employer's company, they do not support class certification. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 158. Here, the majority's conclusion that one declaration for every 12,500 women, amounting to a handful of declarations scattered among 3,400 stores in fifty states, "raise[s] an inference of common discriminatory experiences," Maj. Op. at 6206, does not pass even the straight-faced test.

2

The plaintiffs' statistical evidence is no better. Plaintiffs relied most heavily on the statistical study produced by Dr. Richard Drogin, a retired professor of statistics from California State University, Hayward. Drogin conducted a regional analysis comparing the percentage of women promoted into management positions at Wal-Mart with the percentage of women in the available pool of hourly workers, and concluded that women were underrepresented in management in almost every one of Wal-Mart's 41 regions. Drogin also compared the earnings of women to the earnings of men at Wal-Mart and concluded that in each region, Wal-Mart pays women less than men in comparable hourly positions.

Wal-Mart objected to this evidence on the ground that data aggregated at the regional or national level did not demonstrate there was a general policy of discrimination throughout Wal-Mart's 3,400 individual retail stores. The district court dismissed these objections. Rejecting what it characterized as Wal-Mart's effort "to engage the Court in a merits evaluation of the expert opinions," the district court stated it would "delve[ ] into the substance of the expert testimony only to the extent necessary to determine if it is sufficiently probative of an inference of discrimination to create a common question as to the existence of a pattern and practice of gender discrimination at Wal-Mart." Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 155. Applying this standard, the court held that Drogin's regional analysis was not "lacking in probative value," was "at least a reasonable means of conducting a statistical analysis," id. at 159, and therefore was sufficient to "create an inference of discrimination" for class certification purposes, id. at 164.

The district court's superficial examination of Drogin's statistics constituted legal error. The plaintiffs' class proposal hinged on its proof that Wal-Mart had a general policy of discrimination; absent convincing proof on that point, the plaintiffs could not bridge the gap between their discrimination claims and the purported claims of the class. Accordingly, the district court was obliged to scrutinize plaintiffs' evidence and make a reasoned determination as to whether it constituted significant proof that Wal-Mart had a general policy of discrimination, and thus whether the requirements of Rule 23(a) had been met. See Falcon, 457 U.S. at 161.

The district court expressly rejected this responsibility. Instead of rigorously analyzing whether the plaintiffs' evidence was significant proof of a general policy of discrimination, the district court made it Wal-Mart's burden to prove that Drogin's statistics were no longer probative or were "fatally flawed."

See Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 161-62; see also id. at 159 (concluding that Wal-Mart failed to persuade the court "that Dr. Drogin's regional analysis should be rejected . . . because it is lacking in probative value"); id. at 160 (concluding that "[Wal-Mart] has not discredited or nullified Dr. Drogin's results" with respect to Wal-Mart's objection that Drogin's methodology failed to account for a variety of relevant factors). The majority affirms this error by simply labeling the district court's analysis as "rigorous" and insisting (without analysis) that the district court adequately probed behind the pleadings.

Had the district court properly analyzed the evidence, it could not have concluded that Drogin's statistics constituted significant proof of plaintiffs' theory. Information about disparities at the regional and national level does not establish the existence of disparities at individual stores, let alone raise the inference that a company-wide policy of discrimination is implemented by discretionary decisions at the store and district level. As Wal-Mart's statistical expert, Dr. Joan Haworth, explained, the statistical disparities at the regional level could be due to decisions made at only a small percentage of Wal-Mart stores.[12] Indeed, Haworth concluded that, when data is considered at the store level, over 90 percent of Wal-Mart's stores showed no statistical difference in the hourly pay rates between men and women associates with similar work-related characteristics. Although Drogin argued that it was proper to conduct an analysis on a regional level because "the subjective decision-making in compensation and promotions takes place within parameters and guidelines that are highly uniform, and within a strong corporate culture," Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 157, this argument makes little sense. Among other things, this argument is contrary to the thrust of plaintiffs' legal theory, namely, that the decisions of individual managers regarding pay and promotions are subjective and not subject to uniform "parameters and guidelines." It is also contrary to the district court's own determination that "in-store pay and promotion decisions are largely subjective and made within a substantial range of discretion by store or district level managers." Id. at 152. More important, because statistical disparities may exist at the regional level even if the majority (or all) of the store managers made nondiscriminatory decisions at the store level, [12] In fact, Haworth pointed out that the statistical disparities between men and women at the regional level could also be the result of the aggregation of the data itself. This problem is known as "Simpson's Paradox," which refers to "illusory disparities in improperly aggregated data that disappear when the data are disaggregated." Eng'g Contractors Ass'n of S. Fla. Inc. v. Met. Dade County, 122 F.3d 895, 919 n.4 (11th Cir. 1997); see also P.J. Bickel, E.A. Hammel, & J.W. O'Connell, Sex Bias in Graduate Admissions: Data from Berkeley, 187 Science 398 (1975) (using Simpson's Paradox to explain how researchers found a statistically significant bias in favor of male applicants when analyzing admissions data from all 101 of Berkeley's graduate departments, despite the fact that only 4 departments had a statistically significant bias in favor of males and 6 departments had a statistically significant bias in favor of females). As the article cited by the majority shows, it is especially likely that Drogin's statistics would display illusory disparities, because Drogin based his study on pre-existing information that was collected from a large sample size. See Marios G. Pavlides & Michael D. Perlman, How Likely Is a Simpson's Paradox, 63 Am. Statistician 226, 230 (2009).

---

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

Drogin's data is not sufficiently probative of conditions at the store level to constitute significant proof of the existence of a class subjected to a policy of company-wide discrimination.[13]

The majority disposes of Wal-Mart's objection that regional data is not indicative of a general discriminatory policy at individual stores by criticizing Wal-Mart's statistics, which aggregated data at the sub-store rather than the store level, an approach the district court had previously allowed. Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 157 n.25. But the quality of the defendant's statistics is not the issue here; rather, it is the plaintiffs' burden to produce significant proof of a policy of discrimination across Wal-Mart that manifested itself in similar ways throughout the company. See Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160. Plaintiffs' statistics lack probative value even without Wal-Mart's opposing data.

---

[13] The district court also relied on a study prepared by Dr. Marc Bendick, Ph.D., an economist and consultant, which made a company-wide comparison of Wal-Mart with twenty purportedly similar (but much smaller) retail companies. The study concluded that on a company-wide basis Wal-Mart promoted a smaller percentage of women than its competitors. Again, the district court applied the wrong legal standard. Instead of conducting a rigorous evaluation of the evidence as required by Falcon, it accepted Bendick's study at face value because it held it was "sufficiently probative to assist the Court in evaluating the class certification requirements at issue in this case." Dukes v. Wal-Mart, Inc. (Dukes II), 222 F.R.D. 189, 195 (N.D. Cal. 2004). In fact, Bendick's study did not provide support for plaintiffs' claim that the 1.5 million women in the class were subject to discriminatory treatment in promotions, because it too failed to provide information derived from the level at which promotion and pay decisions were actually made.

Finally, the district court committed legal error by failing to test the reliability of the expert opinion of William Bielby, Ph.D., as required by Federal Rule of Evidence 702[14] and Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 589 (1993). In brief, Bielby presented his theory that subjective decision making, such as that which occurs at Wal-Mart stores, is "susceptible to unconscious discriminatory impulses."[15] Wal-Mart moved to strike

---

[14] Federal Rule of Evidence 702 states that:

> If scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue, a witness qualified as an expert by knowledge, skill, experience, training, or education, may testify thereto in the form of an opinion or otherwise, if (1) the testimony is based upon sufficient facts or data, (2) the testimony is the product of reliable principles and methods, and (3) the witness has applied the principles and methods reliably to the facts of the case.

[15] The majority cites to Melissa Hart & Paul M. Secunda, A Matter of Context: Social Framework Evidence in Employment Discrimination Class Actions, 78 Fordham L. Rev. 37 (2009), for a description of Bielby's "social framework analysis." Maj. Op. at 6189 n.21. In employment discrimination litigation, social framework experts purport to summarize social science research regarding the workplace to give the finder of fact a "context" in which to decide key legal issues. Hart & Secunda, supra, at 44. The article by Hart and Secunda discusses the dispute among social psychologists over whether it is appropriate for experts like Bielby to use social framework analysis to draw specific factual conclusions about a company's operations without the use of case-specific research. See id. at 51-55. The controversy over the reliability of this methodology highlights the need for a proper Daubert inquiry here.

Bielby's testimony on the ground that his opinion was not reliable. According to Wal-Mart, Bielby failed to apply the same standards to his work in preparing his testimony that he applied to his work as a scientist. Wal-Mart alleged, inter alia, that Bielby had misrepresented aspects of the literature upon which he relied, made unsustainable extrapolations from that literature, failed to consider evidence that tended to undermine his theory, and failed to test his data.

Instead of evaluating the reliability of Bielby's report in light of Wal-Mart's arguments, the district court denied Wal-Mart's motion on the ground that "courts should not even apply the full Daubert 'gatekeeper' standard" at the class certification stage. Dukes II, 222 F.R.D. at 191. Rather, the district court held that "[t]he appropriate question at this stage of the litigation is not whether Dr. Bielby can make a conclusive determination, but whether [his opinion] could add probative value to the inference of discrimination that plaintiffs allege." Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 154. Concluding that the report was not "so flawed that it lacks sufficient probative value to be considered in assessing commonality," the district court relied on Bielby's report in making its determination that plaintiffs met the Rule 23(a) requirements. Dukes II, 222 F.R.D. at 192.

In so ruling, the district court misunderstood Daubert and the level of inquiry required at the class certification stage. The purpose of conducting a Daubert inquiry is to ensure that proffered expert testimony is relevant and reliable. Kumho Tire Co. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 152 (1999). "It is to make certain that an expert, whether basing testimony upon professional studies or personal experience, employs in the courtroom the same level of intellectual rigor that characterizes the practice of an expert in the relevant field." Id. To this end, a court must make "a preliminary assessment of whether the reasoning or methodology underlying the testimony is scientifically valid and of whether that reasoning or methodology properly can be applied to the facts in issue." Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592-93. Courts are obliged to address allegations that an expert's opinion is not supported by the data, and may reject "opinion evidence that is connected to existing data only by the ipse dixit of the expert." Gen. Elec. Co. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 146 (1997).

These principles are equally applicable in the class certification context. The district court must "assess all of the relevant evidence admitted at the class certification stage and determine whether each Rule 23 requirement has been met, just as the judge would resolve a dispute about any other threshold prerequisite for continuing a lawsuit." In re Initial Pub. Offerings Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24, 42 (2d Cir. 2006). Like any other evidence, expert evidence introduced to "establish a component of a Rule 23 requirement" must be reliable; it is not enough that the expert testimony is "not fatally flawed." Id.; see also Am. Honda Motor Co. v. Allen, No. 09-8051, slip op. at 6 (7th Cir. April 7, 2010) (holding that the court must conduct a Daubert analysis on key expert testimony even at the class certification stage); In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 323 (3d Cir. 2008) ("Expert opinion with respect to class certification, like any matter relevant to a Rule 23 requirement, calls for rigorous analysis."). A court cannot reasonably certify a class based on evidence that is not "based upon sufficient facts or data, . . . the product of reliable principles and methods," and the product of reliable application of the methods to the facts. Fed. R. Evid. 702. Although a district court has considerable discretion under Daubert, there is no basis for the district court's conclusion that it can forego a reliability inquiry altogether. The district court abused its discretion in doing so.[16]

The majority's discussion of this claim misses the mark entirely. First, instead of engaging the question whether the district court properly tested the reliability of Bielby's testimony, the majority simply concludes that "Dr. Bielby presented scientifically reliable evidence." Maj. Op. at 6193. This not only assumes the answer to the very question at issue, but is wrong on its face: The district court explicitly did not consider whether the evidence was "scientifically reliable," holding instead that the evidence was not "so flawed that it lacks sufficient probative value to be considered in assessing" whether class certification was appropriate. Dukes II, 222 F.R.D. at 192.[17]

---

[16] The majority writes that it is "not convinced by the dissent's argument that Daubert has exactly the same application at the class certification stage as it does to expert testimony relevant at trial." Maj. Op. at 6191 n.22. But the majority never accounts for why it is "not convinced," nor does it explain why the district court can rely on an expert's testimony that is not reliable, at the class certification stage or any other. Rule 702 and the Supreme Court make clear that evidence that is not scientifically valid does not " 'assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence or to determine a fact in issue.' " Daubert, 509 U.S. at 589 (quoting Fed. R. Evid. 702).

[17] The majority errs in suggesting that the district court performed a proper Daubert inquiry, see Maj. Op. at 6191-92 n.22, because it stated that Bielby's opinion "is based on valid principles." Dukes II, 222 F.R.D. at 192. Whether Bielby based his testimony on valid principles says nothing about whether he applied those principles via a valid methodology to produce

The majority focuses its discussion on what it characterizes as Wal-Mart's objection to the persuasiveness of Bielby's testimony. According to the majority, Wal-Mart "did not (and does not) challenge Dr. Bielby's methodology." Maj. Op. at 6190. In fact, Wal-Mart never challenged the persuasiveness of Bielby's testimony, but rather challenged Bielby's methodology, a challenge that is proper under Daubert. See Daubert, 509 U.S. at 592-93; see also Joiner, 522 U.S. at 144. By missing this point, the majority erroneously approves the district court's reliance on an arguably unreliable expert opinion.

D

When plaintiffs' evidence is subjected to the rigorous inquiry required by Falcon, it is inadequate to bridge the gap between the six plaintiffs' claims of individual discrimination and a class-wide claim of company-wide discrimination. None of plaintiffs' evidence is probative of company-wide discrimination. Every piece of evidence merely purports to support another. While plaintiffs' anecdotes do not show company-wide discrimination, plaintiffs argue they support the statistical evidence. The statistics are not probative of a company-wide policy of discrimination, but plaintiffs allege they may be "attributable" to such a policy when viewed in connection with Wal-Mart's uniform corporate policies. Maj. Op. at 6187-88. The uniform corporate policies are not themselves discriminatory but, according to plaintiffs, provide a potential "conduit" for discrimination. Maj.

[Footnote continued from previous page]

relevant and reliable evidence, which is the critical issue under Daubert.

Op. at 6187. The expert opinions do not point to discrimination on a company-wide basis, but merely "support[ ] the existence of company-wide policies and practices that likely include a culture of gender stereotyping." Maj. Op. at 6187 (emphasis added). And Wal-Mart's corporate policy of subjective decision making is not discriminatory in itself but, plaintiffs urge, may be evidence of company-wide discrimination in light of the statistical evidence and anecdotes. Maj. Op. at 6207. Like the proverbial shell game, the plaintiffs' circular presentation cannot conceal the fact that they have failed to offer any significant proof of a company-wide policy of discrimination, no matter which shell is lifted.

By taking the district court's determination at face value, the majority erroneously accepts a chain of weak inferences as sufficient to carry plaintiffs' burden of adducing significant proof that Wal-Mart "operated under a general policy of discrimination" that affected all members of the class. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15. Any reasonable scrutiny of the evidence in this case compels the conclusion that although the six plaintiffs here may have individualized claims of discrimination, they cannot represent a class of 1.5 million past and present employees. The district court abused its discretion in holding that the plaintiffs met the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a).

III

Even assuming the district court was correct in concluding that the proposed class satisfied the Rule 23(a) standard, the district court made two crucial errors when it certified the class under Rule 23(b)(2). First, the district court failed to consider whether it could protect the parties' substantive rights in the class action context. Although the plaintiffs were bringing Title VII claims, the district court erroneously concluded that it had no obligation to allow Wal-Mart to raise the statutory defenses provided by Title VII. This was an error: A court must ensure that its certification of a class does not affect the substantive rights of either party. See Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b)[18]; Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 845 (1999) ("[N]o reading of the Rule can ignore the Act's mandate that rules of procedure shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." (internal quotation marks omitted) (quoting Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 613 (1997))). This mistake led to a second legal error: Because the district court turned a blind eye to Wal-Mart's right to individual hearings, the district court failed to realize that the class did not fit the historical model of Rule 23(b)(2), and therefore could not be certified under that section of the rule.

A

The parties' substantive rights in this case are defined by Title VII. The majority acknowledges that the legal and factual frameworks of different causes of action can impact the outcome of a court's Rule 23 determination. Maj. Op. at 6152-53, 6171-72. Yet the majority fails to address the specific legal and factual framework of Title VII or consider how it impacts the certification of plaintiffs' proposed class. It is therefore necessary to provide some background regarding the structure of claims and defenses under Title VII before discussing the majority and district court's error in certifying the proposed class under Rule 23(b)(2).

---

[18] 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b) provides:

> (b) Such rules [of practice and procedure prescribed by the Supreme Court] shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right. All laws in conflict with such rules shall be of no further force or effect after such rules have taken effect.

1

Under Title VII, the plaintiff has the ultimate burden of establishing that the employer is engaged in an unlawful employment practice described in 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2. If the plaintiff prevails in a Title VII action, the court "may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include, but is not limited to, reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay . . ., or any other equitable relief as the court deems appropriate." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(1). In cases where the plaintiff alleges that the employer engaged in intentional discrimination, the plaintiff may also seek compensatory and punitive damages. § 1981a(a)(1). Punitive damages are available only if the plaintiff can show the employer acted "with malice or with reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of an aggrieved individual." § 1981a(b)(1); e.g., Landgraf v. USI Film Prods., 511 U.S. 244, 254 (1994).

Title VII affords defendant-employers certain affirmative defenses. If the employer can prove that an adverse employment action against an individual employee was "for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 2000e-3(a) of this title," a court shall not order the "hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay."

§ 2000e-5(g)(2)(A). Even if the employee proves that the adverse employment action was motivated in part by a discriminatory motive, see § 2000e-2(m), a court cannot award damages or back pay if the employer can prove that it "would have taken the same action in the absence of the impermissible motivating factor," § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B)(ii). See Costa v. Desert Palace, Inc., 299 F.3d 838, 848 (9th Cir. 2002) (explaining that in a mixed motive case, an employer "may assert an affirmative defense to bar certain types of relief by showing the absence of 'but for' causation"), aff'd, 539 U.S. 90. If the employer is successful in proving an affirmative defense, Title VII limits the court to granting declaratory or injunctive relief, as well as certain attorneys' fees and costs. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B)(ii).

These defenses are available to a defendant regardless of whether the plaintiffs allege discrimination against a single individual or against a class. See 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b); Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 360 (citing Franks v. Bowman Trans. Co., 421 U.S. 747 (1976)). An employer cannot be deprived of its statutory right to raise individualized defenses to claims for monetary relief merely because plaintiffs characterize their claim as a pattern or practice of discrimination and bring the suit on behalf of a class. Instead, the Supreme Court has created a framework for litigating pattern-or-practice claims that provides employers the opportunity to put forth individual defenses. See Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 360-62.[19]

---

[19] Teamsters involved a suit by the Attorney General under 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-6, which allows the government to bring an action when it has cause to believe that a person "is engaged in a pattern or practice of resistance to the full enjoyment of any of

The first phase of a Title VII pattern-or-practice lawsuit focuses on company-wide practices. The party bringing the suit must first attempt "to establish by a preponderance of the evidence that . . . discrimination was the company's standard operating procedure[,] the regular rather than the unusual practice." Id. at 336. In this phase, the plaintiff need not show that each member of the class "was a victim of the employer's discriminatory policy." Id. at 360. If the plaintiff "establish[es] a prima facie case that such a policy existed[,]" the burden shifts to the employer to show there was no such pattern of discrimination at a company-wide level. Id. If the employer fails to rebut the inference of discrimination arising from the plaintiffs' prima facie case, the district court may "conclude that a violation has occurred" and order prospective relief. Id. at 361.

But if plaintiffs seek individual relief such as reinstatement or back pay, the district court must conduct additional proceedings in the second phase of the trial "to determine the scope of individual relief." Id. In this second phase, "[t]he proof of the pattern or practice supports an inference that any particular employment decision, during the period in which the discriminatory policy was in force, was made in pursuit of that policy." Id. at 362. Therefore, individual the rights" secured by Title VII. 431 U.S. at 328 n.1. Teamsters's two-step framework is equally applicable to class actions brought by individuals alleging discrimination. See id. at 358-59 (noting that it was adopting the two-step framework set forth in Franks, 424 U.S. 747, a class action brought by individuals alleging discrimination); see also Cooper, 467 U.S. at 876 n.9 (applying the Teamsters pattern-or-practice framework to class actions brought by individuals).

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

class members may establish a prima facie case merely by showing that an individual "unsuccessfully applied for a job and therefore was a potential victim of the proved discrimination." Id. (footnote omitted). The burden then shifts to the employer to raise its affirmative defenses and to "demonstrate that the individual applicant was denied an employment opportunity for lawful reasons." Id. Teamsters acknowledged that the district court's task of determining individual relief would "not be a simple one," because "the court will have to make a substantial number of individual determinations in deciding which of the minority employees were actual victims of the company's discriminatory practices."[20] Id. at 371-72.

---

[20] While Teamsters referred to the second stage of individualized hearings as the "remedial" stage of trial, 431 U.S. at 361, this is a misnomer. As explained by Justice O'Connor in her concurrence in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228 (1989), superceded in part by statute, Civil Rights Act of 1991, the second stage of individualized hearings is not remedial, but rather a second phase of liability, in which the employer is entitled to raise individual statutory defenses: "It is misleading to speak of the additional proof required by an individual class member for relief as being a part of the damage phase, that evidence is actually an element of the liability portion of the case." Id. at 266 (O'Connor, J., concurring) (quoting Dillon v. Coles, 746 F.2d 998, 1004 (3d Cir. 1984)). We have explained the two-step procedure in a similar way. See EEOC v. Gen. Tel. Co. of Nw., Inc., 599 F.2d 322, 332 (9th Cir. 1979) (holding that the demonstration of a discriminatory pattern and practice in the first phase of the case establishes the individual class members' prima facie case of discrimination, and shifts the burden to the employer "to prove that individuals were not in fact victims of previous discrimination"); see also Domingo v. New Eng. Fish Co., 727 F.2d 1429, 1445 (9th Cir. 1984) (holding that once class-wide discrimination has been shown, a claimant is pre-

As should be clear, claims for monetary relief cannot be resolved until this second phase. See, e.g., Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 651 (6th Cir. 2006); Lemon v. Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs, Local No. 139, 216 F.3d 577, 581 (7th Cir. 2000); Allison, 151 F.3d at 417. This applies equally to punitive damages. Because the Supreme Court has indicated that punitive damages must bear a "reasonable relationship to compensatory damages," BMW of N. Am., Inc. v. Gore, 517 U.S. 559, 580 (1996) (internal quotation marks omitted), "punitive damages must be determined after proof of liability to individual plaintiffs at the second stage of a pattern or practice case, not upon the mere finding of general liability to the class at the first stage," Allison, 151 F.3d at 418; see also 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(b)(1) (an employer may avoid punitive damages by showing lack of requisite mens rea as to each aggrieved individual); Kolstad v. Am. Dental Ass'n, 527 U.S. 526, 545-46 (1999) (holding that an employer may avoid punitive damages under § 1981a if it has made good-faith efforts to prevent discrimination in the workplace); Rodriguez-Torres v. Caribbean Forms Mfr., Inc., 399 F.3d 52, 64 (1st Cir. 2005) (holding that an employer's good faith efforts to implement an sumptively eligible for back pay, subject to the employer "proving that the applicant was unqualified or showing some other valid reason why the claimant was not, or would not have been, acceptable"). Other circuits are in accord. See, e.g., Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R. Co., 267 F.3d 147, 159 (2d Cir. 2001); Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 417-18 (5th Cir. 1998); Dillon, 746 F.2d at 1004; Craik v. Minn. State Univ. Bd., 731 F.2d 465, 469-70 (8th Cir. 1984); Mitchell v. Mid-Continent Spring Co. of Ky., 583 F.2d 275, 284 (6th Cir. 1978).

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

anti-discrimination policy in the workplace is an affirmative defense to an award of punitive damages under § 1981a).

In sum, a determination that an employer has engaged in a pattern or practice of discrimination in violation of Title VII entitles the class to prospective relief and creates a presumption of liability for individual relief. The employer then has a statutory right, recognized by the Supreme Court, to prove that its actions against individual employees were not discriminatory. The Rules Enabling Act prohibits a district court from depriving an employer of this right simply to facilitate the certification of a class action.[21] See 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b).

2

In this case, notwithstanding the requirements of Title VII, the district court rejected Wal-Mart's arguments that it was entitled to raise a defense with respect to each class member's claim for back pay and punitive damages. Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 173-74. The district court did not provide any reason for this decision, stating only that "holding individual hearings for the number of women potentially entitled to backpay in this case is impractical on its face, and thus the traditional Teamsters mini-hearing approach is not feasible here." Id. at 176.

---

[21] The majority accuses the dissent of "ignor[ing] that the pattern and practice has to be proven on a group basis." Maj. Op. at 6231 n.53 (emphasis in original). On the contrary, there is no doubt that a plaintiff must establish a pattern and practice of discrimination on a company-wide basis in the first phase of their case, as explained above. It is the majority that turns a blind eye to the second phase of Title VII litigation, where defendants have the right to raise affirmative defenses as to each class member. The majority never satisfactorily answers the question of how the district court would conduct up to 1.5 million individualized hearings during the second phase that Teamsters mandates.

It seems obvious that the district court's determination that it could not certify the class in compliance with Teamsters compels the conclusion that it could not certify the class at all. Nevertheless, the district court determined it could bypass Supreme Court precedent. Relying on cases the court characterized as allowing back pay awards to be calculated on a class-wide basis, see Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 176-78, 180, 184, the district court held that once plaintiffs proved that Wal-Mart engaged in a pattern or practice of discrimination, liability as to individual class members could be determined by means of a formula for employees denied promotions, id. at 176-78, or by analyzing Wal-Mart's personnel data to identify employees entitled to back pay, id. at 184-86. Further, the district court rejected Wal-Mart's argument that punitive damages could not be awarded on a class-wide basis, holding that it could "limit recovery of any punitive damages to those class members who actually recover an award of lost pay," as determined by a formula. Id. at 172.

In adopting the approach described above, the district court deprived Wal-Mart of its statutory right to raise its defenses and violated the mandate of the Rules Enabling Act. If Wal-Mart can prove that it took an adverse employment action with respect to a particular plaintiff for non-discriminatory reasons, or that it "would have taken the same action in the absence of the impermissible motivating factor," 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(A), (B), it cannot be held liable for back pay or punitive damages as to those individual class members. See Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 361.

The cases relied on by the district court, see Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 176-78, 180, 184, do not justify its refusal to provide individual hearings, but rather provide that defendants are entitled to raise statutory defenses to liability. See Domingo, 727 F.2d at 1445; see also McKenzie v. Sawyer, 684 F.2d 62, 77-78 (D.C. Cir. 1982), abrogated on other grounds by Berger v. Iron Workers Reinforced Rodmen, Local 201, 170 F.3d 1111 (D.C. Cir. 1999); Hameed v. Int'l Ass'n of Bridge, Structural & Ornamental Iron Workers Local Union No. 396, 637 F.2d 506, 520 (8th Cir. 1980) ("If a black applicant was rejected for a nondiscriminatory reason, that applicant would not be a member of the class of potential discriminatees."). The district court could not properly rely on cases that preceded Teamsters, see, e.g., Stewart v. Gen. Motors Corp., 542 F.2d 445, 452-53 (7th Cir. 1976), nor those from other circuits that are contrary to Teamsters, see, e.g., EEOC v. O & G Spring & Wire Forms Specialty Co., 38 F.3d 872, 879-80 & n.9 (7th Cir. 1994); Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249, 1291-92 (D.C. Cir. 1984).

B

The district court's crucial misunderstanding of Title VII and Teamsters led to a second mistake: it failed to undertake a proper analysis of whether the proposed class should be certified under Rule 23(b)(2) or Rule 23(b)(3). The majority makes the same error, with nary an acknowledgment that the Supreme Court has provided general guidelines for making this determination. See, e.g., Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 845-46; Amchem, 521 U.S. at 625. Again, to understand how the district court and majority went astray, it is first necessary to describe the basic analytical structure for categorizing classes under Rule 23(b).

1

Rule 23(b) establishes three different types of classes. In certifying a proposed class, courts must determine whether a proposed class fits into the historical models on which Rule 23(b)(1) or (2) were based, or is a more "adventuresome" class action, Amchem, 521 U.S. at 614, that must be certified under Rule 23(b)(3). See Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 832-37.

Courts considering whether to certify a class under Rule 23(b)(1) or (2) must take the "prudent course" of staying "close to the historical model" and "traditional paradigm" as understood by the Advisory Committee in drafting the rule. Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 842, 864. The Advisory Committee intended Rule 23(b)(1) classes to be "limited fund" actions, a type of action where multiple plaintiffs seek to divide a limited fund among claimants. Id. at 838-41. Rule 23(b)(2) allows a court to certify a class action when "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). A review of the historical sources relied upon by Ortiz reveals that the Advisory Committee based Rule 23(b)(2) on "various actions in the civil-rights field where a party is charged with discriminating unlawfully against a class, usually one whose members are incapable of specific enumeration." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) advisory committee's note (1966). Specifically, the Committee cited, as the historical predicate of the Rule 23(b)(2) action, cases where plaintiffs endeavored to desegregate public accommodations through prospective declaratory and injunctive relief applicable to the class as a whole. Notably, these historical actions sought the correction of a specific discriminatory policy affecting all members of the class in the same way. See, e.g., Bailey v. Patterson, 323 F.2d 201, 206 (5th Cir. 1963).

None of the cases cited by the Advisory Committee included claims for monetary relief or individual relief of any kind. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) advisory committee's note.[22] The Advisory Committee Notes explain that, "[t]he subdivision does not extend to cases in which the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Id. In other words, Rule 23(b)(2) was designed for classes seeking class-wide injunctive relief to remedy a common injury to the class as a whole, not for classes seeking individual damages, back pay, or other individual relief.

---

[22] The Advisory Committee Notes cites the following cases, none of which involved monetary relief: Potts v. Flax, 313 F.2d 284 (5th Cir. 1963) (class action by two African-American parents against a "system wide policy of racial segregation" in city schools); Bailey, 323 F.2d 201 (class action against laws segregating common carriers); Northcross v. Bd. of Ed., 302 F.2d 818 (6th Cir. 1962) (class action by 18 African-American students and their parents seeking an order that the city end its biracial school system); Brunson v. Bd. of Trs. of Sch. Dist. No. 1, 311 F.2d 107 (4th Cir. 1962) (class action for school desegregation brought by 42 African-American students); Green v. Sch. Bd., 304 F.2d 118 (4th Cir. 1962) (non-class action by 28 African-American students seeking transfer to white schools and an injunction against school segregation); Mannings v. Bd. of Pub. Inst., 277 F.2d 370 (5th Cir. 1960) (class of African-American students seeking an injunction against school segregation); Orleans Parish Sch. Bd. v. Bush, 242 F.2d 156 (5th Cir. 1957) (class action on behalf of African-American school children to desegregate schools); Frasier v. Bd. of Trs. of Univ. of N.C., 134 F. Supp. 589 (M.D.N.C. 1955) (3-judge court) (class action by three African-Americans challenging a university's discriminatory admissions policies), aff'd, 350 U.S. 979 (1956).

While Rule 23(b)(1) and (2) are linked to well-understood historical models, Rule 23(b)(3) was designed for those cases in which "class-action treatment is not as clearly called for." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 615 (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 842 (explaining that the "Advisory Committee looked cautiously at the potential for creativity" under Rule 23(b)(1) and (2) and was "not forward looking as it was in anticipating innovations under Rule 23(b)(3)"); Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) advisory committee's note. Specifically, Rule 23(b)(3) provides for class actions that potentially allow plaintiffs to seek monetary relief on a class-wide basis. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) advisory committee's note; Benjamin Kaplan, Continuing Work of the Civil Committee: 1966 Amendments of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure (I), 81 Harv. L. Rev. 356, 393 (1967).

Because these more "adventuresome" class actions, Amchem, 541 U.S. at 614, raise due process concerns, the Advisory Committee imposed two safeguards on courts certifying such a class. First, a district court must "find[ ] that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). This inquiry ensures that deviation from "the usual rule that litigation is conducted by and on behalf of the individual named parties only" is justified. Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 700-01 (1979). Second, a district court must give prospective class members the opportunity to be excluded from the class, which is commonly known as the right to "opt out." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)(B)(v). This option protects "the interests of the individuals in pursuing their own litigations[, which] may be so strong here as to warrant denial of a class action altogether." Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 23(c)(2) advisory committee's note. The opt-out option also ensures that the class is binding on those members of the class who choose not to opt out. Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 176 (1974).

This right to opt out of a class action, however, is exclusive to classes certified under Rule 23(b)(3). On its face, Rule 23 does not provide absent class members the right to request exclusion in classes certified under Rule 23(b)(2), and it is clear from the Rule's structure that the Advisory Committee did not intend for such a right to exist under Rule 23(b)(2).[23] Moreover, the Supreme Court has interpreted Rule 23(b)(2) as precluding opt outs. Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117, 121 (1994). In Ticor, the Supreme Court dismissed its grant of certiorari on the question whether binding absent class members to a class-wide settlement would violate their constitutional due process rights, where the district court certified the class under Rules 23(b)(1)(A) and (b)(2), and the absent members had not had the chance to opt out of the class. Id. at 120-21. The Court first noted that Rule 23(b)(3) permits opt outs, and Rules 23(b)(1) and (b)(2) do not. Id. at 121. From this, the Court reasoned it could avoid the constitutional question raised in the petition for certiorari if it held that "in actions seeking monetary damages, classes can be certified only under Rule 23(b)(3)," not Rules [23] For example, while Rule 23 provides that a court must give members of Rule 23(b)(3) classes notice and the right to opt out of the class, and may give notice to members of Rule 23(b)(2) classes, the Rule is silent on whether a court may give members of Rule 23(b)(2) classes the right to opt out. See Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 23(c)(2) and (d). The inference is that a court may not allow members of a Rule 23(b)(2) class to opt out of the class.

---

23(b)(1) and (b)(2). Id. The Court concluded that this interpretation of Rule 23 "is at least a substantial possibility." Id.[24]

2

In certifying this class under Rule 23(b)(2), the district court failed to take the "prudent course" required by Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 842, and consider the history and structure of Rule 23(b). Had the district court undertaken such a review, it would have been compelled to conclude that the proposed class does not fit the historical model for Rule 23(b)(2) classes, and cannot be certified in that category. First, the proposed class raises an enormous number of individual questions. Although the plaintiffs' action is in civil rights, the plaintiffs do not ask merely for class-wide injunctive relief (as in the cases cited by the Advisory Committee); they also seek individualized relief in the form of back pay and punitive damages. As explained above, this may result in up to 1.5 million individual questions about Wal-Mart's liability for individual relief. A class that raises so many individual questions also raises the concerns the Advisory Committee expressly considered in drafting

---

[24] To avoid the import of Ticor, the majority once again claims it is not bound by an order in which six Supreme Court justices have joined, characterizing Ticor as "not even dictum, let alone a holding." Maj. Op. at 6224 n.44. Yet, the majority cites no authority for this position, perhaps because the Ninth Circuit has relied upon such orders in prior opinions. See, e.g., Carroll v. Nakatani, 342 F.3d 934, 946-47 (9th Cir. 2003) (relying on an order dismissing a writ as improvidently granted). Indeed, many of the cases relied upon by the majority cite to Ticor. E.g., Reeb, 435 F.3d at 646; Coleman v. Gen. Motors Acceptance Corp., 296 F.3d 443, 447 (6th Cir. 2002); Allison, 151 F.3d at 411 n.3.

Rule 23(b)(3), and requires the court to ask whether "the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3). Given the facts in this case, it is far from certain that the proposed class could be certified under the more flexible model provided by Rule 23(b)(3), let alone meet the narrower historical model for Rule 23(b)(2).

Second, the class's claims for monetary relief raise the very due process concerns considered by the Advisory Committee in drafting Rule 23(b)(3). The district court acknowledged that due process required that absent class members in this case be given the right to opt out of the class. See Dukes I, 222 F.R.D. at 172-73. Because Rule 23(b)(2) does not permit opt-outs, such recognition should have led the district court to determine that certification under Rule 23(b)(2) was inappropriate, and to instead consider whether the class met the criteria for certification under Rule 23(b)(3).

Given the Supreme Court's direction to adhere to the historical models in considering which classes can be certified under Rule 23(b)(1) and (2), see Ortiz, 527 U.S. 815; Amchem, 521 U.S. 591, there was no reason for the district court here to sidestep the procedural requirements of Rule 23(b)(3) to certify this class under Rule 23(b)(2). See Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87, 93 n.9 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (noting that when notice and opt-outs are required by the district court, "the arguments supporting certification . . . under subdivision (b)(2) [as opposed to (b)(3)] are surprisingly weak"). This is particularly true given that the district court's primary justification for certification under Rule 23(b)(2) was that the suit was similar to the historical model contemplated by the Advisory Committee. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 170.

In certifying this class under Rule 23(b)(2), the district court abused its discretion.

C

In holding that the district court did not err in certifying the class under Rule 23(b)(2), the majority focuses not on the text, structure, and history of this rule, but rather on a single sentence in the Advisory Committee Notes which states that Rule 23(b)(2) "does not extend to cases in which the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Maj. Op. at 6215 (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) advisory committee's notes). The majority infers from this single sentence that Rule 23(b)(2) must therefore extend to cases in which the appropriate final relief does not relate "exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Maj. Op. at 6215. The majority then turns to a dictionary definition of the word "predominant" and derives a new test: "a class must seek only monetary damages that are not 'superior [in] strength, influence, or authority' to injunctive and declaratory relief." Maj. Op. at 6215 (citing Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 978 (11th ed. (2004)).[25] In furtherance of this test, the majority directs district courts to consider "the objective 'effect of the relief sought' on the litigation," by recourse to "[f]actors such as [1] whether the monetary relief sought determines the key procedures that will be used, [2] whether it introduces new and significant legal and factual issues, [3] whether it requires individualized hearings, and [4] whether its size and nature . . . raise particular due process and manageability concerns." Maj. Op. at 6217.[26] [25] The majority admits that it breaks with the Second Circuit in rejecting the subjective intent test, as well as with the Fifth, Sixth, Seventh, and Eleventh Circuits in rejecting the "incidental damages standard" test. Maj. Op. at 6215. In creating this three-way circuit split, the majority not only ignores our own precedent, see Zimmerman v. Or. Dep't of Justice, 170 F.3d 1169, 1184 (9th Cir. 1999) (we create a circuit split "only after the most painstaking inquiry"), but aggravates the already-existing inconsistency between the circuits.

---

But in upholding the district court's certification with regard to back pay, the majority fails to apply these factors from its own test. Had it done so, it would have concluded that the district court erred in certifying the class under Rule 23(b)(2). First, the plaintiffs' claim for back pay triggers the need for a key procedure (factor 1), namely the requirement for individualized hearings (factor 3). Second, the plaintiffs' claims for individual relief introduced significant new legal and factual issues into the case (factor 2), including Wal-Mart's defenses to liability, as well as due process concerns that necessitate opt-outs (factor 4). Third, the need for individualized hearings raises serious manageability concerns (factor 4).

The majority avoids these issues, however, and dismisses Wal-Mart's arguments as mere objections to the district court's "trial plan." Maj. Op. at 6231. The majority "express[es] no opinion regarding Wal-Mart's objections to the district court's tentative trial plan" and concludes that there are many steps the district court could take "that would allow this class action to proceed in a manner that is both manageable and in accordance with due process." Maj. Op. at 6232 (citing Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767, 782-87 (9th Cir. 1996)).[27]

---

[26] As formulated by the majority, this test is essentially unusable. When is back pay "superior in strength" to an injunction? When do punitive damages have more "influence" than declaratory relief? It is unlikely that this test, particularly as applied by the majority, provides the district court with the guidance it needs on remand.

The majority's failure to address these objections runs contrary to the Supreme Court's mandate, Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 861, and the majority's own rule, Maj. Op. at 6217 (stating that courts must consider "whether [the proposed class action] requires individualized hearings" when it determines whether a class may be certified under Rule 23(b)(2)).

Presumably because the application of its own test would lead to the conclusion that the district court erred, the majority does not apply its test (or remand back to the district court to apply it, as it did with the punitive damages class). Instead, the majority determines that the back-pay remedy does not predominate over the claims for injunctive and declaratory relief for two reasons: (1) the calculation of back pay in Title VII cases "generally involves [relatively un]complicated factual determinations and few[ ] individualized issues," and (2) back pay is a " 'make whole' remedial scheme, a scheme to which the drafters of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure clearly intended Rule 23(b)(2) to apply." Maj. Op. at 6220-21 (alterations in original) (citations omitted). As noted above, neither of these rationales is correct. In this case, back pay cannot be calculated until after Wal-Mart has had an opportunity to raise its defenses, which will involve the litigation of a multitude of individual issues. Moreover, while the drafters of Rule 23 intended that classes involving demands for injunctive relief be certified under Rule 23(b)(2), the majority provides no evidence that the Advisory Committee thought Rule 23(b)(2) was appropriate for classes seeking back pay.[28] [27] Quite apart from the question whether Wal-Mart is objecting to the certification of the class (as it claims) or to the trial plan (as the majority states), the procedure set forth in Hilao cannot be used in a Title VII case and the majority errs in suggesting it can. We held in Hilao that a court could determine compensatory damages for over 10,000 claimants in a human rights action by means of a formula without violating the due process rights of the defendants. See Hilao, 103 F.3d at 782-87; but see id. at 788 (Rymer, J. dissenting) ("If due process in the form of a real prove-up of causation and damages cannot be accomplished because the class is too big or to do so would take too long, then (as the Estate contends) the class is unmanageable and should not have been certified in the first place."); Cimino v. Raymark Indus., Inc., 151 F.3d 297, 319 (5th Cir. 1998) (refusing to apply Hilao and noting that "we find ourselves in agreement with the thrust of the dissenting opinion there"). But Hilao has no bearing on this effort to certify a Title VII class action, because Title VII itself, and the Supreme Court's interpretation of Title VII pattern-or-practice actions, see Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 360, give defendants their right to a defense to each individual's claim. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2).

---

---

[28] The majority claims it need not consider the problem posed by the class's pursuit of individual monetary relief because it is merely "join[ing] the consensus view that a request for back pay in a Title VII case is fully consistent with the certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class action," citing as support Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Insurance Co., 445 F.3d 311, 331-32 (4th Cir. 2006) and Coleman, 296 F.3d 443. Maj. Op. at 6221-22 & n.41. Again, the majority misses the point. The issue is not that plaintiffs seek back pay; the issue is Wal-Mart's statutory right to raise individual defenses in response to the request for back pay, and whether such individualized treatment makes class-wide relief improper. Thorn and Coleman reinforce this point. In Coleman, the Sixth Circuit held that the district court abused its discretion in certifying a class that included a claim for com-

As to claims for punitive damages, the majority remands the case to the district court to determine under its new test whether the case could be certified under Rule 23(b)(2). Maj. Op at 6226. Before doing so, however, it determines in a single sentence that punitive damages do not require individualized determinations because the plaintiffs allege that Wal-Mart's policy "affects all class members in a similar way." Maj. Op. at 6226. This unprecedented holding, made with virtually no analysis, is wrong both as a matter of law and fact. As noted above, it conflicts with the statutory language of Title VII, see 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B), and with the Supreme Court's reasoning regarding punitive damages, see BMW, 517 U.S. at 581. Moreover, it is factually wrong: even assuming there was significant proof of a company-wide policy of discrimination, plaintiffs do not allege that Wal-Mart's alleged policy affected all class members in the same way for purposes of determining monetary relief. Plaintiffs acknowledge pensatory damages, in large part because such relief would require individual determinations as to each class member, thus obviating the efficiencies of pursuing the action on a class-wide basis. 296 F.3d at 449. Likewise, in Thorn, the Fourth Circuit upheld the district court's denial of class certification, in part because the availability of a statute of limitations defense presented individual issues that could not be determined on a class-wide basis. 445 F.3d at 327. Thorn distinguished prior cases that certified classes requiring the calculation of back pay on the ground that such calculations "generally involve[d] . . . fewer individualized issues." Id. at 331 (alteration and internal quotation marks omitted). When considered as a whole (rather than taking a few phrases out of context), Thorn and Coleman support the conclusion that class-wide relief is inappropriate where claims may need be litigated on an individual basis.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

that Wal-Mart's allegedly discriminatory practices have affected class members differently, stating that "different class members may have been undercompensated in different amounts; some employees may have been denied promotion to assistant manager while others may have been denied promotion to store manager." The district court cannot reasonably determine whether an individual class member was injured, let alone the nature and amount of injury, until the second phase of individual hearings has been accomplished. Other circuits addressing the issue have agreed with this analysis. See, e.g., Reeb, 435 F.3d at 651; Lemon, 216 F.3d at 581; Allison, 151 F.3d at 417. By untethering punitive damage claims in a Title VII case from evidence regarding how the plaintiffs were actually injured, the majority opens the door to results that would be unfair to both claimants and defendants in future Title VII class actions.

IV

The class action device is a procedural mechanism to aggregate individual claims for purposes of judicial efficiency. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159. By allowing claims to go forward that ordinarily would not be litigated, the class action has proven to be an invaluable tool in litigating civil rights and other cases involving systemic discrimination. But, because Rule 23 creates a procedural device that constitutes "an exception to the usual rule that litigation is conducted by and on behalf of the individual named parties only," Califano, 442 U.S. at 700-01, courts must use it carefully, ensuring that the proposed class action complies with controlling law and does not jeopardize the parties' substantive rights. See Gulf Oil Co. v. Bernard, 452 U.S. 89, 100 (1981) (holding that, in considering a proposal to certify a class, the district court's discretion is "bounded by the relevant provisions of the Federal Rules"). The "[m]ere invocation of the language of Rule 23 in Title VII suits is no mystical legal talisman guaranteeing class treatment." Doniger v. Pac. Nw. Bell, Inc., 564 F.2d 1304, 1312 (9th Cir. 1977).

The district court here failed in its duty to apply Rule 23 carefully and correctly. In its enthusiasm for allowing the class action to proceed, the district court sped forward, dodging substantive and procedural hurdles, and making an end-run around Title VII, the Rules Enabling Act, and Supreme Court precedent. It conducted no rigorous analysis to determine "the existence of a class of persons who have suffered the same injury" as the class representatives. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157. It certified the class even after determining that compliance with the Supreme Court's framework in Teamsters was infeasible. Finally, the district court failed to consider the text, structure, and historical framework of Rule 23(b) that should have guided its analysis. The resultant class certification runs directly contrary to controlling precedent.

Despite these flaws, the majority affirms those legal errors with even less analysis and inquiry than the district court. Never before has such a low bar been set for certifying such a gargantuan class. The majority's ruling provides scant limits to the types of classes that can be certified. Put simply, the door is now open to Title VII lawsuits targeting national and international companies, regardless of size and diversity, based on nothing more than general and conclusory allegations, a handful of anecdotes, and statistical disparities that bear little relation to the alleged discriminatory decisions. The district court abused its discretion in certifying this class. The majority errs in concluding otherwise. While class actions have a vital role to play in the battle against discrimination, the majority's decision to allow this case to go forward epitomizes the Supreme Court's warning that "the rulemakers' prescriptions for class actions may be endangered by those who embrace Rule 23 too enthusiastically just as they are by those who approach the Rule with distaste." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 629 (internal citations, quotation marks, and alterations omitted). I respectfully dissent.

KOZINSKI, Chief Judge, dissenting:

Maybe there'd be no difference between 500 employees and 500,000 employees if they all had similar jobs, worked at the same half-billion square foot store and were supervised by the same managers. But the half-million members of the majority's approved class held a multitude of jobs, at different levels of Wal-Mart's hierarchy, for variable lengths of time, in 3,400 stores, sprinkled across 50 states, with a kaleidoscope of supervisors (male and female), subject to a variety of regional policies that all differed depending on each class member's job, location and period of employment. Some thrived while others did poorly. They have little in common but their sex and this lawsuit.

I therefore join fully Judge Ikuta's dissent.

APPENDIX B

FILED

JUN 21 2004

RICHARD W. WIEKING
CLERK, U.S. DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

Betty DUKES, Patricia Surgeson, Cleo Page, Deborah Gunter, Karen Williamson, Christine Kwapnoski, and Edith Arana, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs,

v.

WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.

No. C01-02252 MJJ.

United States District Court,
N.D. California

June 21, 2004

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

JENKINS, District Judge.

INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs have filed a Third Amended Complaint, brought on behalf of six named plaintiffs and all others similarly situated, asserting a claim against Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. ("Wal-Mart") for sex discrimination under Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. ("Title VII"). Generally stated, plaintiffs allege that women employed in Wal-Mart stores (1) are paid less than men in comparable positions, despite having higher performance ratings and greater seniority; and (2) receive fewer promotions to in-store management positions than do men, and those who are promoted must wait longer than their male counterparts to advance.

Plaintiffs assert that the policies and practices underlying this discriminatory treatment are consistent throughout Wal-Mart, and that the discrimination of which they complain is common to all women who work or have worked in Wal-Mart stores. Plaintiffs seek class-wide injunctive and declaratory relief, lost pay, and punitive damages. They do not seek any compensatory damages on behalf of the class.

Wal-Mart is the largest private employer in the world. See Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification ("Def.'s Opp'n") at 1. It operates approximately 3,400 stores in the United States and currently employs well over a million people. See Declaration of Christine Webber ("Webber Decl.") Ex. 70 at 3-5, 12. Wal-Mart is best known for its "Discount Stores," which offer a wide variety of discounted goods and services, and "Supercenters," which are similar to Discount Stores but also include full grocery departments. The company also operates "Sam's Clubs," which are membership-only stores that sell items in bulk or at deep discounts, and "Neighborhood Markets," which are smaller stores primarily selling food and drugs.[1]

---

[1] At the time this motion was briefed, Wal-Mart operated 1,568 Discount Stores nation wide, each of which employed at

Currently before the Court is Plaintiffs' motion to certify a nation-wide class of women who have been subjected to Wal-Mart's allegedly discriminatory pay and promotions policies.[2] Specifically, plaintiffs propose that the Court certify the following class pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a) and 23(b)(2):

> All women employed at any Wal-Mart domestic retail store at any time since December 26, 1998 who have been or may be subjected to Wal-Mart's challenged pay and management track promotions policies and practices.

Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification ("Pls.' Mot.") at 37.[3] In preparation for this motion, the least 150 individuals; 1,259 Supercenters (making Wal-Mart the nation's largest grocer), with 200 to 500 employees per store; 525 Sam's Clubs, with 120 to 225 employees per store; and 49 Neighborhood Markets, with 80 to 100 employees per store. Webber Decl., Ex. 70 at 3-5; Def.'s Opp'n at 13.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[2] Also before the Court are various motions to strike submitted by both parties. The Court rules on these motions separately in its Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Plaintiffs' and Defendant's Motions to Strike Expert and Non-expert Testimony ("Order re Motions to Strike"), filed concurrently with the present order.

[3] In their briefs, Plaintiffs note that they are not challenging decisions on promotions into, or compensation for, the position of Store Pharmacist, which is subject to special educational and state licensing requirements. Pls.' Mot. at 37 n.30. Accordingly, this position would be excepted from the class. Plaintiffs also propose to sever the racial discrimination claims alleged by two named plaintiffs and exclude these claims from the class case. Id. at 48 n.36.

parties undertook extensive discovery. They also filed extensive briefing along with volumes of documentary and testimonial evidence. On September 24, 2003, the Court heard oral argument over the course of seven hours.

Before proceeding further, the Court wishes to acknowledge Defendant's characterization of this motion as historic in nature. Defendant emphasizes that the proposed class covers at least 1.5 million women who have been employed over the past five years at roughly 3,400 stores, thus dwarfing other employment discrimination cases that have come before. In its view, these numbers alone make this case impossible. Certainly, the size of the putative class raises concerns regarding manageability which this Court must, and does, carefully consider. Title VII, however, contains no special exception for large employers. Enacted in 1964 during the height of the civil rights movement, this Act forbids gender and race-based discrimination in the American workplace. Two years later, federal class action rules were amended to facilitate the vindication of these rights on a broader basis. See In re Monumental Life Ins. Co., 365 F.3d 408, 417 n.16 (5th Cir. 2004) (Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) was added in 1966 primarily to facilitate the bringing of civil rights class actions). Insulating our nation's largest employers from allegations that they have engaged in a pattern and practice of gender or racial discrimination—simply because they are large—would seriously undermine these imperatives. Indeed, it is interesting to note, as a matter of historical perspective, that Plaintiffs' request for class certification is being ruled upon in a year that marks the 50th anniversary of the Supreme Court's decision in Brown v. Board of Education, 347 U.S. 483 (1954). This anniversary serves as a reminder of the importance of the courts in addressing the denial of equal treatment under the law wherever and by whomever it occurs. Id. at 495.

Notions of historical import aside, the Court also takes this opportunity to acknowledge two important factors. First, the Court, by this motion, is not called upon to make any determination on the merits of Plaintiffs' allegations of gender discrimination; rather, only procedural questions are presented. See Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177 (1974). Thus, resolution of this motion for class certification should not be construed in any manner as a ruling on the merits or the probable outcome of the case. Second, in spite of Defendant's concerns regarding the historic nature of this motion, the Court does not encounter the issues raised herein on a barren legal landscape. Rather, this Court is satisfied that ample legal precedent is available to guide the Court in determining the propriety of Plaintiffs' request for class certification. Indeed, while the size of the proposed class is unique, the issues are not novel, and Plaintiffs' claims are relatively narrow in scope.[4]

---

[4] Although Defendant characterizes this case as a "wall-to-wall" and "across-the-board" class action, Def.'s Opp'n at 1, it overstates the breadth of the case. While, as noted, the proposed class size is extremely large, the types of claims asserted are relatively limited in the context of other judicially sanctioned class actions. As described above, Plaintiffs challenge Defendant's alleged discriminatory actions solely pursuant to Title VII, without attempting to combine multiple legal claims through other statutes or constitutional provisions, as is common in other cases. The class is also limited to women; plaintiffs do not attempt to combine gender with race, age, disability, or other classifications. Further, Plaintiffs allege class-wide discrimination only in terms of pay and promotion—not hiring, hostile work environment, failure to train, retaliation, or other

Having fully analyzed the pleadings, evidence, and oral argument presented by the parties, and the entire record herein, the Court grants in part and denies in part Plaintiffs' motion for class certification. Specifically, and as explained in greater detail below, the Court rules as follows:

1) With respect to Plaintiffs' claim for equal pay, Plaintiffs' motion is granted and the proposed class is certified with respect to issues of liability and all forms of requested relief;

2) With respect to Plaintiffs' promotion claim, Plaintiffs' motion is granted in part and denied in part. Specifically, the Court certifies the proposed class with respect to issues of liability (including liability for punitive damages) and injunctive and declaratory relief. The Court finds, however, that with respect to the remedy of lost pay, it is manageable only with respect to those challenged promotions where objective data is available to document class member interest in the challenged promotion. Thus, the Court denies certification, on grounds of unmanageability, with respect to Plaintiffs' promotion claims for lost pay (and thus punitive damages) as to those class members for whom no such data is available.

[Footnote continued from previous page]

adverse employment actions. The class also is limited to certain categories of in-store employees, and does not seek to include other categories of workers; importantly, the proposed class does not reach into the upper levels of management. Nor does it seek compensatory damages. Thus, while this is a "wall-to-wall" case geographically speaking, in all other respects it is substantially more limited than Defendant suggests.

LEGAL STANDARD

A party seeking to certify a class must demonstrate that it has met all four requirements of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(a), and at least one of the requirements of Rule 23(b). Zinser v. Accufix Research Inst., Inc., 253 F.3d 1180, 1186 (9th Cir. 2001). Rule 23(a) requires that all of the following four factors be met: "(1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable, (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class, (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class, and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." In short, the class must satisfy the requirements of numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a).

Rule 23(b) requires, in relevant part, that one of three additional requirements be met. Here, plaintiffs assert that this case falls within Rule 23(b)(2), which provides that the "party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). Rule 23(c) allows a court to maintain a class action as to particular issues only or to divide a class into subclasses. Fed. R. Civ. P. 24(c)(4).

The party seeking certification must provide facts sufficient to satisfy Rule 23(a) and (b) requirements. Doninger v. Pacific Northwest Bell, Inc., 564 F.2d 1304, 1308-09 (9th Cir. 1977). In turn, the district court must conduct a rigorous analysis to determine that the prerequisites of Rule 23 have been met. Gen. Tel. Co. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161

(1982). If a court is not fully satisfied, certification should be refused. Id. Conditional certification is no longer proper. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, Advisory Committee Notes, 2003 Amendments.

While the court's analysis must be rigorous, Rule 23 confers "broad discretion to determine whether a class should be certified, and to revisit that certification throughout the legal proceedings before the court." Armstrong v. Davis, 275 F.3d 849, 872, n.28 (9th Cir.2001); see also Knight v. Kenai Peninsula Borough Sch. Dist., 131 F.3d 807, 816 (9th Cir.1997). "'Implicit in this deferential standard is recognition of the essentially factual basis of the certification inquiry and of the district court's inherent power to manage and control pending litigation.'" In re Monumental Life Ins. Co., 365 F.3d at 414 (citation omitted); see also Hartman v. Duffey, 19 F.3d 1459, 1471 (D.C. Cir. 1994) ("In light of the fact that trial courts have the primary responsibility of ensuring the 'orderly management of litigation' and that the purpose of class actions lies in 'advanc[ing] the efficiency and economy of multi-party litigation,' trial courts 'are uniquely well situated to make class certification decisions.'") (citations omitted).

In Falcon, the Court reiterated the well-recognized precept that "'the class determination generally involves considerations that are enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action.'" Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160 (quoting Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 469 (1978)). Nevertheless, "[w]e find nothing in either the language or history of Rule 23 that gives a court any authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action." Eisen, 417 U.S. at 177. Thus, "[a]lthough some inquiry into the substance of a case may be necessary to ascertain satisfaction of the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a), it is improper to advance a decision on the merits to the class certification stage." Moore v. Hughes Helicopters, Inc., 708 F.2d 475, 480 (9th Cir. 1983) (citation omitted); see also Nelson v. United States Steel Corp., 709 F.2d 675, 679-80 (11th Cir. 1983) (plaintiffs' burden at class certification "entails more than the simple assertion of [commonality and typicality] but less than a prima facie showing of liability") (citation omitted); Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., 191 F.3d 283, 292 (2d Cir. 1999); Fed. R. Civ. P. 23, Advisory Committee Notes, 2003 Amendments (court review of the merits should be limited to those aspects relevant to making the certification decision on an informed basis).[5] With these principles in mind, the Court turns to the requirements of Rule 23(a).

ANALYSIS

I. Rule 23(a) Factors

A. Numerosity

Under the first Rule 23(a) factor, the class must be "so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(1); Staton v. Boeing Co., 327 F.3d 938, 953 (9th Cir. 2003). Plaintiffs need not state the exact number of potential class members; nor is a specific minimum number of class members required. Arnold v. United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc., 158 F.R.D. 439, 448 (N.D. Cal. 1994). Rather, whether joinder is impracticable depends on the facts and circumstances of each case. Id. Wal-Mart does not contest that numerosity is satisfied here, given that both parties estimate that the proposed class numbers over one million women. Indeed, it is beyond dispute that joinder would be impracticable in this case. Accordingly, the Court finds that this factor is satisfied.

---

[5] The restriction on conducting a merits inquiry applies equally to the Court's review of the expert testimony presented by the parties. Rather than resolving the "battle of the experts," and without conclusively ruling on admissibility, the Court's role at the class certification stage is to determine whether the expert evidence adds probative value to plaintiffs' claims. See Thomas & Thomas Rodmakers, Inc. v. Newport Adhesives and Composites, Inc., 209 F.R.D. 159, 162-63 (C.D. Cal. 2002).

B. Commonality

Rule 23(a)(2) requires that common questions of law or fact exist among class members. As the Supreme Court has explained, this requirement overlaps with the typicality requirement:

> [T]he commonality and typicality requirements . . . tend to merge. Both serve as guideposts for determining whether under the particular circumstances maintenance of a class action is economical and whether the named plaintiff's claim and the class claims are so interrelated that the interests of the class members will be fairly and adequately protected in their absence.

Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157 n.13. Nonetheless, each factor serves a discrete purpose—commonality focuses on the relationship of common facts and legal issues among class members, while typicality examines the relationship of facts and issues between the representatives and the class. See Conte & Newberg on Class Actions, Vol. I, at 411 (4th ed.) (hereafter "Newberg"). In other words, commonality refers to the group characteristics of the class as a whole, and typicality refers to the individual characteristics of the named plaintiffs in relation to the class. As such, the Court will address each factor separately.

Rule 23(a)(2) does not require that all questions of law or fact be common. The test is qualitative rather than quantitative—one significant issue common to the class may be sufficient to warrant certification. Savino v. Computer Credit, Inc., 173 F.R.D. 346, 352 (E.D.N.Y.1997), aff'd, 164 F.3d 81 (2d Cir. 1998); Newberg, Vol. I, at 272-74. Indeed, the necessary showing to satisfy commonality is "minimal." Hanlon v. Chrysler Corp., 150 F.3d 1011, 1020 (9th Cir. 1998). Specifically, plaintiffs may demonstrate commonality by showing that class members have shared legal issues but divergent facts or that they share a common core of facts but base their claims for relief on different legal theories. Id. at 1019.

Plaintiffs present extensive evidence to support their contention that there are significant factual and legal questions common to all class members with respect to whether Wal-Mart has engaged in company-wide discrimination against female in-store employees in pay and promotions. This evidence can be grouped into three major categories: (1) facts and expert opinion supporting the existence of company-wide policies and practices; (2) expert statistical evidence of class-wide gender disparities attributable to discrimination; and (3) anecdotal evidence from class members around the country of discriminatory attitudes held or tolerated by management. The Court concludes that this evidence more than satisfies plaintiffs' burden to demonstrate commonality under Rule 23(a)(2). Each category is discussed in detail below.

1. Company-Wide Policies and Practices

This first category can be further divided into two discrete areas. First, Plaintiffs present evidence that Wal-Mart's policies governing compensation and promotions are similar across all stores, and build in a common feature of excessive subjectivity which provides a conduit for gender bias that affects all class members in a similar fashion. Second, Plaintiffs submit evidence that Wal-Mart cultivates and maintains a strong corporate culture which includes gender stereotyping. While the parties vigorously dispute certain aspects of this evidence, and certainly draw different inferences therefrom, it is sufficient at this juncture to support Plaintiffs' claim that there are common issues as to whether Wal-Mart engages in discriminatory policies and practices that affect putative class members in a similar manner.

a. Policies and Practices Governing Compensation and Promotion

Defendant argues that it utilizes a myriad of distinct systems for compensating and promoting in-store employees depending on the position and type of store (or store department), and that these differences preclude any finding of commonality. It further argues that decisions regarding pay and promotions are too decentralized to create any questions common to the class. As discussed below, however, while some variations exist, there is a basic organizational structure that is consistent across store types and throughout the company's domestic stores in important respects. Furthermore, the policies governing in-store compensation and promotions uniformly provide for managers to exercise significant subjectivity in making pay and promotion decisions. Indeed, although the parties disagree about many of the fine points, they essentially agree that Wal-Mart managers make pay and promotion decisions for in-store employees in a largely subjective manner.

(1) Overview of Wal-Mart Store Structure

As noted above, Wal-Mart operates four different types of stores: Discount Stores, Supercenters, Neighborhood Markets, and Sam's Clubs. Wal-Mart considers the first three to be part of a single operation, while Sam's Club operates as a separate division. All stores (except Sam's Clubs) are divided into six divisions, for a total of seven divisions including Sam's Clubs. Each division in turn is divided into regions for a total of 41 regions nationwide. Each region contains roughly 80-85 stores. K. Harper Depo. at 177, 215 (Webber Decl. Ex. 1); Butler Depo. at 39 (Webber Decl. Ex. 4).

Merchandise sold in the stores is generally segregated in up to 40-53 separate departments (e.g.— apparel, jewelry, hardware).[6] Certain departments are designated "specialty departments" and are considered to operate as semi-autonomous units within the stores. The eight specialty departments are One-Hour Photo, Optical, Pharmacy, Shoes, Jewelry, Tire & Lube Express, Hearing, and Wireless Services. Grocery sections in the Supercenters also are considered to be semi-autonomous units within the stores. K. Harper Depo. at 90, 155-56 (Webber Decl. Ex. 1).

While the size and inventory of Wal-Mart stores vary, the evidence indicates that the personnel structure within each store operates in a basically similar fashion using similar job categories, job descriptions, and management hierarchies.[7] At the top of the in-store management structure are the salaried positions beginning with the Store Manager. See K. Harper Depo. at 152 (Webber Decl. Ex. 1). In certain larger stores, there are Co-Managers who report to the Store Manager and often oversee the grocery departments. See id. at 35-36, 155-56; Haworth Decl. ¶ 50. Next in line are the Assistant Managers, with several per store, depending on store size. Specialty Department Managers report directly to District Managers as well as the Store Manager.

---

[6] Because of their relatively small size, Neighborhood Markets do not have departments but instead are "organized into areas." Haworth Decl. ¶ 57.

In order to transition into a salaried management position, employees must generally go through a four-to-five month training program as a "Management Trainee." See Def.'s Opp'n at 40. The Management Trainees are considered as being in a limbo phase between the hourly and salaried ranks, although they are paid on an hourly basis.

With respect to the hourly positions, the highest is that of Support Manager, which is considered a feeder into the Management Trainee position. Below Support Manager are the Department Managers and Customer Service Managers, who serve as lower-level hourly supervisors. At the bottom rung are the entry level Cashiers, Sales Associates, Stockers, and others.

---

[7] Some divisions may use slightly different nomenclature. For example, Sam's Club follows essentially the same hierarchy as the other Wal-Mart divisions, but uses different titles for some positions. Thus, the head of a Discount Store or Supercenter is called a Store Manager, while the head of a Sam's Club is called a General Manager, yet both positions have virtually identical duties. See Burner Depo. at 144:16-24 (Webber Decl. Ex. 5).

In general, roughly 65 percent of hourly employees are women, while roughly 33 percent of management employees are women. Drogin Decl. ¶ 19. The approximate percentages of women in specific hourly and salaried management positions are as follows:

Salaried Positions

Store Manager—14%

Co-Manager (only in larger stores)—23%

Assistant Manager—36%

Hourly Positions

Management Trainee—42%

Support Manager—50%

Department Manager—78%

Customer Service Manager—85-90%

Other hourly positions—70%[8]

See Drogin Decl. ¶ 23, Table 7.

(2) Policies Governing Compensation

(a) Hourly Employees

All hourly employees at every Wal-Mart store are compensated pursuant to the same general pay structure. Each store has a minimum starting wage for each class of hourly jobs that is set by the Wal-Mart Home Office in Arkansas (hereafter "Home Office"). Beyond that, Store Managers are granted substantial discretion in making salary decisions for hourly employees in their respective stores. Specifically, they are allowed to depart from the minimum start rates, within a two dollar per hour range, without being constrained by objective criteria and with limited oversight. See Def.'s Opp'n at 5-6 & n.4. Indeed, "[i]n setting pay, a Store Manager makes the call based on his or her needs." Id. at 15; Haworth Decl. ¶ 4 ("This is a company that relies on its Store Managers to set the specific wage rates of each store's employees."). Given that hourly workers typically earn approximately $18,000 per year (based on 2001 wages), see Drogin Decl. ¶ 19, the two dollar per hour discretionary range is significant. Store Managers also are allowed to increase pay for exceptional performance, again with limited guidance or oversight.

---

[8] This category comprises the four largest hourly jobs as follows: (1) Department Head (78%), (2) Sales Associate (68%), (3) Hardlines/Home Area Overnight Associates (57%), and (4) Cashier (93%). Drogin Decl. ¶ 26, Tables 10-11.

As a partial constraint on this local control Wal-Mart utilizes a system of oversight known as "management by exception." Under this system, District Managers and Specialty Group Regional Managers receive "exception reports" if Store Managers set an employee's pay rate at more than six percent above the minimum rate set by the Home Office, and must approve such rates. Defendant's national pay structure also specifies a 25 cent-per-hour gap between start rates in consecutive pay classes. See Drogin Reply Decl. ¶ 23; Webber Decl., Exhs. 93-94. This limited oversight, however, still leaves individual Store Managers with substantial discretion in setting pay rates for in-store employees. As one Store Manager explained, "There's [a presumptive limit of two dollars above the base], but I can do what I want. I mean, if I start throwing money around, I mean, eventually the phone is going to ring. But the store manager has the flexibility to do what he needs to do to run the building." Shatz Depo. at 66 (Weber Decl. Ex. 46).

(b) Salaried Employees

All types of Wal-Mart stores also compensate their salaried in-store management employees pursuant to common policies and practices. These decisions are made primarily by District Managers (the first level in the management hierarchy above Store Managers) and their superiors, the Regional Managers.

(1) Assistant Managers: For these lowest level salaried managers, Wal-Mart's Exempt Associate Pay Guidelines establish a broad salary range within which District Managers have discretion to set pay rates with little guidance and limited oversight. Assistant Managers receive a base salary and are eligible to receive annual performance and merit increases and a bonus. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 221; Def.'s Opp'n at 35 n.21. Those working in areas with a high cost of living receive Geographical Assistance Pay (GAP). See Arnold Decl. ¶ 19. The base salary range for Assistant Managers starts at $29,500 and goes to between $42,000 to $47,000 depending on store size. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 222.[9]

(2) Co-Managers: Similarly, Co-Manager pay rates are set by District Managers who exercise complete discretion, with little guidance and limited oversight, to set salaries within a base salary range from $42,000 to $47,000 (with GAP adjustments).

---

[9] Assistant Managers at Sam's Clubs have a similar pay structure, except that they are eligible for incentive plans based on store profitability. See Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 231-33.

Co-Managers are also eligible to participate in an incentive plan based on store profitability. They do not receive merit or performance increases. Id. at ¶ 225.[10]

(3) Specialty Departments: Specialty Department Managers also have similar, albeit not identical, pay structures. Defendant's expert, Dr. Joan Haworth, states that each Specialty Department has a "different compensation plan," but she only identifies four of the eight departments (Tire & Lube Express [TLE], Photo, Optical, and Pharmacy). Among those, all have base salaries in broad ranges (spanning from $24,000 to over $40,000 at the top, with GAP adjustments), all are eligible for incentive plans, and all are eligible for merit and performance increases. Id. at ¶¶ 241-45. Again, these managers' pay rates are set by higher level managers with complete discretion within the relevant range, with limited guidance or oversight.

(4) Store Managers: Store Managers are paid a base salary determined by store size, ranging from $44,000 to $50,000, with GAP adjustments. They also are eligible to receive incentives based on store size and profitability. Id. at ¶ 227. Again, their base salaries are determined by upper level managers with broad discretion within the established range.

As the above reflects, there is a basic compensation structure that applies similarly to all in-store salaried management positions across all types of Wal-Mart stores, in that the computation begins with a base salary within a range set by the corporation (with an allowance for GAP), with adjustments allowed for profit incentives and/or merit increases. While certain differences exist—e.g., some positions allow for profit incentives while others build in merit incentives or both—they do not fundamentally alter the common nature of the positions. Most importantly, all of the in-store salaried positions—like all of the hourly positions—share the common feature that there is a broad range of discretion built into the compensation structure for each position. As discussed further infra, this feature also provides a potential conduit for gender discrimination that is common to all class members. At this point, however, it suffices to say that Defendant's policies governing compensation of hourly and salaried employees do not preclude a finding of commonality; on the contrary, the evidence indicates that there is significant uniformity across stores, and that Defendant's policies all contain a common feature of subjectivity that is relevant to Plaintiffs' claims of class-wide gender discrimination thus supporting the existence of questions common to the class.

---

[10] Co-Managers at Sam's Clubs have a similar pay structure. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 236.

(3) Policies Governing Promotions

As with salary decisions, the parties agree that subjectivity is a primary feature of promotion decisions for in-store employees. In the words of Wal-Mart President and CEO Thomas Coughlin, "We push down to the manager of the facility level, [sic.] the responsibility to run those stores right." Haworth Decl. ¶ 7. The subjectivity in promotion decisions occurs in two fundamental ways: (a) a largely subjective selection practice hindered by only minimal objective criteria, combined with (b) a failure to post a large proportion of promotional opportunities.

(a) Subjectivity in the Selection Practice

The first promotion category challenged by Plaintiffs—the Support Manager position—is the primary feeder for the Management Training Program. It is undisputed that Wal-Mart allows Store Managers to apply their own subjective criteria when selecting candidates for the Support Manager position. Decisions regarding advancement into the Management Training Program are made by District and Regional Managers. Wal-Mart has minimum corporate guidelines for promotion into these positions, which include requirements that candidates have an "above average" evaluation, have at least one year in their current position, be current on training, not be in a "high shrink" department or store, be on the company's "Rising Star" list, and be willing to relocate. However, since the guidelines set forth only the minimum requirements for advancement, the decisions as to who will actually be selected for the Management Training Program are based largely on subjective criteria, resulting in what is fairly characterized as a "tap on the shoulder" process. See Butler Depo. at 135:4-11 (Webber Decl. Ex. 4) ("Each District Manager kind of has their own way of identifying talent within their district for development."); Kintzele Depo. at 86:20-23 (Webber Decl. Exh. 13) (explaining that Store Managers nominate candidates for promotion); M. Miller Depo. at 65:2-13 (Webber Decl. Ex. 54); June 27, 2002 E-mail from Jarrells-Porter (Webber Decl. Ex. 100) (statement of Senior Vice President that Wal-Mart "[does] not have a poster, brochure, nothing that I am aware of" to inform hourly workers "how to get promoted into the management training program"); Bielby Decl. ¶ 22 (citing testimony of Wal-Mart managers that promotions to in-store management positions are made based on largely discretionary criteria). Decisions regarding advancement to the highest in-store positions—Assistant Manager, Co-Manager, and Store Manager—are similarly based on subjective assessments beyond adherence to corporate minimum guidelines. See, e.g., Kintzele Depo. 130:10, 133:9-135:16, 165:22-167:1 (Webber Decl. Ex. 13); Bielby Decl. ¶ 37. The subjective nature of Defendant's promotion practices is further compounded by the fact that the company does not monitor the promotion decisions being made or otherwise systematically review the grounds on which candidates are selected for promotion. Bielby Decl. ¶¶ 37-38 & n.53 (citing testimony of numerous Wal-Mart executives and managers).

(b) Failure to Post Promotional Opportunities

It is undisputed that, until January 2003, Wal-Mart did not post job vacancies for its Assistant Management Training Program, and it posted only a small number of vacancies for the Co-Manager position. See Def.'s Opp'n at 40 ("Wal-Mart does not have applicant flow data for the Trainee position before 2003"); Drogin Decl. ¶ 46 & Table 20.[11] Also, despite a stated policy to post hourly Support Manager positions, roughly 80 percent of these openings were not in fact posted. Drogin Decl. ¶ 44 & Table 19. Because most positions were not posted, class members had no ability to apply for, or otherwise formally express their interest in, openings as they arose. As a result, Managers did not have to consider all interested and qualified candidates, thus further intensifying the subjective nature of the promotion process.[12]

---

[11] From December 1998 through October 2002, Wal-Mart posted only 238 Co-Manager openings. Id. at 120 (chart identifying number of offers for "Co-Mgr-Supercenter" and "Co-Mgr Div. 1").

Wal-Mart did post openings for Store Manager positions during the relevant class period. This was not, however, an "open" application process; rather, candidates were required to obtain permission from their District Manager before being allowed to apply. In selecting who could apply, such managers have been free to rely upon subjective criteria beyond the minimum corporate guidelines. Thus the posting of Store Manager positions did not fully ameliorate the subjective nature of the promotion process for these positions.

(4) Whether Defendant's Compensation and Promotion Policies Support a Finding of Commonality

Having reviewed the extensive evidence submitted by the parties, this Court is satisfied that Wal-Mart's systems for compensating and promoting in-store employees are sufficiently similar across regions and stores to support a finding that the manner in which these systems affect the class raises issues that are common to all class members. Moreover, the fact that Wal-Mart's compensation and promotion policies consistently permit managers to utilize a great deal of subjectivity further supports a finding of commonality.

---

[12] Defendant argues that its wide-scale lack of posting is ameliorated by an aspect of its annual review process whereby employees "list what job they wished to be considered for in the ensuing year." Transcript of September 24, 2003 Oral Argument ("Oral Arg. Tr.") at 199:22-200:5. However, there is no evidence in the record that this was a systematic process, that the company tracked these expressions of interest, or that the process substituted for a true posting system in any manner.

While some level of subjectivity is inherent in, and in fact a useful part of, personnel decisions, courts have long recognized that the deliberate and routine use of excessive subjectivity is an "employment practice" that is susceptible to being infected by discriminatory animus. See Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 990-91 (1988) (subjective decision-making is a "practice" subject to challenge under Title VII); Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15; Sengupta v. Morrison-Knudsen Co., 804 F.2d 1072, 1075 (9th Cir. 1986) (citation omitted); Casillas v. United States Navy, 735 F.2d 338, 345 (9th Cir. 1984) (citation omitted). In the same vein, a general practice of not posting promotional opportunities also supports a finding of commonality. See Hemmings v. Tidyman's Inc., 285 F.3d 1174, 1187 n.17 (9th Cir. 2002) ("Failure to post vacancies and the use of subjective promotions practices . . . may be evidence of discrimination").

And while the presence of excessive subjectivity, alone, does not necessarily create a common question of fact, where, as here, such subjectivity is part of a consistent corporate policy and supported by other evidence giving rise to an inference of discrimination, courts have not hesitated to find that commonality is satisfied. See e.g., Shipes v. Trinity Industries, 987 F.2d 311, 316 (5th Cir. 1993) ("Allegations of similar discriminatory employment practices, such as the use of entirely subjective personnel processes that operate to discriminate, satisfy the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a).") (citation omitted); Caridad, 191 F.3d at 292; Beckmann v. CBS, 192 F.R.D. 608, 613 (D. Minn.2000); Shores v.

Publix Super Markets Inc., 1996 WL 407850, at *6 (M.D. Fla. Mar.12, 1996) (defendant's "policy of delegating hiring and promotion decisions to managers, who make those decisions on the basis of subjective criteria, is a common course of conduct . . . adequate to meet the commonality requirement of Rule 23").[13]

The situation here is similar to Morgan v. United Parcel Service, Inc., 169 F.R.D. 349 (E.D. Mo.1996), in which the parties agreed that United Parcel Service had a subjective, decentralized decision-making process for promotions. The defendant claimed that this process should defeat commonality because individualized decisions are made at the local level, whereas plaintiffs argued that the policy of giving local managers unfettered authority was part of a nation-wide corporate policy to which all employees were subjected and which resulted in racial discrimination. Id. at 356. The court agreed with plaintiffs that the subjective decision-making practice was sufficient to satisfy the commonality requirement. Id.

Wal-Mart similarly argues that the fact that pay and promotion decisions are made locally by individual Store Managers necessarily defeats a finding of commonality. To support this argument, it attempts to align itself with those cases in which courts have denied certification based on geographically diverse corporations with localized decision-making. In the principal case relied on by Defendant, Reid v. Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Co., 205 F.R.D. 655 (N.D. Ga. 2001), the court held that because the challenged employment practices were highly localized among many facilities, plaintiffs could not establish commonality. While Reid recognized that subjective decision-making may give rise to an inference of discrimination, it determined on the facts of the case that there was no evidence to provide a nexus between the subjective decision-making and discrimination. Id. at 670-72. Here, in contrast, plaintiffs have presented evidence of such a nexus by presenting evidence of gender stereotyping and a corporate culture of uniformity (discussed in greater detail below). Furthermore, Reid emphasized that all of the named plaintiffs in that case worked at the same facility, thereby leaving the court without any basis upon which to conclude that similar practices existed among diverse facilities. Id. Here, in contrast, the named plaintiffs work in different stores and Plaintiffs have submitted over a hundred declarations by designated class members showing common subjective practices across the country. The Court therefore finds Reid distinguishable.[14] [13] See also Butler v. Home Depot, Inc. (Butler I), 1996 WL 421436 (N.D. Cal. Jan.25, 1996); Adams v. Pinole Point Steel Co., 65 Fair Empl. Prac.Cas. (BNA) 782, 1994 WL 515347, at *9 (N.D. Cal. May 18, 1994) ("[Plaintiffs] allege that [defendant's discriminatory] practices stem from a subjective hiring criteria and a high level of discretion afforded supervisory employees. A general policy of discrimination that affects individual class members provides a 'common nucleus of operative fact,' and thus sufficient commonality to support class certification."); Stender v. Lucky Stores, Inc., 803 F. Supp. 259, 335 (N.D. Cal.1992); Wofford v. Safeway Stores, Inc., 78 F.R.D. 460, 479 (N.D. Cal. 1978).

---

---

[14] Similarly, in the other case principally relied on by defendant, Rhodes v. Cracker Barrel Old Country Store, Inc., 2002 WL 32058462, at *56-58 (N.D. Ga. Dec.31, 2002), magistrate judge op. approved and adopted, 213 F.R.D. 619 (N.D. Ga. 2003), the court denied class certification where plaintiffs failed to show any kind of nexus between subjective decision-making

The Court also rejects Wal-Mart's suggestion that its practice of giving managers substantial discretion in making pay and promotion decisions should defeat commonality because it would embroil the court or jury in an endless series of individual fact scenarios regarding each pay or promotion decision. As discussed in section II.B.1, Plaintiffs' task at the liability stage of the trial is to prove a pattern and practice of discrimination. To do so, they will need to show sufficient evidence of excessive subjectivity to convince a jury that it is a wide-scale practice, which along with other evidence, is sufficient to create an inference of, and ultimately prove, discrimination. Because the focal point will be the practice of utilizing excessive subjectivity, rather than the facts concerning each individual decision, the Court is satisfied that the subjective nature of Defendant's personnel practices does not defeat commonality in this case.

b. Corporate Culture

Plaintiffs also present evidence that Wal-Mart has developed and continually reinforces a strong, centralized corporate culture. This evidence, taken together with evidence concerning Wal-Mart's com-and discrimination. Defendant also attempts to analogize Wal-Mart's promotion system to that of Microsoft, as addressed in Donaldson v. Microsoft, 205 F.R.D. 558 (W.D. Wash. 2001). There the court denied class certification in part based on a lack of commonality. Id. at 566. Wal-Mart's practices, however, are significantly more subjective than those described in Donaldson. Microsoft used a well-crafted combination of both objective and subjective measures, with features not present in Wal-Mart, such as bi-annual evaluations, advance mapping of goals and objectives, and an appeal process. Id. at 566.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

pany-wide subjective compensation and promotion practices discussed above, provides a further indicator of commonality. Specifically, Plaintiffs present evidence that Wal-Mart corporate culture includes two principal common aspects relevant to this case: (1) a strong emphasis on building and maintaining a uniform culture, and (2) an environment that may include gender stereotyping.

(1) Wal-Mart's Emphasis on Uniform Culture

There is no genuine dispute that Wal-Mart has carefully constructed and actively fosters a strong and distinctive, centrally controlled, corporate culture.[15] See, e.g., R. Harper Depo. at 121 (Webber Decl. Ex. 36) (describing Wal-Mart culture as a "very tight, deep culture" and "a very closed culture from a total corporation standpoint"). This culture, labeled by Defendant as the "Wal-Mart Way," promotes and sustains uniformity of operational and personnel practices. This is important in the Rule 23 commonality analysis because, as Plaintiffs' expert, Dr. William Bielby, states, "[a] strong and widely shared organizational culture promotes uniformity of practices throughout an organization." Bielby Decl. ¶ 18.

Every new employee nation-wide goes through the same orientation process and, as part of that process, is trained about the Wal-Mart culture. Thereafter, employees at Wal-Mart stores attend a daily meeting held at shift changes, where managers discuss the company culture and employees do the [15] Sam's Club shares the same culture as the Wal-Mart stores. See Swanson Depo. 140:16-19 (Webber Decl. Ex. 14); Reeves I Depo. 103:1-25 (Webber Decl. Ex. 2).

---

Wal-Mart cheer. See Muzingo Depo. at 85-86 (Webber Decl. Ex. 32). Employees also receive weekly training on culture topics at mandatory store meetings.[16] Wal-Mart Store Managers are provided with a detailed schedule of corporate culture lessons and accompanying training materials to present at these weekly meetings. The same Computer-Based Learning Modules are used in all stores, including required training on culture topics. Culture is also an integral part of all management training programs. Home Office managers also attend a meeting each Saturday morning which is dedicated once a month to presenting one of the company's culture lessons. See Muzingo Depo. 135-36 (Webber Decl. Ex. 32). In short, the inculcation of Wal-Mart culture is an ongoing process for all employees regardless of seniority; as one manager puts it, the company has a "continual process of learning culture." See Swanson Depo. at 141 (Webber Decl. Ex. 14).

Additionally, Wal-Mart has a strong policy of "promoting from within," so that the culture lessons learned by junior-level employees contribute to building a foundation of common understanding and practice among the management team. See Peterson Depo. at 72:2-6 (Webber Decl. Ex. 16). The company also regularly moves store level managers from one retail facility to another, often from one state to another, and between Wal-Mart and Sam's Club divisions. On the average, each Store Manager is transferred to a different store 3.6 times after achieving that title. A majority of these transfers are into different districts and are often into different regions. See Drogin Decl. ¶ 35; Drogin Reply Decl. ¶ 24. This degree of mobility could only be efficient in a company with a high degree of store-to-store uniformity. These practices also help ensure that a uniform Wal-Mart Way culture operates consistently throughout all stores.

---

[16] The Culture Topic Index provided to store management employees states: "It is important for our Associates to understand how important culture is to their company. We have provided you with a culture topic for mandatory weekly discussions with all store Associates on each shift during store meetings." See Bielby Decl. ¶ 20, n.30 (and citation therein to document WMHO598668).

Wal-Mart also has a very advanced information technology system which allows managers in the Home Office to monitor the operations in each of its retail stores on a close and constant basis. For example, the Home Office is connected through a real-time computer link (called "Managers' Workbench") to every Store Manager throughout the country. The company uses the same Computer-Based Learning Modules in all stores, it broadcasts "Wal-Mart TV" into all stores, and employs a number of other uniform communications tools. Centralization at Wal-Mart extends to the point where the Home Office controls the temperature and music in each store throughout the country.

Finally, plaintiffs present evidence from Dr. Bielby, a sociologist, to buttress their claim that Wal-Mart has a strong corporate culture. After undertaking an extensive review of the depositions of Defendant's managers, Wal-Mart policies, and the professional research and literature in the field, Dr. Bielby gives the following opinion:

> In sum, consistent with the organizational research on this topic, Wal-Mart's distinctive corporate culture is sustained by focused ef> forts of the firm through on-going training and socialization, communication specifically designed to reinforce its distinctive elements, promotion from within and relocating managers from store to store, and shared experiences among employees that build commitment to shared beliefs and values. As a result of these efforts, employees achieve a common understanding of the company's ways of conducting business.

Bielby Decl. ¶ 21.[17]

Wal-Mart counters the suggestion that its strong corporate culture creates any commonality among class members in disparate locations by arguing that each of its stores is a virtual "main street" of stores within a store, all run by independent managers. See Def.'s Opp'n at 13. It also contends that each division of stores has its own unique hierarchical structure of reporting and supervision. Id. at 14. While it is true that the terminology and some details vary from division to division, and within store departments, there does not appear to be a significant difference in actual function. Rather, as discussed supra, Plaintiffs have presented evidence that the basic operational structure and staffing patterns of stores are quite uniform, and each individual store is subject to oversight from the company's Home Office, where all regional and higher level managers are based.

---

[17] Additionally, Dr. Bendick, Plaintiffs' labor economics expert, concludes that Wal-Mart has a high management centralization ratio, in that 15.4 percent of its managers are located at the company headquarters, compared with an average of 8.1 percent for its twenty closest comparators. From this data, Dr. Bendick concludes that Wal-Mart has a strong corporate culture that is both perpetuated by and reflected in employment policies and practices that are common companywide. Bendick Decl. ¶¶ 64-65.

The Court recognizes that there is a tension inherent in characterizing a system as having both excessive subjectivity at the local level and centralized control. To clarify, the evidence indicates that in-store pay and promotion decisions are largely subjective and made within a substantial range of discretion by store or district level managers, and that this is a common feature which provides a wide enough conduit for gender bias to potentially seep into the system. These subjective decisions are not, however, made totally in isolation. Rather, the company maintains centralized corporate policies that provide some constraint on the degree of managerial discretion over in-store personnel decisions. The evidence suggests that the company relies also on its strongly imbued culture to guide managers in the exercise of their discretion. It would be premature and inappropriate for the Court to determine the precise degree to which the forms of centralized control at Wal-Mart keep managerial discretion in check. See Eisen, 417 U.S. at 177; Orlowski v. Dominick's Finer Foods, Inc., 172 F.R.D. 370, 373-74 (N.D. Ill. 1997) (court found commonality in promotion process where degree of centralized decision-making could not be definitively determined without performing full merits inquiry). It is clear, however, that given the evidence regarding strong uniform culture and policies, the degree and impact of this practice is a significant question of fact common to the class as a whole. See Morgan, 169 F.R.D. at 356 (commonality requirement can be met where company combines "subjective, decentralized system of decisionmaking" with personnel policies that are "uniform throughout the country and are promulgated by the national corporate office").

(2) Gender Stereotyping

Plaintiffs also rely on the expert testimony of Dr. Bielby to support their contention that gender stereotyping is likely to exist at Wal-Mart, and that it persists to the present day. Dr. Bielby notes that there are many reasons why men and women can have different career trajectories, some of which are not generally considered discriminatory, such as differing job-related skill requirements. See Bielby Decl. ¶ 28. Employers create gender barriers, however, when they allow stereotypes to affect personnel decisions. Id. at ¶ ¶ 28-29.[18]

Dr. Bielby opines that the social science research demonstrates that gender stereotypes are especially likely to influence personnel decisions when they are based on subjective factors, because substantial decision-maker discretion tends to allow people to "seek out and retain stereotyping-confirming information and ignore or minimize information that defies stereotypes." Id. at ¶ 34. With respect to Wal-Mart in particular, Dr. Bielby confirms that managers make decisions with considerable discretion and little oversight. Id. at ¶¶ 37-41. He concludes that subjective decisions such as these, as well as discretionary wage decisions, are likely to be biased "unless they are assessed in a systematic and valid manner, with clear criteria and careful attention to the integrity of the decision-making process." Id. at ¶ 39. Dr. Bielby further concludes that these systematic elements are missing from Wal-Mart's decision-making process. Id. Dr. Bielby also notes that the company's practice of requiring relocation across stores for salaried managers, which generally creates a greater burden for women, makes the promotion process "especially vulnerable to gender stereotyping." Id. at ¶ 45.

---

[18] As another example, both parties recognize that family constraints limit women more than men, and that this is a broad phenomenon that is not entirely attributable to Wal-Mart. However, Dr. Bielby states that in an environment of stereotyping, people tend to act on assumptions that overstate the extent to which they are true. Without a systematic mechanism for determining availability and interest in promotion, stereotypes lead decision-makers to overlook or discount women's desire and qualifications for advancement. See Bielby Decl. ¶ 30.

Lastly, Dr. Bielby reviewed Wal-Mart's diversity and equal opportunity policies, many of which have been implemented in just the last few years. He concluded that they have identifiable weaknesses that limit their effectiveness for identifying and eliminating discriminatory barriers. Id. at ¶ 62. For example, while Wal-Mart regularly compiles statistics on the gender composition of its workforce, it has not undertaken a systematic assessment to identify possible barriers to women's advancement. Id. at ¶ 52. As another example, while Wal-Mart sets diversity goals for female representation in management, the goals appear to be largely ad hoc. Rather than setting the goals based on an understanding of the number of qualified and interested women available for a given position, many of the managers simply make their own subjective determinations or set their goals as incremental improvements over the prior year. Id. at ¶¶ 54-55. On the whole, Dr. Bielby recognizes that Wal-Mart has increased its emphasis on diversity issues in the past few years, but because the company has not translated that emphasis into practical and effective measures, there has been little actual impact on gender differentials in pay and promotion. Id. at ¶¶ 56-57 (citing former Vice President's view that by failing to tie diversity achievement to manager's incentive pay, the company's diversity efforts remain "lip service"). Additionally, although Wal-Mart regularly surveys its employees on a number of job-related issues (through its "Grass Roots" personnel program), it has never performed any kind of survey addressing diversity or gender issues. Id. at ¶ 61.

Defendant contests the accusation of gender stereotyping on the facts and by challenging Dr. Bielby's opinions. As a factual matter, Defendant points out a number of ways in which Wal-Mart culture promotes diversity. Wal-Mart has earned national diversity awards and its executives discuss diversity and include it in the company handbooks and trainings. See Porter Decl. ¶¶ 5-22. The company also has diversity goals, performance assessments, and penalties for EEO violations. See Def.'s Opp'n at 20.

Defendant also challenges Dr. Bielby's opinions as unfounded and imprecise. It is true that Dr. Bielby's opinions have a built-in degree of conjecture. He does not present a quantifiable analysis; rather, he combines the understanding of the scientific community with evidence of Defendant's policies and practices, and concludes that Wal-Mart is "vulnerable" to gender bias. See Bielby Decl. ¶ 63. Defendant rightly points out that Dr. Bielby cannot definitively state how regularly stereotypes play a meaningful role in employment decisions at Wal-Mart. See Def.'s Opp'n at 20:25-28. However, this is the nature of this particular field of science. See Fed. R. Evid. 702 (allowing "scientific, technical, or other spe- cialized knowledge [that] will assist the trier of fact to understand the evidence") (emphasis added).

The appropriate question at this stage of the litigation is not whether Dr. Bielby can make a conclusive determination, but whether it could add probative value to the inference of discrimination that plaintiffs allege. Here, Dr. Bielby presents enough of a basis, both in his review of the scientific literature and on the facts of the case, to provide a foundation for his opinions. See Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 250-51 (1989) (considering similar evidence by expert social psychologist). Whether those opinions, if presented to a jury, are ultimately worthy of belief will be for a jury to decide. For present purposes, Dr. Bielby's testimony raises an inference of corporate uniformity and gender stereotyping that is common to all class members.

2. Statistical Evidence of Discrimination

The second category of evidence presented by plaintiffs is statistical evidence of class-wide gender disparities. Use of statistical analysis to raise an inference of class-wide discrimination and satisfy commonality is well accepted. See, e.g., Caridad, 191 F.3d at 292. Plaintiffs rely primarily on the expert testimony of Dr. Richard Drogin,[19] a statistician who concludes, in essence, that there are statistically significant disparities between men and women at Wal-Mart in terms of compensation and promotions, that these disparities are wide-spread across regions, and that they can be explained only by gender discrimination. Plaintiffs bolster Dr. Drogin's analysis regarding promotion discrimination with the expert testimony of a labor economist, Dr. Marc Bendick, who performed a "benchmarking" study of twenty of Wal-Mart's competitors and concluded that Wal-Mart promotes a lower percentage of women than its retail counterparts.

---

[19] Dr. Drogin is an emeritus professor in the Department of Statistics at California State University, Hayward and is a partner in a statistical consulting firm. See Drogin Decl. ¶¶ 1-2.

Defendant contends that Dr. Drogin's analysis is substantially flawed and that in fact there is no statistical pattern of discrimination at Wal-Mart. Defendant relies on the testimony of its own expert economist, Dr. Haworth, who provides both a critique of Dr. Drogin's analysis and a separate analysis that she performed.[20] Defendant also challenges Dr. Bendick's expert testimony as methodologically and factually flawed.

Defendant's arguments seek to engage the Court in a merits evaluation of the expert opinions. The Court rejects this approach, and views the statistical evidence and testimony through the proper lens of the standards applicable to a class certification motion. See Legal Standards, supra; Eisen, 417 U.S. at 177 (admonishing courts not to engage in a preliminary assessment of the merits).[21] Accordingly, the [20] Dr. Haworth is the Chair and CEO of ERS Group, which specializes in the economic and statistical analysis of employment discrimination cases and other matters. Dr. Haworth is a former faculty member of the Department of Economics at Florida State University. See Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 5-6.

---

[21] See also Caridad, 191 F.3d at 292 ("Though [defendant's] critique of the Class Plaintiffs' evidence may prove fatal at the merits stage, the Class Plaintiffs need not demonstrate at this stage that they will prevail on the merits. Accordingly, this sort of 'statistical dueling' is not relevant to the certification deter-

Court delves into the substance of the expert testimony only to the extent necessary to determine if it is sufficiently probative of an inference of discrimination to create a common question as to the existence of a pattern and practice of gender discrimination at Wal-Mart. See Avagliano v. Sumitomo Shoji America, Inc., 103 F.R.D. 562, 574 (S.D.N.Y. 1984) ("While [plaintiffs] may have made a greater showing than is required on a motion for certification, certainly no more than an inference need be shown.") (emphasis in original).

a. Statistical Evidence Regarding Compensation

(1) Overview

Both parties' experts performed tests on an extensive array of Wal-Mart payroll and personnel data to determine whether gender disparities in salary exist and whether such disparities can be attributed to discrimination. Plaintiffs present largely uncontested descriptive statistics which show that women working in Wal-Mart stores are paid less than men in every region, that pay disparities exist in most job categories, that the salary gap widens over time even for men and women hired into the same jobs at the same time, that women take longer to enter into management positions, and that the higher one looks in the organization the lower the mination.") (citation omitted); EEOC v. Gen. Tel. Co., 885 F.2d 575, 579-82 (9th Cir. 1989), cert. denied, 498 U.S. 950 (1990); Butler I, 1996 WL 421436, at *3 (N.D. Cal. Jan.25, 1996) ("the evidence upon which plaintiffs propose to rely—statistical evidence of widespread discrimination—is common to the class as a whole").

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

percentage of women. See Drogin Decl. ¶¶ 21, 23; Haworth Depo. at 67:14-70:16, 76 (Suppl. Webber Decl. Ex. 129); see also section I.B.1.a.

Evidence that certain disparities exist, however, does not, by itself, explain why they exist. Accordingly, Plaintiffs also present inferential statistical evidence in the form of multiple regression analysis to demonstrate that the above disparities can be explained only by gender discrimination and not by chance or other neutral variables.[22] Defendant follows suit with a critique of Plaintiffs' regression analysis and with a separate regression analysis of its own. Thus, while they disagree as to application, the parties agree in principle that regression analysis is an appropriate and scientifically valid statistical technique which has gained general acceptance, indeed a general preference, by the courts. See Hemmings, 285 F.3d at 1183-84 & n.9 ("regression analysis is a common statistical tool"); Lavin-McEleney v. Marist College, 239 F.3d 476, 482 (2d Cir. 2001) ("It is undisputed that multiple regression analysis . . . is a scientifically valid statistical technique for identifying discrimination.").

---

[22] Multiple regression analysis, in general terms, provides estimates of the effect of several independent variables on a single dependent variable. The purpose is to estimate the extent to which a particular independent variable (in this case, gender) has influenced the dependent variables of compensation and promotion. So long as the analysis includes enough relevant non-discriminatory independent variables (e.g.—education, experience, performance, etc.), the results will indicate whether any salary disparities are attributable to gender (thereby raising an inference of discrimination) or whether the disparities are attributable to other factors (and thereby refuting such an inference). See Hemmings, 285 F.3d at 1183-84 & n.9.

Since the parties rely mostly on their regression analyses in this case, the Court is not called upon to decide whether plaintiffs' descriptive statistics alone suffice to support a finding of commonality or a prima facie case. See Reference Manual on Scientific Evidence, p. 148-49 n.224 (2d ed. 2000) ("The conditions under which a simple disparity between two groups amounts to a prima facie case that shifts the burden of proof to the defendant in Title VII and other discrimination cases have yet to be articulated clearly and comprehensively.") (citations omitted).

With respect to compensation, Dr. Drogin performed separate regression analyses for hourly and salaried employees for each Wal-Mart region. In general, the regressions showed statistically significant[23] gender-based disparities for all in-store job classifications in all 41 Wal-Mart regions. See Drogin Decl. ¶ 77. Specifically, total earnings paid to women ranged between 5 and 15 percent less than total earnings paid to similarly situated men in each year of the class period. Id. at ¶ 77. Dr. Drogin's regression analyses included seniority, turnover, performance, and other factors, none of which accounted for the disparities, thereby leaving him to conclude that gender is the only explanatory factor. In short, all of Dr. Drogin's regressions show that gender is a statistically significant variable in accounting for the salary differentials between female class members and male employees at Wal-Mart stores. Id. at ¶ 76.

---

[23] Statistical significance is measured by standard deviations. The standard deviation is a number that quantifies the probability that chance is responsible for any difference between an expected outcome and the observed outcome in a sample containing two groups. The greater the number of standard deviations, the less likely it is that chance is the cause of any difference between the expected and observed results." [A]s a general rule for . . . large samples, if the difference between the expected value and the observed number is greater than two or three standard deviations, then the hypothesis that the [disparity] was random would be suspect to a social scientist." Castaneda v. Partida, 430 U.S. 482, 496 n.17 (1977).

Defendant's statistical expert, Dr. Haworth, rejected Dr. Drogin's focus at the regional level and conducted her regression analyses at the store subunit level. Consequently, while Dr. Drogin ran a separate regression analysis for each of the 41 regions, Dr. Haworth ran a separate regression analysis for (a) each of the Specialty Departments within each store, (b) each grocery division within each store, and (c) the remainder of each store. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 191.[24] Due to the focus on sub-units, Dr. Haworth performed approximately 7,500 separate regression analyses. Her results show a lack of broad-based gender differential in pay for hourly employees, although they show some gender disparities in limited instances. Dr. Haworth did not perform regression analyses for most salaried positions because, in her view, "total compensation for these jobs is at least in part a function of factors that are not available in the data provided to either side," and therefore "the regression models may not provide a meaningful explanation of variations in total compensation." Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 253-55.

---

[24] As noted earlier, most stores have roughly 40 to 53 departments, such as automotive, jewelry, apparel, etc. Webber Decl. Ex. 70 at 8-9. Some of these departments are highly sex segregated (e.g. cashiers are 89.5% female, hardware sales associates are over 75% male), while others are roughly even in terms of gender (e.g. electronics is 47.2% female). Bielby Decl. ¶ 22.

(2) Defendant's Challenges to Plaintiffs' Statistical Analysis

Defendant does not dispute the accuracy of Dr. Drogin's calculations, but instead argues that his analysis fails to support an inference of class-wide discrimination because his methodology is fundamentally flawed in two respects: (1) Dr. Drogin improperly aggregated the data at the regional level, and (2) Dr. Drogin failed to account for certain variables. Each point is addressed in turn.

(a) Aggregation at the Regional Level

Defendant argues that because Dr. Drogin's regression analysis was conducted at the regional, rather than the store (or store department) level, his results are too generalized and fail to account for the significant differences in compensation practices that exist among the individual stores. In statistical language, Dr. Drogin's regional analyses suffer from "aggregation bias," and the only way to cure this bias, according to Defendant, would be to "disaggregate" the data and test it at the store-by-store level.[25]

---

[25] Defendant argues in its briefing that the statistical analysis should be performed at the store level, but Dr. Haworth went a level lower by analyzing store sub-units, as described above. This could be seen as a methodological inconsistency that would undermine Defendant's argument. However, Defendant's rationale for focusing on the store level is that most compensation decisions occur at the store level; Dr. Haworth's sub-unit analysis is logically consistent with that rationale because it is based on an understanding (disputed by Plaintiffs) that Specialty Department and Grocery unit employees are paid through a different structure than other store employees. The Court therefore concludes that the inconsistency between Defendant's focus

The proper test of whether workforce statistics should be viewed at the macro (regional) or micro (store or sub-store) level depends largely on the similarity of the employment practices, and the interchange of employees, at the various facilities. See Kirkland v. New York State Dept. of Correctional Servs., 520 F.2d 420, 425 (2d Cir. 1975) (focus of analysis depends on nature of defendant's employment practices); Lindemann & Grossman, Employment Discrimination, at 1598, 1723. Here, Dr. Drogin contends that it is proper to conduct the analysis on a regional level because the subjective decision-making in compensation and promotions takes place within parameters and guidelines that are highly uniform, and within a strong corporate culture. Plaintiffs also have shown, as discussed above, that the primary salary decision-makers, Store Managers, experience frequent relocation among the various stores.[26]

Dr. Haworth challenges Dr. Drogin's regional focus largely based on a survey taken of Store Managers regarding factors individual managers utilize in on "stores" in its briefs versus Dr. Haworth's focus on store sub-units to be mostly semantic.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[26] Dr. Haworth attempts to frame this issue differently, by arguing that Plaintiffs assume that Wal-Mart is a company with "one decision-maker" who sets pay rates for all employees across the country. Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 4, 23. This is an argumentative distortion of Dr. Drogin's analysis. It is one thing to conclude that stores operate pursuant to common policies based on evidence that a number of core practices have a strong degree of similarity; it is another to infer the existence of a single decision-maker from the existence of common policies. Dr. Drogin did the former and not the latter.

setting compensation. Specifically, she argues that aggregating data on a regional level "is not consistent with the variety in the responses of a randomly selected group of Store Managers as to what they believe to be important factors in making pay decisions." Haworth Decl. ¶ 25. As discussed in this Court's Order re Motions to Strike, however, this survey is stricken from the record. Accordingly, Defendant's reliance on this survey to challenge Dr. Drogin's statistical methods is misplaced.

Defendant also attacks Dr. Drogin's reliance on regional level statistics because he failed to perform a "Chow" test. This test (named after the statistician who created it) can be used to analyze whether two or more sets of data may be aggregated as a single sample in a statistical model. Dr. Haworth contends that because Store Managers possess substantial discretion and latitude in setting pay rates, stores act as distinct units; therefore, Dr. Drogin should be required to successfully apply the Chow test before aggregating the data on a regional level.

Defendant does not, however, point to any authority that would require use of a Chow test in this case. Defendant relies on Coates v. Johnson & Johnson, 756 F.2d 524, 542 (7th Cir. 1985), a decision on the merits, in which plaintiffs' expert aggregated (or "pooled") data over a number of years, rather than performing separate analyses on a yearly basis. The district court found that the weight of the competing expert testimony favored the defendant's position that the data was more reliable on a yearly basis. The Seventh Circuit emphasized that this was a close decision based on the particular facts of the case, id. at 542, and that "[p]ooling data is sometimes not only appropriate but necessary." Id. at 541. Defendant of course will be free to rely on the Chow test as a means of attempting to discredit Dr. Drogin at trial. Nothing in Coates, however, mandates a Chow test on the facts of this case.[27]

Nor does the present factual record compel the conclusion that a Chow test must be performed. As noted, Dr. Haworth emphasizes that each store should be treated as a distinct unit, given that individual Store Managers possess substantial latitude in setting pay rates. Plaintiffs also present evidence, however, that the stores, while autonomous in certain respects, do not operate in isolation; rather, managerial discretion and subjectivity are exercised in the context of a strong corporate culture and overarching policies. In such circumstances, there is less justification for treating each store as a distinct unit for purposes of statistical analysis. As such, the Court is not persuaded that Dr. Drogin's aggregated statistical analysis should be rejected because he did not choose to utilize the Chow test.

---

[27] See also Rossini v. Ogilvy & Mather, 615 F. Supp. 1520, 1522-23 (S.D.N.Y. 1985), vacated and remanded on other grounds, 798 F.2d 590 (2d Cir. 1986) (in decision on merits regarding salary discrimination, the court found that the Chow test showed statistically significant differences in regressions run on data before and after limitations date; nonetheless, the court held that "categorical rejection" of a single regression combining all data before and after the limitations date was "not warranted"); Vuyanich v. Republic Nat'l. Bank, 505 F. Supp. 224, 299, 314 (N.D. Tex. 1980), vacated on other grounds, 723 F.2d 1195 (5th Cir. 1984) ("Because the controversy here [regarding the Chow test] appears to center on an issue on the frontier of econometrics, and there seems, at least to a court unschooled in the intricacies of econometrics, to be genuine conflict between the experts as to the proper approach, we do not decide the issue.").

Moreover, the Ninth Circuit recently held that plaintiffs may rely on aggregated data to present claims of employment discrimination in Paige v. California, 291 F.3d 1141 (9th Cir. 2002). In that case, the plaintiffs' statistician aggregated data from various promotion examinations rather than viewing each examination on its own. Id. at 1148. All non-white plaintiffs were also aggregated as a single group rather than viewing each race separately. Id. The court began by stating that "it is a generally accepted principle that aggregated statistical data may be used where it is more probative than subdivided data." Id. (citation omitted). After noting that plaintiffs' theory was that defendant's employment practices had an identical discriminatory effect upon all members of the class, the court stated that "[r]ight or wrong, [plaintiffs] are entitled to attempt to prove their case" and "plaintiffs may aggregate data . . . for comparison purposes." Id. at 1149.

Clearly, the specific forms of aggregation in Paige are quite different than the geographical aggregation at issue here. The general issue, however, is the same: whether a particular level of generalization should be declared the only legally relevant focal point for statistical analysis, or whether statistical results may be presented at various levels of generality or specificity with the ultimate determination being made after all the evidence is evaluated by the finder of fact. The Ninth Circuit answered this question by holding that statistical analyses run on aggregated data should not be excluded, and may in fact be highly relevant.

Finally, the Court notes that Abram v. United Parcel Service of America, Inc., 200 F.R.D. 424 (E.D. Wis. 2001), relied upon by Defendant, does not undermine the use of regional statistics in this case. In Abram, the court denied class certification in part because plaintiffs' statistics failed to support commonality. Id. at 431. The parties agreed that there was a statistically significant pay gap between African-Americans and Caucasians when the data was considered in the aggregate at the nation-wide level. Id. However, at the district-by-district level, plaintiffs' expert conceded that there was no statistically significant difference. Id. Furthermore, the court found that plaintiffs' expert failed to control for non-racial variables, such as education and employment history, which, when properly accounted for even at the nation-wide level, led to the conclusion that there was no statistically significant difference among the races. Id. at 431 n.3. Thus, the Abram decision is essentially a rejection of plaintiffs' statistical evidence on the merits of that particular case. To the extent that a general proposition can be extracted from Abram, it would be that aggregated data at the nation-wide level is highly suspect, but that aggregation at a district level could be appropriate. Notably, United Parcel Service divides the country into sixty-five districts, some of which extend to an entire state or bloc of states. Id. at 426. Wal-Mart uses a similar organizational scheme with forty-one regions nationwide. Since Dr. Drogin analyzed the data at a level similar to the United Parcel Service district range, and controlled for a variety of relevant non-gender factors, his regional analyses is actually consistent with the Abram decision.[28]

---

[28] Defendant also relies on Lott v. Westinghouse Savannah River Co., 200 F.R.D. 539 (D.S.C. 2000), in which the court denied class certification. In Lott, plaintiffs presented mostly "simple grade-school level analyses" of the data through lay

In sum, the Court is not persuaded that Dr. Drogin's regional analysis should be rejected for purposes of this motion because it is lacking in probative value. The ultimate question of whether subjective decision-making and a uniform culture contribute to a nation-wide pattern of gender discrimination will, of course, be for a jury to decide. At this stage, however, these factors are apparent enough to support Dr. Drogin's regional approach as at least a reasonable means of conducting a statistical analysis. See, e.g., Barefield v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc., 44 FEP 1885, 1987 WL 65054 (N.D. Cal. 1987) (rejecting challenge to plaintiffs' statistics at class certification stage when objection went to the merits of the case).[29] witnesses. Id. at 546. Plaintiffs also presented the testimony of an expert witness, which the court does not specifically describe, but which appears to have been a break-down of racial disparities in employment in each EEO job category. Id. at 547. While understandably concluding that "[p]laintiffs' statistical reports fail to demonstrate satisfaction of the commonality criteria because of critical deficiencies in their composition," the court also criticized plaintiffs for aggregating the data across divisions and classes of employees, reasoning that "[s]uch aggregated statistics 'fail to 'reveal whether there is a pattern of disparities across the various decisionmaking units or a reliable sample of them.'" Id. at 560-61 (quoting Stastny v. Southern Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 628 F.2d 267, 278 (4th Cir. 1980)). The court provides no further explanation for its decision regarding the statistics. Its single conclusory statement can not be extended to justify Defendant's proposed rejection of Dr. Drogin's aggregated analysis, which as discussed above, is based on a substantial factual record.

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[29] See also Caridad, 191 F.3d at 292-93 (in employment class action where defendant had subjective decision-making practices, plaintiffs' expert conducted multiple regression analyses

(b) Selection of Variables

Defendant also contends that Dr. Drogin's statistical analysis should be rejected because it fails to account for a variety of factors, or control elements, that could be responsible for the disparities in question— referred to as "omitted variable bias." The question of which factors a statistician should account for in any given case is not governed by any bright-line rules; rather, it depends upon the theory and facts of each particular situation.

Here, Dr. Drogin controlled for a number of major variables, including: gender, length of time with the company, number of weeks worked during the year, whether the employee was hiring or terminated during the year, full-time or part-time, which store the employee worked in, whether the employee was ever hired into a management position, job position, and job review ratings. See Drogin Decl. ¶¶ 67-71. Defendant argues, however, that these variables do not fully reflect its compensation decision making structure, thereby leaving open the possibility that one or more missing variables could explain the gender disparities in question. In particular, Dr. Haworth identifies eleven variables that Dr. Drogin al-on both a company-wide and a department-by-department basis; the court concluded that the statistical disparities were "not insignificant," that the "statistical dueling" in which defendant sought to engage the Court was "not relevant to the certification determination," and that while "[m]ore detailed statistics might by required to sustain the Plaintiffs' burden of persuasion [at trial]," they "satisfie[d] the Class Plaintiffs' burden of demonstrating commonality for purposes of class certification.").

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

legedly omitted: hours worked, seniority, leave of absence, full-time/part-time status at hire, recent promotion or demotion, prior grocery experience, pay group, night shift, department, store size, and store profitability. See Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 280-92.

Dr. Haworth's methodology for determining which variables are relevant was formed in large part by selecting certain decision-making factors identified by Store Managers in a survey. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 20. As previously noted, however, Dr. Haworth can not properly rely on this survey. Even assuming that Dr. Haworth could show that Dr. Drogin omitted one or more relevant factors, this would not justify disregarding Dr. Drogin's findings for purposes of this motion.

First, as the Ninth Circuit recently emphasized in Hemmings, 285 F.3d at 1188, "the law does not require the near-impossible standard of eliminating all possible nondiscriminatory factors." Id. (emphasis in original). Rather, "it is clear that a regression analysis that includes less than 'all measurable variables' may serve to prove a plaintiff's case." Id., quoting Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385, 400 (1986). Given that Dr. Drogin clearly considered a broad array of significant factors, whether he omitted some other, relevant factors—and if so, whether that failure is of sufficient magnitude to discredit his analysis—are questions that should await resolution at trial Hemmings, 285 F.3d at 1183-84, 1187 (multiple regression analysis that controlled for experience and seniority, but did not account for employee qualifications, education, motivations, preferences, and individual fields was relevant and admissible); See Adams v. Ameritech Serv., Inc., 231 F.3d 414, 427-28 (7th Cir. 2000) (defendant's objections that analysis did not control for outside factors went to the weight of the evidence, not its admissibility); Bouman v. Block, 940 F.2d 1211, 1225 (9th Cir. 1991) ("Whether the statistics are undermined or rebutted in a specific case would normally be a question for the trier of fact.").[30] Second, Defendant fails to show, as it must, that "'curing the alleged flaws would also cure the statistical disparity.'" Hemmings, 285 F.3d at 1188 (citation omitted).[31]

In short, Defendant has shown only that its choice of variables presents an alternative approach; it has not discredited or nullified Dr. Drogin's results, at least on the record thus far presented. On the contrary, Dr. Drogin's selection of variables appears to go well above the minimal threshold established by the courts, and thus his analysis is sufficient to raise an inference of discrimination for purposes of this motion.[32]

---

[30] See also Mangold v. Cal. Pub. Utils. Comm'n, 67 F.3d 1470, 1476 (9th Cir. 1995); EEOC v. Gen. Tel. Co., 885 F.2d 575, 582 (9th Cir. 1989) (concluding that plaintiff's statistical analysis was probative of discrimination despite its failure to include employment interests); Bruno v. W.B. Saunders Co., 882 F.2d 760, 767 (3d Cir. 1989) (affirming district court's admission of statistical studies, despite the failure of the studies to take "account of the minimum qualifications of the jobs into which promotion or transfer occurred").

[31] Defendant's citation to Sheehan v. Purolator, Inc., 839 F.2d 99 (2d Cir. 1988) does not further its cause. In Sheehan (1) the plaintiffs' expert failed to account for critical factors, (2) the court found that these factors could in fact explain the gender disparities at issue, and (3) plaintiffs failed to adduce other significant evidence to support their claims. Id. at 103. The court also recognized that even with the serious flaws infecting plaintiffs' regression analysis, it would have been improper to exclude it from evidence. Id.; see also EEOC v. IBM, Inc., 583 F. Supp. 875, 898 (D. Md. 1984) (the court conducted a merits inquiry at trial, finding that plaintiffs' expert failed to account for critical non-discriminatory variables, including seniority, job level, and education).

b. Statistical Evidence Regarding Promotions

(1) Internal Data Analysis

(a) Overview

Dr. Drogin conducted a statistical analysis of Wal-Mart's internal promotion data during the class period, and concluded that, on a company-wide basis, there is a statistically significant shortfall of women being promoted into each of the in-store management classifications over the entire class period. He further found that the pattern of under-promotion into each of the in-store managerial classifications is "consistent in nearly every geographic region at Wal-Mart." Drogin Decl. ¶ 63. His data essentially supports this conclusion in statistically significant terms for Support Managers and Management Trainees. Id. & Table 26.[33]

---

[32] This is not to say that the omitted variables would have no impact on the regression results. For example, Defendant properly notes that prior grocery experience is a distinguishing factor which could warrant Store Managers to use their discretion to award higher pay, and that more men have this experience than women (57.4% men versus 46.6% women). See Def.'s Opp'n at 26 n.15; Oral Arg. Tr. at 190:7-25. On the other hand, Wal-Mart's compensation structures make no distinction between grocery and non-grocery. The Court simply is not in a position at this stage of the litigation to definitively resolve this issue. For present purposes, as discussed above, it is enough that Dr. Drogin's analyses account for a sufficient number of the principal variables to support Plaintiffs' position.

Although Defendant has not made an issue of the number of regions lacking a statistically significant gender differential at the higher level in-store managerial jobs, the Court became concerned that this evidence raises the question of whether a nation-wide class should be narrowed to lower level in-store managers (Support Managers and Management Trainees) with respect to promotions. The Court raised this issue with counsel at oral argument, and Plaintiffs responded by arguing that the wide-spread discrimination at the lower levels carries through to the upper levels, especially where most promotions are made from within. See Oral Arg. Tr. at 48:23-49:11. As Plaintiffs also stated in their briefs: "Obviously, as women have been under-promoted to the first-level management positions, their representation in the feeder pools for store manager is commensurately diminished." Pls.' Mot. at 29.

The Court is persuaded, at least for purposes of class certification, that the evidence is sufficient to support an inference that the statistically significant disparities identified at the lower levels affect the experience of women seeking promotion at the higher levels. This evidence consists of: (1) the sizable number of regions with statistically significant disparities, (2) descriptive statistics showing a steep drop in female presence the higher one goes in the in-store managerial hierarchy (see section I.B.1.a.(1); Drogin Decl. ¶ 23, Table 7), (3) the significantly longer time it takes women to achieve promotions than men generally (Drogin Decl. ¶ 29); (4) Defendant's practices affecting promotions—such as broad subjectivity, wide-scale lack of posting, and relocation policies—as discussed above (see sec-

---

[33] The Court observes, however, that Dr. Drogin's data shows that while female Co-Managers received fewer promotions than similarly situated men in 37 of 40 regions across the country, the disparity was of a statistically significant value in only 22 regions. Furthermore, while the data shows that for Store Manager positions women received fewer promotions than men in 34 of 40 regions, the disparity was of statistically significant value in only 13 regions. Id.

Dr. Drogin also studied the time that it has taken employees to reach in-store management positions. He found, and Defendant does not dispute, that it consistently takes women longer than comparable men to reach the higher management levels. On average, it took women 4.38 years from date of hire to be promoted to assistant manager, while men tions I.B.1.a.(3) & I.B.1.b.(1)), and (5) anecdotal evidence of discrimination (see section I.B.3).

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

The Court's determination is further supported by the case law in this area. As the court explained in ruling on the merits in Stender:

> The statistical evidence is significant for some positions, but not for others. However, the court finds that the lack of statistically significant disparities in promotions of women to [upper-level jobs] is caused by women being blocked from upper management positions at the lower rungs of the promotional ladder. In addition, the court has considered direct and indirect evidence of discriminatory intent on the part of Lucky managers. In considering plaintiffs' evidence cumulatively, the court concludes that Lucky's promotion process is tainted by discretionary decision making and the use of variable and subjective criteria. Accordingly, the court finds that the evidence is sufficient to sustain plaintiffs' burden of proving disparate treatment in Lucky's promotion practices as a whole.

Stender, 803 F. Supp. at 333; see also McClain v. Lufkin Indus., Inc. 187 F.R.D. 267, 274 (E.D. Tex. 1999) ("Discrimination in hiring and advancement, even at the lower levels of the hierarchy, has a rippling effect upwards through that hierarchy.") (citation omitted); Carpenter v. Stephen F. Austin State Univ., 706 F.2d 608 (5th Cir. 1983).

took 2.86 years. It took 10.12 years for women to reach Store Manager, compared with 8.64 years for men. See Drogin Decl. ¶ 29.

Dr. Haworth rejects Dr. Drogin's approach and concludes, using her own methodology, that women have been selected for all in-store management positions at a rate substantially equivalent to the rate at which they apply (or the rate at which they can be deemed to have applied). In fact, she concludes that women are promoted at a higher rate than predicted by their representation among those who applied. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 139. To the extent that some gender differentials exist, she contends that they are attributable to differing job aspirations and interests between men and women which exist in the general labor force and cannot be blamed on Wal-Mart.

(b) Defendant's Challenge to Dr. Drogin's Choice of Applicant Pools

Defendant's principal challenge to Dr. Drogin's analysis is that it fails to rely solely on actual applicant flow data. This defect, Defendant argues, renders Dr. Drogin's methodology fatally flawed. As explained below, however, this Court concludes that Dr. Drogin's analysis is sufficiently probative to support a finding of commonality.

Both parties' experts attempt to compare the number of women hired into different positions with the number of women applicants seeking advancement to those positions. In circumstances where (a) the employer notifies employees of openings through a neutral job posting or other system, (b) allows all interested employees to apply, and (c) maintains complete records, the actual applicant flow data (i.e. the number of employees actually applying for the job) exists and is recognized as the best basis for making this comparison. See Paige, 291 F.3d at 1147. Where, however, openings are not posted, or where the system is poorly documented or biased, it is impossible to determine with certainty how many employees would have applied for openings; accordingly, statisticians look for the next best source available to estimate what the actual applicant flow would have been. See id. at 1145.

The parties agree that the actual applicant flow data for promotions at Wal-Mart during the class period is limited to the following: (1) from 1998 to 2002 the company conducted numerous postings for the lowest level hourly management position (which is not part of the class), and a very limited number of postings for Support Manager,[34] (2) from 1998 to 2002, most Store Manager positions were posted,[35] and (3) in January and April-May 2003, Wal-Mart conducted a limited posting for the Management

---

[34] From the inception of the class period on December 27, 1998 through September 30, 2002, Wal-Mart posted roughly 6,800 job openings for Support Manager. Approximately 41,000 applications were submitted for these openings, and 46.1% of the applicants were women. See Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 12, 84.

[35] Between December 27, 1998 and October 17, 2002, Wal-Mart Management Career Selection (MCS) system documented over 46,000 applications to roughly 4,400 salaried management positions. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 119. Most of these documented moves were to Store Manager positions. Id. at ¶ 128 & Table entitled "Comparison of Moves, Management Career Selection Data versus Global PeopleSoft Data from December 27, 1998 through March 8, 2002." Most of the moves to other salaried management positions were not documented by the MCS system. Id.

Trainee position.[36] As such, the data contains the following substantial gaps:

(1) There is no documented job applicant data for 80 percent of the actual promotions to the position of Support Manager. See Drogin Decl. ¶ 44; Drogin Reply Decl. ¶ 6.

(2) Prior to January 2003, there is no documented job applicant data for entry level salaried management positions.

(3) The amount of Management Career Selection (MCS) information on Assistant Manager vacancies (less than 1% of the promotions are documented) and Co-Manager vacancies (less than 3% are documented) is negligible. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 128. Furthermore, the MCS system contains no data for any management positions in Sam's Club stores. See Drogin Decl. ¶ 45.

Predictably, the experts draw opposite conclusions from the limited amount of actual applicant-flow data available. Dr. Haworth argues that the data, while limited, is nonetheless sufficient to justify an extrapolation for all job openings during the entire class period. In contrast, Dr. Drogin concludes that Wal-Mart's job posting systems "provide no useful data for analyzing promotions into the upper level hourly supervisory, and store management positions." Drogin Decl. ¶ 43. Therefore, he looked to what he considered the next best source to estimate actual applicant flow by tabulating "the incumbents in historical feeder jobs for [each] promotion." Id. at ¶ 48.

---

[36] Wal-Mart conducted a seven-day company-wide posting in January 2003 for admission to the Management Trainee position. Roughly 30,000 candidates applied, of which 44% were female. See Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 16, 72, 96. Approximately 1,400 positions were filled through this posting. See Drogin Reply Decl. ¶ 11. Wal-Mart posted job vacancies for the Management Trainee position again in April-May 2003, although this posting was limited to Wal-Mart Discount Stores and SuperCenters. This posting generated approximately 11,500 applicants, of which 41% were female. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 72 & n.33, 103.

While Defendant vigorously attacks Dr. Drogin's approach, it is well recognized that where actual applicant flow data is inadequate or unavailable, other measures of applicant flow—including but not limited to "feeder pools"—are deemed acceptable so long as they are used in a reliable manner. See R. Paetzold and S. Willborn, The Statistics of Discrimination Using Statistical Evidence in Discrimination Cases, §§ 4.02-4.04 (Oct.2002). In Hemmings v. Tidyman's, Inc., for example, the Ninth Circuit recently affirmed using feeder pools where the defendant fills its higher management positions through internal promotions. 285 F.3d at 1185-86 (finding that "the potential applicant pool—and thus the appropriate comparison pool—for promotions to upper and middle management jobs at Tidyman's is comprised of the current employees in lower management positions").[37]

---

[37] Similarly, in Stender, 803 F. Supp. at 333-34, the court accepted the same type of feeder pool methodology used by plaintiffs here. In fact, the Stender plaintiffs employed Dr. Drogin, and the defendant employed Dr. Haworth. The court found that the defendant's bid data was incomplete, and that it was therefore appropriate for Dr. Drogin to take into account the historical pattern of movement between jobs at Lucky Stores by constructing feeder pools for each target job. Id. at 295-96. Specifically, in Stender, Dr. Drogin compared the movement of male and female employees out of low-level clerk positions and Notably, Wal-Mart fails to cite any authority that would require Dr. Drogin to rely solely on extrapolations from grossly incomplete actual applicant flow data. Defendant cites to General Electric Co. v. Joiner, 522 U.S. 136, 146 (1997) for the proposition that "[c]ourts permit extrapolation for the liability period from recent applicant flow data, absent proof into various mid-level apprentice positions, and found a shortfall of women for each set of promotions. Id. at 296. Dr. Drogin used the same control variables as in his Wal-Mart analysis, i.e. year of promotion, feeder job, and store (although the geographic variable in Wal-Mart is sometimes the district rather than store). Id. at 296 n.8. Dr. Haworth revised the feeder pool analysis by using a reference adjustment factor, based on defendant's analysis of gender differentials in interest levels, and found no evidence of discrimination. Id. at 313. Judge Patel credited Dr. Drogin's analysis and rejected Dr. Haworth's. Id.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

In Butler I, 1996 WL 421436, the court granted class certification, finding that plaintiffs' statistical evidence created a common issue of law and fact. In a subsequent order denying defendant's motion for summary judgment, the court described plaintiffs' evidence as including expert testimony by Drs. Drogin and Bendick in which feeder pool analyses were used to measure gender disparities in promotion. Butler v. Home Depot, Inc., (Butler II), 1997 WL 605754, at *8 (N.D. Cal. 1997). The court noted that Home Depot primarily promotes from within, and the court approved the use of the feeder pools, finding that they were of a kind and degree from which causation may reasonably be inferred. Id. See also Pitre v. Western Elec. Co., 843 F.2d 1262 (10th Cir. 1988) (approving reliance on feeder pools); Shidaker v. Tisch, 833 F.2d 627, 631 (7th Cir. 1986) (same); Paxton v. Union National Bank, 688 F.2d 552, 563-65 (8th Cir. 1982) (same); Smith v. Xerox Corp., 196 F.3d 358, 370-71 (2d Cir. 1999) (approving feeder pool methodology but requiring very careful construction of pools that compare co-workers who competed directly against each other to receive a benefit).

that the level of interest had materially changed." Def's Opp'n at 40 & n.25. General Electric, however, merely states the general proposition that experts commonly extrapolate from data, and it made this unremarkable statement in the context of a personal injury case in which the expert extrapolated cancer causality from studies on mice to causation in humans. 522 U.S. at 146.

Defendant's reliance on Stout v. Potter, 276 F.3d 1118, 1123 (9th Cir. 2002) and Paige, 291 F.3d at 1147, is equally misplaced. In Stout, an employment case, the court was presented with actual applicant flow data for the entire time period at issue, and therefore never had occasion to address the situation in which such data is incomplete. In Paige, the court had access to both internal and external applicant flow data, and it stated a preference, given the particular facts of the case, for the internal data. Significantly, Paige recognized that the preference for actual applicant flow holds true "only if there is not 'a characteristic of the challenged selection device that makes use of the actual pool of applicants or eligible employees inappropriate.'" 291 F.3d at 1145 (quoting Moore v. Hughes Helicopters, Inc., 708 F.2d 475, 482 (9th Cir. 1983)). A widespread failure to use the "selection device" of job posting could certainly make the preference for applicant flow "inappropriate."[38]

---

[38] Defendant also cites Capacchione v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Schools, 57 F. Supp. 2d 228, 247 n.16 (W.D.N.C. 1999), aff'd in part, rev'd in part, vacated in part, by Belk v. Charlotte-Mecklenburg Bd. Of Educ., 269 F.3d 305 (4th Cir. 2001), a school desegregation case in which the court was presented with over twenty years of complete enrollment data. The court approved an extrapolation from that data to estimate the en-

At bottom, Defendant fails to grapple with the basic fact that any approach—whether it is extrapolation from limited data (as Defendant prefers) or use of comparative data (as Plaintiffs prefer)—will have a degree of uncertainty given the admitted lack of actual data for most of the positions at issue due to rollment during a previous eight year period. Id. The use of extrapolation in that case was unchallenged and the court merely found it to be a reasonable method that was the best means available in the situation. Id.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

In another case relied upon by Defendant, United States v. County of Fairfax, Va., 629 F.2d 932, 940 (4th Cir. 1980), a decision regarding the merits of a discrimination action, the court held that actual applicant flow data could be used as a basis for extrapolation for years in which such data had been destroyed. However, in that case the court determined that the only alternative means of estimating applicant flow would be to use a zip code analysis (which is based on census information), and that the flaws in using that data outweighed the flaws inherent in the extrapolation method. Id. Indeed, the courts generally are highly suspect of census data for workplace comparison since applicant pools often are far narrower than the general population. Here, in contrast, Dr. Drogin's availability pools are drawn from internal data, and therefore do not suffer from the same problem as census data.

Finally, defendant again analogizes to Donaldson, 205 F.R.D. 558, but again the analogy fails. In Donaldson, the court found that "plaintiffs' own statistics belie the existence of [ ] a pattern [of discrimination]." Id. Indeed, the Donaldson plaintiffs' expert's initial study showed no pattern of discrimination in many significant areas. Id. at 567. Plaintiffs presented the court with an entirely new set of statistics in their reply materials, but they were based on the same raw data with different calculations. Id. Given these circumstances, it is no surprise that the court found that plaintiffs' statistical analysis deserved no weight. Id.

the company's wide-scale lack of job posting. Defendant's assertion that its approach is necessarily superior does not withstand scrutiny. Rather, Defendant's arguments, which go to the weight of the evidence, merely highlight the presence of a significant issue affecting all class members which supports, rather than defeats, granting class certification. Moreover, while a jury may or may not ultimately find Dr. Drogin's approach more probative than Dr. Haworth's, it is at least reasonable. As such, Dr. Drogin's method is sufficient to create an inference of discrimination for purposes of this motion.

(2) External Benchmarking Data Analysis

Plaintiffs also buttress their position that there is a common question regarding Defendant's alleged discriminatory policies toward the class with the benchmarking analysis of a labor economist, Dr. Marc Bendick. In contrast to Dr. Drogin and Dr. Haworth, who analyzed internal Wal-Mart data to determine whether promotion disparities exist and, if so, whether they are attributable to gender discrimination, Dr. Bendick looked outside of Wal-Mart to other large retailers for his data source. Specifically, Dr. Bendick compared, or "benchmarked," Wal-Mart against twenty other large general merchandise retailers by comparing workforce data provided by the companies to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC"). The practice of benchmarking one company's performance against its competitors is a standard management technique used throughout the private sector and by Wal-Mart itself. See Bendick Decl. ¶ 14 (citing Peterson Depo.).

The type of benchmarking applied here addresses the issue of labor supply, i.e. the availability of female employees who are qualified and interested in management positions. The purpose of this analysis is to determine the extent to which women in the relevant market sought promotion, so that an inference could be made that roughly the same percentage of women would have applied at Wal-Mart if given the opportunity. As Dr. Bendick explains: "The logic in benchmarking is that, if retail chains comparable to Wal-Mart are successfully employing women at some rate, then women are presumably available, interested, and qualified to hold comparable positions at Wal-Mart at a similar rate." Id. at ¶ 16.

Dr. Bendick used data from the EEOC to compare Wal-Mart against twenty large nation-wide retailers.[39] He found that a short-fall in female managers was present in 79.5 percent of all Wal-Mart stores. Id. at ¶ 43. He concluded that "[w]ith a shortfall present in four out of five stores, it is virtually impossible for the pattern to be geographically localized." Id. He further concluded that while the in-store managerial workforce at the comparison stores was 56.5 percent female, it was only 34.5 percent female at Wal-Mart. Dr. Bendick determined that this differential is highly statistically significant (47 standard deviations).

---

[39] The data is compiled by the EEOC from a mandatory survey of the nation's largest private firms, and the results are contained in EEO-1 reports, which essentially form a census of the workers at those firms. Dr. Bendick selected the comparator firms by looking for similar large retail companies in the EEO-1 reports. He used two criteria: (1) the firm was in a retail industry focusing on building material and garden supplies, general merchandise, food store, automotive, apparel, furniture, and miscellaneous retail, excluding eating and drinking places; (2) the firm had at least 100 separately reporting establishments with at least 100 employees each. Twenty firms met his criteria. See Bendick Decl. ¶ 21. The identities of these companies in the EEO-1 reports are anonymous, but based on the limited number of companies of such large size in the country, Dr. Bendick was able to surmise that the list of twenty includes Target, Costco, K-Mart, and others. Id. at ¶ 23.

Defendant argues that Dr. Bendick was biased in conducting his benchmarking analysis by "cherry-picking" the comparator companies. However, his criteria for selecting the comparators appears to be reasonable, and there is no evidence that he left out companies that fit his criteria.[40] Defendant also points to its own alternative benchmarking analysis, which adjusted the criteria to include small and medium sized companies. Defendant will be free to present this alternative model to the jury. It fails to demonstrate, however, that Dr. Bendick's approach is so flawed as to lack probative value. Again, the question of which approach should ultimately prevail is for the jury, and Defendant's attempt to litigate this issue now is premature.

---

[40] Defendant also argues that Dr. Bendick's analysis is methodologically flawed. It contends that Dr. Bendick's sample size is too small, in that he excludes all small employers. However, the analysis covers twenty firms with over 1.8 million workers in nearly 10,000 establishments nation-wide. See Bendick Rebuttal Decl. ¶ 12. Furthermore, if Dr. Bendick had compared Wal-Mart to small employers, he would have been subject to criticism for comparing apples to oranges.

In a similar vein, Defendant argues that Dr. Bendick excluded approximately 96 percent of the workforce holding management jobs in the retail sales field. However, in the four percent he did include there are over 170,000 managers. Moreover, these are the most applicable comparators in that they are managers of large retail firms. In other words, Dr. Bendick's selection is consistent with the reasonable approach of comparing Wal-Mart to "other large chain[s] of large stores selling a large range of goods." Bendick Rebuttal Decl. ¶ 14.

Based on his determination that Wal-Mart has a shortfall of women being promoted to in-store management positions, Dr. Bendick also concludes that the shortfall cannot be explained in terms of lack of qualifications, interest, or availability among female employees. This conclusion appears to follow logically from the analysis of the data. While it is not for the Court at this stage to find whether or not the analysis and conclusion are correct, the inference is appropriately raised. Accordingly, the Court finds that Dr. Bendick's analysis further supports Plaintiffs' showing of commonality by providing additional evidence which is sufficient, for purposes of this motion, to raise an inference of class-wide discrimination.

3. Anecdotal Evidence of Discrimination

Circumstantial and anecdotal evidence of discrimination is commonly used in Title VII pattern and practice cases to bolster the statistical proof by bringing "the cold numbers convincingly to life." Int'l Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 339 (1977); Rudebusch v. Hughes, 313 F.3d 506, 517 (9th Cir. 2002). Here, plaintiffs have submitted declarations from each of the class representatives, as well as 114 declarations from class members around the country. The women testify to being paid less than similarly situated men, being denied promotion or being delayed in promotion in a disproportionate manner compared with similarly situated men, working in an atmosphere with a strong corporate culture, and being subjected to various individual sexist acts. See, e.g., Scott Decl. ¶¶ 8, 9, 12 (male Store Manager told declarant that "[m]en are here to make a career and women aren't. Retail is for housewives who just need to earn extra money"); S. Hall Decl. ¶ 2 (after seeking transfer to Hardware, male Support Manager stated: "We need you in toys . . . you're a girl, why do you want to be in Hardware?"); Page Decl. ¶ 10 (Store Manager gave sporting goods department manager position to male because she "needed a man in the job"). This anecdotal evidence, in combination with the other evidence previously discussed, further supports an inference that Defendant's policies and procedures have the effect of discriminating against Plaintiffs in a common manner.

4. Conclusion re Commonality

In sum, Plaintiffs have exceeded the permissive and minimal burden of establishing commonality by providing: (1) significant evidence of company-wide corporate practices and policies, which include (a) excessive subjectivity in personnel decisions, (b) gender stereotyping, and (c) maintenance of a strong corporate culture; (2) statistical evidence of gender disparities caused by discrimination; and (3) anecdotal evidence of gender bias. Together, this evidence raises an inference that Wal-Mart engages in discriminatory practices in compensation and promotion that affect all plaintiffs in a common manner. While Defendant raises numerous challenges to this evidence, they are insufficient to defeat Plaintiffs' showing of commonality; rather, the objections are predominantly of the type that go to the weight of the evidence, and thus should properly be addressed by a jury considering the merits.

C. Typicality

Typicality requires that the named plaintiffs be members of the class they represent and "'possess the same interest and suffer the same injury'" as class members. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 156 (citation omitted).[41] The named plaintiffs' claims need not be identical to the claims of the class to satisfy typicality; rather, the claims are typical if they are "reasonably co-extensive with those of absent class members." Staton, 327 F.3d at 957, quoting Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1020. It is sufficient for plaintiffs' claims to "arise from the same remedial and legal theories" as the class claims. Arnold, 158 F.R.D. at 449 (citations omitted); see also McClain v. Lufkin Indus., Inc., 187 F.R.D. 267, 281 (E.D. Tex. 1999) (quoting Lightbourn v. County of El Paso, Texas, 118 F.3d 421, 426 (5th Cir. 1997)) (typicality is met where "[i]n the event the class members in this case were to proceed in a parallel action, they would advance legal and remedial theories similar, if not identical, to those advanced by the named plaintiffs"). The Ninth Circuit interprets typicality, like it does commonality, permissively. Staton, 327 F.3d at 957; Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1020.

Defendant contends that the named plaintiffs are not sufficiently "typical" for two reasons: (1) the named plaintiffs have not worked in the upper levels of in-store management and therefore cannot represent those managers, and (2) each of the plaintiffs' claims is too individual-specific.

---

[41] Just as commonality and typicality tend to merge, so do typicality and adequacy of representation. See Newberg, Vol. I at 411-12. The adequacy test is broader, however, in that a representative may have typical claims but otherwise have an irreconcilable conflict with the class. Id.

1. Whether the Named Plaintiffs Can Represent All In-Store Managers

There is no dispute that the named plaintiffs are reasonably co-extensive with the hourly class members since almost all of the named plaintiffs hold hourly positions. Defendant, argues, however, that the named plaintiffs are not typical of all female in-store managers because only one named plaintiff—Christine Kwapnoski—holds a salaried management position, and it is a lower level position at a Sam's Club. As such, Defendant emphasizes, "[n]o Plaintiff ever occupied a salaried position at a Wal-Mart Discount Store, Neighborhood Market or Supercenter." Def.'s Opp'n at 9.[42] As discussed earlier, however, the management structure at Sam's Club is very similar to the structure at the other Wal-Mart divisions. Therefore, there is very little practical import to this argument.

---

[42] After the hearing on the Motion for Class Certification, Defendant filed two separate ex parte applications further challenging plaintiff Kwapnoski's status as a class representative for female in-store managers. See Defendant's Ex Parte Applications filed January 5 and March 25, 2004. In both Applications, defendant points out that Ms. Kwapnoski participated as a claimant in a separate lawsuit filed in state court challenging Wal-Mart and Sam's Club's overtime policies. In the context of the state suit, she filed a claimant response form indicating that in both of her managerial positions she spent "more than one-half of [her] time performing the same type of non-managerial tasks as [her] hourly subordinates." Keane Decl. in Support of Defendant's Ex Parte Application, Exh. A at 4. The Court finds that this statement does not undermine or limit Ms. Kwapnoski's representative status. Whether Wal-Mart chose to have plaintiff (and other managers) performing hourly tasks is of no import to the typicality analysis, regardless of its relevance to a wage and hour analysis. The single relevant fact here is that during the span of this action, Ms. Kwapnoski held jobs that Wal-Mart itself designated as salaried managerial positions. Further, Wal-Mart's recent re-designation of plaintiff's positions as non-exempt does not alter, and cannot erase, this

Moreover, there is no requirement that plaintiffs have a class representative for each management category that they seek to represent. See Taylor v. Union Carbide Corp., 93 F.R.D. 1, 6 (S.D. W. Va.1980). It is sufficient that one of the named plaintiffs is a manager, even if her position is lower than the top rung. See Hartman, 19 F.3d at 1471 (employee can challenge discrimination in "different job categories where the primary practices used to discriminate in the different categories are themselves similar. While it may be prudent to have the class divided into sub-classes represented by a named plaintiff from each of the differing job categories, it would not be necessary to the validity of the class certification to do so."); Meyer v. Macmillan Publ'g Co., 95 F.R.D. 411, 414 (S.D.N.Y. 1982) ("[T]he fact that the jobs performed by the named plaintiffs are, in some sense, unique, is not a bar to their being class representatives. If it were, no class of professional employees could ever be certified."); Paxton v. Union Nat'l Bank, 688 F.2d 552, 562 (8th Cir. 1982) (holding that "[t]ypicality is not defeated because of the varied promotional opportunities at issue, or the differing qualifications of plaintiffs and class members."). Furthermore, the class representatives include several women who claim that they were denied positions into management. If Plaintiffs historical fact. Thus, Defendant's ex parte applications are denied.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

sought to represent all levels of management, including high-level managers in the Home Office, there would be greater cause for concern. However, since the range of managers in the class is limited to those working in the stores, it is not a very broad class and a named plaintiff occupying a lower level salaried in-store management position is sufficient to satisfy the "permissive" typicality requirement. Staton, 327 F.3d at 957.

2. Degree of Individual Specificity for Each Claim

Defendant also argues that the named representatives' claims are not typical of the class because each claim in this case is too "individual-specific." To support this contention, Defendant cites various class member declarations to show the fact-specific nature of each of their claims. See Def.'s Opp'n at 7 n.9. Some degree of individualized specificity must be expected in all cases, however, and it does not necessarily defeat typicality. See Staton, 327 F.3d at 957 ("representative claims are 'typical' if they are reasonably coextensive with those of absent class members; they need not be substantially identical."); Adams v. Pinole Point Steel Co., 1994 WL 515347, at *7 (N.D. Cal. May 18, 1994); Wofford v. Safeway Stores Inc., 78 F.R.D. 460, 488 (N.D. Cal. 1978). Rather, the court must consider whether the named plaintiffs suffered injury from a specific discriminatory practice of the employer in the same manner that the members of the proposed class did, and whether the named plaintiffs and the class members were injured in the same fashion by a general policy of employment discrimination. Staton, 327 F.3d at 957. Thus, even where individual employees in different stores with different managers received different levels of pay and were denied promotion or promoted at different rates, so long as the discrimination they allegedly suffered occurred through an alleged common practice—e.g. excessively subjective decision-making in a corporate culture of uniformity and gender stereotyping—their claims are sufficiently typical to satisfy Rule 23(a)(3).[43]

D. Adequacy of Representation

The fourth and final Rule 23(a) requirement—adequacy—requires (1) that the proposed representatives do not have conflicts of interest with the proposed class and (2) that plaintiffs are represented by qualified counsel. Hanlon, 150 F.3d at 1020. The adequacy of representation requirement serves two functions. Like the commonality and typicality requirements, it assures that shared interests between the representative plaintiffs and the class as a whole are present, but it also functions to ensure the absence of conflicts. Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 625-26 (1997). To serve as representatives, the named plaintiffs must have common interests with class members and a lack of interests adverse to class members. They must also vigorously prosecute the interests of the class through qualified counsel. East Texas Motor Freight System Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 403-05 (1977). This standard requires similarity, not identity, of interests. Nor does it preclude some unique interests; it only precludes adverse interests.

---

[43] Another approach to this issue is to ask whether the adjudication of the class representatives' claims will necessarily involve the determination of common questions affecting the class. See Newberg, Vol. 1 at 387. Here, while the particular disparities in levels of pay and denial or delay in promotion will be specific to each class representative, each one will have to link those disparities to discrimination. The linkage for each and every plaintiff is the common theory of excessive subjectivity affected by a biased corporate culture and the common statistical data showing a pattern and practice of discrimination. The Court finds that the legal claims made by the representative plaintiffs are not idiosyncratic; rather, they are typical of the claims available to all class members.

1. Conflicts of Interest

Defendant argues that certification should be denied because there is a conflict of interest among female in-store managers who are both plaintiff class members and decision-making agents of the Defendant. As the Ninth Circuit made clear in Staton, however, courts need not deny certification of an employment class simply because it may include both supervisory and non-supervisory employees. In Staton, objectors to a classwide settlement similarly argued that a conflict arose from the fact that "the class cuts across the levels of authority of [the company] employees and that, in particular, some class members supervise some of their fellow class members." 327 F.3d at 958. The court rejected a per se rule, noting that the issue must be resolved in the context of the particular case and circumstances. Id. The court then concluded there was no conflict in that case given that (1) the objectors had failed to identify a "substantive issue for which there is a conflict of interest between two or more sets of employees," (2) the named plaintiffs included both supervisors and non-supervisors, and (3) the requested relief applied throughout the class. Id. at 958-59.

Here, as in Staton, the named plaintiffs include persons who have worked as both supervisory and non-supervisory employees, and the requested injunctive and lost pay relief applies throughout the class. Further, the alleged discriminatory policies affect supervisory and non-supervisory employees alike. Accordingly, the Court is not persuaded that there are any substantive conflicts between supervisory and non-supervisory employees that would preclude certification. See also Shores, 1996 WL 407850, *8 (finding no inherent conflict where class included supervisory and non-supervisory employees since "there is nothing to suggest that the elimination of sex discrimination for non-managerial employees would adversely affect managerial employees and vice versa"); Butler I, 1996 WL 421436, at *4 (noting that any potential conflict created by supervisors and non-supervisors being members of the same class is cured by bifurcating the trial into liability and remedial phases).

Wal-Mart also conjures a scenario where "at trial we [would] have the very real specter of class counsel cross-examining a woman he represents, trying to rebut her testimony that her subordinates were fairly compensated, attacking her credibility." Def.'s Opp'n at 31 (emphasis in original). It is unlikely, however, that many, if any, such scenarios would occur given that the liability phase of the trial properly focuses on the existence of a general pattern and practice of discrimination, not individual employment decisions. See section II.B.1. Defendant's speculation on this point does not warrant a finding that the named plaintiffs can not adequately represent the class.

More fundamentally, the fact that some individual female managers may disagree with the allegations in Plaintiffs' complaint, and testify in favor of Wal-Mart, does not create any significant conflict between supervisory and non-supervisory employees. Rather, it just reflects the fact that in any employment class there may be individuals that support the employer's position. Such individual predilections, however, do not create a substantive conflict between supervisory and non-supervisory employees as a group.[44]

Finally, Defendant points to Wagner v. Taylor, 836 F.2d 578, 595 (D.C. Cir. 1987), a Title VII case in which the court found inadequate representation because the named plaintiff, who was a supervisor, purported to represent a broad class that included non-supervisory employees. In Staton, the Ninth Circuit distinguished Wagner because "Wagner was both a senior executive and the only representative of an attempted class of all grade GS-9 and above African-American employees of, and applicants to, the Interstate Commerce Commission." Staton, 327 F.3d at 958. Thus, while Wagner cautions against having a single senior executive representing a broad range of supervisory and non-supervisory employees, the multiple named plaintiffs here provide significantly broader representation for the class.

2. Qualified Counsel

Plaintiffs have submitted declarations that sufficiently establish their counsel's abilities to handle a case of this nature and magnitude. Defendant does not contest the adequacy of class counsel. Based on the vigorous and skilled prosecution of this action thus far, as well as counsel's past experience with complex employment litigation, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' counsel have demonstrated their willingness, capacity, and dedication to pursuing these claims. Pursuant to the recently added subsection (g)(1)(C)(I) to Rule 23 (effective December 1, 2003), the Court also specifically finds as follows: (1) Plaintiffs' counsel have been diligent in identifying and investigating all potential claims in this litigation; (2) Plaintiffs' counsel individually and collectively have a wealth of extensive experience in handling class actions and other complex civil rights litigation; (3) plaintiffs' counsel have proved themselves to have an excellent grasp of employment discrimination and class action law; and (4) Plaintiffs' counsel have the resources to commit to fully representing the class throughout this litigation.

---

[44] The Court is aware of a few district court decisions in which class actions have been rejected or narrowed on the ground of a conflict of interest where the class included supervisors who might have made discriminatory decisions. However, none of these cases provide a persuasive analysis of how this conflict would cause a problem in actuality. See Donaldson, 205 F.R.D. at 568 (class action denied in part because of an "insurmountable" conflict between supervisor class representatives who made the decisions and the other members); Abram, 200 F.R.D. at 433 (in denial of class certification, court mentioned that three of the named plaintiffs were promoted to central managers and had a stake in proving they do not discriminate).

E. Conclusion

Without making any findings on the merits, the Court concludes, having reviewed the voluminous evidence provided by the parties, that Plaintiffs have come forth with sufficient evidence to satisfy the requirements of numerosity, commonality, typicality, and adequacy of representation, as set forth in Rule 23(a). Accordingly, the Court now considers whether plaintiffs can also satisfy the elements of Rule 23(b).

II. Maintainability Under Rule 23(b)

In addition to satisfying the prerequisites of Rule 23(a), Plaintiffs must also demonstrate that their proposed class is maintainable under one of the subsections of Rule 23(b). In this case, Plaintiffs rely on subsection (b)(2), which applies if "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole."

As noted in the introduction, Congress added subsection (b)(2) in 1966 "'primarily to facilitate the bringing of class actions in the civil rights area.'" In re Monumental Life, 365 F.3d at 417 n.16 (citation omitted). Indeed, this provision was written with employment discrimination specifically in mind. "[T]he drafters of Rule 23 specifically contemplated that suits against discriminatory hiring and promotion policies would be appropriately maintained under Rule 23(b)(2)." Domingo v. New England Fish Co. (Domingo II), 727 F.2d 1429, 1443 n.11 (9th Cir. 1984); see also Coley v. Clinton, 635 F.2d 1364, 1378 (8th Cir. 1980); Wetzel v. Liberty Mutual Ins. Co., 508 F.2d 239, 250 (3rd Cir. 1975).

Here, Plaintiffs allege that Wal-Mart has acted or refused to act—through its discriminatory practices—on grounds generally applicable to the proposed class, which Plaintiffs seek to remedy through injunctive relief and the recovery of lost pay and punitive damages. Wal-Mart does not dispute that the claims for injunctive relief and lost pay readily fall within the ambit of a (b)(2) class action. Indeed, it is well established that lost pay is recoverable as an equitable, make-whole remedy in employment class actions notwithstanding its monetary nature. See, e.g., Gotthardt v. Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp., 191 F.3d 1148, 1152-55 (9th Cir. 1999); Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87, 92 (D.C. Cir. 1997) ("[I]t is not uncommon in employment discrimination [(b)(2)] cases for the class also to seek monetary relief in the form of back pay or front pay."); Salinas v. Roadway Express, 735 F.2d 1574, 1576 (5th Cir. 1984).

Defendant argues, however, that inclusion of the claim for punitive damages renders this case unsuitable for certification under section (b)(2). Defendant further contends that this case is not maintainable as a class action under (b)(2)—or any other subsection—because the size of the class makes the case wholly unmanageable. Each of these issues is addressed in turn.

A. Inclusion of Claim for Punitive Damages

In 1991, Congress amended Title VII to permit plaintiffs to recover punitive damages in certain circumstances. Specifically, such damages are recoverable in cases of intentional discrimination if the plaintiff proves that the employer "engaged in a discriminatory practice or discriminatory practices with malice or with reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of an aggrieved individual." 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(b)(1).

While plaintiffs have foregone compensatory damages in this case, they do seek punitive damages to punish Wal-Mart for its allegedly "reckless disregard of the rights of its women employees to equal employment opportunity, and to deter similar misconduct by Wal-Mart and other large retailers in the future." Pls.' Mot. at 44. Defendant argues, however, that Plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages is incompatible with a(b)(2) action because such damages are not incidental to, and would in fact overwhelm, Plaintiffs' claims for injunctive relief.

Resolution of this issue is governed by Molski v. Gleich, 318 F.3d 937 (9th Cir. 2003), which holds that (b)(2) class actions can include claims for monetary damages so long as such damages are not the "predominant" relief sought, but instead are "secondary to the primary claim for injunctive or declaratory relief." Id. at 947, 950; see also Probe v. State Teachers' Ret. Sys., 780 F.2d 776, 780 (9th Cir. 1986). In making this determination, courts should examine the "specific facts and circumstances of each case," and attempt to ascertain the "intent of the plaintiffs in bringing suit." Molski, 318 F.3d at 950. In Molski, the injunctive relief "appeared to be the primary goal in the litigation," and thus the district court properly found that injunctive relief was the predominant remedy sought by the class. Id.

Notably, Molski expressly rejects using a bright line distinction between incidental[45] and non-incidental damages to determine if monetary relief predominates, reasoning that such an approach would "nullify the discretion vested in the district courts through Rule 23." Id. Rather, it endorses the case-by-case approach described above. Id. Accordingly, Defendant's contention that this case cannot be certified under (b)(2) because the punitive damages sought are not "incidental" is misplaced. As Molski also makes clear, the predominance test turns on the primary goal of the litigation, not the potential size of a punitive damage award. Id. Accordingly, Defendant's focus on the possible size of a such an award is also misplaced. Indeed, focusing on the potential size of a punitive damage award would have the perverse effect of making it more difficult to certify a class the more egregious the defendant's conduct or the larger the defendant. Such a result hardly squares with the remedial purposes of Title VII.

---

[45] Incidental damages are defined as damages that "'flow directly from liability to the class as a whole on the claims forming the basis of the injunctive or declaratory relief.'" Molski, 318 F.3d at 949 (emphasis in original) (citation omitted).

This Court has little difficulty concluding that here the equitable relief sought predominates over the claim for punitive damages. Plaintiffs' claims for injunctive and declaratory relief, if successful, would achieve very significant long-term relief in the form of fundamental changes to the manner in which Wal-Mart makes its pay and promotions decisions nationwide that would benefit not only current class members, but all future female employees as well. These benefits would be both monetary—in the form of increased class-wide remuneration—and non-monetary—in terms of increased job opportunities. See Young v. Pierce, 544 F. Supp. 1010, 1028 (E.D. Tex. 1982) ("[W]hen the relief sought is injunctive relief, the benefits . . . would inure not only to known class, but also to a future class of indefinite size."). Recovery of lost pay for all injured class members would result in additional substantial equitable relief to the class. Against this backdrop, Plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages—which, by its nature, is subject to more demanding proof requirements, and thus inherently more speculative—appears secondary in nature.

The named class representatives also affirm that their central motivation for participating in this action is to improve opportunities for women at Wal-Mart. Betty Dukes, for example, states that "[m]y primary goal [in this litigation] is to ensure that the employment practices at Wal-Mart which hinder the progress of women wishing to enter management be changed to ensure fair and equitable treatment of female employees, and to ensure women receive equal pay." Dukes Decl. ¶ 20. Edith Arana similarly avers that [m]y main concern is to end all those employment practices at Wal-Mart that have prevented women from obtaining management positions and to ensure equal pay for comparable work and equal access to the training and mentoring necessary to advance in the Company." Arana Decl. ¶ 3. See also Surgeson Decl. ¶ 13; Gunter Decl. ¶ 3; Kwapnoski Decl. ¶ 23.

Given all of the above, the Court is satisfied that Plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages is secondary to their primary goal of achieving broad equitable relief. Accordingly, inclusion of this claim does not preclude certification of this case under Rule 23(b)(2). Molski, 318 F.3d at 947-50. See also Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R. Co., 267 F.3d 147, 164 (2nd Cir. 2001) (district court may certify class under (b)(2) if it finds in its discretion that the positive weight or value of the injunctive relief sought is predominant even though punitive damages are claimed); Butler I, 1996 WL 421436, *1, *5 (rejecting defendant's argument that punitive damage claim would "overwhelm" claims for injunctive relief as conclusory and speculative); Barefield v. Chevron, 1988 WL 188433, *3 (N.D. Cal. 1988) (class claim for punitive damages did not render monetary aspect of case predominant where the injunctive and declaratory relief sought was the heart of the action).

The Court further notes that a claim for punitive damages does not detract from the homogeneity or cohesiveness of the class. Rather, it is "consistent with the notion that the focus of a (b)(2) action is the defendant's conduct toward persons sharing a common characteristic." Barefield, 1988 WL 188433, *3. Indeed, since the purpose of punitive damages is not to compensate the victim, but to punish and deter the defendant, a punitive damage claim focuses "not on facts unique to each class member, but on the defendant's conduct toward the class as a whole." Id., citing Jenkins v. Raymark Industries, 782 F.2d 468, 474 (5th Cir. 1986), reh'g denied, 785 F.2d 1034 (1986); see also Kolstad v. Am. Dental Ass'n, 527 U.S. 526, 536 (1999) (focus of punitive damage claim is on defendant's conduct). Accordingly, the "cohesive core of the (b)(2) action is . . . maintained." Barefield, 1988 WL 188433, *3.

Wal-Mart also argues that Plaintiffs' class claim for punitive damages is foreclosed by the Supreme Court's recent decision in State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co. v. Campbell, 538 U.S. 408 (2003). Nothing in State Farm, however, supports this supposition. In State Farm the Court held that a punitive damage award in an individual action improperly punished the defendant for conduct that "bore no relation to the [plaintiff's] harm." Id. at 422. Specifically, it found that the jury improperly considered conduct by State Farm that occurred in other states and did not directly affect the plaintiff. Id. at 422-23. As such, it underscored the basic proposition that a "defendant should be punished for the conduct that harmed the plaintiff, not for being an unsavory individual or business." Id. at 423. Such a principle is not, as Wal-Mart suggests, incompatible with the recovery of punitive damages in a class action.

First, courts can ensure that any award of punitive damages to the class is based solely on evidence of conduct that was directed toward the class. Second, as Plaintiffs propose here, courts can limit recovery of any punitive damages to those class members who actually recover an award of lost pay, and thus can demonstrate that they were in fact personally harmed by the defendant's conduct. Finally, courts also can ensure that any punitive damage award is allocated among the lost pay class in reasonable proportion to individual lost pay awards. Accordingly, this Court is satisfied that procedures exist that permit Plaintiffs' punitive damage claim to be managed in a manner fully consistent with the principles of State Farm.[46]

While plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages does not preclude certifying this case under Rule 23(b)(2), minimum due process requirements do apply where the monetary relief sought, albeit not "predominant," is nonetheless "substantial." Molski, 318 F.3d at 947-48. Recognizing the Supreme Court's "growing concerns regarding the certification of mandatory classes when monetary damages are involved," the Molski court held that "notice and the right to opt-out [ ] must be provided to bind absent class members when substantial monetary damages are involved." Id. at 948. The Court further indicated that any claim for punitive damages is "substantial." Id. at 951 ("Because the statutory damages . . . provide for treble [i.e. punitive] damages, the remedy must be considered substantial"); cf. In re Monumental

---

[46] In Jenkins, 782 F.2d at 474-75, for example, the Fifth Circuit affirmed a district court's certification of a punitive damage claim in a 23(b)(3) class action, noting that the jury could determine the defendants' liability to the class for punitive damages in one phase while still ensuring that only class members who are harmed recover such damages. "While no plaintiff [class member] may receive an award of punitive damages without proving that he suffered actual damages . . . . the allocation need not be made concurrently with an evaluation of the defendant's conduct." Id. at 474 (internal citations omitted). Rather, such determinations could be handled in later proceedings. Id. The court further suggested that jurors "could be allowed to award an amount of money that each class member should receive for each dollar of actual damages awarded." Id.

Life, 365 F.3d at 416-17 (due process requires provision of notice where Rule 23(b)(2) class seeks monetary damages, while provision of opt-out rights is optional).[47]

Molski further notes that notice and the opportunity to opt-out can be provided in a(b)(2) class action. 318 F.3d at 951 n.16. Indeed, the district court's discretion in this regard is well established. See, e.g., In re Monumental Life, 365 F.3d at 417 (district courts have discretion to order notice and opt-out rights when certifying a Rule 23(b)(2) class); Robinson, 267 F.3d at 165-67 (notice and opt out can be afforded (b)(2) class members with respect to non-incidental damage claims); Jefferson v. Ingersoll Int'l Inc., 195 F.3d 894, 898-99 (7th Cir. 1999) (same); Eubanks, 110 F.3d at 94. Accordingly, notice and an opportunity to opt-out shall be provided to the plaintiff class with respect to Plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages.

B. Manageability of Liability and Remedy Stages

A critical issue raised by Plaintiffs' motion is whether a class action of the size proposed—which is huge both in sheer numbers of class members and in its nationwide geographic scope—is manageable. While Rule 23(b)(2) does not expressly refer to manageability—in contrast to Rule 23(b)(3)—such a requirement is implicit in any type of class certification. See, e.g., Robinson, 267 F.3d at 164 (District court may allow (b)(2) certification if "class treatment would be efficient and manageable, thereby achieving an appreciable measure of judicial economy."); Piva v. Xerox Corp., 70 F.R.D. 378, 388 (N.D. Cal. 1975) (noting that proposed 23(b)(2) class of employees in Western Region "directly involves important considerations of manageability"). Certainly, no court would certify a class unless it believed that the case could proceed in a manageable fashion.

---

[47] The type of notice utilized in a (b)(2) action, however, need not always be "equivalent to that required in (b)(3) actions." Johnson v. Gen. Motors Corp., 598 F.2d 432, 438 (5th Cir. 1979).

Defendant contends that this case would be completely unmanageable in both the liability and remedial phases. Indeed, as Defendant repeatedly emphasizes, no court has ever confronted a motion for class certification in an employment discrimination case of this size—or anything close to it. This fact alone, however, does not preclude the Court from acting. Nonetheless, the Court agrees that it must very carefully assess the manageability issues presented by this unique case. While courts possess wide discretion to flexibly respond to manageability issues that may arise during the course of a class action, see, e.g., Blackie v. Barrack, 524 F.2d 891, 906 n.22 (9th Cir. 1975), this Court must be confident that such issues will not be of such a magnitude as to defy its ability to oversee this case in a responsible and reasonable manner.

Having given these matters considerable thought and deliberation, this Court is satisfied, for the reasons expressed below, that the liability stage of this case is not rendered unmanageable by the size of the proposed class. With respect to the remedial phase of this case, this Court also is amply satisfied that the size of the class would not present undue obstacles to managing Plaintiffs' requests for injunctive relief on both their unequal pay and promotion claims. The Court similarly finds that fashioning a lost pay remedy for Plaintiffs' unequal pay claim would be manageable. Finally, with respect to Plaintiffs' promotion claim, the Court concludes that a lost pay remedy would be manageable only for a portion of the class. The manageability of each of these aspects of this case is discussed in turn below.

1. Manageability of Liability Stage

The standard approach in Rule 23(b)(2) employment discrimination class actions is to bifurcate the case into two stages: liability and remedy. Robinson, 267 F.3d at 158, Arnold, 158 F.R.D. at 458-59. In the Stage I liability proceeding, plaintiffs are required to prove that the defendant engaged in a pattern and practice of discrimination against the class. Robinson, 267 F.3d at 158. If punitive damages are at issue, plaintiffs also must prove liability for such damages by showing that the pattern and practice of discrimination was undertaken maliciously or recklessly in the face of a perceived risk that defendant's actions would violate federal law. See Kolstad, 527 U.S at 535 (1991); Butler I, 1996 WL 421436, *1. Finally, defendant's liability for the class representatives' individual claims usually is determined in Stage I as well.

Defendant argues that determining its liability for the alleged pattern and practice of discrimination against the class would be unmanageable because "due process" would necessarily require 3,244 individual mini-trials, including testimony from 3,244 Store Managers, to determine whether each individual Wal-Mart store discriminated against class members employed at that store. Defendant cites no authority for this argument. See Def.'s Opp'n at 45. Nor is it persuasive since it is inconsistent with the fundamental character of the class action proceeding.

As courts have long recognized, the Stage I liability determination in a systemic disparate treatment case focuses on the existence (or not) of a company-wide pattern or practice of discrimination against the class. While some acts of discrimination against individual class members are usually introduced as anecdotal evidence to bring statistical evidence "convincingly to life," Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 339, the class is not required to prove that each member suffered discrimination. Id. at 360. Indeed such an approach would defeat the very efficiencies that the class action device is designed to achieve. Instead, it is plaintiffs' burden to prove that "discrimination was the company's standard operating procedure." Id. at 336.

As such, the evidence introduced during Stage I should properly focus on matters relevant to the class as a whole, such as statistical analysis and evidence of system-wide policies and practices. "[T]he stress at Stage I is upon demonstration of the defendant's broad employment policies and practices . . . ." United States v. United States Steel Corp., 520 F.2d 1043, 1053 (5th Cir. 1975); see also Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank, 467 U.S. 867, 876 (1984); Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 339-40 (statistics are valid tool for proving policy of employment discrimination); Robinson, 267 F.3d at 158-59; Thiessen v. General Electric Capital Corp., 267 F.3d 1095, 1106 (10th Cir. 2001). Likewise, defendants are expected to respond to plaintiffs' pattern and practice claim on a class-wide basis. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 360 n.46; Thiessen, 267 F.3d at 1107 ("common defenses" not "individualized defenses" were relevant at liability stage). "The point is that at the liability stage of a pattern-or-practice trial the focus often will not be on individual hiring decisions, but on a pattern of discriminatory decision-making." Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 360 n.46 (emphasis added). In short, once the court determines that there are sufficient common questions to justify proceeding as a class, the liability phase properly focuses on evidence that affects the class generally—not on individuals or other minor segments of the class.

Given that the scope of the instant class is company-wide, Defendant is no more entitled to 3,244 individual store-by-store trials than it would be entitled to try each class member's individual claim in a case of smaller scope. Notably, Teamsters involved "nationwide operations" at 51 terminals in 26 states, 431 U.S. at 328, 329 n.2; yet, the Court nowhere suggests that the employer in that case was entitled to defend itself on a terminal-by-terminal basis. Wal-Mart of course can defend against Plaintiffs' claim of a nationwide pattern and practice by arguing that its more decentralized store sub-unit by store sub-unit statistical analysis refutes the existence of any company-wide policy of discrimination. It also can introduce evidence to rebut any evidence Plaintiffs present of centralized, nationwide policies regarding Defendant's corporate culture, personnel policies or gender stereotyping. It is not, however, entitled to circumvent or defeat the class nature of the proceeding by litigating whether every individual store discriminated against individual class members.

A Stage 1 liability trial in this case would be of course a substantial undertaking—albeit no more, and probably less, so than some other complex litigation, such as certain anti-trust or patent cases. Defendant's contention that it would necessarily be unmanageable, however, is simply not persuasive.

2. Manageability of Remedy Phase

In the event that a plaintiff class establishes liability in Stage I, and the case advances to the remedy phase, courts will first "proceed to fashion class-wide injunctive relief." Robinson, 267 F.3d at 159. Defendant does not argue that this aspect of the case would present any manageability issues. Second, the court must address the remedy of lost pay (backpay and/or front pay), which usually is awarded "in order to effectuate the statutory goal [of Title VII] of compensating the victimized employee and placing him in as good a position as he would have been had he not been subject to discrimination," as well as to deter recalcitrant employers. Stewart v. General Motors Corp., 542 F.2d 445, 451 (7th Cir. 1976). Finally, if liability to the class for punitive damages has been established, this issue must be addressed as well.

As previously noted, Wal-Mart contends that any attempt to provide a lost pay remedy to a class of the size proposed here would mire the Court in a completely unmanageable endeavor. Plaintiffs respond that such problems can be avoided by employing a formula approach to streamline the process. Wal-Mart replies that formula approaches are discredited, and moreover, such an approach would still leave the Court with severe manageability issues.

In advancing their respective positions, both parties lump together Plaintiffs' promotion and equal pay claims. Consequently, both neglect to address the fact that the remedial challenges each claim presents are actually quite distinct. Having evaluated each claim separately, this Court concludes that while a formula approach is still a perfectly valid remedial tool in the appropriate case, it would not resolve all of the manageability problems presented by the promotion claim. The Court is convinced that a lost pay remedy with respect to the promotion claim can be effectively managed for only a limited subset of class members, as defined below. With respect to Plaintiffs' pay discrimination claim, the Court is well satisfied that, should Plaintiffs prevail, a process for awarding lost pay can be devised that is entirely manageable for all class members, albeit without reliance on a formula approach. Each claim is discussed in turn below. In addition, the Court addresses Defendant's contention that both the promotion and equal pay claims are rendered unmanageable by the Civil Rights Act of 1991.

a. Promotions Claim

(1) Overview of Traditional and Formula Approach to Backpay Remedy

As a general matter, courts do not begin the remedy stage on a blank slate. "'[T]he force of [the proof from the liability phase] does not dissipate.' Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 361. Rather, all class members benefit from a presumption in their favor "that any particular employment decision, during the period in which the discriminatory policy was in force, was made in pursuit of that policy." Id. at 362; see also Robinson, 267 F.3d at 159; Domingo II, 727 F.2d at 1444-45 ("'proof of a discriminatory pattern and practice creates a rebuttable presumption in favor of relief'" for individual class members) (citation omitted).

While proof of a pattern of discrimination establishes a presumption in favor of class members, it does not in and of itself entitle each class member to back (or front) pay. Pettway v. Am. Cast Iron Pipe Co. (Pettway III), 494 F.2d 211, 259 (5th Cir. 1974).

Rather, only those class members who can make a showing that they were either actually harmed by the discriminatory policy or were at least "a potential victim of the proved discrimination" are eligible to recover an award of lost pay. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 362; Robinson, 267 F.3d at 159. Thus, courts awarding lost pay face two primary tasks at the remedy stage: (1) identifying the specific class members that were either actually, or at least potentially, harmed by the employer's discriminatory policies, and (2) determining the specific amount of back or front pay each such person is owed.

In cases involving hiring or promotions, such determinations are usually made during the course of additional proceedings. In Teamsters, for example—a hiring and promotions case—the Court explained that "a district court must usually conduct additional proceedings after the liability phase of the trial to determine the scope of individual relief." Id. at 361. These proceedings typically consist of mini-hearings presided over by a special master or the court. While the burden on individual class members at this point is minimal, they must at least identify themselves and make some showing (less than a prima facie case) that they suffered an adverse employment decision. Robinson, 267 F.3d at 159. The burden then shifts to the employer to prove that the class member was denied the job or promotion for lawful reasons. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 362; Robinson, 267 F.3d at 159-60. The advantages of such an approach are obvious. It protects both the defendant and the class by ensuring that each victim, or at least potential victim, of the employer's discriminatory policy is correctly identified, and that each such victim is paid the correct amount to make him or her whole.[48]

As Plaintiffs implicitly concede, holding individual hearings for the number of women potentially entitled to backpay in this case is impractical on its face, and thus the traditional Teamsters mini-hearing approach is not feasible here. Plaintiffs contend, however, that a lost pay remedy can manageably be afforded the class through the use of a formula approach that obviates the need for individualized Teamster hearings for each class member. See Pls.' Mot. at 49 ("The lost wages due to the class can be determined by formula").

As Plaintiffs correctly point out, courts have, in certain circumstances, employed a formula to calculate a lump sum amount that represents the employer's total liability for backpay to the class. In Domingo II, 727 F.2d at 1443, for example, the Ninth Circuit held that departure from the preferred Teamsters approach is justified when subjective employment practices, including lack of objective hiring criteria and word-of-mouth recruitment, "make[ ] it difficult to determine precisely which of the claimants would have been given a better job absent discrimination, but it is clear that many should have." Domingo II, 727 F.2d at 1444. As the court further explained:

---

[48] See Stewart, 542 F.2d at 452 (Backpay awards should be made on an individualized basis whenever possible "because it will best compensate the victims of discrimination without unfairly penalizing the employer."); United States v. United States Steel Corp., 520 F.2d at 1055-1056 ("Apart from protecting the defendant, this method has the virtue of distributing the recovery to the victims who, by the greater likelihood, are entitled to it . . . . [W]e reemphasize that alternative methods possessed of superior certainty should be exhausted before the court resorts to racially drawn classwide comparisons . . . ."); Smith v. Union Oil Co., 1977 WL 77 (N.D. Cal. Aug.22, 1977), decision supplemented by, 1978 WL 13884 (N.D. Cal. June 15, 1978) (in most cases and where feasible, there should be a separate determination on an individual basis as to who is entitled to recover and the amount of such recovery).

> "[W]hen the class size or the ambiguity of promotion or hiring practices or the illegal practices continued over an extended period of time calls forth [a] quagmire of hypothetical judgment . . . a class-wide approach to the measure of back-pay is necessitated."

Id., quoting Pettway III, 494 F.2d at 261 (alterations in original); see also EEOC v. O & G Spring & Wire Forms Spec. Co., 38 F.3d 872, 879-880 & n.9 (7th Cir. 1994) (approving district court's use of formula approach); Hameed v. Int'l Ass'n of Bridge Workers, Local 396, 637 F.2d 506, 520, 521 & n.18 (8th Cir. 1980) (same) (and cases cited therein); Stewart, 542 F.2d at 452-53 (7th Cir. 1976) (same) (and cases cited therein); EEOC v. Chicago Miniature Lamp Works, 668 F. Supp. 1150, 1151-52 (N.D. Ill. 1987); Green v. United States Steel Corp., 640 F. Supp. 1521, 1525-26 (E.D. Pa.1986), aff'd in part and vacated in part on other grounds, 843 F.2d 1511 (3rd Cir. 1988), vacated in part on other grounds, 490 U.S. 1103 (1989).

In short, while a formula approach is certainly not the norm, it is a potential option where the employer uses largely subjective criteria for hiring or promotion decisions, objective requirements are minimal, and many more class members qualified for the positions than would have been hired or promoted even absent discrimination. Because it is virtually impossible in such cases to determine which class members would actually have been hired or promoted (and thus which class members were the actual victims of the defendant's discriminatory policy), there is little point in going through the exercise of individual hearings. As the Seventh Circuit explained in Stewart:

> In determining the appropriate award to be made to black employees who were unfairly denied promotions to salaried positions . . . the utilization of an individualized method of calculation is impossible. Because General Motors had no objective standards by which to measure whether a given employee deserved a promotion, deciding in individual cases whether a particular person would have been promoted but for racial discrimination would lead the district court into a "quagmire of hypothetical judgments," in which any supposed accuracy in result would be purely imaginary.

542 F.2d at 452 (internal citation omitted); see also Pettway III, 494 F.2d at 261 (In cases such as those described above, it is "not a choice between one approach more precise than another. Any method is simply a process of conjectures.").

Even in those circumstances, however, where the court properly employs a formula to calculate a lump sum backpay award to the class, it still must undertake the additional steps of determining which individual class members are eligible to share in the lump sum award and allocating the award among those eligible members. Given that the actual victims cannot be identified, courts have focused instead on ascertaining which class members were at least potentially victimized by the employer's discriminatory policy. In a promotion case, this would include any class member who met the minimum qualifications for the job and was interested in a promotion, and either applied for (and was denied) a promotion, was deterred from applying, or was unable to apply because of lack of application procedures.

The cases acknowledge that awarding backpay to all potential victims of the employer's policy (as opposed to just the actual victims) has the effect of generating a "windfall for some employees who would have never been promoted had vacancies been filled on a [non-discriminatory] basis and under-compensat[ing] the genuine victims of discrimination by forcing them to share the award with their undeserving brethren." Stewart, 542 F.2d at 452-453. For example, in O & G Spring & Wire Forms, backpay for 17 positions that would have gone to class members absent discrimination was spread over 450 persons who identified themselves as having applied (or having been deterred from applying) for the positions at issue, 38 F.3d at 879 & n.9; in Hameed, backpay for 45 apprentice positions was spread over a much larger group of "potential discriminatees," 637 F.2d at 519-20. The cases conclude, however, that this "rough justice" is better than the alternative of no remedy at all for any class member. Stewart, 542 F.2d at 453 ("Given a choice between no compensation for black employees who have been illegally denied promotion and an approximate measure of damages, we choose the latter"); see also Hameed, 637 F.2d at 521 n.19; Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249, 1291 (D.C. Cir. 1984) ("Though [Title VII] generally does not allow for backpay to those whom discrimination has not injured, this section should not be read as requiring effective denial of backpay to the large numbers of agents whom [defendant's] discrimination has injured in order to account for the risk that a small number of undeserving individuals might receive backpay.")

Defendant attempts to dismiss Domingo and other formula cases as inconsistent with Teamsters. Yet Domingo, O & G Spring & Wire Forms, Hameed, Chicago Miniature Lamp Works, and Green all post-date Teamsters. As these cases implicitly recognize, nothing in Teamsters precludes calculating a total backpay award that is allocated among potential victims, where the actual victims cannot realistically be identified even were the court to undertake individual hearings. On the contrary, Teamsters supports the notion that class members who can demonstrate that they have potentially been discriminated against are eligible to receive backpay. See Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 362 ("The Government need only show that an alleged individual discriminatee . . . was a potential victim of the proved discrimination"); see also Robinson, 267 F.3d at 159 ("a class member at the remedial stage of a pattern-or-practice claim need only show that he or she suffered an adverse employment decision 'and therefore was a potential victim of the proved [class-wide] discrimination'"), quoting Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 362; McKenzie v. Sawyer, 684 F.2d 62, 75 (D.C. Cir. 1982), abrogated on other grounds by Berger v. Iron Workers Reinforced Rodmen, Local 201, 170 F.3d 1111, 1125 (D.C. Cir. 1999) (To share in relief, class members "must make some showing that they were potential victims of the discriminatory employment practices"). Accordingly, this Court rejects Defendant's contention that Domingo and the other formula cases cited above lack weight. Indeed, Domingo is binding precedent on this Court.

Furthermore, this case presents the type of situation a formula approach was intended to address. As discussed above in section I.B.1.a(2), Wal-Mart uses largely subjective criteria for its in-store promotion decisions, and objective requirements are minimal. Furthermore, it is likely that many more class members would qualify for the challenged positions than would have been promoted absent any proven discrimination, making it virtually impossible to determine which class members were actual victims. In short, the subjectivity built into Wal-Mart's promotion system would simply call forth the "quagmire of hypothetical judgments" warned of in Domingo. In addition, the class size is large and the alleged practices have "continued over an extended period of time." Domingo II, 727 F.2d at 1444. As such, this is precisely the kind of case in which "'a class-wide approach to the measure of back-pay is necessitated.'" Id.

Nonetheless, the Court still must have confidence that a formula approach can be applied in a manageable manner in this particular case. Here, Plaintiffs have suggested that it is unnecessary at this early juncture to either determine the specifics of the formula that would be used to calculate Defendant's backpay liability to the class or detail how the Court would identify the potential victims of Defendant's alleged discriminatory promotion policy. Indeed, Plaintiffs' briefs only discuss the formula process in the most conclusory terms. While a detailed blueprint certainly is not required, the general contours should be sufficiently defined, particularly in a case of this unique magnitude, such that the Court has confidence that it is not being called upon to embark upon a process that will ultimately prove unmanageable. It is to these issues the Court turns next.

(2) Application of Class-Wide Formula Approach

(a) Using a Formula to Calculate a Lump Sum Backpay Award

While the methods for constructing back-pay formulas vary, most involve the following three steps: (1) identifying the number of positions that would have gone to class members absent discrimination, (2) estimating the total amount of earnings that would have accrued to class members in those positions, and finally (3) subtracting a mitigation amount that represents what the class members earned or would have earned during the period in question in any event. See, e.g., Domingo II, 727 F.2d at 1445 ("Determination of the [formula] award could proceed along any of several avenues, all of which are designed to estimate the difference between what non-whites actually earned and what they would have earned but for the discrimination"); O & G Spring & Wire Forms, 38 F.3d at 880, n.9 (detailing actual formula); Hameed, 637 F.2d at 520 (same); Stewart, 542 F.2d at 454; Pettway III, 494 F.2d at 262-63; Green, 640 F. Supp at 1526.

While the development of a formula in this case plainly would be a complex undertaking, Defendant does not argue that it would be unmanageable (rather, Defendant focuses on the manageability of the eligibility issues discussed below). Moreover, courts may enlist the assistance of an expert or special master under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 53. See, e.g., Pettway v. Am. Cast Iron Pipe Co. (Pettway V), 681 F.2d at 1261 (11th Cir. 1982) (formula could be decided by special master after a hearing and guidance from the court). At least at this stage of the litigation, the Court is satisfied that a formula for calculating Defendant's lump sum backpay liability to the class could be developed in a manageable manner given the Court's limitations on eligibility set forth below.[49]

---

[49] The Court also notes that where a defendant's total backpay liability to the class is set by formula in the form of a lump sum award, there is no need for the defendant to participate further in the issue of which class members are eligible to share in the award. Although Domingo cites Teamsters for the proposition that "the employer has the burden of proving that the applicant was unqualified or showing some other valid reason why the claimant was not, or would not have been, acceptable," 727 F.2d at 1445, it appears to have simply imported this procedure from Teamsters without considering whether it is necessary in a formula case. Clearly, in a traditional Teamsters model, the employer has a strong interest in contesting each individual claimant's qualifications and expressed interest in a promotion since the fewer the number of persons found to be victims of the employer's discriminatory policy, the less backpay the employer will owe. Thus, Teamsters logically provides that the employer has the opportunity to demonstrate that each claimant seeking backpay was not in fact discriminated against but rather was denied the position for lawful reasons. 431 U.S. at 362.

In a formula case, however, the employer's total backpay liability is set as a lump sum. As such, the employer does not appear to have any significant, legitimate interest in which class members share in the formula award and which do not. Indeed, Defendant has failed to clearly articulate such an interest here. This general point was acknowledged by the Ninth Circuit in Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 1996), which supports the general principle that a defendant does not necessarily have a protectable interest in contesting the validity of individual claims in a formula case, assuming the court has confidence that the formula reliably and accurately captures defendant's total liability to the class. Id. at 786. See also Pettway V, 681 F.2d at 1266 (defendant had no

(b) Determining Individual Eligibility

As noted above, even where a "formula approach" such as that endorsed in Domingo is invoked, the formula only advances the backpay remedy to the point of calculating the defendant's total backpay liability to the class. Courts still face the "eligibility phase"—i.e. the practical problem of identifying which class members were at least potential victims of the employer's discriminatory policy and thus are eligible to share in the lump sum backpay award. In a promotion case, such potential victims consist of those class members who were both (1) qualified for, and (2) interested in, a promotion but were denied that opportunity. These are two distinct factors that must be analyzed separately for manageability purposes. A class member who was qualified for, but not interested in, a promotion, would by definition not have been even potentially injured by defendant's discriminatory promotion policies, and thus would not be eligible to participate in the backpay award.

These potential victims typically constitute some subset of the class, since courts generally will not presume that every class member is both qualified for, and interested in, every promotional opportunity. See, e.g., Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 369, 370 n.55 ("the basis for objecting to a formula approach on due process grounds so long as the "amount found due the class does not exceed the amount which all members of the class together would have been entitled to receive under a correct hypothesis, which we must assume the trial court would adopt"). The Court also notes that neither O & G Spring, 38 F.3d 872, nor Hameed, 637 F.2d 506, indicate that the employer participated in eligibility determinations.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

desirability of the [promotion positions] is not so self-evident as to warrant a conclusion that all employees would prefer [the promotion] if given a free choice"). McKenzie, 684 F.2d at 76 ("The benefits illegally denied to the plaintiffs as a class were opportunities neither automatically sought nor automatically bestowed . . . . [It is not] reasonable to assume that all journeymen would wish to assume supervisory responsibilities.").

In the promotion formula cases relied upon by Plaintiffs, courts typically resolve the eligibility issue through additional proceedings wherein class members come forward, self identify, and provide some minimum information regarding their (1) qualifications for, and (2) interest in the job promotions at issue. For example, in Domingo, the Ninth Circuit stated as follows:

> In order to be eligible for back-pay [from the formula-derived lump sum fund], claimants need only prove they applied for a position or would have applied if not for Nefco's discriminatory practices. They may be required to show what their qualifications were, but do not have the burden of proving they were qualified for the position sought . . . . In determining whether claimants applied or were deterred from applying for a better position, the district court should not put an unrealistic burden on claimants . . . . All uncertainties should be resolved against the employer.

727 F.2d at 1445; see also Stewart, 542 F.2d at 453; Pettway V, 681 F.2d at 1266 (employee need only come forth with statement of employment history, jobs denied, and qualifications, not conclusive proof of such matters).

As Plaintiffs concede, such additional proceedings would be unmanageable in this case. They argue, however, that these eligibility determinations could be handled solely by reference to objective data contained in corporate records, which would eliminate the need for additional, individualized eligibility proceedings. "The determination of which class members would be entitled to backpay . . . could be drawn from the economic models that each side's experts create" which account for factors such as performance evaluation scores, tenure, and positions held. See Pls.' Reply at 23-24.

The Court agrees that the objective data from Wal-Mart eliminates the need for individualized hearings with respect to the qualifications component of the eligibility determination. As Plaintiffs assert, and Defendant does not dispute, Wal-Mart maintains an extraordinarily sophisticated information technology system. See Pls.' Opp. at 8; Bielby Decl. ¶¶ 16. A significant part of this system is Wal-Mart's "PeopleSoft" database, which is one of the most extensive data collection systems in the country. The database contains information on each employee individually with respect to job history, seniority, job review ratings, and many other factors, thereby enabling a sophisticated user to create detailed reports of individual work histories and qualifications. Id.; see also Drogin Decl. ¶¶ 6-8, 10 (describing PeopleSoft database as including (1) identifying information including name, employee ID, social security number, and gender, (2) complete job histories including all jobs held and at which stores, salary changes, promotions, transfers, etc., and (3) performance review information for all employees during class period); Cynn Decl. (discussing detailed job history and payroll data derived from Peoplesoft database for a sample of fifty employees). As such, it is plain that ample corporate data exists that would permit the Court to objectively determine which class members were minimally qualified for a given promotion. Accordingly, this aspect of the promotion backpay process is also manageable.[50]

With respect to the interest component of the eligibility determination, however, the Court faces a more complex situation. The objective data relied on by Plaintiffs—performance evaluation scores, tenure, and positions held—goes only to the issue of qualification, not interest in a position. As such, the Court finds that they are insufficient proxies for interest. Moreover, the objective data that would document interest—i.e. past applications for positions—is simply not available for many class members because, as discussed in section I.B.1.a.(2)(b), Wal-Mart did not utilize a system of posting and accepting applications for many positions during the class period. Indeed, without this data it is difficult to discern how the Court could identify which class members were interested in unposted promotions absent some type of individualized proceedings, whether it be by declaration or otherwise.

---

[50] The Court could instruct the parties to complete the task of deriving qualification related information from the database, especially since the experts already have mined the database in constructing their analyses, or it may appoint a special master and/or expert. See Labor/Community Strategy Center v. Los Angeles County Metro. Transp. Auth., 263 F.3d 1041, 1049-50 (9th Cir. 2001) (approving district court's appointment of special master with broad powers to resolve issues for purpose of enforcing court's remedial order).

Plaintiffs respond by urging the Court to dispense with the "interest" factor altogether in this case. Specifically, Plaintiffs argue that individual interest in a promotion should be irrelevant to the remedy phase because at Wal-Mart expression of interest was not a requirement for promotion in the first place. Rather, Wal-Mart operated largely under a "tap on the shoulder" method, as discussed above. Given the wide-scale absence of application procedures, Plaintiffs conclude, eligible class members should simply consist of all qualified women in the relevant "feeder pools" (i.e. all qualified women in a job category and geographical location from which promotional candidates are drawn), all of whom are identifiable from the corporate records.

While expanding eligibility to include all qualified women in the relevant feeder pools, regardless of interest, would solve the manageability issue for unposted promotional opportunities, the Court is not convinced that such an approach is justified by either the facts or current law. First, the fact that an expression of interest is not a requirement for promotion does not mean that interest is irrelevant to determining eligibility. The fact that no expression of interest is required for promotion goes to the question of which employees were qualified for promotion. Thus, a female employee need not show she expressed interest in a promotion in order to establish that she was qualified for a promotion. This fact has no logical bearing, however, on the question of whether the employee was potentially victimized by the employer's discriminatory policies because the employee was interested in (but denied) a promotion.

Second, while courts commonly rely on feeder pools in making liability determinations,[51] Plaintiffs have not pointed to any precedent that would permit this Court to rely on feeder pools to determine eligibility for a backpay award. On the contrary, Teamsters raises serious questions as to the propriety of this approach. There, the Court rejected the argument that the group of "deterred employees" eligible for make-whole relief should automatically include all employees in the "feeder pool" (i.e. all employees who were qualified to apply for a better "line-driving" job) without the need for any individualized showing that each employee was actually interested in a promotion. 431 U.S. at 368-369. The Court made this holding even though the district court found that line-driver jobs are generally considered the most desirable driving job, and that applying for the job would have been a futile act.

> While the scope and duration of the company's discriminatory policy can leave little doubt that the futility of seeking line-driver jobs was communicated to the company's minority employees, that in itself is insufficient. The known prospect of discriminatory rejection shows only that employees who wanted line-driving jobs may have been deterred from applying for them. It does not show which of the nonapplicants actually wanted such jobs . . . . [T]he desirability of the [line-driving jobs] is not so self-evident as to war> rant a conclusion that all employees would prefer to be line drivers if given a free choice.

---

[51] See, e.g., Hemmings, 285 F.3d at 1185-86; Shidaker, 833 F.2d at 631; Stender, 803 F. Supp. at 326; Butler II, 1997 WL 605754.

431 U.S. at 369. Similarly, it is not self-evident here that every (or nearly every) class member in every feeder pool desired a promotion, particularly given the relatively large feeder pools that would be at issue for many positions in this case.[52] This Court acknowledges that the eligibility issues in Teamsters raised particularly sensitive concerns because the make-whole relief included adjustments to seniority. See id. at 347-348. Nonetheless, it remains instructive on this issue.[53]

---

[52] Even if the pool of potential discrimination victims were narrowed to a particular job classification and the store or district in which each respective promotion occurs, in a company where most of the stores at issue have between 150 to 500 employees, and 6 to 8 stores per district, the size of many of the pools would likely be substantial. See Def.'s Opp. at 13 (and citations therein); Drogin Decl. ¶ 49 (constructing availability pools for each challenged promotion by including only employees in "the same job and geographic area [district or store] as the person promoted"). The Court also notes that while it is theoretically possible that in some cases a plaintiff class could prove at trial that virtually every class member in every feeder pool was interested in a promotion, this possibility appears so remote on its face in this case, given the sheer size of the class, that the Court finds that it is not a sufficient basis for certifying the entire class for promotion backpay in this instance.

[53] Plaintiffs also argue that class members should not be required to show interest in a promotion because the evidence will show that Wal-Mart's discriminatory policies discouraged women from showing interest in, or developing interest in, management positions. Oral Arg. Tr. at 79-80. This, however, is essentially an argument that interest should be irrelevant to eligibility in cases where applicants are deterred from applying or seeking promotion due to discriminatory policies. Courts, however, have routinely required deterred class members to Finally, Plaintiffs' attempt to factually distinguish Domingo is not persuasive. Plaintiffs argue that in Domingo, the employer utilized an informal application process, see Domingo II, 727 F.2d at 1445, and therefore it was reasonable to require class members to demonstrate their earlier interest on a post hoc basis, since an objective manifestation of such interest—rejected applications—was available. The employer in Domingo, however, did not in fact advertise job openings or post vacancies. Domingo v. New England Fish Co. (Domingo I), 445 F. Supp. 421, 435 (W.D. Wash. 1977). Rather, "[m]ost positions [were] filled by word-of-mouth recruitment." Id. In fact, the informal application procedures referred to in the Domingo appellate opinion appear to have been targeted toward non-class members through "[w]ord-of mouth recruitment, directed along racial lines, [which] made it especially difficult for [class members] to become aware of openings as they occurred." Domingo II, 727 F.2d at 1445. Significantly, despite the lack of job posting, Domingo still required some, albeit minimal, showing that the demonstrate interest post hoc in some manner before recovering backpay. See e.g. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 371 n.58 (with respect to deterred class members, "the District Court may find evidence of any employee's informal inquiry, expression of interest, or even unexpressed desire credible and convincing"), Domingo II, 727 F.2d at 1445 (although employer's discriminatory practices made it difficult to prove deterrence, minority employees were still required to provide some indication of their interest in a position), Hameed, 637 F.2d at 519-20 (class members who can show they were deterred from applying because of defendants' discriminatory policies are among group of "potential discriminatees" and thus eligible to recover from formula backpay fund).

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

class member had desired a promotion before being eligible to participate in the backpay award to the class. Id. (noting for example that "any request for a better position" would suffice, and that "[a]ll uncertainties should be resolved against the employer").

The Court acknowledges that backpay is a significant aspect of any make-whole remedy that should be granted whenever possible. See, e.g., Albemarle Paper Co. v. Moody, 422 U.S. 405, 421-422 (1975). Nonetheless, the Court concludes that this aspect of the remedy can not be reasonably managed on a class basis in this particular case for promotions that were not posted, such that no objective applicant data exists. Plaintiffs have not persuaded the Court that it can properly identify which class members are eligible for backpay solely by reliance on feeder pools or other objective corporate data serving as a proxy for interest. As Plaintiffs have not proposed any other manageable alternative in this case, the Court declines to certify a claim for lost pay with respect to the portion of Plaintiffs' promotion claim where no objective applicant data exist. See Williams v. Owens-Illinois, Inc., 665 F.2d 918, 929 (9th Cir. 1982) (trial judge has discretion to limit issues in class action to "'those parts of a lawsuit which lend themselves to convenient use of the class action motif'") (citations omitted); Morgan, 169 F.R.D. at 358 (limiting certification to liability and request for injunctive relief); Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(4).

Where, however, promotional opportunities were posted, Wal-Mart's advanced personnel system does contain objective applicant data documenting which class members were interested in each such promotion. In particular, two corporate electronic databases—known as Job Posting Data for hourly job vacancies, and Management Career Selection (MCS) for salaried vacancies—contain the identities of the individual applicants for posted positions. See Drogin Decl. ¶¶ 8, 44-45; Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 72, 78, 118. Thus, with respect to all posted positions, the Court finds that it can readily identify through objective data those class members who were both qualified and interested in promotional opportunities—and thus were potential victims of any proven discriminatory policy. Accordingly, for this subset of the class, the Court is confident that it could manageably determine which class members would be eligible to share in a formula-derived, lump sum backpay award to the class.[54]

The ability to identify the specific class members who are both qualified and interested would also permit the Court to calculate through a formula Defendant's total backpay liability to this subset of the class. As discussed above, most formulas involve (1) identifying the number of positions that would have gone to class members absent discrimination, (2) estimating the total earnings that would have accrued to class members in those positions, and (3) some method to account for mitigation. There are, of course, various ways to approach these steps, and the Court does not intend to limit any options at this juncture. With the data discussed above, however, the Court would be able to determine if the percentage of women selected for certain positions was commensurate with, or fell short of, the percentage of qualified women who actually applied for such positions. In the event the percentage selected falls short, this information could be used to identify the number of "shortfall" positions—i.e., the number of positions that would have gone to class members absent discrimination. This number of shortfall positions could then be used for the second step of the formula, which would involve estimating the total earnings that would have accrued to class members in those shortfall positions (based, for example, on the earnings of men in the shortfall positions). Finally, the Court would deduct an amount to account for mitigation.

---

[54] While the Court does not, and need not, at this time attempt to identify precisely which challenged positions were in fact posted, it notes that this subset of positions covers a sizeable raw number of promotions. For example, from 1998 to 2002, well over 3,000 Store Manager openings were posted and applicants were tracked in the database. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 120 (see Jobs 2 and 6 in chart entitled "Analysis of Selections from Management Job postings by Job"); Drogin Decl. ¶ 46 & Table 21. Haworth Decl. ¶¶ 72, 118 ("Wal-Mart has systematically retained records of about 580,000 actual applications received for hourly promotions and about 56,000 electronic expressions of interest in promotion to salaried management jobs since 1997"; additionally, the 2003 Assistant Manager Trainee postings generated over 40,000 applicants for promotion); Bielby Decl. ¶¶ 43-44.

In sum, the Court rejects Defendant's contention that a lost pay remedy on Plaintiffs' promotion claim is entirely unmanageable. First, the Court finds that this is the type of case in which a formula approach may be appropriate. Second, the Court concludes that a formula-based remedy would be manageable, however, only with respect to those positions for which objective applicant data is available to document class member interest. In such cases, the Court would have sufficient data to identify those class members who would be eligible to participate in a lump sum backpay award, and to fashion a formula to calculate such an award. Where no such objective data exists, however, manageability concerns preclude a lost pay remedy in this class action. Accordingly, any lost pay remedy on Plaintiffs' promotion claim would be limited to that subset of the class for whom objective applicant data exists. See Williams, 665 F.2d at 929; Morgan, 169 F.R.D. at 358; Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(4)

b. Equal Pay Claim

As indicated above, Plaintiffs' equal pay claim presents issues that are quite distinct from plaintiffs' promotion claim. Having considered these issues, the Court concludes that, should plaintiffs prevail on the merits, a lost pay remedy for the class would be manageable. As previously discussed, Plaintiffs would enter the remedy phase with a presumption in their favor that any unequal pay was due to Defendant's discriminatory policy and practice. See Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 361. In order to award lost pay, however, the Court still must be able to (1) identify which class members were actually, or at least potentially, victimized by the employer's discriminatory pay policies, and (2) calculate the specific amount of lost pay that each such person is owed. As discussed below, the Court is well satisfied that it could accomplish both tasks in a manageable fashion and without resort to a formula approach.

(1) Identification of victimized class members

With respect to the first task, the primary manageability obstacle posed by the promotion claim simply is not present here. As discussed above, courts are not generally willing to assume, for purposes of granting make-whole relief, that all employees are uniformly interested in every promotional opportunity, given the various considerations that go into such a decision. This necessitates some examination of the interest levels of individual class members, as discussed above in terms of identifying objective information from the promotion databases. In contrast, courts can safely assume that all employees uniformly desire equal pay for equal work. Indeed, equal pay for equal work is a benefit that automatically flows to all employees. Thus, there is simply no need to assess individual interest levels with respect to equal pay claims. Rather, virtually all of the potential victims of an employer's discriminatory pay policy—i.e. those class members who were paid less than male employees for comparable work—can be identified by reference to objective criteria such as pay rates and job positions held.

It is also clear that identifying these potential victims would be a manageable task in this particular case. As discussed above, Defendant's PeopleSoft database contains a wide range of personnel and payroll data enabling a sophisticated user to create detailed reports of individual work and earnings histories as well as comparisons between workers. In addition, Wal-Mart maintains computerized bi-weekly payroll information for each and every employee working in the United States. See Drogin Decl. ¶ 7 (noting that the payroll data is capable of being merged into the PeopleSoft database for the creation of earnings reports). Thus, the objective data necessary to identify potential equal pay victims is readily available in this case.

Moreover, there is sufficient objective data available to identify not only the potential victims but also the actual victims of any proven discriminatory pay policy—i.e. those class members who not only were paid less for comparable work but who also were at least equally qualified as their male counterparts. This requires a more sophisticated use of the data because determining qualifications requires an analysis of additional factors. Again, however, Wal-

Mart's database contains the critical information necessary to perform such an analysis for each employee individually, including job history, seniority, job review ratings, weeks worked, full-time versus part-time status, regular-time versus over-time, and store location. See Drogin Decl. ¶¶ 67, 69, 71; Cynn Decl.

It would be premature of course for the Court to determine at this juncture precisely which factors should be relied upon to compare qualifications. Nor is it necessary to account for every possible factor that might be relevant to qualifications. As the case law repeatedly emphasizes, when calculating back-pay awards "unrealistic exactitude is not required, and [ ] uncertainties in determining what an employee would have earned but for the discrimination should be resolved against the discriminating employer." Shipes, 987 F.2d at 317 (citations omitted); see also Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 372; McKenzie, 684 F.2d at 77; EEOC v. Chicago Miniature Lamp Works, 640 F. Supp. 1291, 1298-99 (N.D. Ill. 1986) (accepting lack of precision at remedy phase due to subjectivity in defendant's hiring method). The Court thus flatly rejects Defendant's argument that any comparison of male and female employees would be impossible because the available data does not include dozens of factors identified in a survey of Store Managers as being relevant to pay decisions. Oral Arg. Tr. at 105, 125-26.[55] Rather, the Court is satisfied that it will have access to sufficient data to meaningfully compare the qualifications of female and male employees doing comparable work for purposes of calculating lost pay. See National Treasury Employees Union v. United States, 54 Fed. Cl. 791, 795, 800 (2002) (in computing backpay for class of 210,000 employees court relied on "data concerning the class member's agency, occupation, geographic location, and grade," along with the use of "a few simplifying rules and assumptions to allow for the computation[ ] to be completed with reasonable accuracy, and in a reasonable amount of time").

---

[55] As noted previously, the Court has stricken references to Defendant's Store Manager survey in Dr. Haworth's declaration for failure to satisfy the standards of Fed. R. Evid. 702 and 703. See Order re Motions to Strike. Moreover, even this survey indicates that the most important factors identified by the Store Managers declarations actually are in Defendant's database.

[Footnote continued from previous page]

e.g., "minimum pay established for the job classification by Wal-Mart's pay guidelines," and performance. See Haworth Decl., Appendix Vol. 2, Tab 16 (chart entitled "Store Manager Declarations: Percentage of Decisions in Which Factors Play a Role in Determining Starting Hourly Pay"); see also Drogin Reply Decl., Ex. 2 (Wal-Mart "Field Associate Compensation Guidelines"). While the data does not capture pre-Wal-Mart experience, the Court concludes that this one factor does not prevent it from making sufficient comparisons between class members and male employees for purposes of calculating lost pay. Segar, 738 F.2d at 1274-76 (affirming trial court's finding that plaintiffs' evidence was sufficient for backpay award despite failure to account for aspects of prior experience, especially where the past experience at issue was not used by defendant as a minimum objective qualification, and where it was defined subjectively and amorphously). Other factors noted by defense counsel at oral argument, such as willingness to work weekends or rotating shifts, or live cricket experience, are not significant, even according to Defendant's own data. See Haworth Decl. ¶ 187.

(2) Calculation of individual backpay awards

Once the actual victims of a proven discriminatory pay policy have been identified, Defendant's PeopleSoft data system also can facilitate the calculation of individualized damage awards. Since the database contains payroll information, it could be used to calculate the differential between each individual victim and the comparable male pay rate. Again, the Court need not decide at this time exactly how such calculations would be made. Rather, suffice it to say that the Court is confident that a fair and manageable method can be devised. See Albemarle Paper Co., 422 U.S. at 419, 421 (Congress' purpose in vesting discretionary powers in the courts to provide relief under Title VII was "to make possible the 'fashion[ing][of] the most complete relief possible'") (citation omitted).

The Court's approach here—with respect to both the identification and calculation issues—is similar to that taken by the Fifth Circuit in Shipes, 987 F.2d 311. In Shipes, the plaintiff class of African-American workers alleged, similar to this case, that the employer used "entirely subjective personnel processes" to set discriminatory pay rates. Id. at 316. After the plaintiffs proved class-wide liability, the employer urged the Court to employ a Domingo-type formula approach to awarding backpay. The district court declined and instead appointed an expert to determine the amount of backpay, if any, due each class member. The expert developed a model for assessing backpay by comparing the starting pay of class members and white employees with similar qualifications, and then awarding the differential amount to those class members who suffered an actual loss. Id. at 319. The district court's individualized procedure was affirmed on appeal. Id. at 315-19 ("The fact that a class is large does not mean that pro rata [formula] relief should automatically be ordered. . . . [T]here should be, if possible, a determination on an individual basis as to which class members are entitled to damages and the amount of such recovery.").

Notably, Shipes makes no mention of any need for Teamsters hearings or any kind of employer participation in the process of determining which employees are entitled to backpay, instead relying exclusively on corporate records. Shipes, 987 F.2d at 317-19. This is consistent with the fact that Teamsters was not an equal pay (nor a formula) case, but a hiring/promotion case that required determinations that could not be capably captured in that case by objective data. Indeed, where, as here, the actual victims of any discriminatory pay policy, and the amount of lost pay due, can be determined based on objective data, a remedy-phase Teamsters mini-hearing is simply unnecessary. See also Liberles v. County of Cook, 709 F.2d 1122, 1127, 1136 (7th Cir. 1983) (where backpay is awarded for salary discrimination alone, and where evidence of pay rates and comparative qualifications exists, "individualized hearings are unnecessary").

In sum, the Court is satisfied that the actual victims of a proven discriminatory pay policy can be sufficiently identified and compensated through reference to corporate records, and that this can be done on an individualized basis without resort to a Domingo-type formula and without the need for Team- sters hearings.[56] Accordingly, the Court rejects Defendant's contention that a manageable remedial process for awarding backpay as compensation for equal pay violations cannot be fashioned in this case.[57]

c. The 1991 Civil Rights Act

In a final attempt to demonstrate the unmanageability of Plaintiffs' promotion and equal pay claims, Defendant invokes the Civil Rights Act of 1991, Pub.L. No. 102-166, 105 Stat. 1071 (1991); 42 U.S.C. § 2000e. Specifically, Defendant argues that this Act entitles it to present a "mixed-motive" defense with respect to each class member, which would necessitate individualized hearings. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B). While neither party has cited cases applying the "mixed motive" defense in a class action context, Defendant's argument completely lacks merit since, in any event, Plaintiffs have elected "to pursue their claims solely under [a 42 U.S.C.] § 2000e-2(a) [single-motive theory]." Plaintiffs' Reply at 25 (emphasis in original).

---

[56] While Plaintiffs in their briefing assumed the use of a formula to calculate backpay for both promotion and equal pay claims, at oral argument Plaintiffs' counsel was "fully supportive" of the approach taken herein. Oral Arg. Tr. at 70.

[57] Defendant notes that it took the Shipes expert several years to complete the process for a much smaller class, and suggests that such a process would therefore be unmanageable in a case of this scope. See Shipes, 987 F.2d at 315. While the reason for the length of time in Shipes is not apparent, this Court is confident that advances in technology since the Shipes decision in 1993, combined with the sophistication of Defendant's database, will allow for a backpay award process to proceed at a manageable pace in this case.

Title VII makes it an "unlawful employment practice for an employer . . . to discriminate against any individual . . . because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1) (emphasis added). Courts commonly view the causation issue in employment discrimination cases by separating them into two categories. In "single-motive" cases, causation is seen as a binary question where the true basis for the adverse employment action is either legal or illegal. See Costa v. Desert Palace, Inc. (Costa II), 299 F.3d 838, 856 (9th Cir. 2002), aff'd, 539 U.S. 90 (2003). In "mixed-motive" cases, the factfinder concludes that the adverse action was the result of a combination of both legal and illegal factors. Id.

In Price Waterhouse, the Supreme Court held that a finding of mixed-motives would provide a complete defense. 490 U.S. at 244, 261. In response, Congress amended Title VII in 1991, allowing plaintiffs to prevail in a mixed motive case. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(m). Congress further provided, however, that in such cases, the employer can limit the plaintiff's remedies to declaratory relief, certain types of injunctive relief, and attorney's fees and costs, if the employer successfully demonstrates that it would have taken the same action in the absence of the impermissible motivating factor. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B). This defense is generally referred to as the "same decision affirmative defense." See, e.g., Costa II, 299 F.3d at 857.

Nothing in the "mixed-motive" provisions of the 1991 Civil Rights Act—which were enacted to strengthen and expand employee rights under Title

VII[58]—or the governing case law, create any manageability concerns in this case. First, in practical terms, the 1991 amendments do not affect the presentation of evidence at the liability phase. As the Ninth Circuit explained in Costa II:

> [W]e emphasize that there are not two fundamentally different types of Title VII cases. In some cases, the employer may be entitled to the "same decision" affirmative defense instruction. In others, it may not. The employee's ultimate burden of proof in all cases remains the same: to show by a preponderance of the evidence that the challenged employment decision was "because of" discrimination.

Costa II, 299 F.3d at 857. Thus, at trial both parties will present evidence on the issue of whether any disparities between male and female employees with respect to pay and promotion are the result of a pattern and practice of intentional gender discrimination or legitimate factors. As discussed above, the liability phase of the case focuses on the class as a whole, not individualized employment decisions. Thus, the "same decision" defense with respect to individual class members will play no role in the liability phase of this case.

---

[58] "The Civil Rights Act of 1991 . . . was enacted to restore civil rights limited by then-recent Supreme Court decisions and to 'strengthen existing protections and remedies available under federal civil rights laws to provide more effective deterrence and adequate compensation for victims of discrimination.'" E.E.O.C. v. Luce, Forward, Hamilton & Scripps ("Luce"), 345 F.3d 742, 747 (9th Cir. 2003), quoting H.R. Rep. No. 102-40(II), at 1 (1991), reprinted in 1991 U.S.S.C.A.N. 549; Duffield v. Robertson Stephens & Co., 144 F.3d 1182, 1192 (9th Cir. 1998), overruled on other grounds by Luce, 345 F.3d 742 ("The purpose of the Act was uniformly to expand employees' rights and 'to increase the possible remedies available to civil rights plaintiffs.'") (citation omitted) (emphasis in original).

If a jury finds, in the liability phase, that Plaintiffs have proven a pattern of intentional gender discrimination, and that Wal-Mart's evidence has failed to show that one or more legitimate motives accounted in part for that discrimination, then Plaintiffs will prevail on their single motive theory. In that event, the Act would provide no basis for the assertion of a "same decision" defense at the remedy stage since, by the explicit statutory language, such defense applies only where the illegal conduct was the result of mixed-motives. See 42 U.S.C.2000e-5(g)(2)(B) (limiting "same decision" defense to "claim[s] in which an individual proves a violation under section 2000e-2(m) [the mixed-motive provision]"); Desert Palace, Inc. v. Costa (Costa I), 539 U.S. 90 (2003).

If the jury finds that the challenged conduct results either from entirely legitimate factors or a mix of legitimate factors and illegal discrimination, then the claims for lost pay and punitive damages will conclude in Defendant's favor, given Plaintiffs' election to forego seeking the full panoply of remedies that would require adjudication of a "same-decision" defense. Thus, Plaintiffs are not attempting to unilaterally manipulate the trial proceedings, as Defendant suggests; rather, they simply have elected to forego a certain potential remedies to which they might otherwise be entitled. Given all of the above, it is clear that the "same decision" defense—which only pertains to the scope of the remedy—will not be an issue in this case regardless of whether Plaintiffs or Defendant prevails at the liability phase. Accordingly, the Court rejects Defendant's argument that the 1991 Civil Rights Act prevents certification of a class in this case.

CONCLUSION

For all of the foregoing reasons, this Court finds that Plaintiffs' motion for class certification should be granted in part, and denied in part, consistent with this decision and as set forth below. This Court retains, of course, the discretion to revisit this certification should unexpected circumstances arise. As the Ninth Circuit has explained, "[b]ecause class actions vary so widely in their circumstances, the trial judge is vested with broad discretionary control over the conduct of such actions enabling the presiding judge to respond fluidly to the varying needs of particular cases." Officers for Justice v. Civil Service Comm'n, 688 F.2d 615, 633 (9th Cir. 1982). Indeed, district courts have the inherent discretion to review class certification decisions at any time. Armstrong, 275 F.3d at 872, n.28; Barefield, 1988 WL 188433 (N.D. Cal. 1988) (class certification orders are "inherently tentative and may be modified as circumstances require").

Based on the current record, however, the Court is well satisfied that Plaintiffs have met their burden of demonstrating that each of the Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 23(a) requirements are satisfied, as follows:

1. Numerosity: This factor is not contested, and the Court finds joinder would be impracticable in this case.

2. Commonality: Plaintiffs have satisfied their burden of showing the existence of significant legal and factual issues concerning Defendant's alleged company-wide discriminatory pay and promotion policies that are common to the entire class. In particular, Plaintiffs have provided:

> (a) evidence of common company policies and practices, including subjective decision-making, a culture of corporate uniformity, and gender stereotyping;
>
> (b) expert opinion establishing statistical evidence of gender disparities which support an inference of company-wide discrimination in both pay and promotions; and
>
> (c) anecdotal evidence from class members of discriminatory attitudes held or tolerated by management.

3. Typicality: Plaintiffs have satisfactorily shown that the claims of the named plaintiffs are reasonably co-extensive with those of the class as a whole.

4. Adequacy: Plaintiffs have satisfactorily shown that the interests of the class representatives do not conflict with those of the class members. Class counsel are qualified to conduct this litigation.

Plaintiffs also have met their burden of demonstrating that the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 23(b)(2) are satisfied here in that Defendant "has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief with respect to the class as a whole." As discussed above, however, the class shall be afforded notice and an opportunity to opt-out in order to satisfy due process considerations.

The Court further concludes that Plaintiffs' claim for equal pay is manageable with respect to issues of liability and all forms of requested relief. Finally, the Court finds that Plaintiffs' promotion claim is manageable with respect to issues of liability and injunctive and declaratory relief. The Court finds, however, that with respect to the remedy of lost pay, it is manageable only with respect to those challenged promotions where objective data is available to document class member interest in the respective challenged promotion. Thus, the Court denies certification, on grounds of unmanageability, with respect to Plaintiffs' promotion claims for lost pay (and hence punitive damages) as to those class members for whom no such data is available.

Accordingly, and good cause appearing, it is HEREBY ORDERED as follows:

1. Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification is GRANTED IN PART and DENIED IN PART consistent with this decision.

2. The Court certifies the following class for purposes of liability, injunctive and declaratory relief, punitive damages,[59] and lost pay, except that class members for whom there is no available objective data documenting their interest in challenged promotions shall be limited to injunctive and de-

---

[59] The Court emphasizes that in the event Plaintiffs are able to establish liability, punitive damages would not flow automatically from such a finding. Rather, only those class members who establish that they are entitled to an award of lost pay, and thus demonstrate individual harm from Defendant's conduct, would be eligible to receive such damages. See section II.A. The Court further notes that the fact that this subset of the class is not identifiable now does not preclude class notice at this juncture. Class action notices are typically sent to all class members who may be entitled to recover, not to those whose right to recover has already been established.

claratory relief with respect to plaintiffs' promotion claim:

> All women employed at any Wal-Mart domestic retail store at any time since December 26, 1998, who have been or may be subjected to Wal-Mart's challenged pay and management track promotions policies and practices.

3. This action shall be bifurcated into separate liability and remedy phases.

4. The individual racial discrimination claims asserted by named plaintiffs Betty Dukes and Cleo Page shall be severed from the class case.

5. The parties shall appear on Wednesday, July 28, 2004 at 2:00 p.m. for a status conference to discuss the issue of notice to the class, and other scheduling and case management issues. A Joint Status Statement shall be filed no later than 10 days in advance of the status conference.

IT IS SO ORDERED.

APPENDIX C

FILED

FEB 13 2009

MOLLY C. DWYER, CLERK
U.S. COURT OF APPEALS

FOR PUBLICATION
UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS
FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

BETTY DUKES; PATRICIA SURGESON; CLEO PAGE; DEBORAH GUNTER; KAREN WILLIAMSON; CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI; EDITH ARANA, Plaintiffs – Appellees v. WAL-MART, INC., Defendant – Appellant.	No. 04-16688 D.C. No. CV-01-02252-MJJ ORDER
BETTY DUKES; PATRICIA SURGESON; CLEO PAGE; DEBORAH GUNTER; KAREN WILLIAMSON; CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI; EDITH ARANA,	No. 04-16720 D.C. No. CV-01-02252-MJJ

Plaintiffs – Appellants,

WAL-MART, INC.,

Defendant – Appellee.

KOZINSKI, Chief Judge:

Upon the vote of a majority of nonrecused active judges, it is ordered that this case be reheard en banc pursuant to Circuit Rule 35-3. The three-judge panel opinion shall not be cited as precedent by or to any court of the Ninth Circuit.

Judges McKeown, Rawlinson and Bybee did not participate in the deliberations or vote in this case.

APPENDIX D

---

28 U.S.C. § 2072 provides:

§ 2072. Rules of procedure and evidence; power to prescribe

(a) The Supreme Court shall have the power to prescribe general rules of practice and procedure and rules of evidence for cases in the United States district courts (including proceedings before magistrates thereof) and courts of appeals.

(b) Such rules shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right. All laws in conflict with such rules shall be of no further force or effect after such rules have taken effect.

(c) Such rules may define when a ruling of a district court is final for the purposes of appeal under section 1291 of this title.

42 U.S.C. § 1981 provides:

§ 1981. Equal rights under the law

(a) Statement of equal rights

All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to make and enforce contracts, to sue, be parties, give evidence, and to the full and equal benefit of all laws and proceedings for the security of persons and property as is enjoyed by white citizens, and shall be subject to like punishment, pains, penalties, taxes, licenses, and exactions of every kind, and to no other.

(b) "Make and enforce contracts" defined

For purposes of this section, the term "make and enforce contracts" includes the making, performance, modification, and termination of contracts, and the enjoyment of all benefits, privileges, terms, and conditions of the contractual relationship.

(c) Protection against impairment

The rights protected by this section are protected against impairment by nongovernmental discrimination and impairment under color of State law.

42 U.S.C. § 1981a provides:

§ 1981a. Damages in cases of intentional discrimination in employment

(a) Right of recovery

(1) Civil rights

In an action brought by a complaining party under section 706 or 717 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 [42 U.S.C. 2000e-5, 2000e-16] against a respondent who engaged in unlawful intentional discrimination (not an employment practice that is unlawful because of its disparate impact) prohibited under section 703, 704, or 717 of the Act [42 U.S.C. 2000e-2, 2000e-3, 2000e-16], and provided that the complaining party cannot recover under section 1981 of this title, the complaining party may recover compensatory and punitive damages as allowed in subsection (b) of this section, in addition to any relief authorized by section 706(g) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, from the respondent.

(2) Disability

In an action brought by a complaining party under the powers, remedies, and procedures set forth in section 706 or 717 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 [42 U.S.C. 2000e-5, 2000e-16] (as provided in section 107(a) of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12117(a)), and section 794a(a)(1) of title 29, respectively) against a respondent who engaged in unlawful intentional discrimination (not an employment practice that is unlawful because of its disparate impact) under section 791 of title 29 and the regulations implementing section 791 of title 29, or who violated the requirements of section 791 of title 29 or the regulations implementing section 791 of title 29 concerning the provision of a reasonable accommodation, or section 102 of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 (42 U.S.C. 12112), or committed a violation of section 102(b)(5) of the Act, against an individual, the complaining party may recover compensatory and punitive damages as allowed in subsection (b) of this section, in addition to any relief authorized by section 706(g) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, from the respondent.

(3) Reasonable accommodation and good faith effort

In cases where a discriminatory practice involves the provision of a reasonable accommodation pursuant to section 102(b)(5) of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 [42 U.S.C. 12112(b)(5)] or regulations implementing section 791 of title 29, damages may not be awarded under this section where the covered entity demonstrates good faith efforts, in consultation with the person with the disability who has informed the covered entity that accommodation is needed, to identify and make a reasonable accommodation that would provide such individual with an equally effective opportunity and would not cause an undue hardship on the operation of the business.

(b) Compensatory and punitive damages

(1) Determination of punitive damages

A complaining party may recover punitive damages under this section against a respondent (other than a government, government agency or political subdivision) if the complaining party demonstrates that the respondent engaged in a discriminatory practice or discriminatory practices with malice or with reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of an aggrieved individual.

(2) Exclusions from compensatory damages

Compensatory damages awarded under this section shall not include backpay, interest on backpay, or any other type of relief authorized under section 706(g) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 [42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(g)].

(3) Limitations

The sum of the amount of compensatory damages awarded under this section for future pecuniary losses, emotional pain, suffering, inconvenience, mental anguish, loss of enjoyment of life, and other nonpecuniary losses, and the amount of punitive damages awarded under this section, shall not exceed, for each complaining party—

(A) in the case of a respondent who has more than 14 and fewer than 101 employees in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year, $50,000;

(B) in the case of a respondent who has more than 100 and fewer than 201 employees in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year, $100,000; and

(C) in the case of a respondent who has more than 200 and fewer than 501 employees in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year, $200,000; and

(D) in the case of a respondent who has more than 500 employees in each of 20 or more calendar weeks in the current or preceding calendar year, $300,000.

(4) Construction

Nothing in this section shall be construed to limit the scope of, or the relief available under, section 1981 of this title.

(c) Jury trial

If a complaining party seeks compensatory or punitive damages under this section—

(1) any party may demand a trial by jury; and

(2) the court shall not inform the jury of the limitations described in subsection (b)(3) of this section.

(d) Definitions

As used in this section:

(1) Complaining party

The term "complaining party" means—

(A) in the case of a person seeking to bring an action under subsection (a)(1) of this section, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Attorney General, or a person who may bring an action or proceeding under title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq.); or

(B) in the case of a person seeking to bring an action under subsection (a)(2) of this section, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, the Attorney General, a person who may bring an action or proceeding under section 794a(a)(1) of title 29, or a person who may bring an action or proceeding under title I of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990 [42 U.S.C. 12111 et seq.].

(2) Discriminatory practice

The term "discriminatory practice" means the discrimination described in paragraph (1), or the discrimination or the violation described in paragraph (2), of subsection (a) of this section.

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2 provides in relevant part:

§ 2000e-2. Unlawful employment practices

(a) Employer practices

It shall be an unlawful employment practice for an employer—

(1) to fail or refuse to hire or to discharge any individual, or otherwise to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; or

(2) to limit, segregate, or classify his employees or applicants for employment in any way which would deprive or tend to deprive any individual of employment opportunities or otherwise adversely affect his status as an employee, because of such individual's race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

* * *

(k) Burden of proof in disparate impact cases

(1)(A) An unlawful employment practice based on disparate impact is established under this subchapter only if—

(i) a complaining party demonstrates that a respondent uses a particular employment practice that causes a disparate impact on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin and the respondent fails to demonstrate that the challenged practice is job related for the position in question and consistent with business necessity; or

(ii) the complaining party makes the demonstration described in subparagraph (C) with respect to an alternative employment practice and the respondent refuses to adopt such alternative employment practice.

(B)(i) With respect to demonstrating that a particular employment practice causes a disparate impact as described in subparagraph (A)(i), the complaining party shall demonstrate that each particular challenged employment practice causes a disparate impact, except that if the complaining party can demonstrate to the court that the elements of a respondent's decisionmaking process are not capable of separation for analysis, the decisionmaking process may be analyzed as one employment practice.

(ii) If the respondent demonstrates that a specific employment practice does not cause the disparate impact, the respondent shall not be required to demonstrate that such practice is required by business necessity.

(C) The demonstration referred to by subparagraph (A)(ii) shall be in accordance with the law as it existed on June 4, 1989, with respect to the concept of "alternative employment practice".

(2) A demonstration that an employment practice is required by business necessity may not be used as a defense against a claim of intentional discrimination under this subchapter.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subchapter, a rule barring the employment of an individual who currently and knowingly uses or possesses a controlled substance, as defined in schedules I and II of section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)), other than the use or possession of a drug taken under the supervision of a licensed health care professional, or any other use or possession authorized by the Controlled Substances Act [21 U.S.C. 801 et seq.] or any other provision of Federal law, shall be considered an unlawful employment practice under this subchapter only if such rule is adopted or applied with an intent to discriminate because of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

* * *

(m) Impermissible consideration of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin in employment practices

Except as otherwise provided in this subchapter, an unlawful employment practice is established when the complaining party demonstrates that race, color, religion, sex, or national origin was a motivating factor for any employment practice, even though other factors also motivated the practice.

* * *

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5 provides in relevant part:

§ 2000e-5. Enforcement provisions

* * *

(g) Injunctions; appropriate affirmative action; equitable relief; accrual of back pay; reduction of back pay; limitations on judicial orders

(1) If the court finds that the respondent has intentionally engaged in or is intentionally engaging in an unlawful employment practice charged in the complaint, the court may enjoin the respondent from engaging in such unlawful employment practice, and order such affirmative action as may be appropriate, which may include, but is not limited to, reinstatement or hiring of employees, with or without back pay (payable by the employer, employment agency, or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the unlawful employment practice), or any other equitable relief as the court deems appropriate. Back pay liability shall not accrue from a date more than two years prior to the filing of a charge with the Commission. Interim earnings or amounts earnable with reasonable diligence by the person or persons discriminated against shall operate to reduce the back pay otherwise allowable.

(2)(A) No order of the court shall require the admission or reinstatement of an individual as a member of a union, or the hiring, reinstatement, or promotion of an individual as an employee, or the payment to him of any back pay, if such individual was refused admission, suspended, or expelled, or was refused employment or advancement or was suspended or discharged for any reason other than discrimination on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin or in violation of section 2000e-3(a) of this title.

(B) On a claim in which an individual proves a violation under section 2000e-2(m) of this title and a respondent demonstrates that the respondent would have taken the same action in the absence of the impermissible motivating factor, the court—

(i) may grant declaratory relief, injunctive relief (except as provided in clause (ii)), and attorney's fees and costs demonstrated to be directly attributable only to the pursuit of a claim under section 2000e-2(m) of this title; and

(ii) shall not award damages or issue an order requiring any admission, reinstatement, hiring, promotion, or payment, described in subparagraph (A).

* * *

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 provides:

Rule 23. Class Actions

(a) Prerequisites. One or more members of a class may sue or be sued as representative parties on behalf of all members only if:

(1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable;

(2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class;

(3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and

(4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class.

(b) Types of Class Actions. A class action may be maintained if Rule 23(a) is satisfied and if:

(1) prosecuting separate actions by or against individual class members would create a risk of:

(A) inconsistent or varying adjudications with respect to individual class members that would establish incompatible standards of conduct for the party opposing the class; or

(B) adjudications with respect to individual class members that, as a practical matter, would be dispositive of the interests of the other members not parties to the individual adjudications or would substantially impair or impede their ability to protect their interests;

(2) the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole; or

(3) the court finds that the questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy. The matters pertinent to these findings include:

(A) the class members' interests in individually controlling the prosecution or defense of separate actions;

(B) the extent and nature of any litigation concerning the controversy already begun by or against class members;

(C) the desirability or undesirability of concentrating the litigation of the claims in the particular forum; and

(D) the likely difficulties in managing a class action.

(c) Certification Order; Notice to Class Members; Judgment; Issues Classes; Subclasses.

(1) Certification Order.

(A) Time to Issue. At an early practicable time after a person sues or is sued as a class representative, the court must determine by order whether to certify the action as a class action.

(B) Defining the Class; Appointing Class Counsel. An order that certifies a class action must define the class and the class claims, issues, or defenses, and must appoint class counsel under Rule 23(g).

(C) Altering or Amending the Order. An order that grants or denies class certification may be altered or amended before final judgment.

(2) Notice.

(A) For (b)(1) or (b)(2) Classes. For any class certified under Rule 23(b)(1) or (b)(2), the court may direct appropriate notice to the class.

(B) For (b)(3) Classes. For any class certified under Rule 23(b)(3), the court must direct to class members the best notice that is practicable under the circumstances, including individual notice to all members who can be identified through reasonable effort. The notice must clearly and concisely state in plain, easily understood language:

(i) the nature of the action;

(ii) the definition of the class certified;

(iii) the class claims, issues, or defenses;

(iv) that a class member may enter an appearance through an attorney if the member so desires;

(v) that the court will exclude from the class any member who requests exclusion;

(vi) the time and manner for requesting exclusion; and

(vii) the binding effect of a class judgment on members under Rule 23(c)(3).

(3) Judgment. Whether or not favorable to the class, the judgment in a class action must:

(A) for any class certified under Rule 23(b)(1) or (b)(2), include and describe those whom the court finds to be class members; and

(B) for any class certified under Rule 23(b)(3), include and specify or describe those to whom the Rule 23(c)(2) notice was directed, who have not requested exclusion, and whom the court finds to be class members.

(4) Particular Issues. When appropriate, an action may be brought or maintained as a class action with respect to particular issues.

(5) Subclasses. When appropriate, a class may be divided into subclasses that are each treated as a class under this rule.

(d) Conducting the Action.

(1) In General. In conducting an action under this rule, the court may issue orders that:

(A) determine the course of proceedings or prescribe measures to prevent undue repetition or complication in presenting evidence or argument;

(B) require--to protect class members and fairly conduct the action--giving appropriate notice to some or all class members of:

(i) any step in the action;

(ii) the proposed extent of the judgment; or

(iii) the members' opportunity to signify whether they consider the representation fair and adequate, to intervene and present claims or defenses, or to otherwise come into the action;

(C) impose conditions on the representative parties or on intervenors;

(D) require that the pleadings be amended to eliminate allegations about representation of absent persons and that the action proceed accordingly; or

(E) deal with similar procedural matters.

(2) Combining and Amending Orders. An order under Rule 23(d)(1) may be altered or amended from time to time and may be combined with an order under Rule 16.

(e) Settlement, Voluntary Dismissal, or Compromise. The claims, issues, or defenses of a certified class may be settled, voluntarily dismissed, or compromised only with the court's approval. The following procedures apply to a proposed settlement, voluntary dismissal, or compromise:

(1) The court must direct notice in a reasonable manner to all class members who would be bound by the proposal.

(2) If the proposal would bind class members, the court may approve it only after a hearing and on finding that it is fair, reasonable, and adequate.

(3) The parties seeking approval must file a statement identifying any agreement made in connection with the proposal.

(4) If the class action was previously certified under Rule 23(b)(3), the court may refuse to approve a settlement unless it affords a new opportunity to request exclusion to individual class members who had an earlier opportunity to request exclusion but did not do so.

(5) Any class member may object to the proposal if it requires court approval under this subdivision (e); the objection may be withdrawn only with the court's approval.

(f) Appeals. A court of appeals may permit an appeal from an order granting or denying class-action certification under this rule if a petition for permission to appeal is filed with the circuit clerk within 14 days after the order is entered. An appeal does not stay proceedings in the district court unless the district judge or the court of appeals so orders.

(g) Class Counsel.

(1) Appointing Class Counsel. Unless a statute provides otherwise, a court that certifies a class must appoint class counsel. In appointing class counsel, the court:

(A) must consider:

(i) the work counsel has done in identifying or investigating potential claims in the action;

(ii) counsel's experience in handling class actions, other complex litigation, and the types of claims asserted in the action;

(iii) counsel's knowledge of the applicable law; and

(iv) the resources that counsel will commit to representing the class;

(B) may consider any other matter pertinent to counsel's ability to fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class;

(C) may order potential class counsel to provide information on any subject pertinent to the appointment and to propose terms for attorney's fees and nontaxable costs;

(D) may include in the appointing order provisions about the award of attorney's fees or nontaxable costs under Rule 23(h); and

(E) may make further orders in connection with the appointment.

(2) Standard for Appointing Class Counsel. When one applicant seeks appointment as class counsel, the court may appoint that applicant only if the applicant is adequate under Rule 23(g)(1) and (4). If more than one adequate applicant seeks appointment, the court must appoint the applicant best able to represent the interests of the class.

(3) Interim Counsel. The court may designate interim counsel to act on behalf of a putative class before determining whether to certify the action as a class action.

(4) Duty of Class Counsel. Class counsel must fairly and adequately represent the interests of the class.

(h) Attorney's Fees and Nontaxable Costs. In a certified class action, the court may award reasonable attorney's fees and nontaxable costs that are authorized by law or by the parties' agreement. The following procedures apply:

(1) A claim for an award must be made by motion under Rule 54(d)(2), subject to the provisions of this subdivision (h), at a time the court sets. Notice of the motion must be served on all parties and, for motions by class counsel, directed to class members in a reasonable manner.

(2) A class member, or a party from whom payment is sought, may object to the motion.

(3) The court may hold a hearing and must find the facts and state its legal conclusions under Rule 52(a).

(4) The court may refer issues related to the amount of the award to a special master or a magistrate judge, as provided in Rule 54(d)(2)(D).

OPPOSITION
BRIEF

173 ⑪

No. 10-277

In The
Supreme Court of the United States

◆

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA,
KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,

Respondents.

◆

On Petition For A Writ Of Certiorari
To The United States Court Of Appeals
For The Ninth Circuit

◆

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION OF RESPONDENTS

◆

JOSEPH M. SELLERS	BRAD SELIGMAN
CHRISTINE E. WEBBER	Counsel of Record
JENNY R. YANG	JOCELYN D. LARKIN
COHEN MILSTEIN SELLERS & TOLL PLLC	THE IMPACT FUND
1100 New York Ave., N.W.	125 University Ave., Suite 102
Suite 500, West Tower	Berkeley, CA 94710
Washington, D.C. 20005	(510) 845-3473
(202) 408-4600	bseligman@impactfund.org

Counsel for Respondents

[Additional Counsel Listed On Inside Cover]

COCKLE LAW BRIEF PRINTING CO. (800) 225-6964
OR CALL COLLECT (402) 342-2831

Steven Stemerman
Elizabeth A. Lawrence
Davis, Cowell & Bowe, LLP
595 Market St., Suite 1400
San Francisco, CA 94105
(415) 597-7200

Arcelia Hurtado
Noreen Farrell
Equal Rights Advocates
180 Howard St., Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105
(415) 621-0672

Sheila Y. Thomas
Law Office of Sheila Thomas
5260 Proctor Ave.
Oakland, CA 94618
(510) 339-3739

Stephen Tinkler
The Tinkler Law Firm
309 Johnson St.
Santa Fe, NM 87501
(505) 982-8533

Merit Bennett
The Bennett Firm
460 St. Michaels Dr., Suite 703
Santa Fe, NM 87505
(505) 983-9834

Debra Gardner
Public Justice Center
1 N. Charles St., Suite 200
Baltimore, MD 21201
(410) 625-9409

Shauna Marshall
Hastings College of the Law
200 McAllister St.
San Francisco, CA 94102
(415) 565-4685

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

INTRODUCTION 1

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 2

REASONS FOR DENYING THE WRIT 12

I. The Writ Should Be Denied Because the Decision is Interlocutory and Two Fundamental Issues Remain Unresolved 12

II. There is No Circuit Split on the First Question 14

A. The Circuits Agree that the Title VII Back Pay Remedy is Consistent with Certification Under Rule 23(b)(2) 14

B. This Case Does Not Present Petitioner's Circuit Conflict Because Plaintiffs Do Not Seek Compensatory Damages 18

C. Whether Punitive Damages May Be Certified Under Rule 23(b)(2) is Not Yet Presented in this Case 18

III. The Writ Should be Denied Because the Second Question Does Not Meet this Court's Requirements for Certiorari 21

A. Certiorari is Not Warranted to Review Petitioner's Objections to the Certification of a Challenge to Subjective Employment Practices 22

B. Objections to the District Court's Tentative Trial Plan Do Not Warrant Granting Certiorari 30

TABLE OF CONTENTS – Continued

Page

C. The Size of the Class and Similar Concerns Do Not Justify a Grant of Certiorari 36

CONCLUSION 39

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

Adams v. Robertson, 520 U.S. 83 (1997) 20, 21

Albemarle Paper Co. v. Moody, 422 U.S. 405 (1975) 14, 16

Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402 (5th Cir. 1998) 14, 15, 17, 18

Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591 (1997) 15

Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385 (1986) 23, 28

Brown v. Nucor Corp., 576 F.3d 149 (4th Cir. 2009) 38

Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682 (1979) 32, 37

Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., 191 F.3d 283 (2d Cir. 1999) 28

Carnegie v Household International, Inc., 376 F.3d 656 (7th Cir. 2004) 37

Cooper Industries, Inc. v. Leatherman Tool Group, Inc., 532 U.S. 424 (2001) 35

Cooper v. Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, 467 U.S. 867 (1984) 26, 27

Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695 (11th Cir. 2004) 15, 18, 25, 26

Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463 (1978) 12, 21

Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579 (1993) 29

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Davis v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. Consolidated, 516 F.3d 955 (11th Cir. 2008) 37

Desert Palace, Inc. v. Costa, 539 U.S. 90 (2003) 32

Domingo v. New England Fish Co., 727 F.2d 1429 (9th Cir. 1984) 33

Duling v. Gristede's Operating Corp., 267 F.R.D. 86 (S.D.N.Y. 2010) 38

Easterling v. Connecticut, Dept. of Correction 265 F.R.D. 45 (D. Conn. 2010) 38

Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87 (D.C. Cir. 1997) 20

Fogg v. Gonzales, 492 F.3d 447 (D.C. Cir. 2007) 32

Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 25, 26

General Telephone Co. of the Northwest, Inc. v. EEOC, 446 U.S. 318 (1980) 32

General Telephone Co. of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982) 23, 24, 29

Goodman v. Lukens Steel Co., 777 F.2d 113 (3d Cir. 1985) 25

Griffin v. Dugger, 823 F.2d 1476 (11th Cir. 1987) 24, 25

Griggs v. Duke Power Co., 401 U.S. 424 (1971) 32

Hameed v. International Association of Bridge, Structural & Ornamental Iron Workers Local Union No. 396, 637 F.2d 506 (8th Cir. 1980) 34

Hohider v. United Parcel Service, Inc., 574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009) 27

In re Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d 524 (3d Cir. 2009) 36

In re Initial Public Offerings Securities Litigation, 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006) 11

In re Monumental Life Insurance Co., 365 F.3d 408 (5th Cir. 2004) 20, 31

In re Prudential Insurance Co. America Sales Practice Litigation Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283 (3d Cir. 1998) 36

In re Salomon Analyst Metromedia Litigation, 544 F.3d 474 (2d Cir. 2008) 26

In re VISA Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation, 192 F.R.D. 68 (E.D.N.Y. 2000) 36

In re VISA Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation, 280 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 2001) 36, 37

International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1977) 27, 33

Jefferson v. Ingersoll International Inc., 195 F.3d 894 (7th Cir. 1999) 15, 16, 19

Kirby v. Colony Furniture Co., 613 F.2d 696 (8th Cir. 1980) 15

Kolstad v. American Dental Association, 527 U.S. 526 (1999) 35

Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 550 U.S. 618 (2007) 26

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Lemon v. International Union of Operating Engineers, Local No. 139, 216 F.3d 577 (7th Cir. 2000) 18

Lewis v. City of Chicago, __ U.S. __, 130 S. Ct. 2191 (2010) 27, 32

Lilly v. Harris-Teeter Supermarket, 720 F.2d 326 (4th Cir. 1983) 22

Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56 (1972) 34

Love v. Johanns, 439 F.3d 723 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 25, 26

Lowery v. Circuit City Stores, Inc., 158 F.3d 742 (4th Cir. 1998) 37

McClain v. Lufkin Industries, 519 F.3d 264 (5th Cir. 2008) 22, 33, 34

McLaughlin v. American Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215 (2d Cir. 2008) 27

McReynolds v. Sodexho Marriot Services, Inc., 208 F.R.D. 428 (D.D.C. 2002) 28, 29

Molski v. Gleich, 318 F.3d 937 (9th Cir. 2003) 11

NAACP v. N. Hudson Regional Fire & Rescue, 255 F.R.D. 374 (D.N.J. 2009) 38

Nelson v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 245 F.R.D. 358 (E.D. Ark. 2007) 38

Nike Inc. v. Kasky, 539 U.S. 654 (2003) 35

Olvera-Morales v. International Labor Management Corp., 246 F.R.D. 250 (M.D.N.C. 2007) 38

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Pettway v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co., 494 F.2d 211 (5th Cir. 1974) 15, 33

Pettway v. American Cast Iron Pipe Co., 681 F.2d 1259 (11th Cir. 1982) 33

Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797 (1985) 20

Pitre v. Western Electric Co., Inc., 843 F.2d 1262 (10th Cir. 1988) 33

Prado-Steiman ex rel. Prado v. Bush, 221 F.3d 1266 (11th Cir. 2000) 13

Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228 (1989) 29

Reeb v. Ohio Department of Rehabilitation & Correction, 435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006) 15, 18, 25, 26

Robinson v. Lorillard Corp., 444 F.2d 791 (4th Cir. 1971) 15

Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R. Co., 267 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 2001) 15, 18

Rossini v. Ogilvy & Mather, Inc., 798 F.2d 590 (2d Cir. 1986) 25

Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249 (D.C. Cir. 1984) 33

Shady Grove Orthopedic Association, P.A. v. Allstate Insurance Co., ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 1431 (2010) 16

Shipes v. Trinity Industries, 987 F.2d 311 (5th Cir. 1993) 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

Stewart v. General Motors Corp., 542 F.2d 445 (7th Cir. 1976) 34

Taylor v. D.C. Water & Sewer Authority, 241 F.R.D. 22 (D.D.C. 2007) 38

Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117 (1994) 20

United States (and Vulcan Society) v. City of New York, 258 F.R.D. 47 (E.D.N.Y. 2009) 38

United States v. Armour & Co., 402 U.S. 673 (1971) 34

United States v. City of New York, 631 F. Supp. 2d 419 (S.D.N.Y. 2009) 37

United States v. City of Northlake, Ill., 942 F.2d 1164 (7th Cir. 1991) 22

Velez v. Novartis Pharmaceuticals Corp., 244 F.R.D. 243 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) 28, 38

Virginia Military Institute v. United States, 508 U.S. 946 (1993) 12

Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. VISA U.S.A. Inc., 396 F.3d 96 (2d Cir. 2005) 36

Walker v. East Allen County Schools, 2008 WL 4367579 (N.D. Ind. Sept. 19, 2008) 38

Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977 (1988) 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

Page

RULES

42 U.S.C. § 1981a(b)(2) 15

42 U.S.C. § 2000(e) .... passim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 16(c)(2) 34

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 .... passim

Supreme Court Rule 10 21

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 11.64 35

INTRODUCTION

The Petition seeks review of an interlocutory class certification order that the appeals court affirmed in part, reversed in part, and remanded for reconsideration on two issues central to the questions presented by Petitioner. Class certification orders are inherently provisional, but the two issues still to be resolved render this order particularly ill-suited for certiorari review at this time. As a result, the Petition raises questions that this case does not present – and may never present. The request for review is, thus, premature. There are additional reasons why it should be denied.

The First Question posits the existence of a circuit split as to whether and how "monetary relief" claims may be certified in a Rule 23(b)(2) injunctive class action. While the circuits have treated claims for legal damages under Rule 23(b)(2) somewhat differently, there is no circuit split presented by the en banc ruling, as the only form of monetary relief that the Ninth Circuit allowed to proceed collectively was equitable back pay. All the circuits that have addressed the issue agree that equitable back pay may properly be certified in a Rule 23(b)(2) class action.

The Second Question – an amalgam of purported errors, large and small, based on a host of legal doctrines – makes little pretense of meeting this Court's requirements for certiorari. No circuit split exists as to any of these issues. Instead, the Petition exhorts this Court to second-guess the case-specific findings of the district court or to adopt, in the first instance, legal theories never accepted by any appellate court.

Petitioner returns repeatedly to the refrain that the certified class is very large, a fact that is indisputably true but legally irrelevant. The class is large because Wal-Mart is the nation's largest employer and manages its operations and employment practices in a highly uniform and centralized manner. The district court was keenly aware of the implications of the class size but ultimately concluded that "Title VII . . . contains no special exception for large employers." App. 165a. The certification decision was firmly grounded in this Court's Title VII class action jurisprudence and "[c]ertification does not become an abuse of discretion merely because the class has 500,000 members." App. 112a (Graber, J., concurring).

◆

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This class action alleges that Petitioner Wal-Mart Stores discriminates against its female retail store employees with respect to corporate-wide pay and promotion policies and practices. As a consequence, women employed by Wal-Mart "are paid less than men in comparable positions, despite having higher performance ratings and greater seniority" and "receive fewer – and wait longer for – promotions to in-store management positions than men." App. 5a.

Plaintiffs contend that these policies and practices violate Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000(e), et seq. Plaintiffs challenge those national practices under theories of disparate treatment and disparate impact discrimination. The complaint seeks injunctive relief, back pay, and punitive damages; it does not seek compensatory damages or retroactive promotions.

After a year and a half of discovery, including more than 175 lay and expert depositions and production of over one million pages of documents, Plaintiffs sought certification of the class under Federal Rules of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2) and 23(b)(3). In support of their certification motion, plaintiffs submitted substantial evidence demonstrating that hourly and salaried retail female employees receive significantly lower pay and fewer advancement opportunities than do their male counterparts; that Wal-Mart has a uniform personnel and management structure across its stores; that Wal-Mart maintains company-wide policies governing pay and promotion decisions within the stores; that these policies uniformly delegate substantial discretion to store and regional managers to make personnel decisions for store employees; and that its Home Office exercises extensive oversight of the stores. The evidence further revealed that these policies, exercised within a strong, centralized corporate culture, adversely affected female employees in every one of the company's 41 domestic regions. The disparate outcomes for men and women were highly statistically significant such that they were extremely unlikely to result from chance.

The evidence also demonstrated that Wal-Mart senior officials closely monitored pay and promotions in the stores and were aware of the adverse impact of Wal-Mart's policies on female employees, but failed to take steps to eliminate these discriminatory barriers. The Executive Vice President for People regularly reported that Wal-Mart lagged behind its competitors in the advancement of women into management. Several years before this action was filed, he warned that the company was "behind the rest of the world," a conclusion confirmed by plaintiffs' labor economist. District Court Record ("DCR") Webber Decl., Ex. 11; App. 223a-224a.

Plaintiffs presented evidence that Wal-Mart's system fosters gender stereotyping, and scores of class members gave powerful examples of it. App. 193a-194a, 225a-226a. At Sam's Club Home Office executive meetings, senior management often referred to female store associates as "little Janie Qs" and "girls." DCR Webber Decl., Ex. 36. Wal-Mart's Executive Vice President for People saw nothing wrong with a district manager holding his management meetings at Hooters restaurants. Id., Ex. 89. In 1998, a consultant retained by Wal-Mart advised the company that a "glass ceiling is perceived by many women" at Wal-Mart and "some [district managers] . . . do not seem personally comfortable with women in leadership roles." Id., Ex. 88. One former Wal-Mart Vice President described the company's diversity efforts as "lip service," App. 195a, a conclusion confirmed by a detailed analysis of Wal-Mart's diversity programs. App. 194a-195a.

In an 84-page order, Judge Martin J. Jenkins granted in part and denied in part plaintiffs' class certification motion. The court fully certified the claims for injunctive relief and back pay under Rule 23(b)(2), but limited the promotion class to those class members with objective evidence to confirm their interest in promotion. The court also exercised its discretion to provide notice and an opportunity to opt out to class members for the punitive damages claim. App. 242a-243a.

The district court made extensive findings of fact to support its conclusion that Rule 23 requirements had been met. The Petition largely omits reference to these detailed findings.

Unequal Promotional Opportunities – The district court found that "roughly 65 percent of hourly employees are women, while roughly 33 percent of management employees are women." App. 176a. When Wal-Mart's representation of women in management was compared to that of its twenty largest competitors, there was a statistically significant shortfall at nearly 80% of the stores. App. 223a. The district court credited plaintiffs' proof of "a statistically significant shortfall of women being promoted into each of the in-store management classifications over the entire class period." This shortfall was "consistent in nearly every geographic region at Wal-Mart." App.

212a. Women also took longer than men to enter management positions. App. 198a. These observed differences existed even though female employees at Wal-Mart generally have more seniority and better performance ratings than do male employees. Appellate Excerpts of Record 173, 175-80.

Unequal Pay – Plaintiffs' statistical regressions for hourly and salaried employees showed that women were paid significantly less than men, and this pay gap increased each year. This pattern was consistent for all store classifications in all regions even when seniority, turnover, store, job performance, job position, part-time or full-time status, and other factors were taken into account. App. 200a, 209a. After careful consideration of the parties' competing analyses, the lower court concluded that plaintiffs' statistical analysis raises "an inference of company-wide discrimination in both pay and promotions." App. 281a.

Uniform Structure and Central Control – The district court found Wal-Mart stores are operated "with a high degree of store-to-store uniformity" and centralized control. App. 190a. "[T]he personnel structure within each store operates in a basically similar fashion using similar job categories, job descriptions and management hierarchies." App. 174a -175a. "[E]ach individual store is subject to oversight from the company's Home Office" that includes "a very advanced information technology system which allows managers in the Home Office to monitor the operations in each of its retail stores on a close and constant basis." App. 190a, 192a. Wal-Mart has a far higher concentration of its regional and senior management based in its Home Office than its competitors do, further confirming its unusually centralized nature. App. 191a, n.17.

Uniformity of Promotion Policies and Practices – Regional and district managers make promotion decisions for salaried store management positions. App. 181a-182a. The district court found that "[t]he subjectivity in promotion decisions occurs in two fundamental ways: (a) a largely subjective selection practice hindered by only minimal objective criteria, combined with (b) a failure to post a large proportion of promotional opportunities." App. 180a. There was no application process for the vast majority of openings for mid-level and higher level store management positions. As a result, "class members had no ability to apply for, or otherwise formally express their interest in, openings as they arose." App. 182a-183a. Because of Wal-Mart's decision not to post openings, "[m]anagers did not have to consider all interested and qualified candidates, thus further intensifying the subjective nature of the promotion process." App. 183a.

Uniformity of Compensation Policies and Practices – "All hourly employees at every Wal-Mart store are compensated pursuant to the same general pay structure." App. 176a. The Home Office establishes minimum starting rates for each hourly job in the retail stores. Id. While store managers are granted substantial discretion in making pay decisions for hourly employees, any pay increase above a certain percentage is automatically reported to higher management and requires special approval. App. 177a.

The compensation system for salaried in-store managers is set by common, company-wide policy. App. 178a. The Home Office sets base pay ranges for each in-store salaried position, and any departures from these pay levels are made "primarily by District Managers (the first level in the management hierarchy above Store Managers) and their superiors, the [Home Office-based] Regional Managers." App. 178a. For both hourly and salaried compensation policies and practices, the district court found that there "is significant uniformity across stores, and that Defendant's policies all contain a common feature of subjectivity." App. 180a. See also App. 124a, n.9 (dissenting opinion) ("it is undisputed that Wal-Mart maintains uniform company-wide policies. . . .").

Corporate Culture – The district court concluded that Wal-Mart's unique culture is an additional factor supporting commonality because "it promotes and sustains uniformity of operational and personnel practices" and "guide[s] managers in the exercise of their discretion." App. 188a, 192a. It found "no genuine dispute that Wal-Mart has carefully constructed and actively fosters a strong and distinctive, centrally controlled, corporate culture." App. 188a. The court noted that Wal-Mart trains its employees each week, beginning with orientation, in lessons on Wal-Mart culture ("the Wal-Mart Way") and that culture is an integral part of all management training programs.

App. 188a-189a. Wal-Mart's practice of "promoting from within" means that "the culture lessons learned by junior-level employees contribute to building a foundation of common understanding and practice among the management team." App. 189a. Further, the company regularly moves store-level managers across stores, districts, regions, states, and divisions, which "could only be efficient in a company with a high degree of store-to-store uniformity" and "ensure[s] that a uniform Wal-Mart Way culture operates consistently throughout all stores." App. 189a-190a.

* * *

In summary, the district court found that plaintiffs provided "significant evidence of company-wide practices and policies" that "raises an inference that Wal-Mart engages in discriminatory practices in compensation and promotion that affect all plaintiffs in a common manner." App. 226a.

Scope of Injunctive Relief Sought – The district court also noted that the broad prospective relief sought would "achieve very significant long-term relief in the form of fundamental changes to the manner in which Wal-Mart makes its pay and promotions decisions nationwide" that would benefit current and future female employees. App. 239a.

Back Pay Procedures – The district court found that, if class liability were established, individual hearings would not be required to determine back pay for eligible class members. App. 243a-276a. For the claims of unequal pay, it found there was ample objective data in Wal-Mart's electronic employee database from which a determination of individual qualifications and lost back pay could be made without individual hearings. App. 261a-262a, 270a-272a. For promotions claims, however, it found there was insufficient data available to determine lost back pay because, for many class members, objective data was not available to document an interest in promotion. App. 267a. Accordingly, it limited the back pay remedy for promotion claims to a subset of the class for which objective data of interest existed. App. 267a-268a. For pay claims, however, where there is no need to document an interest in equal pay, there was sufficient data available to identify "the actual victims of any proven discriminatory pay policy." App. 271a (emphasis in original).

Ruling on Expert Evidence – With the class certification order, the district court concurrently issued a separate 18-page order addressing the parties' motions regarding their respective expert witnesses. (That order was not included in the Certiorari Appendix nor discussed in the Petition, but is an Addendum to this Brief.) In that order, the district court addressed and rejected Wal-Mart's challenges to each of plaintiffs' three experts. Addendum at 4-15. The order also granted plaintiffs' motion to strike the foundation for Wal-Mart's expert pay analysis, finding that a survey of store managers conducted by defense counsel was wholly unreliable. Addendum at 17-23; App. 203a-204a.

Proceedings on Appeal – Wal-Mart appealed the class certification order; plaintiffs cross-appealed, challenging the decision to limit the promotion class to those class members with objective evidence of their interest in promotion. A Ninth Circuit panel affirmed the certification in its initial decision and in a modified opinion. Wal-Mart then sought en banc review. The Equal Employment Opportunity Commission filed an amicus brief urging the en banc court to affirm the district court's determination that Title VII did not mandate individual Stage II hearings.

The en banc court issued a mixed ruling, affirming the order in part and reversing in part. The court emphasized that district courts must conduct a "rigorous analysis" to ensure that the requisites of Rule 23 have been satisfied. It concurred with the holding of the Second Circuit in In re Initial Public Offerings Secs. Litig., 471 F.3d 24, 40-41 (2d Cir. 2006), that this analysis may properly require the evaluation of evidence that overlaps with the merits. App. 14a, 31a, 39a-40a.

The en banc court then affirmed the certification of the pay claim and the limited certification of the promotion claim, rejecting plaintiffs' cross-appeal. It overruled its own prior decision in Molski v. Gleich, 318 F.3d 937 (9th Cir. 2003), which had established a standard for certification under Rule 23(b)(2) focused primarily on the subjective intent of the named plaintiffs. It then remanded the issue of whether punitive damages claims can be certified under Rule 23(b)(2) or (b)(3). It also determined that class members not employed by Wal-Mart on the date that the complaint was filed could not be included in the Rule 23(b)(2) class because they lacked standing to seek injunctive relief. It remanded the issue of whether the claims of these former employees could be certified under Rule 23(b)(3).

◆

REASONS FOR DENYING THE WRIT

I. The Writ Should Be Denied Because the Decision is Interlocutory and Two Fundamental Issues Remain Unresolved

The Petition seeks review of an interlocutory class certification order. This Court does not typically review interlocutory orders, and for good reason. See Virginia Military Inst. v. United States, 508 U.S. 946, 946 (1993) (Scalia, J., concurring in the denial of the petition for writ of certiorari) ("We generally await final judgment in the lower courts before exercising our certiorari jurisdiction."). Premature review risks wasting the Court's resources because legal issues may change or be mooted by the time of any final judgment. Class certification orders, which may be "altered or amended before final judgment," are especially fluid, further counseling against interlocutory review. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(1)(C). See Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 469 (1978).

The order in this case is particularly ill-suited for review because even the scope of the class certification remains unsettled. The appeals court remanded:

1) the question of whether and how punitive damages should be certified; and 2) whether to certify the claims of the class members no longer employed when the complaint was filed under Rule 23(b)(3). App. 94a -102a.[1] Even after these remaining questions have been addressed, the scope of any class may be further modified by additional pre-trial proceedings.

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(f) permits discretionary interlocutory appellate review as a safeguard to ensure that class certification orders do not function as a "death knell" to the litigation for either plaintiff or defendant. Prado-Steiman ex rel. Prado v. Bush, 221 F.3d 1266, 1274 (11th Cir. 2000). Rule 23(f) appeals are "generally disfavored" because they are "inherently 'disruptive, time-consuming, and expensive.'" Id. at 1276 (quoting Waste Mgmt. Holdings, Inc. v. Mowbray, 208 F.3d 288, 294 (1st Cir. 2000)). As a result of this discretionary appeal procedure, Wal-Mart has already been afforded the opportunity for review of the class certification by a three-judge panel and an 11-judge en banc court. The en banc court accepted some of Petitioner's arguments, rejected others, and limited the class in significant ways, fulfilling the purpose of Rule 23(f) interlocutory review. In the six years that this appeal has been pending (and the litigation stayed), Wal-Mart has never suggested that it will be obliged to settle the case as a result of the certification order. With over $400 billion in sales and $14 billion in profits last year, that is an argument that could not credibly be made. Petitioner offers no reason why the questions presented need additional review at this time, rather than waiting for further development of the record in the courts below.

---

[1] On remand, these issues will be addressed by a different judge, as a result of the resignation of Judge Jenkins in 2008.

II. There is No Circuit Split on the First Question

The Petition conflates the treatment of different kinds of "monetary relief" under Rule 23(b)(2) in an attempt to cobble together a circuit split. In fact, no circuit split exists on the only monetary claim – equitable back pay – that may be pursued by the class at this time.

A. The Circuits Agree that the Title VII Back Pay Remedy is Consistent with Certification Under Rule 23(b)(2)

The only monetary remedy certified by the Ninth Circuit in this case is the equitable remedy of back pay.[5] There is no split in the circuits about whether

---

[5] Back pay is an equitable remedy under Title VII, rather than a form of compensatory damages, and is awarded by the court. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g); Albemarle Paper Co. v. Moody, 422 U.S. 405, 416-17 (1975). See Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 423 n.19 (5th Cir. 1998) (back pay is an "equitable remed[y] to which no right to jury trial attaches.") When Congress amended Title VII in 1991 to add compensatory and back pay in a Title VII class action may properly be certified under Rule 23(b)(2) when it accompanies a claim for injunctive relief. All circuits that have addressed the question agree that back pay may be sought under Rule 23(b)(2). See Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 650 (6th Cir. 2006); Cooper v. S. Co., 390 F.3d 695, 720 (11th Cir. 2004), overrruled on other grounds, Ash v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 546 U.S. 454, 457 (2006) (per curiam); Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R. Co., 267 F.3d 147, 169-170 (2d Cir. 2001); Jefferson v. Ingersoll Int'l Inc., 195 F.3d 894, 896 (7th Cir. 1999); Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 415-16 (5th Cir. 1998); Kirby v. Colony Furniture Co., 613 F.2d 696, 699-700 (8th Cir. 1980); Pettway v. Am. Cast Iron Pipe Co., 494 F.2d 211, 257-58 (5th Cir. 1974); Robinson v. Lorillard Corp., 444 F.2d 791, 802 (4th Cir. 1971). See also App. 90a-94a.

(Continued on following page)

This Court has described "[c]ivil rights cases against parties charged with unlawful, class-based discrimination [as] prime examples" of Rule 23(b)(2) class actions. Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 614 (1997). These actions invoke the equitable powers of the court to eradicate discriminatory punitive damage remedies, it left intact the equitable nature of back pay, explicitly excluding back pay from the definition of compensatory damages. See § 1981a(b)(2) ("Compensatory damages awarded under this section shall not include backpay, interest on backpay, or any other type of relief authorized under [42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)].").

---

conditions in the workplace. Because back pay is an integral component of the Title VII remedial scheme, Albemarle Paper Co. v. Moody, 422 U.S. 405, 417-21 (1975), courts have routinely certified back pay claims as part of Rule 23(b)(2) injunctive class actions brought to combat systemic employment discrimination. Jefferson, 195 F.3d at 895.

Petitioner argues that this circuit consensus should be ignored where the amount of back pay for the class, collectively, could be a very large sum, although for the individual class member the average potential recovery would be a few thousand dollars a year.[3] Title VII places no cap on the equitable powers of the court to award back pay. Where the class is large, the back pay total may also be large. But, the aggregation of back pay resulting from class treatment does not alter the applicable legal principles. Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 1431, 1443 (2010) (opinion of Scalia, J.). At this stage of the case, where the district court has found that the injunctive relief sought would be very significant, and the likely recovery for individual class members small, there is no basis for upsetting the trial court's finding that injunctive relief predominates. See App. 89a. Moreover, since it is entirely speculative how the district court will exercise its discretion to award back pay in the event of a liability finding, review at this juncture will put this Court in the position of drawing arbitrary lines about how much back pay precludes Rule 23(b)(2) certification.

---

[3] The average pay for a full-time hourly position in 2001 was $18,000. App. 177a. Plaintiffs' expert calculated that female employees earned, on average, 5% to 15% less than their male counterparts. App. 200a.

The Petition, implicitly recognizing that no circuit split is presented on the current record, falls back on a far more radical position – that Rule 23(b)(2) prohibits the certification of any claim other than one for injunctive or declaratory relief. There is no split in the circuits on this point, as no court has ever adopted this view. "Rule 23(b)(2), by its own terms, does not preclude all claims for monetary relief." Allison, 151 F.3d at 415 (citing Pettway, 494 F.2d at 257). The contention also conflicts with the Advisory Committee's note, which expressly allows for certification under Rule 23(b)(2) unless "the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Advisory Committee Note (emphasis added).

Finally, the Petition suggests that injunctive relief nonetheless cannot predominate because "at least two-thirds of the class are former employees who lack standing to secure injunctive or declaratory relief." Pet. at 14-15. There is no evidence in the record to support this assertion. Moreover, Wal-Mart's predominance calculus simply ignores the district court's finding that the injunction sought would "achieve very significant long-term relief in the form of fundamental changes to the manner in which Wal-Mart makes its pay and promotion decisions." App.

239a. Most important, the Petition fails to identify a circuit split on this factually disputed claim of error.

B. This Case Does Not Present Petitioner's Circuit Conflict Because Plaintiffs Do Not Seek Compensatory Damages

Every appellate decision cited by Petitioner as evidence of a circuit split involved claims for compensatory damages. Compare Robinson, 267 F.3d at 155 with Reeb, 435 F.3d at 642; Lemon v. Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs, Local No. 139, 216 F.3d 577, 579 (7th Cir. 2000); Cooper, 390 F.3d at 702; Allison, 151 F.3d at 407. Because compensatory damages typically require individualized proof from class members, they present the greatest tension with the presumption of "cohesiveness" underlying Rule 23(b)(2). Lemon, 216 F.3d at 580. This case does not present that issue, as plaintiffs have not sought compensatory damages. App. 5a.

C. Whether Punitive Damages May Be Certified Under Rule 23(b)(2) is Not Yet Presented in this Case

This case does not currently present the issue of whether punitive damages were properly certified under Rule 23(b)(2). In its detailed analysis, the en banc court reversed the district court's certification of punitive damages under Rule 23(b)(2) and overruled prior Ninth Circuit precedent that relied upon plaintiffs' subjective intent in determining whether (b)(2) certification was warranted. App. 85a-88a. It remanded for reconsideration the issue whether punitive damages may be awarded to a class certified under Rule 23(b)(2), requiring the district court to focus on the practical effect of the monetary relief on the litigation. App. 97a-100a. If the district court finds that punitive damages cannot be certified under Rule 23(b)(2), the appeals court directed that it should consider whether certification of punitive damages under Rule 23(b)(3) is appropriate, a hybrid approach first endorsed by the Seventh Circuit in Jefferson, 195 F.3d at 898.

While it "decline[d] to pre-judge" the issue, the en banc court identified three factors that would militate against certification of punitive damages under Rule 23(b)(2). App. 97a-99a. Thus, this case may never present the punitive damages issue framed by the Petition.

Notably, no court has yet applied these standards for Rule 23(b)(2) treatment of damages claims. App. 88a. How their application will vary, if at all, from the approach used by other circuits remains unknown. As such, the question falls far short of a mature circuit split.

Whether and how the district court certifies the punitive damages claims will also implicate the question of notice and opt-out rights. If a class is certified under Rule 23(b)(3), notice and opt-out rights will be mandatory. App. 99a-100a. If instead the district court certifies under Rule 23(b)(2), it may choose to order discretionary notice and opt-out rights under Rule 23(c)(2), as Judge Jenkins did. App. 242a-243a. See In re Monumental Life Ins. Co., 365 F.3d 408, 417 (5th Cir. 2004); Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87, 94 (D.C. Cir. 1997) (authorizing notice and opt-out rights under Rule 23(c)(2)). While the Petition advances the counter-intuitive proposition that Rule 23 forbids providing these additional due process protections to members of a Rule 23(b)(2) class – the same protections which this Court had held the Constitution requires states to provide in class actions for money damages, Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 811-12 (1985) – there is no need to address that proposition now, as this case may never present that question.

The Petition argues that this case offers the opportunity for the Court to address an issue that it wanted to reach – but could not – in Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117 (1994) (certiorari dismissed as improvidently granted), and Adams v. Robertson, 520 U.S. 83 (1997) (same). Pet. at 10. Ticor and Adams involved collateral attacks on mandatory class action settlements of damage claims in which absent class members were not provided with notice and opportunity to opt out. By contrast, in this case, there are no damage claims currently certified and, with respect to the now-remanded punitive damages, the district court did require notice and opt-out rights. If anything, Ticor and Adams underscore that certiorari should not be granted for questions that are merely hypothetical. See Ticor, 511 U.S. at 118;

Adams, 520 U.S. at 92 n.6 ("by 'adher[ing] scrupulously to the customary limitations on our discretion' regardless of the significance of the underlying issue, 'we promote respect . . . for the Court's adjudicatory process.'") (quoting Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213, 224 (1983)).

III. The Writ Should be Denied Because the Second Question Does Not Meet this Court's Requirements for Certiorari

Wal-Mart uses its omnibus Second Question to raise, in scattershot fashion, at least a dozen separate objections to the district court's application of Rule 23 to the substantial evidentiary record. This Court is not the appropriate forum for the correction of claimed errors, particularly in a heavily fact-bound interlocutory order such as this. Supreme Court Rule 10. Petitioner urges this Court to delve into the very extensive and complex factual record in this case and conduct, in effect, a de novo review of the district court's factual determinations. See Coopers, 437 U.S. at 469; Sup. Ct. R. 10.

Although the number and variety of issues itself reveals the unsuitability of this case for review, Respondents nonetheless address briefly the major issues encompassed within Petitioner's Second Question.

A. Certiorari is Not Warranted to Review Petitioner's Objections to the Certification of a Challenge to Subjective Employment Practices

The Petition raises a laundry list of issues in an effort to challenge the determination below that plaintiffs established the presence of "common questions of law or fact" as required by Rule 23(a)(2). No circuit conflict is presented by these contentions. This Court has affirmed that subjective decision-making practices can be challenged under both disparate treatment and disparate impact analysis. Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 989-91 (1988). Such practices, while not themselves unlawful, can "provide a ready mechanism for discrimination." United States v. City of Northlake, Ill., 942 F.2d 1164, 1169 (7th Cir. 1991). Systemic challenges to subjective employment practices have been certified as class actions, where plaintiffs offer a sufficient factual record. See, e.g., McClain v. Lufkin Indus., 519 F.3d 264, 276-77 (5th Cir. 2008) (affirming class-wide liability for disparate impact based upon subjective practices); Shipes v. Trinity Indus., 987 F.2d 311, 316 (5th Cir. 1993); Lilly v. Harris-Teeter Supermarket, 720 F.2d 326, 333 (4th Cir. 1983).

Employment Policy – The Petition claims that plaintiffs failed to identify and challenge a specific employment policy as the cause of the statistically significant disparities in outcomes for female employees, characterizing the case as involving "millions of pay and promotion decisions made by tens of thousands of Wal-Mart managers." Pet. at 19. To the contrary, the district court found that Wal-Mart, a highly-centralized employer, operates through common pay and promotion policies that managers (many above the store level) implement. Those policies offer managers extensive discretion for some decisions, subject to a common system of oversight. See supra at pp. 6-9. See Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385, 406 n.17 (1986) (Brennan, J., concurring, joined by all justices) (rejecting the claim that salaries paid in different counties across the state by an employer were reached "in any 'autonomous' fashion.").

Nor did the district court rely solely on "excessive subjectivity." Instead, it found that commonality was satisfied "where, as here, such subjectivity is part of a consistent corporate policy and supported by other evidence giving rise to an inference of discrimination." App. 184a. That a company like Wal-Mart operates with a set of related practices – rather than just a single written policy in a personnel manual – is entirely predictable. Significantly, however, the district court expressly found that the plaintiffs had established a sufficient nexus between the challenged practices and the adverse outcomes for women. App. at 186a; App. 77a-78a.

Falcon Footnote – The Petition asserts that a class action challenging subjective employment practices is subject to a heightened standard of proof, based on language in footnote 15 of General Telephone of Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 159 n.15 (1982). Pet. at 20-22. The en banc court persuasively explained why that argument fails. App. 41a-47a. The Falcon footnote, read in context, sets forth a hypothetical scenario under which applicants and employees could be included within the same certified class. See, e.g., Griffin v. Dugger, 823 F.2d 1476, 1487 (11th Cir. 1987) ("The situations the Supreme Court identified in footnote fifteen can be thought of as exceptions to the general rule that applicants and incumbent employees cannot share the same class."). The hypothetical was not intended to create a new requirement that plaintiffs prove intentional discrimination at the certification stage. App. 43a. Indeed, Petitioner's "heightened standard" for just one kind of employment practice is at odds with the central holding of Falcon that there are no special class certification rules for certain kinds of cases. Falcon at 161 ("a Title VII class action, like any other class action, may only be certified if . . . the prerequisites of Rule 23(a) have been satisfied.") (emphasis added).

More importantly, there is no split in the circuits on this issue. There is consensus among the circuits that district courts are required to conduct a "rigorous analysis" of compliance with Rule 23, even when it overlaps with the merits. App. 10a-40a. Petitioner's assertion that the Ninth Circuit opinion conflicts with those of other circuits because it failed to apply Falcon's "significant proof" standard to claims of "excessive subjectivity" – an assertion that even the dissent in this case does not make – is unpersuasive. See Pet. at 20-21. Where the cases cited by Wal-Mart address Falcon's footnote at all, they do so consistently with the en banc court's analysis, applying it to "across the board" or generalized claims where a plaintiff with one type of claim seeks to represent a class with different claims. See, e.g., Griffin, 823 F.2d at 1487 (employee asserts testing claims of non-employee applicants); Reeb, 435 F.3d at 644 (only generalized claim made, no evidence of what plaintiffs or class were seeking); Goodman v. Lukens Steel Co., 777 F.2d 113, 122 (3d Cir. 1985) (across the board allegations); Rossini v. Ogilvy & Mather, Inc., 798 F.2d 590, 598 (2d Cir. 1986) (plaintiff with transfer claim seeks to represent class with promotion and training claims). Other cases cited by the Petition in support of its contention that a conflict exists make no reference to the Falcon "significant proof" standard at all. See Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625, 631-632 (D.C. Cir. 2006); Love v. Johanns, 439 F.3d 723, 729-30 (D.C. Cir. 2006); Cooper, 390 F.3d at 716.

Even if a heightened standard were required, it would not change the outcome here, because the record demonstrates that Petitioner's proposed "significant proof" standard was met. The district court expressly found, in more than 24 pages of findings, that plaintiffs had offered "significant evidence" that raised an inference of class-wide discriminatory pay and promotion practices. App. 226a. These findings are plainly sufficient to meet any heightened showing of "significant proof" of discrimination. App. 46a-47a.

Ultimately, whether a challenge to subjective decision-making presents common questions of law or fact for Rule 23(a)(3) is a fact-specific inquiry. That various circuits cited by Wal-Mart have reached different results based on differing factual records, or an insufficient statistical showing, does not constitute a circuit split. See, e.g., Reeb, 435 F.3d at 644-45; Garcia, 444 F.3d at 634-35; Love, 439 F.3d at 729; Cooper, 390 F.3d at 716-17. Nor is review warranted because Petitioner and the dissent would appraise the evidence in this case differently than the trial court did. The trial court's class certification order and its factual findings are subject to review based upon an abuse of discretion standard. In re Salomon Analyst Metromedia Litig., 544 F.3d 474, 480 (2d Cir. 2008).

The Petition also faults the decisions below on a series of related points, which individually and collectively fail to meet the prerequisites for a grant of certiorari.

Intent Element of Disparate Treatment – Wal-Mart criticizes the courts' failure to address the "intent" element of plaintiffs' disparate treatment claim, quoting this Court's decision in Ledbetter v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co., 550 U.S. 618, 624 (2007), an individual employment case litigated under the McDonnell-Douglas framework. Pet. at 23. Petitioner ignores the "crucial difference between an individual's claim of discrimination and a class action alleging a general pattern or practice of discrimination. . . ." Cooper v. Federal Reserve Bank of Richmond, 467 U.S. 867, 876 (1984).[4] This Court's decision in Teamsters established that a "pattern or practice" case uses a different method of proof than the McDonnell-Douglas burden-shifting model for individual discrimination cases. Plaintiffs must demonstrate that the discrimination was the employer's "standard operating procedure." Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 336 (1977). Cooper, 467 U.S. at 875-76, n.9 (stating Teamsters standards to private class actions).[5] The district court's decision includes an extensive analysis of the liability phase of plaintiffs' systemic disparate treatment claim. App. 245a-247a.

Multi-Facility Certification – Wal-Mart faults the certification of a multi-facility class challenging a policy of subjective decision-making, pointing to cases where other courts – based on different factual records – chose not to certify a class. Pet. at 23-24. The district court found that Wal-Mart's policies, administered through a highly centralized system, applied uniformly across all stores and regions. App. 192a. It found statistical patterns of discrimination were consistent across the 41 regions and that significant portions of the decision-making process occurred above the store level. App. 200a; 177a-178a; 181a.

---

[4] Petitioner also ignores plaintiffs' adverse impact claim, which requires no proof of intent. Lewis v. City of Chicago, ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 2191, 2199 (2010).

[5] Casting about for a circuit conflict, the Petition claims that the decision is inconsistent with Hohider v. UPS, Inc., 574 F.3d 169, 184 (3d Cir. 2009). Pet. at 24. Hohider did not address the elements of a Title VII pattern-or-practice case. Hohider, a case brought under the Americans with Disabilities Act, addressed only the issue of whether individual class member qualifications must be proven to establish liability under the ADA. The decision expressly distinguished the requirements for proof of liability in an ADA pattern-or-practice case from those required for cases under Title VII. Id. at 184-85. Similarly off the mark is Petitioner's reliance on McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215, 223-26 (2d Cir. 2008), which addressed whether a civil RICO action could properly be certified under Rule 23(b)(3), where individual reliance was an element of liability.

Neither Title VII nor Rule 23 limits class certification to single facilities. See, e.g., Bazemore, 478 U.S. at 389, 405-06 & n.17 (reversing failure to certify pay and promotion class of black employees of Extension Service with facilities in 100 counties); Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., 191 F.3d 283, 291-92 (2d Cir. 1999), overruled on other grounds by In re Initial Public Offering Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24, 39-42 (2d Cir. 2006) (certifying class of all African Americans employed throughout commuter railroad); Velez v. Novartis Pharm. Corp., 244 F.R.D. 243, 262-63 (S.D.N.Y. 2007) (certifying class challenging subjective practices used to manage national sales force in multiple sales positions); McReynolds v. Sodexho Marriot Servs., Inc., 208 F.R.D. 428, 431 (D.D.C. 2002) (certifying class of African Americans challenging managerial promotion process across company with six divisions nationally and 5000 worksites). Under Petitioner's approach, large companies would never be subject to class actions challenging company-wide pay or promotion practices since personnel policies must, at least to some degree, be implemented by local managers. See, e.g., McReynolds, 208 F.R.D. at 432 ("Sodexho is a corporate giant, and as a result, its personnel decisions are largely decentralized").

Finally, the Petition incorrectly refers to the class certified by the district court as an "across-the-board" class. Pet. at 26. As this Court explained in Falcon, an "across-the-board" class includes both applicants and employees and challenges a broad range of employment practices in one suit. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 151-52 (citing Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc., 417 F.2d 1122 (5th Cir. 1969)). In contrast, the instant class includes only incumbent retail employees and challenges only two practices (pay and promotion). See App. 166a, n.4.

Plaintiffs' Expert – Wal-Mart questions the admission of expert testimony on stereotyping, similar to the testimony approved by this Court in Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 235-36, 255-56 (1989). Pet. at 24-25. The district court conducted an extensive analysis of Wal-Mart's motions to exclude all of plaintiffs' expert evidence. Addendum at 4-15. The Ninth Circuit determined that it did not need to reach the question of whether Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharm., Inc., 509 U.S. 579, 592-93 (1993), applies at class certification because the district court made findings sufficient to satisfy Daubert's reliability and relevance benchmarks. App. 57a, n.22. (Addendum at 5-6). Again, the record here presents no question on which there is a circuit conflict.

Use of Regional Statistics – Wal-Mart criticizes the district court for permitting plaintiffs to use regional statistical data to demonstrate the presence of common questions of law or fact, rather than the highly disaggregated statistical methods used by its own expert. Pet. at 26. This contention, fully aired both at the district court and before the court of appeals, similarly presents no circuit split or legal issue worthy of review. Here, the district court made extensive findings that supported the use of regional statistics for class certification purposes. App. 202a-208a. In contrast, Wal-Mart's disaggregated statistical analysis was based on survey evidence that the district court struck as unreliable. App. 203a-204a.

B. Objections to the District Court's Tentative Trial Plan Do Not Warrant Granting Certiorari

The Petition also seeks certiorari on the question of whether the district court's tentative trial plan violates Wal-Mart's statutory and constitutional rights. Wal-Mart's novel argument is that it has the right to insist on individual adjudication of each class member's claim, a position no appellate court has ever adopted. Pet. at 27-33.

First, the record demonstrates that the district court carefully considered the appropriate parameters of the trial plan and fully evaluated Wal-Mart's arguments. App. 243a-280a. The en banc court declined to reach Petitioner's constitutional and statutory objections to the trial plan because of its tentative nature, but found that there was a "range of possibilities . . . that would allow this class action to proceed in a manner that is both manageable and in accordance with due process. . . ." App. 105a. Furthermore, the questions remanded by the en banc court may result in modifications to the trial plan, making premature a review of the tentative plan at this juncture.

Second, Petitioner's contentions rest on the novel proposition that Title VII and the Constitution guarantee Petitioner the substantive right to defend each class member's claim individually. Pet. at 28 ("An employer has a statutory, as well as a constitutional, right to an individualized defense."). The logical consequence of this argument, if accepted, is that no class of any kind larger than a few dozen class members would practicably be manageable. Petitioner cites no case authority to support the proposition, much less provide a basis to conclude a circuit split exists for this Court to resolve. In any event, the district court found that Wal-Mart's extensive electronic data could be used to identify and compensate the actual victims of Wal-Mart's discriminatory practices. App. 261a, 267a-268a, 271a-276a. See In re Monumental Life, 365 F.3d at 418 (back pay is a "remedy readily calculable on a class-wide basis").

Statutory Theories – Wal-Mart seeks first to locate "its right to an individualized defense" in language in Title VII that describes remedies available for an "individual." Pet. at 28. This Court has held that the use of the term "individual" in a statute does not preclude class treatment of claims. Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 698-701 (1979). Moreover, this Court has long approved Title VII pattern-or-practice actions despite the fact that Title VII uses the term "individual" and similar terms to describe theories of liability and remedies. See 42 U.S.C. 2000e-2(a) ("any individual"), 2000e-5(f)(1) ("person aggrieved"). See, e.g., Griggs v. Duke Power Co., 401 U.S. 424, 426 (1971); Gen. Tel. of the Nw., Inc. v. EEOC, 446 U.S. 318, 324 (1980).

Petitioner also argues that Title VII guarantees it the right to present a "mixed motive" defense, even though this defense is not applicable to any claim in the case. Pet. at 28. Title VII provides distinct methods of proving discrimination: plaintiffs may establish intentional discrimination either by proof of disparate treatment or by the "mixed motive" provisions of Title VII, added by the Civil Rights Act of 1991. See Desert Palace, Inc. v. Costa, 539 U.S. 90, 94 (2003). Plaintiffs may also avail themselves of the disparate impact theory to prove a violation of Title VII. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k). As this Court observed last Term, Title VII's methods of proof are not "coextensive." Lewis, 130 S. Ct. at 2199 (defense to disparate treatment claim inapplicable to disparate impact claim).

The D.C. Circuit has held that a mixed motive defense may not be used to rebut a single motive disparate treatment claim. Fogg v. Gonzales, 492 F.3d 447, 454 (D.C. Cir. 2007). No circuit has held otherwise.

See also Amicus Curiae Brief of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission in Support of Plaintiffs on Rehearing En Banc, at 30 (statutory language of Title VII limits mixed motive defense to claims brought under a mixed motive theory; defense inapplicable to a pattern-or-practice case), App. Docket No. 251.

Petitioner also tethers its argument to language from Teamsters, in which this Court articulated the standards for bifurcated litigation of Title VII pattern-or-practice cases. Teamsters noted that, after a liability determination, "additional proceedings" will "usually" be conducted. 431 U.S. at 361. No court has read this language to require individualized hearings in every case. Instead, Teamsters vested trial courts with broad discretion to "fashion such relief as the particular circumstances of a case may require to effect restitution." Id. at 364 (quoting Franks v. Bowman Transp. Co., 424 U.S. 747, 764 (1976)).

Seven circuits have concluded that individual Stage II remedies hearings may be unnecessary or even inappropriate when the employer's practices and recordkeeping make it difficult to replicate which claimants would have been selected absent discrimination.[8] No circuit has ruled to the contrary. If "the class is large, the promotion or hiring practices are ambiguous, or the illegal practices continued over an extended period of time, a class wide approach to the measure of back pay may be necessary." McClain, 519 F.3d at 281 (citing Pettway, 494 F.2d at 261). Here, the district court made specific findings based on substantial evidence that supported its conclusion that individual hearings were not warranted. App. 256a-276a.

---

[8] See McClain v. Lufkin Industries, 519 F.3d 264, 281 (5th Cir. 2008); Pitre v. W. Elec. Co., 843 F.2d 1262, 1274-75 (10th Cir. 1988); Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249, 1289-91 (D.C. Cir. 1984); Domingo v. New England Fish Co., 727 F.2d 1429, 1444-45 (9th Cir. 1984); Pettway, 494 F.2d at 261-263; Pettway v. Am. Cast

(Continued on following page)

Constitutional Theories – The Petition rests its constitutional Due Process claim on a similarly insubstantial foundation. Pet. at 30. The Petition cites two cases for the general proposition that the Due Process Clause allows a party to present its "available defenses." Id., Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 64 (1972) (state statute requiring trial within six days in landlord-tenant actions does not violate Due Process Clause); United States v. Armour & Co., 402 U.S. 673, 680-82 (1971) (Meatpackers Consent Decree of 1920 did not prohibit acquisition of company engaged in activities prohibited by decree). But this maxim does not create a constitutional right to present one's defense using particular forms and methods of proof. Such case management decisions lie within the discretion of the trial courts, subject to appellate review after final judgment. See, e.g., Fed. R.

Iron Pipe Co., 681 F.2d 1259, 1266 (11th Cir. 1982); Hameed v. Int'l Ass'n of Bridge, Structural & Ornamental Iron Workers Local Union No. 396, 637 F.2d 506, 520-21 (8th Cir. 1980); Stewart v. GM Corp., 542 F.2d 445, 452-53 (7th Cir. 1976).

Civ. P. 16(c)(2) (listing range of pre-trial and trial management decisions for which trial court may "take appropriate action"); Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 11.64. No court has adopted Petitioner's overarching due process theory and, thus, no circuit conflict or conflict with this Court's decisions exists.

The Petition also asserts that the employer has the right to litigate punitive damages individual-by-individual. Pet. at 30-31. To the contrary, punitive damages are not intended to compensate the victim for her injuries (as are compensatory damages) but to "punish the defendant and deter future wrongdoing." Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Leatherman Tool Group, Inc., 532 U.S. 424, 432 (2001). The focus of the punitive damages inquiry is defendant's state of mind and conduct. Kolstad v. Am. Dental Ass'n, 527 U.S. 526, 536 (1999) (Title VII). In this case, plaintiffs' claim for punitive damages would rest not on the actions of individual employees but instead on evidence involving top executives, evidence that is common to all class members. See App. 98a.

As punitive damages claims may never actually be certified in this case, certiorari is premature at best. Nike Inc. v. Kasky, 539 U.S. 654, 663 (2003) (Stevens, J., concurring in the dismissal of certiorari as improvidently granted, "the Court will not anticipate a question of constitutional law in advance of the necessity of deciding it") (citation omitted).

C. The Size of the Class and Similar Concerns Do Not Justify a Grant of Certiorari

Petitioner and its amici focus much attention on the size of the class, arguing that this alone justifies a grant of certiorari. Courts have certified larger classes than this one, including one in which Wal-Mart was itself the lead plaintiff. In re VISA Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig., 280 F.3d 124, 145 (2d Cir. 2001), overruled on other grounds by In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006). Rejecting the same "too big" argument raised by the defendant against certification of Wal-Mart's proposed class, then-Judge Sotomayor noted:

> The effect of certification on parties' leverage in settlement negotiations is a fact of life for class action litigants. While the sheer size of the class in this case may enhance this effect, this alone cannot defeat an otherwise proper certification . . . While both the district court and this Court have acknowledged that difficulties in managing this large class action may arise, these problems pale in > comparison to the burden on the courts that would result from trying the cases individually.

---

The certified class for which Wal-Mart was the lead plaintiff included 8 million merchants, with an estimated $8 billion in damages. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. v. VISA U.S.A. Inc., 396 F.3d 96, 105 n.10 (2d Cir. 2005) and In re VISA Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litig., 192 F.R.D. 68, 89 (E.D.N.Y. 2000). See also In re Diet Drugs, 582 F.3d 524, 542 (3d Cir. 2009) (6 million class members); In re Prudential Insurance Co. America Sales Practice Litigation Agent Actions, 148 F.3d 283, 294-95 (3d Cir. 1998) (8 million class members).

Id. at 145.

This Court has recognized that "the class-action device saves the resources of both the courts and the parties by permitting an issue potentially affecting every [class member] to be litigated in an economical fashion." Califano, 442 U.S. at 701. The greater the size of the proposed class, "the more likely a class action is to yield substantial economies in litigation," making class certification particularly appropriate. See Carnegie v. Household Int'l, Inc., 376 F.3d 656, 660 (7th Cir. 2004). Here, class litigation may be the only means of obtaining the broad injunctive relief necessary to address the allegedly discriminatory policies challenged. Davis v. Coca-Cola Bottling Co. Consol., 516 F.3d 955, 969 (11th Cir. 2008); Lowery v. Circuit City Stores, Inc., 158 F.3d 742, 766 (4th Cir. 1998), vacated on other grounds, 527 U.S. 1031 (1999); United States v. City of New York, 631 F. Supp. 2d 419, 427 (S.D.N.Y. 2009). Moreover, aggregation of claims will be particularly important because the back pay awards will, in most cases, be far too small to justify individual federal lawsuits, especially against a corporate giant like Wal-Mart. The average Wal-Mart worker simply does not have the capacity to pursue a discrimination lawsuit against her employer.

Petitioner also raises the specter that, if the Petition is not granted, "virtually every employer in the land could be subject to a similar suit," Pet. at 33, all to be filed in the forum of choice, the Ninth Circuit. Id. at 17. In fact, in the nearly four years since the Ninth Circuit first affirmed Dukes in February 2007, not a single Title VII class action – small or large – has been certified within the Ninth Circuit. In the same four-year time period, nine Title VII class actions have been certified in the federal courts across the entire country – about two cases a year.[8] Only four of these cases involved private corporate employers. This threatened landslide of class action litigation has not materialized and cannot support the grant of certiorari.

The very small number of Title VII class action cases certified in the recent past underscores another important point regarding certiorari. It highlights how different Wal-Mart is from the typical employer. Wal-Mart is a uniquely large and unusually uniform and centralized company. Perhaps no other employer presents a factual predicate to support class certification similar to the record upon which the district court based its detailed and rigorous fact finding. This Court should be cautious about extending certiorari review to a defendant and a case that are, in many respects, sui generis.

---

[8] Duling v. Gristede's Operating Corp., 267 F.R.D. 86 (S.D.N.Y. 2010); Easterling v. Connecticut, 265 F.R.D. 45 (D. Conn. 2010); United States (and Vulcan Society) v. City of New York, 258 F.R.D. 47 (E.D.N.Y. 2009); NAACP v. N. Hudson Reg'l Fire, 255 F.R.D. 374 (D.N.J. 2009); Walker v. East Allen Cty. Sch., 2008 WL 4367579 (N.D. Ind. Sept. 19, 2008); Velez, 244 F.R.D. 243; Taylor v. D.C. Water & Sewer Auth., 241 F.R.D. 22 (D.D.C. 2007); Nelson v. Wal-Mart Stores, 245 F.R.D. 358 (E.D. Ark. 2007); Olvera-Morales v. Int'l Labor Mgmt. Corp., 246 F.R.D. 250 (M.D.N.C. 2007). See also Brown v. Nucor Corp., 576 F.3d 149, 160 (4th Cir. 2009) (appeals court reversed denial of class certification in race discrimination class action).

◆

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, Respondents respectfully request that the court deny the Petition.

Respectfully submitted,

JOSEPH M. SELLERS
CHRISTINE E. WEBBER
JENNY R. YANG
COHEN MILSTEIN SELLERS & TOLL PLLC
1100 New York Ave., N.W.
Suite 500, West Tower
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 408-4600

BRAD SELIGMAN
Counsel of Record
JOCELYN D. LARKIN
THE IMPACT FUND
125 University Ave., Suite 102
Berkeley, CA 94710
(510) 845-3473
bseligman@impactfund.org

STEVEN STEMERMAN
ELIZABETH A. LAWRENCE
DAVIS, COWELL & BOWE, LLP
595 Market St., Suite 1400
San Francisco, CA 94105
(415) 597-7200

STEPHEN TINKLER
THE TINKLER LAW FIRM
309 Johnson St.
Santa Fe, NM 87501
(505) 982-8533

ARCELIA HURTADO
NOREEN FARRELL
EQUAL RIGHTS ADVOCATES
180 Howard St., Suite 300
San Francisco, CA 94105
(415) 621-0672

MERIT BENNETT
THE BENNETT FIRM
460 St. Michaels Dr., Suite 703
Santa Fe, NM 87505
(505) 983-9834

SHEILA Y. THOMAS
LAW OFFICE OF SHEILA
THOMAS
5260 Proctor Ave.
Oakland, CA 94618
(510) 339-3739

DEBRA GARDNER
PUBLIC JUSTICE CENTER
1 N. Charles St., Suite 200
Baltimore, MD 21201
(410) 625-9409

SHAUNA MARSHALL
HASTINGS COLLEGE OF
THE LAW
200 McAllister St.
San Francisco, CA 94102
(415) 565-4685

October 21, 2010

ADDENDUM

222 F.R.D. 189

United States District Court,
N.D. California.

Betty DUKES, Patricia Surgeson, Cleo Page, Deborah Gunter, Karen Williamson, Christine Kwapnoski, and Edith Arana, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, et al., Plaintiffs,

v.

WAL-MART, INC., Defendant.

No. C01-02252 MJJ.

June 21, 2004.

ORDER GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART PLAINTIFFS' AND DEFENDANT'S MOTIONS TO STRIKE EXPERT AND NON-EXPERT TESTIMONY

JENKINS, District Judge.

INTRODUCTION

In conjunction with the Motion for Class Certification, both parties have filed a number of motions to strike particular portions of the evidence. With respect to the expert testimony, Defendant moves to strike the declarations of William Bielby and Marc Bendick in their entirety, and a small portion of the declaration of Richard Drogin. Plaintiffs move to strike portions of the declaration of Joan Haworth. With respect to the non-expert testimony, Defendant moves to strike portions of the declarations of the named plaintiffs and designated class members while Plaintiffs move to strike declarations filed by store managers. The Court discusses each motion in turn.

DISCUSSION

I. MOTIONS TO STRIKE EXPERT TESTIMONY

A. Legal Standard

As discussed in the Court's Order Granting in Part and Denying in Part Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification, filed simultaneously herewith ("Class Certification Order"), arguments on the merits are improper at this stage of the proceedings. See Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177 (1974) ("We find nothing in either the language or history of Rule 23 that gives a court any authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action"); Selzer v. Bd. of Educ. of City of New York, 112 F.R.D. 176, 178 (S.D.N.Y. 1986) ("[a] motion for class certification is not the occasion for a mini-hearing on the merits"). Accordingly, courts should avoid resolving "the battle of the experts." See Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., 191 F.3d 283, 292-93 (2d Cir. 1999) (district court may not weigh conflicting expert evidence or engage in "statistical dueling" of experts). Indeed, courts should not even apply the full Daubert "gatekeeper" standard at this stage. See Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharms. Inc., 509 U.S. 579 (1993).[1] Rather, "[i]t is clear to the Court that a lower Daubert standard should be employed at this [class certification] stage of the proceedings." Thomas & Thomas Rodmakers, Inc. v. Newport Adhesives and Composites, Inc., 209 F.R.D. 159, 162-63 (C.D. Cal. 2002); see also O'Connor v. Boeing North American, Inc., 184 F.R.D. 311, 321 n.7 (C.D. Cal. 1998) (Daubert inquiry inappropriate at class certification stage).

This does not mean, however, that courts must uncritically accept all expert evidence that is offered in support of, or against, class certification. Rather, the question is whether the expert evidence is sufficiently probative to be useful in evaluating whether class certification requirements have been met. See In re Polypropylene Carpet Antitrust Litigation, 996 F.Supp. 18, 26 (N.D. Ga. 1997) (at class certification stage court only examined whether the expert's methodology will (a) comport with basic principles, (b) have any probative value, and (c) primarily use evidence that is common to all members of the proposed class); Bacon v. Honda of America Mfg., Inc., 205 F.R.D. 466, 470-71 (S.D. Ohio 2001) ("'For common questions to exist, plaintiffs' statistical evidence must logically support the inference of discrimination against the class asserted.'") (citation omitted); see also Dean v. The Boeing Co., 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 8787 at *33-35 (D. Kansas) (at class certification stage, court should only determine whether expert testimony is so fatally flawed as to be inadmissible as a matter of law). It is with these principles in mind that the Court considers the parties' respective motions.

---

[1] In Daubert, the Court charged trial judges with the responsibility of acting as gatekeepers at trial to "'ensure that any and all scientific testimony . . . is not only relevant, but reliable.'" 509 U.S. at 589 (citation omitted). In Kumho Tire Co., Ltd. v. Carmichael, 526 U.S. 137, 147-48 (1999), the Court clarified that this gatekeeper function applies to all expert testimony, not just testimony based in science. As the Ninth Circuit has explained, the district court's role under Daubert is to separate inadmissible opinions based on "junk science" from those based on scientific method. Lust v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 89 F.3d 594, 597 (9th Cir. 1996).

B. Defendant's Motion to Strike Declaration of William Bielby

As discussed in the Class Certification Order, Dr. Bielby conducted a "social framework analysis" by combining an extensive review of documents and deposition testimony regarding Wal-Mart's culture and practices with his knowledge of the professional research and literature in the field. This is an acceptable social science methodology. Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 235-36, 255 (1989) (considering similar evidence by an expert social psychologist); Fed. R. Evid. 702 (referring to "scientific, technical, or other specialized knowledge"). Dr. Bielby's testimony on sex stereotyping also has been admitted in prior cases in this district. See Butler v. Home Depot, Inc., 984 F. Supp. 1257, 1265

(N.D. Cal. 1997); Stender v. Lucky Stores, Inc., 803 F. Supp. 259, 301-03, 327 (N.D. Cal. 1992).[2]

Defendant raises a plethora of challenges to Dr. Bielby's opinions. Having reviewed them, the Court concludes that they are of the type that go to the weight, rather than the admissibility, of the evidence. The most significant criticism is that Dr. Bielby cannot determine with any specificity how regularly stereotypes play a meaningful role in employment decisions at Wal-Mart. At his deposition, for example, Dr. Bielby conceded that he could not calculate whether 0.5 percent or 95 percent of the employment decisions at Wal-Mart might be determined by stereotyped thinking. See Def.'s Mtn. to Strike re Bielby at 9 (citing Bielby Depo. at 87-88, 161-62, 370-71). While this could present a difficulty for Plaintiffs at trial, the question here is whether Dr. Bielby's opinion is so flawed that it lacks sufficient probative value to be considered in assessing commonality.

Plaintiffs concede that Dr. Bielby cannot quantify the degree of gender stereotyping at Wal-Mart, but argue that such quantification is not necessary.[3] See

---

[2] Defendant does not challenge Dr. Bielby's qualifications as an expert.

[3] Plaintiffs further argue that the impact of even small decisions accumulates over the course of employees' careers. But this argument misses the mark. Defendant's point is that there may be a very small total number of decisions affected by sex stereotyping, not that there are numerous decisions that are qualitatively too insignificant to matter.

Pls.' Opp. re Motion to Strike re Bielby at 11. They point to Price Waterhouse, in which the trial court relied on a social psychologist's testimony that the defendant was "likely influenced by sex stereotyping," even though the expert "admitted that she could not say with certainty whether any particular comment was the result of stereotyping." Price Waterhouse, 490 U.S. at 235-36; cf. Costa v. Desert Palace, Inc., 299 F.3d 838, 861 (9th Cir. 2002), aff'd, 539 U.S. 90 (2003) (recognizing relevance of lay testimony regarding gender stereotyping).

The Court is further guided by Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharm., Inc. (Daubert II), 43 F.3d 1311, 1316 (9th Cir. 1995), in which the Ninth Circuit stated that scientific knowledge "does not mean absolute certainty," and that expert testimony should be admitted when "the proffered testimony is 'based on scientifically valid principles.'" Id., quoting Daubert I, 509 U.S. 579. The Ninth Circuit continued: "Our task, then, is to analyze not what the experts say, but what basis they have for saying it." Daubert II, 43 F.3d at 1316. The Court is satisfied that Dr. Bielby's opinion – while subject to critique – is based on valid principles. Thus, it is sufficiently probative to assist the Court in evaluating the class certification requirements at issue in this case. Accordingly, Defendant's motion to strike Dr. Bielby's declaration is denied.

C. Defendant's Motion to Strike Declaration of Marc Bendick

Defendant moves to strike the entire declaration of Plaintiffs' expert labor economist, Dr. Marc Bendick on the grounds that (1) Plaintiffs should not be allowed to profit from Dr. Bendick's alleged misuse of Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") confidential material, and (2) Dr. Bendick's testimony should be rejected on the merits.

1. Dr. Bendick's Use of EEO-1 Data

As discussed in the Class Certification Order, Dr. Bendick performed a benchmarking analysis to compare Wal-Mart's female promotion rates into salaried in-store management positions with that of similarly situated companies. He derived the data on the comparator companies mostly from the EEOC in the form of "EEO-1" reports. Defendant contends that the EEO-1 data is confidential, that Dr. Bendick obtained it through false pretenses, that his use of the data in this litigation is a crime, and that Plaintiffs failed to fully produce the EEO-1 data in discovery. The Court concludes, after fully considering Defendant's objections, that there is no basis to strike the declaration.

a. Whether Dr. Bendick Violated EEOC Regulations

Under authority granted by Title VII, the EEOC collects statistics on the gender and racial composition of the workforce for all employers with 100 or more employees. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-8(c)(3). Companies are required to submit this data – referred to as EEO-1 reports – on an annual basis. 29 C.F.R. § 1602.7; 41 C.F.R. § 60-1.7. The EEOC assembles this wealth of data and generally aggregates it into groupings of at least three responding entities per data set, without revealing the identities of the entities in order to preserve a level of confidentiality for the reporting companies. See 29 C.F.R. § 1610.18(a). EEOC officials are barred from breaching the confidentiality of reporting entities. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-8(c)(3) & § 2000e-8(e). Notably, the regulations do not explicitly apply to anyone other than the EEOC.

Dr. Bendick received EEO-1 data in anonymous disaggregated form (i.e. the data is separately reported for each individual, albeit unidentified, company) from EEOC officials for research in connection with a foundation grant. EEOC staff have submitted declarations stating that they produced the EEO-1 data to Dr. Bendick in disaggregated form on the understanding that it would be used exclusively for research and not for litigation, and consider Dr. Bendick's use of the data in this case to be a breach of good faith. See Neckere Decl. ¶¶5, 12; Edwards Decl. Dr. Bendick, in contrast, has testified in deposition that he apprised the EEOC that he would use the data for more than just research. The Court need not resolve this credibility contest, because, as discussed below, defendant has failed to identify any law or regulation that would create a use-limitation duty for Dr. Bendick.

First, the applicable regulation, which provides that the EEOC routinely will make available aggregated EEO-1 data, does not bar the EEOC from ever releasing disaggregated data, just so long as confidentiality is protected. See 29 C.F.R. § 1610.18(a). Indeed, in this instance the EEOC officials presumably were following their own understanding of the law when providing Dr. Bendick with the information in the first place, and Mr. Neckere states that disaggregated, anonymous EEO-1 data has been provided to other individuals "a couple of other times in the past several years." See Neckere Decl. ¶10. Moreover, even if the regulation strictly forbade disclosure of all disaggregated data, it still does not appear to apply to private individuals, but rather governs only the EEOC's actions.

Second, while Defendant criticizes Dr. Bendick for figuring out the identities of some of the reporting companies in the EEO-1 reports, there does not appear to be any law or regulation prohibiting a private individual from making such assessments. Moreover, Dr. Bendick obtained Wal-Mart's EEO-1 reporting number legitimately through discovery in this litigation. He determined Target's EEO-1 identity because the company volunteered the information to Plaintiffs. For the other companies, Dr. Bendick has only determined that, taken as a group, the largest sets of data belong to well known large retailers (such as Costco and J.C. Penny) but he cannot (and does not) identify which company matches which particular data set. Bendick Decl. ¶¶21-23. Accordingly, Defendant has failed to establish that Dr. Bendick breached any confidentiality obligation. At worst, Dr. Bendick may have misled the EEOC with respect to the purposes for which the data would be used. But this interpretation of the facts is open to question. Regardless, the Court is not persuaded that legal or other grounds justify sanctioning Plaintiffs by striking Dr. Bendick's declaration.

b. Production of the Full EEO-1 Data

Defendant also complains that Plaintiffs produced in discovery only the EEO-1 data that Dr. Bendick used from the companies he selected, rather than producing the entire database received from the EEOC. See Def.'s Motion to Strike re Bendick at 8; Haworth Decl. ¶309. Thus, Defendant contends that it is limited in its ability to challenge Dr. Bendick's conclusions by analyzing the full data set in its own manner. Defendant presents this argument as "a matter of equity." Def.'s Motion at 8. However, it is clear that Defendant never properly requested the entire data file. Its deposition subpoena demanded "all of the data on which he [Dr. Bendick] relied for his opinions in this case." Defendant did not ask for the entire data set that Dr. Bendick received from the EEOC. It is telling that Defendant did not move to compel further production at the time, and it is far too late now to attempt the equivalent in the context of these proceedings.

Furthermore, it appears that the data produced by Dr. Bendick included all EEO-1 reports for all companies of all sizes in every industrial category comparable to Wal-Mart. Upon review of Dr. Haworth's analysis of the benchmarking issue, the Court observes that she had access to a wide range of data that goes well beyond just the twenty comparator companies that Dr. Bendick selected. In fact, she did an extensive analysis of all companies reporting to the EEOC in seven general industrial groupings, which was sufficient data for her to draw her own conclusion in opposition to Dr. Bendick. See Haworth Decl. ¶310. Thus, Defendant's argument that all it could do was to "check Bendick's math on his self-defined 20 'comparators'" is not supported by the record. See Def.'s Reply re Motion to Strike Bendick at 5. Further, while Defendant argues that it might have been able to find something in the full data set to support its position, it fails to show that there are any industry categories missing from the data that are comparable to Wal-Mart.

2. Defendant's Arguments on the Merits

Besides its evidentiary objections to the use of the EEO-1 data, defendant raises various challenges to Dr. Bendick's expert opinion on the merits, none of which justify striking the declaration under the standards set forth above. First, Defendant argues that Dr. Bendick's analysis is flawed because he did not base his analysis on Wal-Mart's limited internal applicant flow data. As discussed in the Class Certification Order, however, this objection is an insufficient basis for striking Dr. Bendick's declaration. See Class Certification Order, section I.B.2.b(3). Rather, where, as here, actual applicant flow data is very limited, alternative means of determining whether a promotion shortfall exists for women are appropriate, including the benchmarking method. Id.

Second, Defendant argues that Dr. Bendick "'cherry-picked' his comparators from a few, narrow lines of business, such as traditional department and general discount stores, where managers historically are largely female." Def.'s Motion to Strike re Bendick at 14. Again, as explained in the Class Certification Order, the record does not support this contention. Further, Defendant's criticism of Dr. Bendick's benchmarking analysis is of the type that clearly goes to the weight, rather than the admissibility, of the evidence.

Third, Defendant contends that Dr. Bendick's choice of comparators is flawed because Wal-Mart, in contrast to other retailers, does not include its Department Managers (the lowest hourly management position), which are 75 percent female, in its EEO-1 managers category. Inclusion of this category would raise Wal-Mart's representation of women among all in-store managers from 34.5 percent to 63 percent, making their representation in management better rather than worse than the comparators. Defendant's argument, however, is based on speculation, and is not supported by any evidence in the record. Moreover, Dr. Bendick tested Wal-Mart's hypothesis in a number of ways and concluded that it was extremely unlikely that Wal-Mart and the comparators had significantly different managerial reporting protocols.[4] Although Defendant had the opportunity to respond to these tests, it failed even to mention them. Accordingly, the Court finds Dr. Bendick's opinion sufficiently probative to assist the Court in evaluating the class certification requirements at issue in this case, and therefore declines to strike Dr. Bendick's declaration.[5] [4] Dr. Bendick calculated the average number of managers per store in both Wal-Mart and the comparators, and he arrived at essentially the same number for both. He also did a more specific test by comparing the number of female managers at Wal-Mart with the number of female managers at the comparator firms with essentially the same number of managers per store. This refined comparison increased the disparity between Wal-Mart and the comparators in the proportion of women in management. Bendick Decl. ¶¶36-41.

---

[5] Defendant also notes that Dr. Bendick's testimony has been rejected by the Sixth and Eleventh Circuits. See Middleton v. City of Flint, 92 F.3d 396, 406 (6th Cir. 1996); United States v. City of Miami, 115 F.3d 870, 872 (11th Cir. 1997). However, those cases are readily distinguishable. In Middleton, Dr. Bendick used the city's general labor pool as the relevant population for comparison, and in City of Miami he used general census data. The courts generally are skeptical of using such generalized sources because census and general population data are likely to contain many people who would not be qualified or interested in the particular jobs at issue in a given case. Here, in contrast, Dr. Bendick corrected for that problem by using a far more narrowly focused source for comparison, i.e. female retail employees at large chain stores. This methodology comports with general benchmarking practices and is similar to comparisons that have been generally accepted by the courts. See, e.g.,

(Continued on following page)

D. Defendant's Motion to Strike Portion of Declaration of Richard Drogin

Defendant moves to strike a minor portion of the declaration of Plaintiffs' statistician, Dr. Richard Drogin, due to an error in one of his computations. This motion was filed after Plaintiffs' class certification reply brief was filed. While it would be appropriate for the Court to deny this motion as untimely, the Court exercises its discretion to address the merits of the motion. As discussed more fully in the Class Certification Order, Drs. Drogin and Haworth conducted separate regression analyses to determine whether Wal-Mart has engaged in gender discrimination with respect to pay. Each expert used different approaches – Dr. Drogin analyzed the data at the regional level, and Dr. Haworth analyzed the data at the store sub-unit level. After Dr. Haworth submitted her store sub-unit regression analyses, Dr. Drogin took all of Dr. Haworth's sub-unit analyses and aggregated the results. Based on this calculation, he reported that even Defendant's methodology shows an average pay shortfall for women of 12 cents per hour. Defendant subsequently pointed out that Dr. Drogin had double-counted certain data, and that the 12 cents differential should be reduced to nine cents,

---

International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. U.S., 431 U.S. 324, 337 n.17 (1977). Furthermore, the Court notes that Dr. Bendick's testimony has been accepted by courts in well over a dozen cases. See, e.g., Butler v. Home Depot, 1997 WL 605754 at *5 (N.D. Cal. Aug. 29, 1997).

a point which Dr. Drogin concedes. Suppl. Drogin Decl. in Support of Plaintiffs' Reply re Motion for Class Certification ¶5. Accordingly, Defendant's motion is granted. The Court, notes, however, that this ruling does not affect the Court's determination of the class certification issues since this correction does not pertain to the inference of discrimination that arises from Dr. Drogin's own regression analyses.

E. Plaintiffs' Motions to Strike Portions of Declaration of Joan Haworth

1. Motion to Strike re Regression Analyses

Plaintiffs move to strike twelve separate portions of the declaration of Defendant's statistical expert, Dr. Joan Haworth, as a sanction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37(c)(1) because Dr. Haworth did not timely disclose the full extent of her expert testimony pursuant to Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(a)(2).[6]

In order to exclude evidence under Rule 37(c)(1), the Court must find that the Rule 26(a) violation was both unjustified and prejudicial to plaintiffs:

> A party that without substantial justification fails to disclose information required by Rule

---

[6] Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 26(a)(2) provides that parties must make an initial disclosure of each expert who may appear at trial, and that the disclosure must be accompanied by a written report containing a complete statement of all opinions to be expressed by the expert.

> 26(a) . . . is not, unless such failure is harmless, permitted to use as evidence . . . on a motion . . . information not so disclosed.

Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 37(c)(1) (emphasis added); Salgado v. General Motors Corp., 150 F.3d 735, 742 (7th Cir. 1998).

The parties stipulated to an expert discovery schedule. See Stipulation and Order Regarding Discovery and Class Certification Deadlines and Other Matters, filed November 26, 2002. Dr. Haworth timely filed her report, then amended it three days before her deposition, and provided a new disk with back-up data supporting her analyses at her deposition. Subsequently, Dr. Haworth submitted a declaration in support of Defendant's opposition to class certification, which contains a number of changes from her original report. As one measure of the difference, her original report is 118 pages long, while her declaration is 178 pages long. The declaration substantively differs from the original report by responding to certain assertions in Dr. Drogin's rebuttal expert report, by summarizing information that was included in tables or in cursory fashion in the report, and by expanding on her earlier tests.

While Defendant's justifications for these changes vary, the Court need not address them in detail because Plaintiffs fail to establish sufficient prejudice. The only issue of prejudice worthy of discussion here is in regard to the "Chow" test. As discussed in the Class Certification Order, Defendant argues that

Dr. Drogin's approach is flawed because he failed to apply the Chow test prior to aggregating his data on the regional level. In her report, Dr. Haworth stated that she conducted a Chow test and "found that it was statistically inappropriate to pool all . . . hourly associates in one regression model" as Dr. Drogin did. Haworth Report at 106 (Suppl. Seligman Decl. re Motion to Strike Haworth, Ex. 3). Plaintiffs argue that the Chow test referenced in the report was conducted on her own model, and that she never said that she had conducted a Chow test on Dr. Drogin's model until submitting her declaration; thus, using the Chow test to directly attack Dr. Drogin is untimely. See Haworth Decl. ¶183. Neither party, however, has provided sufficient details of how the Chow test is actually performed to enable the Court to satisfactorily assess the import of whose model is subjected to the Chow test. Accordingly, Plaintiffs have not met their burden of demonstrating prejudice.

2. Motion to Strike References to Store Manager Survey

Dr. Haworth's declaration relies in part on a survey undertaken by Defendant of a number of its store managers. Plaintiffs contend that the survey is so inherently flawed and biased that it does not meet the standards of Federal Rules of Evidence ("FRE") 702 and 703. Accordingly, Plaintiffs move to strike those portions of her declaration which discuss the survey.

FRE 702 provides that an expert's testimony must be "the product of reliable principles and methods." FRE 703 provides that the facts or data relied upon by an expert need not be independently admissible so long as the evidence is "of a type reasonably relied upon by experts in the particular field in forming opinions or inferences upon the subject." The party proffering the expert has the burden of showing that the requirements for admissibility of the expert's testimony have been satisfied. See Lust by and through Lust v. Merrill Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 89 F.3d 594, 598 (9th Cir. 1996); Bennett v. PRC Public Sector, Inc., 931 F. Supp. 484, 489-90 (S.D. Tex. 1996).

The survey at issue consists of declarations obtained from 239 Wal-Mart store managers randomly selected by Defendant. Each store manager was asked a series of identical questions about a number of issues, including the factors they use to set pay rates and make job placement decisions. The answers from each store manager were recorded in declaration form, the store manager signed the declarations, and the results were tallied. See Seligman Decl. in Support of Pls.' Motion to Strike Store Manager Declarations, Ex. 4 (sample declaration). Dr. Haworth relies on the survey results to (1) challenge Dr. Drogin's decision to aggregate and analyze data at the regional level, and (2) support her own decision to disaggregate and analyze data on a store sub-unit by sub-unit basis.

It is undisputed that Defendant's counsel and Defendant developed and prepared the survey instrument and administered the survey. See, e.g., Haworth Depo. at 255:13-22 (Seligman Decl. Ex. 6). ("My understanding is the attorneys recorded the information that the store managers were giving them"). Indeed, Defendant refused to respond to Plaintiffs' discovery requests regarding the design and administration of the survey on grounds of attorney-client privilege. In addition, Defendant does not dispute that the surveyed managers knew that the surveys were being utilized in connection with this litigation. Dr. Haworth also is on record as stating that she told a least one lawyer for Defendant that having the attorneys conduct the survey was not a good idea because "typically it's difficult for an attorney to collect the information in a neutral environment so that they truly get a neutral set of information back." Haworth Depo. at 254:14-17.

The survey instrument in this case also is biased on its face. For example, instead of asking Store Managers opened-ended questions, such as "what factors do you rely upon in setting individual pay rates?" the survey provided Store Managers with a set list of over 100 suggestive factors, with the chance to add additional factors tacked on at the very end. See Seligman Decl., Ex. 4 at ¶13. The sex of the employee was never identified as a possible factor. Another question was based on the express assumption that the Store Manager encouraged women to apply for the management trainee program. Id. at ¶16.

In sum, the record demonstrates that the survey was designed and administered by counsel in the midst of litigation, the interviewees knew the survey was related to the litigation, and the survey instrument exhibits bias on its face. Taken together, these factors plainly demonstrate that the results from the survey are not the "product of reliable principles and methods," and therefore are not the type of evidence that would be "reasonably relied upon by experts." Fed. R. Evid. 702, 703. Even Dr. Haworth conceded, after Plaintiffs obtained an opinion from an expert in survey methods, that the declarations do not qualify as a valid survey because the data was not collected in "an anonymous and neutral setting." Haworth Decl. at 93, n.114; Seligman Decl., Ex. 7; Presser Decl. (expert opinion that "the survey of Wal-Mart managers does not meet generally accepted standards for the conduct and reporting of surveys").

Not surprisingly, courts have refused to allow surveys made under such circumstances, usually rejecting them on grounds of being unreliable hearsay. See, e.g., Pittsburgh Press Club v. United States, 579 F.2d 751, 756-57 (3rd Cir. 1978) (survey must be conducted independently of attorneys involved in the litigation and respondents should not be aware of purpose of the survey); Yapp v. Union Pacific Railroad Co., 301 F.Supp.2d 1030, 1037 (E.D. Mo. 2004) (rejecting experts' survey where there was "heavy involvement of defense counsel in [its] design and conduct"); Gibson v. County of Riverside, 181 F. Supp. 2d 1057, 1067-68 (C.D. Cal. 2002) (same); Delgado v. McTighe, 91 F.R.D. 76, 80-81 (E.D. Pa. 1981) (same).[7]

Defendant responds that basic survey standards should not apply here because the declarations were never intended to be a "scientific survey;" rather, they are just a collection of declarations. Dr. Haworth repeatedly referred to and treated the 239 declarations as a "survey," in both her deposition and expert report. See, e.g., Haworth Expert Report at 42-45 (Seligman Decl. Ex. 1); Haworth Depo. at 176, 238-243, 247-252 (Seligman Decl., Ex. 6). The Court flatly rejects Defendant's disingenuous effort to re-characterize the survey at the eleventh hour as simply a collection of declarations.[8]

---

[7] It is also worth noting that the fact that questionnaire responses were collected in a declaration format does not assist Defendant. In both Pittsburgh and Gibson, cited above, the information also was obtained in declaration form. This did nothing to dissuade the courts from finding that the declarations constituted improperly conducted surveys.

[8] Indeed, given Haworth's consistent references to the Store Manager survey in her deposition and expert report, her sudden abandonment of this terminology in her declaration filed in opposition to plaintiffs' motion for class certification rings hollow. See, e.g., Haworth Decl. ¶20 (referring instead to "declarations signed under oath by Store Managers who were randomly selected (according to scientifically accepted statistical methods)"). Nor can Defendant meet its Federal Rule of Evidence 703 burden simply by pointing to Dr. Haworth's wholly conclusory assertion that the store manager declarations "are an

(Continued on following page)

Defendant also argues that it is reasonable and customary for experts to rely on the statements of others, including the declarations of others. While this general proposition is true, it is only "reasonable" for an expert to rely on the statements of others if the statements or declarations were collected through methods calculated to elicit reliable information. Notably, the cases cited by Defendant involved instances in which the expert interviewed certain agents of the party, and the courts, after undertaking a Federal Rule of Evidence 702/703 analysis, concluded that it was reasonable for the experts to rely on the statements obtained under those circumstances. See, e.g., Int'l Adhesive Coating Co. v. Bolton Emerson Int'l Inc., 851 F.2d 540, 545 (1st Cir. 1988); United States v. Affleck, 776 F.2d 1451, 1457 (10th Cir. 1985). None of Defendant's authorities permit an expert to rely on responses to questionnaires designed and administered by the party's counsel during litigation.

Accordingly, the Court grants Plaintiffs' motion and strikes references to the Store Manager survey from Dr. Haworth's declaration. The Court notes, however, that this ruling does not mean that Dr. Haworth's statistical analysis or results are excluded.

---

appropriate source to support a regression model." Haworth Decl. ¶186, n.114. An expert's conclusory assertion that his or her testimony is based on a type of data upon which experts reasonably rely is not sufficient to survive a Rule 703 challenge. In re Paoli R.R. Yard PCB Litigation, 35 F.3d 717, 747-48 (3rd Cir. 1994); Yapp, 301 F. Supp. 2d at 1035-36.

It only means that she cannot rely upon the survey of store managers to attack Dr. Drogin's aggregated analysis or as support for her decision to conduct a disaggregated analysis.[9]

II. MOTIONS TO STRIKE NON-EXPERT TESTIMONY

A. Defendant's Motion to Strike Portions of the Declarations of the Named Plaintiffs and Designated Class Members

In support of their Motion for Class Certification, Plaintiffs filed 114 declarations from the named plaintiffs and selected class members around the country. Defendant moves to strike portions of each declaration on various evidentiary grounds. All told, defendant has raised hundreds, if not thousands, of objections.

---

[9] The Court further notes that granting this motion does not have a material impact on the class certification decision. At most, the survey results, if admitted, would merely support Dr. Haworth's disaggregated analysis as one possible way of analyzing the data. The survey would not provide sufficient additional weight to Defendant's challenge to Dr. Drogin's analysis to sway the Court from its conclusion that his testimony supports an inference of discrimination, and thus the existence of substantial questions common to the class. See Order re Class Certification, section I.B.2.a.(2)(a) (discussing Dr. Drogin's statistical analysis); see also Haworth Decl., Appendix Vol. 2, Tab 16 (tabulation of survey results showing that the majority of the pay rate factors were only considered by a very small percentage of Store Managers).

Defendant fails, however, to discuss any of the objections individually. Rather, defendant merely highlights multiple portions of each declaration (each portion ranging from a few isolated words to over a paragraph) using six different colors to correspond to different generic objections (e.g. blue for hearsay, gray for best evidence rule, yellow for relevance) and asserts that "[n]early all objections are obvious on their face." Def.'s Reply to Mtn to Strike Declarations of Named Plaintiffs at 1; Berry Decl., Vols. I - IV.

First, one of the colors used (pink) can apply to any one of five objections (lack of personal knowledge, no foundation, conclusory, speculative or inadmissible opinion). Thus, Defendant has failed even to identify the generic objection at issue in many cases. Second, it is not obvious why many objections have been asserted and it is not the Court's role to divine Defendant's arguments. Third, Defendant appears to have made indiscriminate blanket objections. For example, Defendant appears to object to virtually all out-of-court statements as hearsay without making any effort to assess whether the statement is submitted for the truth of the matter asserted or whether the statement falls within a hearsay exception.[10]

---

[10] The Court also notes that Defendant wrongly asserts that any testimony regarding events that occurred prior to the class period (i.e. pre-dating October 1997) is irrelevant. Even though such incidents are not independently actionable, such evidence still may be admitted as relevant background evidence supporting Plaintiffs' claims. See Nat'l R.R. Passenger Corp. v. Morgan,

(Continued on following page)

As Plaintiffs correctly object, Defendant's attempt to assert these objections without providing any individualized discussion is procedurally defective. The objections therefore merit summary denial on the ground that they are unduly vague. Indeed, Defendant's grossly overbroad approach is more suggestive of an intent to harass than a good faith effort to address genuine objections. Additionally, the Court's review of a portion of the objections indicates that they are largely without merit.[11] Finally, even were the Court to exclude some limited portion of some class declarations, the Court is satisfied that it would have no bearing on the outcome of Plaintiffs' motion for class certification. Accordingly, Defendant's motion is denied.

B. Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Store Manager Declarations

As discussed above, the Court grants Plaintiffs' motion to strike references to the store manager survey from Dr. Haworth's declaration. Defendant has, as a separate matter, also individually filed each of the 239 store manager declarations as anecdotal, percipient witness evidence. Plaintiffs move to strike these declarations as a sanction under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 37(c)(1) because Defendant did not timely disclose 215 of the 239 store managers pursuant to Rule 26(a)(1).[12] Plaintiffs also seek to recover their fees and expenses incurred in bringing this motion. Defendant responds that Plaintiffs have failed to meet the standard for demonstrating that the declarations should be excluded under Rule 37(c)(1).

---

536 U.S. 101, 113 (2002); Bouman v. Block, 940 F.2d 1211, 1218 (9th Cir. 1991).

[11] The Court, for example, has reviewed the objections to the named plaintiffs' declarations and concludes that the objections typically overreach and at best go to the weight of the evidence rather than its admissibility.

As discussed above, in order to exclude evidence under Rule 37(c)(1), the court must find that the Rule 26(a) violation was both unjustified and prejudicial to plaintiffs. See Rule 37(c)(1); Salgado, 150 F.3d at 742. Defendant does not advance any grounds justifying its failure to disclose the information. Plaintiffs, however, fail to establish sufficient prejudice. In Plaintiffs' opening brief they did not even assert that they suffered actual prejudice from the violation. In Plaintiffs' reply, they argue that they were prejudiced because they were prohibited, under the Court's Case Management Order, from taking the depositions of any store managers (other than those who supervised the named plaintiffs); they do not indicate, however, that they would have actually deposed any of the 215 managers even if given the opportunity. Nor do they explain how the inability to depose the store managers has harmed them. Since the Court does not find both lack of justification and prejudice, Plaintiffs' motion is denied.

---

[12] Fed. R. Civ. Proc. 26(a)(1) provides that parties must make an initial disclosure of each individual likely to have discoverable information that the disclosing party may use to support its claims or defenses.

CONCLUSION

For the reasons set forth above, and good cause appearing, it is HEREBY ORDERED as follows consistent with the above:

Plaintiffs' Motions

1. Motion to Strike Portions of Declaration of Joan Haworth for Failure to Comply with Fed. R. Civ. P. 26(a)(2) is DENIED.

2. Motion to Strike Portions of Declaration of Joan Haworth (Re Store Manager Survey) is GRANTED. The following portions of Dr. Haworth's Declaration shall be stricken (references are to pages and lines): 12:7-17; 14:11-12; 29:10-14; 36:17-18 & n.42; 83:9-12 & n.98; 83:20 to 84:1 & n.100; 93:3 to 99:4; 141:14-16 & n.246; 142:16-17 & n.249; 174:20 to 175:2.

3. Motion to Strike Store Manager Declarations is DENIED.

Defendant's Motions

1. Motion to Strike Declaration, Opinion, and Testimony of Plaintiffs' Expert William T. Bielby is DENIED.

2. Motion to Strike Declaration of Mark Bendick is DENIED.

3. Motion to Strike Portions of Declaration of Richard Drogin is GRANTED.

4. Motion to Strike Portions of the Declarations of Named Plaintiffs and Designated Class Members is DENIED.[13]

IT IS SO ORDERED.

---

[13] For the record, the Court notes that at a July 25, 2003 status conference, this Court also denied Plaintiffs' Motion to Strike Declarations of 10 Undisclosed Witnesses. It also granted Defendants' motion for leave to file a surreply in opposition to the Plaintiff's Motion for Class Certification given that Defendant had already filed the surreply. The Court noted, however, that the filing of the surreply was not justified and deserved little or no weight.

REPLY
BRIEF

12

No. 10-277

OCT 29 2010
OFFICE [illegible]

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,

Respondents.

On Petition For A Writ Of Certiorari To The United States Court Of Appeals For The Ninth Circuit

REPLY BRIEF FOR PETITIONER

	THEODORE J. BOUTROUS, JR.
THEODORE B. OLSON	Counsel of Record
MARK A. PERRY	RACHEL S. BRASS
AMIR C. TAYRANI	THEANE EVANGELIS KAPUR
GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER LLP	GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER LLP
1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.	333 South Grand Avenue
Washington, D.C. 20036	Los Angeles, CA 90071
(202) 955-8500	(213) 229-7000
	tboutrous@gibsondunn.com

Counsel for Petitioner

RULE 29.6 STATEMENT

The corporate disclosure statement included in the petition for a writ of certiorari remains accurate.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

REPLY BRIEF FOR PETITIONER 1

I. THE CLASS CERTIFICATION ORDER WARRANTS IMMEDIATE REVIEW 1

II. THE THREE-WAY CONFLICT REGARDING RULE 23(B)(2) WARRANTS REVIEW 3

III. THIS CERTIFICATION ORDER VIOLATES DUE PROCESS AND THE RULES ENABLING ACT BY ELIMINATING WAL-MART'S RIGHT TO ASSERT DEFENSES 7

IV. THE EXPRESS REJECTION OF FALCON'S "SIGNIFICANT PROOF" STANDARD EXACERBATES A MATURE CONFLICT 9

CONCLUSION 12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page(s)

CASES

Adams v. Robertson,
530 U.S. 83 (1997) 6

Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp.,
151 F.3d 402 (5th Cir. 1998) 4, 5

Am. Sur. Co. v. Baldwin,
287 U.S. 156 (1932) 8

Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor,
521 U.S. 591 (1997) 5, 6, 7

Califano v. Yamasaki,
442 U.S. 682 (1979) 7

Engquist v. Or. Dep't of Agric.,
553 U.S. 591 (2008) 10

Eubanks v. Billington,
110 F.3d 87 (D.C. Cir. 1997) 5, 6

Garcia v. Johanns,
444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 10, 11

Gen. Tel. Co. of the Sw. v. Falcon,
457 U.S. 147 (1982) 9, 11

Hilao v. Estate of Marcos,
103 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 1996) 3

Hohider v. United Parcel Serv., Inc.,
574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009) 2, 4, 8

In re IPO Sec. Litig.,
471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006) 2

Kawasaki Kisen Kaisha Ltd. v. Regal-Beloit Corp.,
130 S. Ct. 2433 (2010) 1

Lemon v. Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs,
216 F.3d 577 (7th Cir. 2000) 6

Lindsey v. Normet,
405 U.S. 56 (1972) 9

Marshall v. Kirkland,
602 F.2d 1282 (8th Cir. 1979) 5

McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co.,
522 F.3d 215 (2d Cir. 2008) 8

Molski v. Gleich,
318 F.3d 938 (9th Cir. 2003) 4

Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp.,
527 U.S. 815 (1999) 6, 7

Philip Morris USA v. Williams,
549 U.S. 346 (2007) 9

Philip Morris USA Inc. v. Scott,
__ U.S. __, No. 10A273 (Sept. 24, 2010) 9

Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr.,
435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006) 10

Rent-A-Center, West, Inc. v. Jackson,
130 S. Ct. 2772 (2010) 1

Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R.,
267 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 2001) 4, 5

Shipes v. Trinity Indus.,
987 F.2d 311 (5th Cir. 1993) 10

Szabo v. Bridgeport Machs., Inc.,
249 F.3d 672 (7th Cir. 2001) 2

Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 445 F.3d 311 (4th Cir. 2006) 5

Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117 (1994) 6

Wang v. Chinese Daily News, Inc., __ F.3d __, 2010 WL 3733568 (9th Cir. Sept. 27, 2010) 3

Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977 (1988) 10

CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS

U.S. Const. amend. V .... passim

STATUTES

28 U.S.C. § 2072(b) 3, 7

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1) 7

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(A) 7, 8

RULES

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) 11

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) .... passim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) 6

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(f) 2

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Note, Certifying Classes & Subclasses in Title VII Suits, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 619 (1986) 10

Eugene Gressman et al., Supreme Court Practice (9th ed. 2007) 2

Richard A. Nagareda, Common Answers for Class Certification, 64 Vand. L. Rev. En Banc (forthcoming 2010) 1

John Roemer, Impact Fund Gets Executive Director, Daily J., July 8, 2010 3

REPLY BRIEF FOR PETITIONER

Plaintiffs inexplicably state that "there is no circuit split presented by the en banc ruling." Opp. 1. But the majority itself acknowledged creating a three-way circuit split on the standard for certifying monetary claims under Rule 23(b)(2)—Wal-Mart's first question presented. App. 85a–88a; id. at 154a n.25 (Ikuta, J., dissenting). And the decision below conflicts with cases from this Court and numerous circuits on other important and recurring issues in class-action law, detailed in Wal-Mart's second question presented and in four dissenting opinions and nine amicus briefs (all of which plaintiffs ignore). There are myriad reasons to grant certiorari. See Richard A. Nagareda, Common Answers for Class Certification, 64 Vand. L. Rev. En Banc (forthcoming 2010) (manuscript at 19) ("By correcting the misstep in Dukes, the Supreme Court can lend much-needed clarity and consistency to the law of class certification").

I. THE CLASS CERTIFICATION ORDER WARRANTS IMMEDIATE REVIEW

Plaintiffs argue that certiorari should be denied because the class certification order is "interlocutory." Opp. 12–14. But there are compelling reasons why review is appropriate now.

First, this Court regularly grants review of interlocutory decisions that, like this one, raise important issues with widespread impact on other cases. See, e.g., Rent-A-Center, West, Inc. v. Jackson, 130 S. Ct. 2772, 2775–76 (2010); Kawasaki Kisen Kaisha Ltd. v. Regal-Beloit Corp., 130 S. Ct. 2433, 2440 (2010). Few, if any, of these prior decisions could be said to have raised issues with such far-reaching importance as this case, which has "broad implications for a variety of class actions against a host of industries, from antitrust cases to product liability actions to medical-monitoring claims." U.S. Chamber Br. 15; see 18 Leading Companies Br. 14; DRI Br. 1–2.

Second, it would be a tremendous waste of resources to force the parties and the district court to conduct full-blown discovery and an expensive, time-consuming trial under a plainly unlawful and unconstitutional procedure, only to have the judgment and class certification reversed when this case returns to this Court. See Eugene Gressman et al., Supreme Court Practice 282 (9th ed. 2007). The Ninth Circuit divided 6-5, and the vigorous dissents by Chief Judge Kozinski and Judges Ikuta and Kleinfeld demonstrate the importance of the issues.

Third, this Court has determined that certification orders, though by definition interlocutory, often warrant immediate appellate review because certification issues might otherwise be insulated from review. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(f); see also 18 Leading Companies Br. 5, 17–18; Intel Br. 7–8; DRI Br. 7–8. Rule 23(f) appeals are appropriate not only where the certification order is a "death knell" (Opp. 13), but whenever the order presents an unsettled and fundamental issue of law. See, e.g., Szabo v. Bridgeport Machs., Inc., 249 F.3d 672, 675 (7th Cir. 2001). Many of the leading cases fall into this category. See, e.g., Hohider v. United Parcel Serv., Inc., 574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009); In re IPO Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006).

Fourth, this case is not, as plaintiffs suggest, "sui generis." Opp. 39. As shown in the petition and amicus briefs, the issues here recur in class actions of all kinds. Reflecting its sweeping ramifications, no class action since the modern Rule 23 was adopted has attracted as much attention—from interest groups, academics, lawyers, judges, the media, and others—as this one. See App. 160a (Ikuta, J., dissenting); 18 Leading Companies Br. 2–6, 15–17; U.S. Chamber Br. 4; DRI Br. 19–20; RLC Br. 1–4. While plaintiffs imply that few similar cases exist (Opp. 38–39), "other class actions . . . have been on hold while the appellate court considered the Wal-Mart certification question." John Roemer, Impact Fund Gets Executive Director, Daily J., July 8, 2010 (quoting plaintiffs' lead counsel). Now that the Ninth Circuit has ruled, courts are invoking the ruling to certify (b)(2) class actions seeking monetary relief. See, e.g., Wang v. Chinese Daily News, Inc., __ F.3d __, 2010 WL 3733568, at *6 (9th Cir. Sept. 27, 2010).

Finally, plaintiffs contend that review is "premature" because the Ninth Circuit labeled any trial plan "tentative." Opp. 31. But both the district court's formula approach and the statistical sampling method used in Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 1996)—and endorsed by the en banc majority—would violate the Rules Enabling Act (28 U.S.C. § 2072(b)) and due process. See App. 105a–110a. In fact, there is no way fairly and constitutionally to adjudicate the kaleidoscope of inherently individualized claims. See id. at 161a (Kozinski, C.J., dissenting).

In short, the questions presented are important, recurring, squarely presented on a sufficient record, and ripe for immediate review.

II. THE THREE-WAY CONFLICT REGARDING RULE 23(B)(2) WARRANTS REVIEW

The en banc majority explicitly created a "three-way circuit split" regarding Rule 23(b)(2)'s applicability to monetary claims. App. 154a n.25 (Ikuta, J., dissenting); see Hohider, 574 F.3d at 198 ("our sister circuits are split on [this] question"). It held that the majority rule—the "incidental damages" test exemplified by Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 415 (5th Cir. 1998)—"usurps the district court's authority" and that the minority rule—the "subjective intent test" announced in Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter Railroad, 267 F.3d 147, 164 (2d Cir. 2001), and adopted in Molski v. Gleich, 318 F.3d 937, 949–50 (9th Cir. 2003)—is "fatally flawed." App. 86a–87a (quotation omitted). The majority rejected both rules and adopted a third of its own making: the "superior-in-strength" test. Id. at 85a–88a. Plaintiffs do not pretend that this new standard can be reconciled with the plain language of Rule 23(b)(2). See Opp. 17.

Plaintiffs do not dispute that "[t]his case could not have been certified under the 'incidental damages' standard." Pet. 16–17. Yet, applying its new standard (App. 88a), the majority held that "Plaintiffs' request for back pay does not predominate over their request for the injunctive and declaratory relief." Id. at 91a n.40 (emphasis added). The choice of test therefore was outcome-determinative.

Plaintiffs try to escape this acknowledged three-way split by claiming that "no circuit split exists" regarding certification of backpay claims under Rule 23(b)(2). Opp. 14. This is false: The circuits are deeply divided on this very question. The court below held that "a request for back pay in a Title VII case is fully consistent with the certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class action." App. 92a. But numerous other circuits hold that backpay weighs against (b)(2) certification because it is monetary relief. See Hohider, 574 F.3d at 202 ("it [is] necessary . . . to determine whether plaintiffs' back-pay request actually conforms with the requirements of Rule 23, including Rule 23(b)(2)'s monetary-predominance standard"); Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 445 F.3d 311, 331–32 (4th Cir. 2006); Robinson, 267 F.3d at 161; Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87, 95 (D.C. Cir. 1997); Marshall v. Kirkland, 602 F.2d 1282, 1295 (8th Cir. 1979). The original panel in this case agreed. See 509 F.3d at 1187 ("Plaintiffs' request for back pay weighs against certification under Rule 23(b)(2)"). By contrast, the en banc majority held that backpay claims "conflict[ ] in no way" with Rule 23(b)(2) due to their equitable nature, thereby exacerbating this express conflict. App. 91a (quotation omitted).

Plaintiffs assert that backpay is always available under Rule 23(b)(2) because it is an "equitable" remedy, and the "[c]ivil rights cases" invoking equitable powers are "prime examples" of (b)(2) classes. Opp. 15 (quoting Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 614 (1997)). But the antecedent civil rights cases involved de jure segregation claims for injunctive relief. App. 149a n.22 (Ikuta, J., dissenting). Moreover, as this Court explained, "Rule 23(b)(2) permits class actions for declaratory or injunctive relief"—not any available equitable remedies. Amchem, 521 U.S. at 614 (emphasis added); accord Thorn, 445 F.3d at 331 ("if the Rule's drafters had intended [23(b)(2)] to extend to all forms of equitable relief, the text of the Rule would say so").

Backpay claims—like compensatory damages claims—rarely rest "on grounds that apply generally to the class" (Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2)) because they require "separate hearings for each individual" to determine "that they were denied employment opportunities and the extent of their loss." Allison, 151

F.3d at 409. Here, backpay will not follow mechanically from an injunction, but will require extensive additional proceedings. See Lemon v. Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs, 216 F.3d 577, 581 (7th Cir. 2000); Eubanks, 110 F.3d at 95.

This Court has limited the mandatory provisions of Rule 23 to the historical antecedents identified in 1966. Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 842–47, 862 (1999); DRI Br. 5–7. Plaintiffs do not even mention—let alone grapple with—Ortiz, which articulates the framework for applying Rule 23(b)'s mandatory provisions. Nor do they have an answer to Amchem, which holds that tort claims should generally be channeled through Rule 23(b)(3), with its greater procedural protections for both defendants and absent class members. See 521 U.S. at 614–15. Together, these two cases hold that innovative lawsuits (such as this one) "counsel . . . caution" (id. at 625), and must proceed through (b)(3) to avoid the very due process problems that plague the certification order in this case.

Under the Ninth Circuit's decision, a single named plaintiff could, using Rule 23(b)(2), hijack and extinguish the rights of millions of absent class members without even telling them about it simply because the monetary relief sought is labeled backpay, not damages. See App. 99a–100a. Accordingly, this case squarely presents the question whether due process permits certification of a mandatory, no-notice, no-opt-out class seeking monetary relief. See Adams v. Robertson, 520 U.S. 83 (1997) (per curiam); Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117 (1994) (per curiam).

III. THIS CERTIFICATION ORDER VIOLATES DUE PROCESS AND THE RULES ENABLING ACT BY ELIMINATING WAL-MART'S RIGHT TO ASSERT DEFENSES

Review is also warranted because certification of this sprawling class violates Title VII, the Rules Enabling Act, and due process. Tellingly, plaintiffs do not mention the Rules Enabling Act– nor was it applied anywhere in the en banc majority's opinion. This Court's precedents, however, require that every certification order be scrutinized through that lens. Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 845; Amchem, 521 U.S. at 613.

Plaintiffs deride Wal-Mart for making the purportedly "novel argument" that "it has the right to insist on individual adjudication of each class member's claim." Opp. 30. But Title VII authorizes recovery by "individual[s]" (42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1) (emphasis added)) and explicitly provides that "[n]o . . . court shall" afford relief where the defendant proves that an "individual . . . was refused employment or advancement . . . for any reason other than discrimination." Id. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(A). The district court rejected Wal-Mart's statutory right to assert this and other defenses solely to facilitate certification of this class action. According to the district court, Wal-Mart "is not . . . entitled to . . . litigat[e] whether every individual store discriminated against individual class members." App. 247a.

Plaintiffs assert that, under Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 698–701 (1979), "the use of the term 'individual' in a statute does not preclude class treatment." Opp. 32. But Wal-Mart is not arguing that no Title VII class could ever be certified against it. Wal-Mart is arguing that any class must be sufficiently circumscribed to enable it to exercise the statutory right to prove that its pay and promotion decisions were "for [a] reason other than discrimination on account of . . . sex." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(A). As the district court recognized, that is simply "not feasible here" given the nature of the claims and scope of the class. App. 251a. Where it is "not feasible" for a defendant to raise its statutory defenses in a class action, the appropriate solution is to decertify the class (or certify a manageable class)—not to eliminate defenses.

Plaintiffs do not dispute that uninjured class members would be allowed to recover under both the district court's and the Ninth Circuit's approach. Indeed, the Ninth Circuit expressly acknowledged that "nonvictims might also benefit from the relief" (App. 110a n.57 (quotation omitted)), and the district court recognized that this "rough justice" approach would "generat[e] a windfall for some employees . . . and undercompensat[e]" others. Id. at 254a (quotation omitted). Moreover, as plaintiffs admit, the certification order also relieves them of their obligation to prove the statutory element of intent. Opp. 26–27. The Ninth Circuit's elimination of Wal-Mart's right to assert statutory defenses—and plaintiffs' burden to prove intent—squarely conflicts with decisions from other circuits holding that a court may not modify the elements of a claim or a statutorily prescribed defense to facilitate certification. See Hohider, 574 F.3d at 184; McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215, 223–25 (2d Cir. 2008).

The Ninth Circuit also departed sharply from this Court's decisions recognizing the due process right to "present every available defense." Am. Sur. Co. v. Baldwin, 287 U.S. 156, 168 (1932). While plaintiffs deem that precedent "insubstantial" (Opp. 34), this bedrock constitutional principle has been frequently reaffirmed. See, e.g., Philip Morris USA v. Williams, 549 U.S. 346, 353 (2007); Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 66 (1972).

It is beyond dispute that whether "individual plaintiffs who could not recover had they sued separately can recover only because their claims were aggregated with others' through the procedural device of the class action" raises important due process questions. Philip Morris USA Inc. v. Scott, __ U.S. __, No. 10A273, slip op. at 3 (Sept. 24, 2010) (Scalia, Circuit Justice); see also ibid. (granting stay where lower court "eliminated any need for plaintiffs to prove, and denied any opportunity for applicants to contest," the reliance element of plaintiffs' claim). The courts below ruled that an enormous and amorphous collection of claimants can seek billions of dollars, while simultaneously preventing the defendant from asserting defenses guaranteed by statute and the Constitution. Such a fundamentally unfair proceeding has no place in our civil justice system.

IV. THE EXPRESS REJECTION OF FALCON'S "SIGNIFICANT PROOF" STANDARD EXACERBATES A MATURE CONFLICT

Plaintiffs attempt to obscure the clear conflict on whether class actions alleging employment discrimination premised on "excess subjectivity" must meet the "significant proof" standard articulated in General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 159 n.15 (1982). See Opp. 24–26. The Ninth Circuit declined to follow what it called "a hypothetical in clear dicta" (App. 42a n.15), without even acknowledging the numerous other courts of appeals that faithfully adhere to Falcon's "significant proof" requirement. Pet. 20–21 (citing cases). This well-developed conflict—which has been percolating for over two decades—is by now mature and ready for this Court's review. See Note, Certifying Classes & Subclasses in Title VII Suits, 99 Harv. L. Rev. 619, 630–31 (1986); RLC Br. 9–10.

Plaintiffs' outright denial that this acknowledged split exists—and their attempt to distinguish the bevy of conflicting cases on their facts—is unpersuasive. See Opp. 24–26. Other circuits expressly require "significant proof" of a class-wide discriminatory policy before certifying a class, and these cases squarely conflict with the Ninth Circuit's decision. See, e.g., Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625, 631–32 (D.C. Cir. 2006) ("Following Falcon, we have required a plaintiff seeking to certify a disparate treatment class under Title VII to make a significant showing . . . that members of the class suffered from a common policy of discrimination that pervaded all of the employer's challenged employment decisions." (quotation omitted)); Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 644 (6th Cir. 2006). But see Shipes v. Trinity Indus., 987 F.2d 311, 316 (5th Cir. 1993).

Like the Ninth Circuit, plaintiffs attempt to dismiss this Court's "significant proof" standard as a "hypothetical." Opp. 24. But as plaintiffs themselves acknowledge, simple allegations of excess subjectivity—the only allegedly discriminatory "policy" in this case—will not suffice because this Court has held that subjectivity is not an unlawful employment policy. Id. at 22–23; Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 990 (1988); see also Engquist v. Or. Dep't of Agric., 553 U.S. 591, 604 (2008) ("employment decisions are quite often subjective and individualized, resting on a wide array of factors that are difficult to articulate and quantify"). Significant proof of an unlawful policy is therefore necessary at class certification to establish commonality under Rule 23(a) in a Title VII excess subjectivity case because the plaintiff must "bridge the 'wide gap'" between her own discrimination and "the existence of a class that has suffered the same injury . . . as a result of a company-wide discriminatory policy." App. 119a (Ikuta, J., dissenting) (quoting Falcon, 457 F.3d at 157). Such proof is especially necessary where, as here, the official company-wide policy bars discrimination based on gender. See App. 195a; 18 Leading Companies Br. 14–15, 20–21. Thus, while the Ninth Circuit also failed to conduct a sufficiently rigorous analysis of the requirements of Rule 23 before certifying the class (Pet. 22–23), it committed a separate legal error when it expressly rejected Falcon's "significant proof" requirement.

The Ninth Circuit acknowledged "the absence of a specific discriminatory policy promulgated by Wal-Mart" (App. 59a), and plaintiffs to this day cannot point to one. Indeed, the only "policy" plaintiffs have identified to date—so-called "excess subjectivity"—is nothing more than discretionary decisionmaking, which is both lawful and the antithesis of a common policy that affects everyone in the same manner and thus cannot possibly satisfy Rule 23(a)'s commonality requirement. See, e.g., Garcia, 444 F.3d at 632. "Like the proverbial shell game, . . . plaintiffs' circular presentation cannot conceal the fact that they have failed to offer any significant proof of a company-wide policy of discrimination, no matter which shell is lifted." App. 138a (Ikuta, J., dissenting).

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

Theodore B. Olson
Mark A. Perry
Amir C. Tayrani
Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP
1050 Connecticut Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20036
(202) 955-8500

Theodore J. Boutrous, Jr.
Counsel of Record
Rachel S. Brass
Theane Evangelis Kapur
Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher LLP
333 South Grand Avenue
Los Angeles, CA 90071
(213) 229-7000
tboutrous@gibsondunn.com

October 29, 2010

AMICUS
CURIAE
BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 2 4 2010
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. 10-277

In the Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Petitioner,
v.
BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, ON BEHALF OF THEMSELVES AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED,
Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF ALTRIA GROUP, INC., BANK OF AMERICA CORPORATION, CHRYSLER GROUP LLC, CIGNA CORPORATION, DEL MONTE FOODS COMPANY, DOLE FOOD COMPANY, INC., DOLLAR GENERAL CORPORATION, DUPONT COMPANY, GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, HEWLETT-PACKARD COMPANY, KIMBERLY-CLARK CORPORATION, MCKESSON CORPORATION, MICROSOFT CORPORATION, PEPSICO, INC., TYSON FOODS, INC., UNITEDHEALTH GROUP INCORPORATED, UNITED PARCEL SERVICE, INC., AND THE WILLIAMS COMPANIES, INC., AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

JEFFREY A. LAMKEN
Counsel of Record
ROBERT K. KRY
MARTIN V. TOTARO
MOLOLAMKEN LLP
The Watergate, Suite 660
600 New Hampshire Ave., NW
Washington, D.C. 20037
(202) 556-2000
jlamken@mololamken.com
Counsel for Amici Curiae

WILSON-EPES PRINTING CO., INC – (202) 789-0096 – WASHINGTON, D.C. 20002

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

In a sharply divided 6-5 decision that conflicts with many decisions of this Court and other circuits, the en banc Ninth Circuit affirmed the certification of the largest employment class action in history. This nationwide class includes every woman employed for any period of time over the past decade, in any of Wal-Mart's approximately 3,400 separately managed stores, 41 regions, and 400 districts, and who held positions in any of approximately 53 departments and 170 different job classifications. The millions of class members collectively seek billions of dollars in monetary relief under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, claiming that tens of thousands of Wal-Mart managers inflicted monetary injury on each and every individual class member in the same manner by intentionally discriminating against them because of their sex, in violation of the company's express anti-discrimination policy.

The questions presented are:

I. Whether claims for monetary relief can be certified under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2)—which by its terms is limited to injunctive or corresponding declaratory relief—and, if so, under what circumstances.

II. Whether the certification order conforms to the requirements of Title VII, the Due Process Clause, the Seventh Amendment, the Rules Enabling Act, and Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Questions Presented i

Interest of Amici Curiae 1

Reasons for Granting the Petition 3

I. Centralized Policies, Delegated Implementation, and Strong Corporate Culture Are Essential to Managing a Successful Workforce 6

A. Centralized Policies Implemented by Local Decisionmakers Are Crucial to Managing a Large Company 7

B. A Strong Corporate Culture Likewise Benefits the Firm, Its Employees, and Its Customers 10

C. Corporations Rely on Policies and Culture To Prevent Discrimination and Promote Diversity and Inclusion 11

II. The Decision Below Distorts Organizational Decisionmaking and Threatens Even Those Policies That Promote Title VII's Objectives 14

A. The Ninth Circuit's Decision Distorts Organizational Decisionmaking 14

B. The Ninth Circuit's Decision Threatens Even Policies and Cultures Designed To Promote Title VII's Objectives 20

C. The Ninth Circuit's Decision Reflects Broader, Disturbing Trends in Class-Action Litigation 22

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

Conclusion 24

Appendix A – List of Amici Curiae 1a

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

Blair v. Equifax Check Servs., Inc., 181 F.3d 832 (7th Cir. 1999)........ 18

Byrnie v. Town of Cromwell, Bd. of Educ., 243 F.3d 93 (2d Cir. 2001)........ 19

Castano v. Am. Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734 (5th Cir. 1996)........ 18

Dukes v. Wal-Mart, Inc.:
 222 F.R.D. 189 (N.D. Cal. 2004)........ 22
 509 F.3d 1168 (9th Cir. 2007)........ 23

Dura Pharms., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336 (2005)........ 23

Gen. Tel. Co. of the Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982)........ passim

In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012 (7th Cir. 2002)........ 18

In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2009)........ 18

In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 289 F.3d 98 (D.C. Cir. 2002)........ 18

In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 2008)........ 17

Lienhart v. Dryvit Sys., Inc., 255 F.3d 138 (4th Cir. 2001)........ 18

Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154 (3d Cir. 2001)........ 18

Prado-Steiman v. Bush, 221 F.3d 1266 (11th Cir. 2000)........ 18

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Regents of Univ. of Cal. v. Credit Suisse First Boston (USA), Inc., 482 F.3d 372 (5th Cir. 2007) 17

Sperling v. Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc., 924 F. Supp. 1346 (D.N.J. 1996) 17

Stastny v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 628 F.2d 267 (4th Cir. 1980) 17

Szabo v. Bridgeport Machs., Inc., 249 F.3d 672 (7th Cir. 2001) 18

Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977 (1988) 15

STATUTES AND RULES

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(k) 20

Civil Rights Act of 1991, Pub. L. No. 102-166, § 102, 105 Stat. 1071, 1072-1073 (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(a)(1), (b)) 20

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2) 5, 16

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(f) 19

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 advisory committee note 19

OTHER AUTHORITIES

Philippe Aghion & Jean Tirole, Formal and Real Authority in Organizations, 105 J. Pol. Econ. 1 (1997) 10

Altria, Diversity & Inclusion, http://www.altria.com/en/cms/About_Altria/Our_People/Diversity_Inclusion/default.aspx?src=top_nav 12

Michael Armstrong, A Handbook of Human Resource Management Practice (10th ed. 2006) 11, 21

Page

Bank of America, Supplier Diversity & Development, http://www.bankofamerica.com/supplierdiversity/ index.cfm?template=sddi_awards_ov.cfm 13

Robert G. Bone & David S. Evans, Class Certification and the Substantive Merits, 51 Duke L.J. 1251 (2002) 18

Alfred D. Chandler, Jr., Strategy and Structure (1962) 10

Myong-Hun Chang & Joseph E. Harrington, Jr., Centralization vs. Decentralization in a Multi-Unit Organization, 36 Mgmt. Sci. 1427 (2000) 9

James C. Collins & Jerry I. Porras, Built To Last: Successful Habits of Visionary Companies (1994) 8, 9

Richard L. Daft, Organization Theory and Design (10th ed. 2010) .... passim

DiversityInc, 2009 Top 50 Companies for Diversity: No. 24 PepsiCo, http://diversityinc.com/content/1757/article/5475/?No_24_ PepsiCo 12

DiversityInc, No. 9: Bank of America, http://www.diversityinc.com/article/7269/ 13

DiversityInc, The DiversityInc Top 10 Companies for Blacks, http://www.diversityinc.com/article/7369/The-DiversityInc-Top-10-Companies-for-Blacks/ 12

DuPont, Diversity and Inclusion, http://www2.dupont.com/Diversity_and_Inclusion/en_US/about/about.html 13

Page

Henry J. Friendly, Federal Jurisdiction: A General View (1973) 18

Milton Handler, The Shift from Substantive to Procedural Innovations in Antitrust Suits, 71 Colum. L. Rev. 1 (1971) 18

Melissa Hart & Paul M. Secunda, A Matter of Context: Social Framework Evidence in Employment Discrimination Class Actions, 78 Fordham L. Rev. 37 (2009) 22, 23

L. Peter Jennergren, Decentralization in Organizations, in 2 Handbook of Organizational Design 39 (Nystrom & Starbuck eds., 1981) 8

Gareth R. Jones, Organizational Theory, Design, and Change (6th ed. 2010) 8, 9, 10

Ken Kollman et al., Decentralization and the Search for Policy Solutions, 16 J.L. Econ. & Org. 102 (2000) 9

Nadav Levy, Commitment, Exchange Autonomy, and the Boundary of the Hierarchical Firm, 24 J.L. Econ. & Org. 184 (2008) 9

Jefferson P. Marquis et al., Managing Diversity in Corporate America (2008) 11

John Monahan et al., Contextual Evidence of Gender Discrimination: The Ascendance of "Social Frameworks," 94 Va. L. Rev. 1715 (2008) 22, 23

Richard A. Nagareda, Aggregation and Its Discontents, 106 Colum. L. Rev. 1872 (2006) 18

Page

Richard A. Nagareda, Common Answers for Class Certification, 64 Vand. L. Rev. En Banc (forthcoming 2010) 23

Frank Ostroff, The Horizontal Organization (1999) 7, 8

PepsiCo, Diversity & Inclusion, http://www.pepsico.com/Purpose/Talent-Sustainability/Diversity-and-Inclusion.html 13

PepsiCo, Global Diversity and Inclusion Governance Council, http://www.pepsico.com/Download/DI-Awards-2010.pdf 13

George L. Priest, Procedural Versus Substantive Controls of Mass Tort Class Actions, 26 J. Legal Stud. 521 (1997) 18

Mitchell F. Rice, Workforce Diversity in Business and Governmental Organizations, in Diversity and Public Administration: Theory, Issues, and Perspectives 96 (Rice ed., 2d ed. 2010) 11, 12, 21

Oliver E. Williamson, Markets and Hierarchies (1975) 10

Ján Zábojník, Centralized and Decentralized Decision Making in Organizations, 20 J. Labor Econ. 1 (2002) 9

In the Supreme Court of the United States

No. 10-277

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Petitioner,
v.
BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, ON BEHALF OF THEMSELVES AND ALL OTHERS SIMILARLY SITUATED,
Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF ALTRIA GROUP, INC., BANK OF AMERICA CORPORATION, CHRYSLER GROUP LLC, CIGNA CORPORATION, DEL MONTE FOODS COMPANY, DOLE FOOD COMPANY, INC., DOLLAR GENERAL CORPORATION, DUPONT COMPANY, GENERAL ELECTRIC COMPANY, HEWLETT-PACKARD COMPANY, KIMBERLY-CLARK CORPORATION, MCKESSON CORPORATION, MICROSOFT CORPORATION, PEPSICO, INC., TYSON FOODS, INC., UNITEDHEALTH GROUP INCORPORATED, UNITED PARCEL SERVICE, INC., AND THE WILLIAMS COMPANIES, INC., AS AMICI CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

INTEREST OF AMICI CURIAE

Amici are leading U.S. companies (listed and described in Appendix A) that employ millions of workers.[1]

---

[1] Pursuant to this Court's Rule 37.2(a), amici certify that counsel of record for all parties received timely notice of amici's intent to file

Because of the size and scope of their operations, amici often must rely on centralized policies that leave implementation to local decisionmakers exercising an element of discretion within the bounds set by the policy. Amici also strive to foster a corporate culture that ensures that decisions comply with the law and are consistent with broader goals and values.

In the decision below, the Ninth Circuit allowed this discrimination suit to proceed as a class action based in part on Wal-Mart's centralized policies and corporate culture, even though there was no "significant proof" that those policies or culture were themselves discriminatory or caused the alleged discrimination by local decisionmakers exercising discretion. That ruling effectively punishes companies for adopting common organizational tools essential in the modern workplace by exposing them to increased risk of class-action claims. For that reason alone, amici are gravely concerned that the Ninth Circuit's decision threatens their ability to manage their workforces. Meritorious discrimination claims, of course, deserve vindication. And class-action treatment may be appropriate in certain circumstances. But the Ninth Circuit's decision threatens to expand the class-action device far beyond its traditional bounds—indeed, beyond any bounds supported by law or common sense.

---

this brief, and that all parties consented to the filing of the brief. Copies of the letters granting consent have been filed with the Clerk. Pursuant to this Court's Rule 37.6, amici certify that no counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, that no such counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief, and that no person other than amici, its members, and its counsel made such a monetary contribution.

Ironically, the Ninth Circuit's decision discourages even policies and cultures designed to foster the very values Title VII seeks to promote. The Nation's most successful and influential firms—including amici—have made significant, public commitments to eradicating discrimination and promoting diversity in their hiring and promotion practices. Effective implementation of those private-sector initiatives often depends on companywide policies and cultures—organizational tools no different from those the Ninth Circuit relied on as a basis for class certification here. Amici have a strong interest in ensuring that the profound private-sector commitment to fair employment practices and diversity is not undermined by a ruling that makes the companywide policies and cultures necessary to implement that commitment a basis for class-action liability.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

The decision below threatens to impose the staggering costs of class-action litigation based on the routine structural decisions that large corporations must make every day. As a business grows, it must delegate decisionmaking authority to local managers. At the same time, businesses rely on centralized policies and corporate culture to guide those local decisions. Corporate leaders must make crucial decisions about how to structure central policies, allocate local discretion, and develop corporate culture to achieve a company's goals. Those goals do not merely include quality, efficiency, service, and courtesy. They also include the promotion of important social values such as antidiscrimination, diversity, and inclusion.

The decision below impairs the ability of businesses to manage their operations through an effective combination of centralized policies, local discretion, and corporate culture. It transforms those commonplace organizational tools into a basis for class-action treatment of unrelated discrimination claims. It does so even when the company's decisions to use those tools raise no colorable Title VII concern. And it does so even when the decisions seek to promote Title VII's goals.

As this Court recognized in General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982), there may be limited circumstances where a decision to allocate authority a particular way justifies a discrimination class-action. For example, where a company adopts a uniform policy of permitting local decisionmaking in order to perpetuate discrimination, class treatment may be appropriate. To ensure that companies are not saddled with massive class-action liability for benign decisions, however, this Court insisted on "[s]ignificant proof" that the policy was adopted as a means of discrimination. See id. at 159 n.15. Absent such proof, there is simply no "common" issue justifying class treatment. Falcon's "significant proof" standard strikes a reasonable balance between affording businesses necessary organizational flexibility and preserving the class-action device for cases where plaintiffs can prove it is truly appropriate.

By rejecting Falcon's "significant proof" standard, the Ninth Circuit upset that balance. The court allowed this case to proceed as a class action based in part on "company-wide corporate practices and policies, which include * * * excessive subjectivity in personnel decisions," even though there was no proof that those policies were adopted as a means of discrimination. Pet. App. 51a; see also id. at 53a ("company-wide policies and practices that, in part through their subjectivity, provide a potential conduit for discrimination" (emphasis added)). Indeed, at many points, the Ninth Circuit appeared to condemn companywide policies and culture generally, even those having nothing to do with excessive subjectivity. See, e.g., id. at 51a ("strong corporate culture"); id. at 53a ("extensive oversight of store operations * * * and a strong, centralized corporate culture").

That approach is not merely inconsistent with Falcon. It also defies common sense. Class-action treatment is appropriate only if the relevant issues are sufficiently common among class members. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2). The existence of a "strong corporate culture," "company-wide policies and practices," or "subjectivity" in local decisionmaking cannot provide that commonality in a discrimination suit unless there is evidence that the common policies and culture actually caused the discrimination. Absent such evidence, it makes no sense to group together otherwise disparate discrimination claims.

The Ninth Circuit's decision threatens the sorts of benign organizational decisions that large corporations must make every day. Because the specter of potentially enormous class-wide liability compels defendants to settle even meritless claims, class certification decisions are often tantamount to a decision on the merits. The Ninth Circuit's decision thus threatens to deter companies from adopting the "company-wide policies" and "strong corporate culture" that, according to the Ninth Circuit, can make the difference between individual discrimination claims and a nationwide class action. The decision below thus substantially interferes with corporations' ability to manage their organizations through companywide policies and cultures.

That distortion not only harms American business. It also undermines the very interests Title VII seeks to promote. In recent decades, the Nation's leading companies have made a profound commitment to eradicating discrimination and promoting diversity. Those private-sector initiatives have been critical in promoting equal opportunity in the workplace. In implementing those initiatives, however, corporations must often rely on the same tools—centralized policies, delegated authority, and corporate culture—that they use elsewhere. By making such organizational tools a potential basis for class-action treatment of otherwise unrelated discrimination claims, the Ninth Circuit's decision impairs companies' ability to implement even initiatives that promote Title VII's important goals. The adoption of a "company-wide policy" of diversity or a "strong corporate culture" of inclusion should not come at the price of converting otherwise disparate discrimination claims into a nationwide class action. But that is what the Ninth Circuit's decision portends.

I. CENTRALIZED POLICIES, DELEGATED IMPLEMENTATION, AND STRONG CORPORATE CULTURE ARE ESSENTIAL TO MANAGING A SUCCESSFUL WORKFORCE

Centralized policies and culture are essential for large firms to survive and thrive. The customer who enters a particular retail store expects the same look, feel, and treatment whether the store is in Alabama or Alaska. And a product should be manufactured the same whether the factory is in Houston or Hickory. In the past, companies could implement those policies by making all decisions at the top of a centralized hierarchy. But that is no longer feasible. Corporations have grown, and increasingly competitive global markets demand flexibility. Businesses must now balance uniformity against flexibility by coupling general centralized policies with decentralized implementation. Companywide policies are implemented by local managers who—with their feet on the ground—necessarily exercise discretion within the bounds set by the policy. Because policies cannot cover every scenario, moreover, corporations strive to inculcate a corporate culture in their workforce. That culture helps ensure that local decisions are consistent with the organization's broader values and strategic goals.

Those organizational tools—centralized policies, decentralized implementation, and corporate culture—are equally critical to diversity and antidiscrimination initiatives. A company that seeks to ensure an inclusive workforce will typically do so through a companywide diversity policy implemented by local managers exercising discretion in light of the facts before them. And the company will typically complement that policy by fostering a corporate culture that promotes respect and sensitivity. The decision below threatens those critical initiatives by undermining the structures necessary to effectuate them.

A. Centralized Policies Implemented by Local Decisionmakers Are Crucial to Managing a Large Company

1. Much of the Nation's industrial growth in the 19th and early 20th centuries can be traced to the adoption of centralized policies. "[B]y the mid-nineteenth century * * * American businesses were formalizing their chain of command and responsibility through the vertical organizational design or chart." Frank Ostroff, The Horizontal Organization 5 (1999). As "manufacturing and industrial production grew more complex and involved the management of more and more workers," the use of centralized policies expanded. Id. at 4; see also Richard L. Daft, Organization Theory and Design 23 (10th ed. 2010). In many industries, such policies were essential. "[T]he construction of the railroads in the 1840s," for example, "quickly revealed a desperate need for some means of controlling and managing the work of engineers, builders, schedulers, and others." Ostroff, supra, at 4.

Companies looked to early organizational theorists such as Frederick Winslow Taylor, whose popular theory of "scientific management" promoted centralized policies and minimal local discretion. Ostroff, supra, at 5. "So long as markets were steady, competition was primarily domestic, technology meant simple, special-purpose machines such as the typewriter, and labor was abundant and semi-skilled," such policies "worked—and worked magnificently." Id. at 8.

2. Today, that model of absolute control is rarely realistic or desirable. Pure centralization "has been rendered inadequate for today's demanding competitive, technological, and workforce environments." Ostroff, supra, at 6. For large companies, some degree of decentralization "comes about out of sheer necessity." L. Peter Jennergren, Decentralization in Organizations, in 2 Handbook of Organizational Design 39, 42 (Nystrom & Starbuck eds., 1981). "[D]ecisions cannot be passed to the top because senior managers would be overloaded." Daft, supra, at 348.

Delegation also provides important benefits. Avoiding a lengthy chain of command for ordinary, on-the-ground decisions allows a company "to respond quickly to customers' needs or the actions of competitors." Gareth R. Jones, Organizational Theory, Design, and Change 123 (6th ed. 2010). And a local manager with greater ownership in the end result may be "more motivated to perform well." Id. at 104.

One need look no further than Wal-Mart's history to see the value of delegated authority. While adopting central policies, the company's founder also "valued change, experimentation, and constant improvement." James C.

Collins & Jerry I. Porras, Built To Last: Successful Habits of Visionary Companies 36 (1994). He "gave department managers the authority and freedom to run each department as if it were their own business," the famous "Store Within a Store" model. Ibid. That model—essentially, a corporate implementation of the genius of federalism—fosters innovation. The idea for a store greeter, for example, came from a manager in Crowley, Louisiana. Id. at 148. The manager "was having trouble with shoplifting" and experimented by hiring a greeter, who both "sent a message to potential shoplifters that someone would see them" and also "made honest people feel welcome." Ibid. That idea then spread, and the greeter is now ubiquitous across the country.

3. Businesses nonetheless still need centralized policies. Top managers must "coordinate organizational activities and keep the organization focused on goals." Jones, supra, at 104. Centralized policies maintain consistency of message and experience to the consumer. And they help ensure employees act consistently with the law and with the company's broader goals and values.

A "basic design challenge for all organizations" is thus to determine "how much to centralize or decentralize the authority to make decisions." Jones, supra, at 104. "Organizations may have to experiment to find the correct degree of centralization or decentralization to meet their needs." Daft, supra, at 93.[2] But most successful companies strike "a balance between centralization and decentralization of authority so that middle and lower managers who are at the scene of the action are allowed to make important decisions, and top managers' primary responsibility becomes managing long-term strategic decision making." Jones, supra, at 105.

---

[2] A large body of scholarship addresses that issue. See, e.g., Jones, supra, at 103-106; Myong-Hun Chang & Joseph E. Harrington, Jr., Centralization vs. Decentralization in a Multi-Unit Organization, 46 Mgmt. Sci. 1427 (2000); Nadav Levy, Commitment, Exchange Autonomy, and the Boundary of the Hierarchical Firm, 24 J.L. Econ. & Org. 184 (2008); Ján Zábojník, Centralized and Decentralized Decision Making in Organizations, 20 J. Labor Econ. 1 (2002); Ken Kollman et al., Decentralization and the Search for Policy Solu-

B. A Strong Corporate Culture Likewise Benefits the Firm, Its Employees, and Its Customers

While centralized policies are important, it is impossible to have a policy for every situation. Accordingly, firms seek to instill a corporate culture that helps employees respond appropriately to the wide variety of situations they might confront. "Culture is the set of values, norms, guiding beliefs, and understandings that is shared by members of an organization and taught to new members as the correct way to think, feel, and behave." Daft, supra, at 374. Corporate culture helps "integrate members so that they know how to relate to one another" and "help[s] the organization adapt to the external environment." Id. at 377.

A corporate culture allows employees to "learn from each other how to interpret and respond to various situations in ways that are consistent with the organization's accepted values." Jones, supra, at 181. It "shap[es] and guid[es] behavior so that everyone's actions are aligned with strategic priorities." Daft, supra, at 387. Corporate culture also allows a firm to "respond rapidly to customer needs"—an employee already aware of firm expectations is better equipped to adapt to changes in the marketplace tions, 16 J.L. Econ. & Org. 102 (2000); Philippe Aghion & Jean Tirole, Formal and Real Authority in Organizations, 105 J. Pol. Econ. 1 (1997); Oliver E. Williamson, Markets and Hierarchies 132-141, 151-154 (1975); Alfred D. Chandler, Jr., Strategy and Structure 261-282 (1962).

---

in a manner consistent with company values. Id. at 377. While the optimal culture depends on a company's needs, a "strong culture that encourages adaptation and change" will normally "enhance[ ] organizational performance by energizing and motivating employees, unifying people around shared goals and a higher mission, and shaping and guiding behavior so that everyone's actions are aligned with strategic priorities." Id. at 387.

C. Corporations Rely on Policies and Culture To Prevent Discrimination and Promote Diversity and Inclusion

For most large U.S. employers today, a commitment to antidiscrimination and diversity is a critical component of company policies and culture. "By the end of the 1990s, three out of four Fortune 500 companies had launched diversity programs." Jefferson P. Marquis et al., Managing Diversity in Corporate America 1 (2008). Those programs seek to "creat[e] a multicultural, diverse organization" that benefits not only society at large, but also the firm, its employees, and its customers. Ibid.

To implement those programs, companies often must rely on the same organizational structures they use in other contexts. At the top, they establish overarching "framework[s] of broad strategic and policy guidelines" to channel hiring and promotion decisions. Michael Armstrong, A Handbook of Human Resource Management Practice 58 (10th ed. 2006). While "a central governing body outlin[es] the requirements of [diversity] plans," however, "individual agencies and departments hav[e] their own plans tailored to their specific needs." Mitchell F. Rice, Workforce Diversity in Business and Governmental Organizations, in Diversity and Public Administration: Theory, Issues, and Perspectives 96, 109 (Rice ed., 2d ed. 2010). Even those local diversity plans necessarily leave an element of discretion to the managers that implement them. That combination of central policies and local discretion "reinforces a sense of ownership and ensures that managing diversity both has top-level support and is a reality throughout the organization." Ibid.

Amici have been leaders in promoting those goals through centralized policies and culture. The Altria family of companies, for example, has long been committed to promoting diversity and inclusiveness in its workforce. See Altria, Diversity & Inclusion, http://www.altria.com/en/cms/About_Altria/Our_People/Diversity_Inclusion/default.aspx?src=top_nav. Altria believes its position on diversity and inclusion "fosters greater employee productivity and creativity while giving Altria's diverse businesses a competitive edge." Ibid. The company has repeatedly been recognized for its efforts. For example, it was recently named the fifth best company for Black employees to work for by DiversityInc, the leading publication on diversity and business. See DiversityInc, The DiversityInc Top 10 Companies for Blacks, http://www.diversityinc.com/article/7369/The-DiversityInc-Top-10-Companies-for-Blacks/. Noting that "[a]lmost 20 percent of [Altria's] work force is Black and 22 percent of promotions to women in management went to Black women," the publication lauded Altria's "concerted effort to recruit, retain and promote Blacks." Ibid.

PepsiCo has likewise been recognized as a "longtime diversity leader" that "continues to push for an inclusive work force through strong employee-resource groups and diversity training." DiversityInc, 2009 Top 50 Companies for Diversity: No. 24 PepsiCo, http://diversityinc.com/content/1757/article/5475/?No_24_PepsiCo. Its programs "promote a culture where [its] associates feel they have an equal opportunity to contribute and succeed."

PepsiCo, Diversity & Inclusion, http://www.pepsico.com/Purpose/Talent-Sustainability/Diversity-and-Inclusion.html. The company's efforts have been recognized dozens of times over the past few years. See PepsiCo, Global Diversity and Inclusion Governance Council, http://www.pepsico.com/Download/DI-Awards-2010.pdf.

Bank of America is "considered an industry leader with a world-class supplier diversity program," receiving "numerous national and regional awards and recognition." Bank of America, Supplier Diversity & Development, http://www.bankofamerica.com/supplierdiversity/index.cfm?template=sddi_awards_ov.cfm. DiversityInc ranked it among the top ten companies in 2010. DiversityInc, No. 9: Bank of America, http://www.diversityinc.com/article/7269/. DuPont likewise has a longstanding policy against discrimination and has been recognized for its commitment to diversity by numerous organizations. See DuPont, Diversity and Inclusion, http://www2.dupont.com/Diversity_and_Inclusion/en_US/about/about.html. That commitment is reflected in its principle of "'Respect for People,'" which "'has been a core value for [DuPont] for over 206 years.'" Ibid.

The other signatories to this brief have similarly vibrant diversity programs. See App., infra, 1a-7a. Time and again, many of those programs have been recognized by leading organizations and publications for their success in fostering a diverse and inclusive workforce where individuals of all backgrounds can flourish. See ibid. Such programs often rely on centralized policies, local implementation, and corporate culture to achieve their goals. See ibid.

II. THE DECISION BELOW DISTORTS ORGANIZATIONAL DECISIONMAKING AND THREATENS EVEN THOSE POLICIES THAT PROMOTE TITLE VII'S OBJECTIVES

The Ninth Circuit's decision has broad and disturbing ramifications for those common and necessary organizational tools. The Ninth Circuit relied on Wal-Mart's centralized policies, its local implementation of those policies, and its strong corporate culture to conclude that class treatment of otherwise disparate discrimination claims was appropriate—but without insisting on proof that those common features caused the alleged discrimination. That decision does not merely defy common sense. It also discourages companies from adopting the balance of centralized policies, local decisionmaking, and corporate culture necessary to remain competitive in the global marketplace. And it threatens to undermine policies and cultures designed to further Title VII's goals.

A. The Ninth Circuit's Decision Distorts Organizational Decisionmaking

1. In General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982), this Court recognized that class treatment may be appropriate where a corporation adopts a policy of delegating subjective decisionmaking authority in order to enable discrimination. The Court insisted, however, on "[s]ignificant proof" that the policy was adopted to achieve that end. See id. at 159 n.15. Absent such proof, there is simply no "common" issue justifying class treatment—even if statistical disparities might suggest the possibility that some local managers exercised delegated authority in an improper manner. Even "an employer's policy of leaving promotion decisions to the unchecked discretion of lower level supervisors should itself raise no inference of discriminatory conduct." Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 990 (1988).

Falcon's "significant proof" standard marks a reasonable dividing line between discrimination suits that can proceed as class actions and those that must proceed individually. By restricting class certification to cases where common corporate policies or cultures were adopted for the demonstrable purpose of perpetuating discrimination, the standard ensures that discrimination claims proceed as class actions only when they truly have as their basis facts that are subject to common proof. And the standard properly reserves the draconian consequences of class certification for organizational decisions that actually implicate Title VII's important concerns.

2. The Ninth Circuit, however, expressly rejected Falcon's "significant proof" standard. See Pet. App. 41a-47a. It held that this case could proceed as a class action in part because of Wal-Mart's "company-wide corporate practices and policies, which include * * * excessive subjectivity in personnel decisions," even though there was no proof that those policies were adopted to enable discrimination. Id. at 51a; see also id. at 53a ("company-wide policies and practices that, in part through their subjectivity, provide a potential conduit for discrimination" (emphasis added)). At various points, the court invoked Wal-Mart's "strong corporate culture" and "corporate policies" generically, without connecting them to the local discretion in hiring and promotion that underlies plaintiffs' claims. See, e.g., id. at 45a n.18 ("significant evidence of central control"); id. at 47a n.19 ("dominant corporate culture"); id. at 51a ("strong corporate culture"); id. at 53a ("extensive oversight of store operations * * * and a strong, centralized corporate culture"); id. at 71a ("corporate structure and policies"); id. at 78a ("centralized firm-wide culture and policies"). While hardly a model of clarity, the opinion is readily susceptible to the interpretation that any centralized policy or corporate culture can help corroborate an allegation of "common" discrimination.

Indeed, the district court below relied on policies and culture with no conceivable relation to discrimination. As evidence of Wal-Mart's centralized policies, for example, the court noted that Wal-Mart's Home Office "controls the temperature and music in each store throughout the country." Pet. App. 190a. And as evidence of strong corporate culture, the court noted that employees "do the Wal-Mart cheer" during shift changes. Id. at 188a-189a. Nowhere has anyone explained why such air-conditioning policies and morale-boosting exercises should make the difference between a multibillion-dollar nationwide discrimination class action and individual claims by employees with tangible grievances.

The Ninth Circuit's decision is simply wrong as a matter of law. Rule 23 requires commonality. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(2). Without proof that a common policy of distributing discretion was adopted to effectuate discrimination, or that discretion was exercised in a discriminatory fashion because of central policies and culture, that required commonality is absent. That is true even if statistical disparities might suggest that some local decisionmakers exercised their discretion improperly (and thus that a number of persons affected by local decisions might have valid individual claims). "[A] decision by a company to give managers the discretion to make employment decisions, and the subsequent exercise of that discretion by some managers in a discriminatory manner, is not tantamount to a decision by a company to pursue a systematic, companywide policy of intentional discrimination." Sperling v. Hoffmann-La Roche, Inc., 924 F. Supp. 1346, 1363 (D.N.J. 1996); see also Stastny v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 628 F.2d 267, 279 (4th Cir. 1980) (subjectivity in employment decisions "cuts against any inference for class action commonality" even though it may "bolster proof on the merits of individual claims").

The court of appeals' contrary approach has potentially disastrous consequences for basic organizational decisions necessary to manage a successful enterprise. As explained above, see pp. 7-11, supra, corporations must routinely adopt centralized policies that leave room for local discretion in implementation. They also must often encourage local managers to implement those policies in a manner consistent with the firm's core goals and values by inculcating a corporate culture. Those sensitive and difficult organizational decisions can mean the difference between a thriving business that employs thousands of workers to serve millions of customers and a corporate train wreck.

The Ninth Circuit's decision upholding class certification based on such common organizational tools distorts those decisions. Courts across the Nation recognize that certification is normally the entire game in class-action litigation. The First Circuit has noted the "irresistible pressure to settle" that follows certification. In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litig., 522 F.3d 6, 26 (1st Cir. 2008). The Fifth Circuit has noted that "certification may be the backbreaking decision that places 'insurmountable pressure' on a defendant to settle." Regents of Univ. of Cal. v. Credit Suisse First Boston (USA), Inc., 482 F.3d 372, 379 (5th Cir. 2007). And the Seventh Circuit has described settlement as "almost inevitable." In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012, 1016 (7th Cir. 2002).[3]

Because of that hydraulic pressure to settle, certification imposes substantial costs "[i]rrespective of the merits." Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 167 (3d Cir. 2001). The potential for "an all-or-nothing verdict presents too high a risk, even when the probability of an adverse judgment is low." Castano v. Am. Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 746 (5th Cir. 1996). "Many corporate executives are unwilling to bet their company that they are in the right in big-stakes litigation, and a grant of class status can propel the stakes of a case into the stratosphere." Blair v. Equifax Check Servs., Inc., 181 F.3d 832, 834 (7th Cir. 1999); see also Szabo v. Bridgeport Machs., Inc., 249 F.3d 672, 675 (7th Cir. 2001).

For that reason, even luminaries such as Judge Friendly have described such settlements as "blackmail." Henry J. Friendly, Federal Jurisdiction: A General View 120 (1973); see also Milton Handler, The Shift from Substantive to Procedural Innovations in Antitrust Suits, 71 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 8-9 (1971). It was in part that very concern—that "[a]n order granting certification * * * may force a defendant to settle rather than incur the costs of defending a class action and run the risk of potentially ruinous liability"—that led to Rule 23's amendment in 1998 to permit interlocutory appeals of certification orders. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(f) & advisory committee note.

---

[3] See also In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 310 (3d Cir. 2009); Lienhart v. Dryvit Sys., Inc., 255 F.3d 138, 144-145 (4th Cir. 2001); Prado-Steiman v. Bush, 221 F.3d 1266, 1274 (11th Cir. 2000); In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 289 F.3d 98, 102-105 (D.C. Cir. 2002); Richard A. Nagareda, Aggregation and Its Discontents, 106 Colum. L. Rev. 1872, 1875 (2006); Robert G. Bone & David S. Evans, Class Certification and the Substantive Merits, 51 Duke L.J. 1251, 1285-1286 & n.129 (2002); George L. Priest, Procedural Versus Substantive Controls of Mass Tort Class Actions, 26 J. Legal Stud. 521, 522, 554 (1997).

By attaching potentially case-dispositive consequences to a corporation's decisions to adopt centralized policies, delegate implementation authority, and foster a strong corporate culture—even when those decisions have nothing to do with discrimination—the Ninth Circuit's opinion threatens to skew organizational decisionmaking. Having "company-wide policies" or a "strong corporate culture," even ones wholly unconnected to any claim of discrimination, may now mean the difference between a multibillion-dollar, must-settle nationwide class action and individual discrimination claims resolved on their merits in traditional proceedings. High-level managers seeking to structure their businesses for success in the global marketplace now must make those decisions with an artificial thumb on the scale to avoid the specter of a potentially ruinous class certification order.

The consequences are all the more troubling because it is not even clear what corporations can do to avoid them. The Ninth Circuit faulted Wal-Mart for its "company-wide corporate practices and policies" but, in the same breath, faulted those policies for leaving "excessive subjectivity" in the hands of local decisionmakers. Pet. App. 51a. The court thus condemned Wal-Mart for being both too centralized and too decentralized at the same time. Even the district court acknowledged "the tension inherent in characterizing a system as having both excessive subjectivity at the local level and centralized control." Pet. App. 192a. Courts should not act as "super-personnel department[s]." Byrnie v. Town of Cromwell, Bd. of Educ., 243 F.3d 93, 106 (2d Cir. 2001). But here, the Ninth Circuit did not even set forth a coherent standard that personnel departments could follow.

A decision that a discrimination suit should not proceed as a nationwide class action in no way denigrates the underlying claims. Even in the best-managed companies, with robust policies and cultures designed to combat discrimination, there may be isolated instances where rogue managers make improper decisions. And, if the company is big enough, those instances may add up. But the law provides ample means of redress for those individual claims. Indeed, those remedies are even more expansive now than when this Court decided cases like Falcon. In 1991, Congress amended Title VII to provide for compensatory and punitive damages, not just backpay or equitable relief. See Civil Rights Act of 1991, Pub. L. No. 102-166, § 102, 105 Stat. 1071, 1072-1073 (codified at 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(a)(1), (b)). Even before that amendment, prevailing plaintiffs could recover their attorney's fees. See 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(k). Those remedies amply ensure the vindication of meritorious individual claims without recourse to the class-action device. There is accordingly no reason to distort the class-action mechanism by converting ordinary corporate structural decisions with no proven connection to discrimination into a basis for class certification.

B. The Ninth Circuit's Decision Threatens Even Policies and Cultures Designed To Promote Title VII's Objectives

Ironically, the Ninth Circuit's decision poses a grave threat even to initiatives designed to promote Title VII's objectives. As explained above, see pp. 11-13, supra, amici and other leading American corporations have made a strong, public commitment to eradicating discrimination and promoting diversity. Those efforts reflect not only principle, but also good business sense: An organization that respects cultural differences and strives for an inclusive workforce will better serve both its employees and its customers.

To achieve those ideals, corporations often must rely on the same organizational tools they use in managing any other aspect of their business—they establish centralized antidiscrimination and diversity policies, provide for local implementation of those policies, and foster a corporate culture of inclusiveness and respect. A "central governing body outlin[es] the requirements of the plans, and individual agencies and departments hav[e] their own plans tailored to their specific needs." Rice, supra, at 109; see also Armstrong, supra, at 58; pp. 11-12, supra. That approach "reinforces a sense of ownership and ensures that managing diversity both has top-level support and is a reality throughout the organization." Rice, supra, at 109.

The Ninth Circuit's vague reasoning could render even those benign policies and cultures sufficient evidence of "commonality" to justify class treatment of otherwise unrelated discrimination claims. The court repeatedly referred generically to Wal-Mart's "strong corporate culture" and companywide "corporate policies" without clarifying which sorts of policies or cultures may be relevant to a finding of commonality. See pp. 15-16, supra. Precisely because the court's opinion is so vague, it leaves corporate executives to speculate over what policies or cultures may support class certification. The distortion that the decision portends for organizational decisionmaking generally thus applies with equal force to corporate diversity initiatives. The Ninth Circuit's decision therefore undermines, rather than advances, Title VII's important goals.

C. The Ninth Circuit's Decision Reflects Broader, Disturbing Trends in Class-Action Litigation

The decision below is emblematic of broader trends. A key component of the evidence the Ninth Circuit invoked to sustain class certification was the "social framework" analysis that, according to respondents' expert, suggested that Wal-Mart's policies were "vulnerable" to gender bias. Pet. App. 54a-55a. In a social-framework analysis, "the expert does not reach the conclusion that a specific decision was made with discriminatory intent; that judgment is for the fact finder." Melissa Hart & Paul M. Secunda, A Matter of Context: Social Framework Evidence in Employment Discrimination Class Actions, 78 Fordham L. Rev. 37, 45 (2009). Rather, the expert "offer[s] his or her knowledge of the social science research and identif[ies] the characteristics of policies challenged in the particular workplace that research has linked with higher likelihood of bias and stereotype." Ibid. Here, for example, respondents' expert criticized Wal-Mart's policies as vulnerable to gender bias even though he "conceded that he could not calculate whether 0.5 percent or 95 percent of the employment decisions at Wal-Mart might be determined by stereotyped thinking." Dukes v. Wal-Mart, Inc., 222 F.R.D. 189, 192 (N.D. Cal. 2004).

The use of social-framework analysis in discrimination suits has greatly expanded in recent years. See John Monahan et al., Contextual Evidence of Gender Discrimination: The Ascendance of "Social Frameworks," 94 Va. L. Rev. 1715, 1716-1717, 1743 n.79 (2008). Its attractiveness to class-action plaintiffs' lawyers is easy to perceive. By demonstrating only the possibility of discrimination, plaintiffs leave proof of discrimination to a merits trial that will never occur. As proponents of social-framework analysis themselves acknowledge, "after a class is certified, the pressure on the employer to settle the dispute * * * is substantial." Hart & Secunda, supra, at 50. Thus, "as a practical matter, class certification operates as a kind of victory on the merits." Ibid.

Whatever the merits of social-framework analysis as a social-science tool, it cannot substitute for "significant proof" that various claimed instances of discrimination actually resulted from a common policy of discrimination. Plaintiffs should not obtain certification based on little more than an expert's "review[ ] [of] the litigation record in light of his understanding of what social science research shows about stereotyping" generally. Monahan et al., supra, at 1747; see also Richard A. Nagareda, Common Answers for Class Certification, 64 Vand. L. Rev. En Banc (forthcoming 2010). As the dissent put it below: "'Vulnerability' to sex discrimination is not sex discrimination." Dukes v. Wal-Mart, Inc., 509 F.3d 1168, 1194 (9th Cir. 2007) (Kleinfeld, J., dissenting). Allowing a discrimination class-action to proceed based on nothing more than the mere "possibility" that statistical disparities reflect a common policy of discrimination is no different from allowing a securities-fraud class action to proceed based on the mere "possibility" that a fraud caused the plaintiffs' loss. The Court granted review in Dura Pharmaceuticals, Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336 (2005), to put an end to that latter theory. It should grant review here to put an end to the former.

The Nation's leading corporations have made a profound commitment to eradicating discrimination and promoting diversity in the workplace. This Court should not permit either speculative social-science methods or the flawed legal reasoning of the decision below to undermine the basic organizational tools firms so often need to implement those programs successfully.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons and those stated in the petition, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted.

JEFFREY A. LAMKEN
Counsel of Record
ROBERT K. KRY
MARTIN V. TOTARO
MOLOLAMKEN LLP
The Watergate, Suite 660
600 New Hampshire Ave., NW
Washington, D.C. 20037
(202) 556-2000
jlamken@mololamken.com

Counsel for Amici Curiae Altria Group, Inc., Bank of America Corporation, Chrysler Group LLC, CIGNA Corporation, Del Monte Foods Company, Dole Food Company, Inc., Dollar General Corporation, DuPont Company, General Electric Company, Hewlett-Packard Company, Kimberly-Clark Corporation, McKesson Corporation, Microsoft Corporation, PepsiCo, Inc., Tyson Foods, Inc., UnitedHealth Group Incorporated, United Parcel Service, Inc., and The Williams Companies, Inc.

September 2010

APPENDIX

APPENDIX A

LIST OF AMICI CURIAE

Altria Group, Inc., is the parent company of Philip Morris USA, U.S. Smokeless Tobacco Company, John Middleton, Ste. Michelle Wine Estates, and Philip Morris Capital Corporation. The Altria Group of companies has about 10,000 employees throughout the United States. Its award-winning diversity programs seek to provide an inclusive work environment where different perspectives are encouraged and valued. See Altria, Diversity & Inclusion, http://www.altria.com/en/cms/About_Atria/Our_People/Diversity_Inclusion/default.aspx?src=top_nav.

Bank of America Corporation is one of the world's largest financial institutions, serving individual consumers, small- and middle-market businesses, and large corporations with a full range of banking, investing, asset management, and other financial products and services. With approximately 284,000 employees, the company has been broadly acclaimed for its diversity initiatives. It promotes a philosophy of inclusion that draws on the strength of every associate to build an atmosphere of personal and professional growth. See Bank of America, Diversity and Inclusion, http://careers.bankofamerica.com/learnmore/diversity.asp.

Chrysler Group LLC was formed in 2009 in collaboration with Fiat S.p.A. Chrysler Group produces Chrysler, Jeep, Dodge, and Ram vehicles. It has approximately 50,000 employees and embraces the importance of diversity in all areas of its business. Chrysler Group seeks to achieve excellence in diversity through work/life effectiveness programs, leadership development, and a policy of zero tolerance for discrimination or harassment. See Chrysler, Global Diversity, http://www.chryslergroupllc.com/company/global_diversity.

CIGNA Corporation provides healthcare and related benefits, the majority of which are offered through the workplace. Its products and services include healthcare, disability, life, and accident insurance. The company has approximately 30,000 employees, and its diversity policies seek to educate employees about the important role diversity plays in creating a winning environment across the enterprise. CIGNA has received awards and recognition for its diversity programs from such organizations as the National Committee for Quality Assurance and the Human Rights Campaign Foundation. See CIGNA, Diversity: It's Who We Are, http://careers.cigna.com/CIGNAPage.aspx?page=23.

Del Monte Foods Company is one of the country's largest and best-known producers, distributors, and marketers of premium quality, branded pet products and food products. Del Monte has a powerful portfolio of brands, and its products are found in eight out of ten U.S. households. The company employs about 15,000 individuals. It is committed to promoting and preserving a workplace environment rich in diversity—one in which individual differences are not simply tolerated or accepted, but truly appreciated. The company's commitment to diversity is respected in the industry for delivering results. See Del Monte Foods, Workplace Diversity, http://www.delmonte.com/careers/default.aspx?page=ca_workplacediversity.

Dole Food Company, Inc., is the world's largest producer and marketer of fresh fruit and vegetables. It does business in more than 90 countries and employs approximately 39,100 full-time employees and 36,500 part-time employees worldwide. The company practices nondiscriminatory policies and is an equal opportunity employer. See Dole, Employees, http://dolecsr.com/Principles/Employees/tabid/407/Default.aspx.

Dollar General Corporation is the Nation's largest small-box discount retailer. The company employs approximately 80,000 employees in 35 states. In keeping with its mission of "Serving Others," Dollar General has implemented policies designed not only to ensure compliance with antidiscrimination laws but also to foster a diverse and inclusive work environment. See Dollar General, Diversity at Dollar General, http://www.dollargeneral.com/Careers/Pages/Diversity.aspx.

DuPont Company is a science-based products and services company. Founded in 1802, DuPont puts science to work by creating sustainable solutions essential to a better, safer, healthier life for people everywhere. Operating in more than 90 countries, DuPont has more than 58,000 employees. DuPont's commitment to diversity is embodied in its vision to be a "great global company through people." That vision of inclusiveness seeks to overcome any and all cultural and structural barriers that dampen motivation, stifle creativity, and deter full participation at all levels of the company. DuPont has been recognized for its commitment to the advancement of women and minorities by several organizations. Its continuing goal is to ensure that all employees have the opportunity to grow personally and professionally during their careers with DuPont. See DuPont, Diversity and Inclusion, http://www2.dupont.com/Diversity_and_Inclusion/en_US/index.html.

General Electric Company is a global infrastructure, finance, and media company. It employs 300,000 people in more than 100 countries. The company implemented its first companywide equal employment opportunity policy in the 1930s and has a long history of fair employment practices, ensuring a level playing field for all. GE has been named in numerous "top employer" lists for its employment programs and practices. See GE, Our People, http://www.ge.com/company/culture/people.html.

Hewlett-Packard Company is the world's largest technology company. It creates technology solutions for consumers and business with a portfolio that spans printing, personal computing, software, services, and information technology infrastructure. It has approximately 304,000 employees worldwide. The company's diversity policy recognizes that creating a diverse, inclusive work environment is a process of continuous renewal. See HP, The Diversity Value Chain, http://www8.hp.com/us/en/hp-information/about-hp/diversity/value.html.

Kimberly-Clark Corporation provides family care, personal care, and other products to 1.3 billion consumers each day in more than 150 countries. Its well-known brands include Kleenex, Scott, and Huggies. The company has nearly 56,000 employees worldwide. Kimberly-Clark focuses on developing employee programs that retain and recruit engaged and skilled talent reflective of its customers, consumers, and communities. It believes that promoting a culture that values and capitalizes on individual and collective talents, opinions, perspectives, and ideas makes it a more innovative company. See Kimberly-Clark, Diversity at Kimberly-Clark, http://www.kimberly-clark.com/aboutus/diversity.aspx.

McKesson Corporation is dedicated to delivering the vital medicines, supplies, and information technologies that enable the healthcare industry to provide patients better, safer care. The company has over 32,000 employees across the Nation and around the world. McKesson is committed to fostering a workplace environment that respects the many ways we are different from one another, and supports and acknowledges the diverse world in which we live and work. See McKesson, Diversity and Inclusion, http://www.mckesson.com/en_us/McKesson.com/About%2BUs/Corporate%2BCitizenship/Diversity%2Band%2BInclusion.html.

Microsoft Corporation is a worldwide leader in software, services, and solutions that help people and businesses realize their full potential. Founded in 1975, it has approximately 88,000 employees worldwide. Microsoft strongly believes that a diverse workforce brings greater perspective, knowledge, and experience, and makes the company an employer of choice for talent from around the world. Being able to attract, develop, and retain this talent enables Microsoft to be more innovative in the products it develops, the way it solves problems, and the way it serves the needs of an increasingly global and diverse customer base. See Microsoft, Global Diversity and Inclusion, http://www.microsoft.com/diversity.

PepsiCo, Inc., is a world leader in convenient snacks, foods, and beverages. It is home to hundreds of brands, including Pepsi-Cola, Frito-Lay, Gatorade, Tropicana, and Quaker. PepsiCo has over 285,000 employees. It approaches diversity and inclusion as fundamental business priorities and has received dozens of awards for its efforts. See PepsiCo, Diversity & Inclusion, http://www.pepsico.com/Purpose/Talent-Sustainability/Diversity-and-Inclusion.html.

Tyson Foods, Inc., founded in 1935, is one of the world's largest processors and marketers of chicken, beef, and pork. The company has approximately 117,000 team members employed at more than 400 facilities and offices around the world. Inclusion and valuing diversity are cornerstones that have supported the growth of its business throughout its history, especially in the past few decades. See Tyson, 2009 Sustainability Report 18, 28-29, http://www.tyson.com/Corporate/PressRoom/docs/2009SustainabilityReport_English.pdf.

UnitedHealth Group Incorporated is a diversified health and well-being company dedicated to helping people live healthier lives and making healthcare work better. With approximately 80,000 employees, UnitedHealth Group serves more than 75 million people worldwide through a broad spectrum of health benefit programs and health services. UnitedHealth Group embraces and encourages a culture of diversity and inclusion and knows that valuing diversity makes good business sense and helps to ensure the company's future success. The company is a member of the Select 50 Diversity Employers of Choice and has received numerous other awards and distinctions. See UnitedHealth Group, Diversity & Inclusion, http://diversity.unitedhealthgroup.com/.

United Parcel Service, Inc., is the world's largest package delivery company and a global leader in logistics, offering a broad range of solutions including the transportation of packages and freight, the facilitation of international trade, and the deployment of advanced technology to more efficiently manage the world of business. It has approximately 408,000 employees and serves more than 220 countries and territories worldwide. UPS has a longstanding commitment to diversity and believes that people do their best when their talents are encouraged to flourish in an environment that embraces diversity. The company has received awards and recognition for its diversity efforts from many organizations, including Hispanic Business magazine and the Women's Business Enterprise National Council. See UPS, Diversity in Business, http://www.responsibility.ups.com/Diversity.

The Williams Companies, Inc., is an integrated natural gas company. It produces, gathers, processes, and transports clean-burning natural gas to heat homes and power electric generation across the country, and employs approximately 5,000 people. The company's diversity mission is to foster an environment that attracts a high-performing, diverse workforce where individuals are respected and valued for their contributions and have the opportunity to achieve their maximum potential. See Williams, 2008 Corporate Responsibility Report 26-28, http://www.williams.com/corporate_responsibility/docs/CSR_2008.pdf.

AMICUS
CURIAE
BRIEF

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 24 2010
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. 10-277

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,

Respondents.

ON PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE NINTH CIRCUIT

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE CALIFORNIA EMPLOYMENT LAW COUNCIL IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

PAUL GROSSMAN
Counsel of Record
PAUL HASTINGS JANOFSKY & WALKER LLP
515 South Flower Street,
Twenty-Fifth Floor
Los Angeles, CA 90071
(213) 683-6203
paulgrossman@paulhastings.com

General Counsel for Amicus Curiae
California Employment Law Council

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF CONTENTS i

TABLE OF CITED AUTHORITIES iii

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE 1

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 2

SUMMARY OF REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION 4

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITON 8

I. THIS COURT SHOULD GRANT REVIEW TO RESOLVE THE RECURRING QUESTION OF WHETHER CLASSES CAN BE CERTIFIED THAT WOULD BE UNMANAGEABLE UNLESS FORMULA RELIEF WERE GRANTED TO NON-VICTIMS. 8

II. THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S REFUSAL TO RESOLVE THE DIRECT CONFLICT BETWEEN TWO STATISTICAL APPROACHES (AGGREGATED VERSUS STORE-BY-STORE) DIRECTLY CONFLICTS WITH THE SECOND CIRCUIT'S REPUDIATION OF THE CARIDAD DECISION IN IPO AND THE THIRD CIRCUIT'S HYDROGEN PEROXIDE DECISION. 15

Page

III. IN APPROVING A MULTIPLE-FACILITY EXCESS SUBJECTIVITY NATIONWIDE CERTIFICATION BASED ON AGGREGATED STATISTICS, THE NINTH CIRCUIT HAS CREATED THE CLEAREST POSSIBLE CONFLICT WITH THE D.C. CIRCUIT. 18

IV. THE EN BANC COURT'S WILLINGNESS TO CERTIFY THIS NATIONWIDE CLASS WITHOUT AN APPROVED TRIAL PLAN DIRECTLY CONFLICTS WITH THE THIRD CIRCUIT'S RECENT DECISION IN HOHIDER. 21

CONCLUSION 23

TABLE OF CITED AUTHORITIES

Page

CASES

Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp.,
151 F.3d 402 (5th Cir. 1998) 7

American Honda Motor Co. v. Allen,
600 F.3d 813 (7th Cir. 2010) 7

Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter R.R.,
191 F.3d 283 (2d Cir. 1999) 16

Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.,
222 F.R.D. 137 (N.D. Cal. 2004) 16

Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.,
603 F.3d 571 (9th Cir. 2010) . . . . passim

East Texas Motor Freight System Inc. v. Rodriguez,
431 U.S. 395 (1977) 12, 13

Firefighters Local Union No. 1784 v. Stotts,
467 U.S. 561 (1984) 12, 13

Franks v. Bowman Transp. Co.,
424 U.S. 747 (1976) 11, 13

Garcia v. Johanns,
444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 6, 18, 19, 20

General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon,
457 U.S. 147 (1982) 6, 8, 20

Page

Hilao v. Estate of Marcos,
103 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 1996) 14

Hohider v. United Parcel Service, Inc.,
574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009). 7, 21

In Re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc.,
288 F.3d 1012, 1020 (7th Cir. 2002) 15

In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litigation,
552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008) 6, 16, 17

In re Initial Public Offering Securities Litigation,
471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006) 6, 16

In re Initial Public Offering Securities Litigation,
483 F.3d 70 (2d Cir. 2007) 16

Love v. Johanns,
439 F.3d 723 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 6, 20

Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp.,
527 U.S. 815 (1999) 15

PriceWaterhouse v. Hopkins,
490 U.S. 228 (1989) 13

Reid v. Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Co.,
205 F.R.D. 655 (N.D. Ga. 2001). 20

Page

Teamsters v. United States,
431 U.S. 324 (1977) .... passim

STATUTES

28 U.S.C. § 2072(b) 14-15

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B) 14

Civil Rights Act of 1964 § 706(g)(2)(A) 4, 9, 10

Civil Rights Act of 1964 § 706(g)(2)(B) 5, 9

Civil Rights Act of 1991 13

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 .... passim

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) 4

LEGISLATIVE MATERIALS

110 Cong. Rec. 6549 (1964) 12, 13

TREATISES

Barbara Lindemann & Paul Grossman, EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION LAW
(4th ed. 2007) 14

The California Employment Law Council (CELC) respectfully submits this brief amicus curiae, in support of the petition for a writ of certiorari.[1]

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE

CELC is an organization of approximately 50 major employers, many of them nationwide, that operate in California. CELC regularly files amicus briefs in major employment cases. CELC's objective is fair and moderate employment laws, fair to employer and employee alike.

All of CELC's members are subject to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Title VII) and other employment-related statutes and regulations. All of CELC's nationwide members operate in California. Therefore, any law firm desirous of bringing a nationwide class action against any of the CELC members has the option of doing so in the Ninth Circuit, even if the bulk of the company's operations is elsewhere. As the strong dissent of Judge Ikuta to the 6-5 en banc decision makes clear, nationwide class certification against such employers is virtually automatic in the Ninth Circuit after the en banc decision since there are only three prerequisites, all easily available in most circumstances: (1) the opinion of an expert such as Professor Bielby that white male decisionmakers, because of ingrained stereotypical views, cannot help discriminating if allowed to exercise subjective judgments; (2) a handful of uncorroborated, untestable perceptions of discrimination by class members (in the instant case one for every 12,500 class members); and (3) aggregated nationwide statistics which, based on an untestable choice of variables by the plaintiffs' expert, shows statistical significance against the class in question. (Statistical significance is based on two factors: degree of disparity and sample size. With the large sample size of any nationwide certification, the smallest of disparities shown by choice of variables will yield statistical significance.) See Dissent, Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571, 652 (9th Cir. 2010) ("Put simply, the door is now open to Title VII lawsuits targeting national and international companies, regardless of size and diversity, based on nothing more than general and conclusory allegations, a handful of anecdotes, and statistical disparities that bear little relation to the alleged discriminatory decisions.") Such a rule virtually guaranteeing nationwide class certifications against any nationwide employer that operates in the Ninth Circuit puts even the most non-discriminatory of America's nationwide employers at unfair risk.

---

[1] Counsel for amicus curiae authored this brief in its entirety. He has been CELC's General Counsel for over 25 years. He was one of the lawyers representing Wal-Mart in the district court and was listed as one of the counsel of record on the panel but not the en banc appeal. No person or entity, other than the amicus curiae and its members, made a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief. Wal-Mart is not a member of CELC. The parties have filed blanket waivers.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

This brief focuses only on the principal allegation in the case, allegedly discriminatory pay decisions made in a subjective fashion at the store level by the store managers of Wal-Mart's 3,400 stores. Plaintiffs relied on three categories of evidence in seeking a nationwide class certification: (1) the opinion of a sociologist; (2) a handful of anecdotes; and (3) statistics aggregated across region and nation. Only Wal-Mart's statistician did a store-by-store analysis.[2] The following is undisputed: 90% of Wal-Mart stores showed no statistically significant disparity with respect to male/female pay, 2.5% of the stores showed a statistical disparity which favored women, and 7.5% of the stores showed a statistical disparity which favored men. The dissent discussed the undisputed nature of the store-by-store analysis, with a citation to the district court opinion, at Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571, 630 (9th Cir. 2010). The district court certified a nationwide class for back pay, punitive damages, and injunctive relief.

On Wal-Mart's appeal, a three-judge panel, 2-1, with Judge Pregerson writing the majority opinion, affirmed in all respects, including affirming the trial court's trial plan. Under that trial plan, at Phase I, the jury would determine whether there was a pattern or practice of discrimination. If so, there would be no Phase II – based on expert opinion the total disparity in pay would be converted to a lump sum, which, along with any punitive damages awarded, would be distributed to discriminatee and non-discriminatee alike by formula. Following a petition for en banc hearing, which pointed out that the trial plan totally contradicted this Court's Teamsters line of cases (Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1977), and the statute, particularly § 706(g) (court cannot award back pay to non-discriminatees), the panel totally withdrew their earlier opinion, totally rewrote it, and expressed no opinion on the district court's trial plan, stating that the panel was confident that the trial court could construct a trial plan which was defensible. Rehearing en banc was then granted, and by a 6-5 vote, the en banc court majority (Judges Reinhardt, Hawkins, Graber, Fisher, Paez, and Berzon) affirmed the nationwide certification, with two exceptions: It directed the trial court to reconsider for possible 23(b)(3) certification punitive damages and relief for persons who were ex-employees at the time the complaint was originally filed. Judge Ikuta and Chief Judge Kozinski filed strong dissents, joined by Judges Rymer, Silverman, and Bea. Wal-Mart filed the instant Petition for a Writ of Certiorari on August 25, 2010.

---

[2] In fact, she did two store-by-store analyses: (1) analyzing grocery departments separately (only a minority of Wal-Mart stores have grocery departments), she compared all non-grocery operations; and (2) she compared separately Wal-Mart's basic merchandising operation, and specialty operations such as opticians, hearing aids, and grocery. Plaintiffs' expert admitted starting to do a store-by-store analysis, and then abandoning the effort.

SUMMARY OF REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

Conflicts between the Ninth Circuit's 6-5 majority and this Court's decisions, the decisions of other circuits, and the clear wording of the statute include, but are not limited to, the following:

(1) 42 U.S.C. § 705(g)(2)(A): This section (§ 706(g)(2)(A)), crucial to the passage of Title VII, prohibits a court from awarding back pay to any non-victim, a prohibition necessarily violated by any trial plan discussed by the district court or court of appeals. Although heavily relied upon by the dissent, the majority simply ignores this clear statutory prohibition.

(2) 42 U.S.C. § 705(g)(2)(B): This mixed-motive provision, § 706(g)(2)(B), added by the 1991 Civil Rights Act, states that even if an employer has been shown to be discriminatory, it can avoid back pay by proving "a same decision" defense. Any trial plan discussed by the district court or the court of appeals would violate this prohibition.

(3) Teamsters' mandate of Phase I, Phase II: Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1977), and its progeny, relying on § 706(g), held that in a Title VII class action, at Phase I plaintiffs must prove a pattern or practice of discrimination. At Phase II, individual claimants are presumed entitled to relief unless the employer can demonstrate that despite the pattern of discrimination the particular claimant was not a victim. Under any of the trial plans discussed by the district court or court of appeals, there would be no Phase II.

(4) The Rules Enabling Act: It provides that federal rules cannot abridge substantive rights. In order to create an unmanageable class action, Wal-Mart's substantive right not to pay money to non-discriminatees has been abridged.

(5) Conflict with the Second and Third Circuits on need to resolve merits issues that relate to Rule 23 requirements: Although paying lip service to the recent decisions from the Second[3] and Third[4] Circuits that conflicts between experts must be resolved if relevant to Rule 23 issues, the en banc majority carved out a Title VII exception: It ruled that in Title VII cases conflicts between dueling statistical experts need not be resolved because the conflicts are simply too important: "Statistical evidence does not overlap with the merits, it largely is the merits . . . ." Dukes, 603 F.3d 571, 591 (emphasis in original).

(6) Aggregated statistics: The en banc majority is in conflict with numerous circuits, including two major decisions of the D.C. Circuit,[5] in certifying a geographically broad class based on aggregated statistics when the challenged decisions, subjective judgments by local managers, are made at the local level.

(7) Multiple-facility excess subjectivity: The en banc majority dismisses this Court's holding in Gen. Tel. Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 159 n.15 (1982), that in order to obtain class certification of a broad across-the-board excess subjectivity case there must be "[s]ignificant proof that an employer operated under a general policy of discrimination," as dicta. Id. at 595. If significant proof of a general policy of discrimination is required, it is not met when the store-by-store statistics

---

[3] In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006).

[4] In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008).

[5] Love v. Johanns, 439 F.3d 723 (D.C. Cir. 2006); Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

indicate exactly the type of variance one would expect in a non-discriminatory environment.

(8) Daubert: The panel majority held that the district court was correct in not holding a Daubert hearing before relying on sociological testimony that white men can't help discriminating. This directly conflicts with a just-issued Seventh Circuit decision. American Honda Motor Co., Inc. v. Allen, 600 F.3d 813, 815 (7th Cir. 2010) ("[W]hen an expert's . . . testimony is critical to class certification . . . the district court must perform a full Daubert analysis . . . .").

(9) Need for a trial plan: The Third Circuit, in Hohider v. United Parcel Service, Inc., 574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009), with Justice Sandra Day O'Connor sitting by designation, unanimously held that class certification is inappropriate without an approved trial plan. But the en banc majority ducked the issue: "[a]t this stage we express no opinion regarding Wal-Mart's objections to the district court's tentative trial plan . . . but simply note . . . there are a range of possibilities . . . ." Dukes, 603 F.3d at 625. "Given the tentative nature of the district court's trial plan, we decline to address Wal-Mart's due process and manageability challenges to that plan." Id. at 628.

(10) (b)(2) versus (b)(3): There is a clear circuit conflict between the multiple circuits following the Fifth Circuit's approach in Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402 (5th Cir. 1998) ((b)(2) certification proper only if monetary relief is incidental) and the en banc majority, authorizing (b)(2) certification when billions of dollars are at issue.

(11) Less rigorous review of district court decision certifying class than district court decision denying certification: The en banc majority, citing prior Ninth Circuit precedent, held that a district court's decision certifying a class is "subject to 'very limited' review . . . ." Dukes, 603 F.3d at 579. It cited a Second Circuit opinion for the proposition that "when reviewing a grant of class certification, we accord the district court noticeably more deference than when we review a denial of class certification." Id. Other circuits draw no such distinction.

(12) "Rigorous" versus "permissive" (a)(2) and (a)(3) analysis: The panel majority stated that commonality is "construed permissively" and that "one significant issue common to the class may be sufficient . . . ." Id. at 599. It held that typicality is also judged permissively. Id. at 614. But this Court, in Falcon, mandated a "rigorous analysis." 457 U.S. at 161.

We elaborate on some but not all of these reasons for granting the petition.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITON

I. THIS COURT SHOULD GRANT REVIEW TO RESOLVE THE RECURRING QUESTION OF WHETHER CLASSES CAN BE CERTIFIED THAT WOULD BE UNMANAGEABLE UNLESS FORMULA RELIEF WERE GRANTED TO NON-VICTIMS.

Under all trial plans discussed or proposed to make manageable a class now estimated to be approximately 3,000,000,[6] a pool of money will be calculated based on expert testimony, and distributed by formula to victim and non-victim alike. This procedure, under which Wal-Mart is precluded from proving which back-pay claimants are not discriminatees, conflicts with § 706(g)(2)(A) (court has no authority to award back pay to non-victims), as construed in at least five U.S. Supreme Court decisions, and with the Rules Enabling Act. Furthermore, it conflicts with § 706(g)(2)(B) (mixed motive; employer proved to be biased can avoid back pay by proving same decision would have been made in non-discriminatory environment).

Under any of the trial plans proposed or discussed (none of which has been approved even by the panel majority) the defendant will not be given the opportunity, at any stage of the case, to demonstrate that particular class members are not discrimination victims. Thus, numerous class members who are not discriminatees will recover back pay. That approach is incompatible with Title VII and due process.

The district court recognized, and the Ninth Circuit did not dispute, that the case was manageable as a class only if Wal-Mart was denied the right (i) to prove, at any phase of the trial, that particular persons (or groups of persons, such as employees at particular stores)[7] were not discriminated against, and (ii) to contest the eligibility of those individuals to back pay.

---

[6] The panel majority's lower estimate ignores the fact that every woman hired since the year 2003, when class certification was briefed and argued, has been added to the class.

[7] The parties' briefs reveal that the undisputed statistical evidence is that there is no statistically significant difference in pay between men and women at more than 90% of Wal-Mart
(cont'd)

Under the district court's trial plan, which the majority neither approved nor disapproved, a "formula" would be used to determine the total amount of back pay. The trial plan envisions appointing a special master to identify the potential discriminatees, using "objective" evidence captured in Wal-Mart's personnel database (which, the court acknowledged, lacks relevant information such as the principal determinant of starting pay, prior experience, ER 1213).[8]

This procedure simply and demonstrably violates § 706(g)(2)(A) of Title VII. The mode of adjudication of a Title VII class action has been established since Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1977). In Phase I, plaintiffs carry the burden of demonstrating that a pattern or practice of discrimination generally exists. Each class member seeking monetary relief stores nationwide, and that at 35-40% of the stores any disparity tends to favor women. The undisputed statistics thus suggest that the class includes hundreds of thousands of women who work at stores where women were statistically favored and thus do not appear to be even potential discriminatees.

---

(cont'd)

[8] This means, for example, that a female meat cutter with one year of experience, hired at $15 per hour, on the same day that a male meat cutter with 20 years of experience is hired at $16 per hour, will be statistically presumed to be a discrimination victim and entitled to back pay. The potential discriminatees would receive back pay according to formula, with no opportunity for the defendant to prove the absence of discrimination.

enters Phase II with a presumption in her favor, but the employer has an opportunity to prove that, despite the finding of a pattern of discrimination, a particular claimant was not a victim and is not entitled to relief. But here there will be no Phase II.

The federal courts are not free to sacrifice substance in the name of procedure. Section 706(g) of Title VII provides, in relevant part: "No order of the court shall require . . . payment to [any individual] of any back pay, if such individual . . . was [treated as he or she was] for any reason other than discrimination . . . ."

Thirty years of Supreme Court cases have explained the origin and significance of that section. Teamsters made clear that mere membership in a disadvantaged class is insufficient to warrant judicial relief: "The [district] court will have to make a substantial number of individual decisions in deciding which of the minority employees were actual victims." 431 U.S. at 371. Accord: Id. at 361-62 ("To determine the scope of individual relief" following a pattern or practice finding, the employer may "demonstrate that the individual . . . was denied an employment opportunity for lawful reasons.").

Teamsters reaffirmed the holding of Franks v. Bowman Transp. Co., 424 U.S. 747 (1976). The Court in Franks (per Brennan, J.) cautioned that, even after a finding of a pattern or practice of discrimination at Phase I, the employer in the remedial phase will have the opportunity "to prove that [specific] individuals . . . were not in fact victims of . . . discrimination." Id. at 772.

Then, in East Texas Motor Freight System Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395 (1977), the court of appeals had certified a class notwithstanding the district court's finding that certain persons were not qualified for the jobs they sought. This Court unanimously reversed: "Even assuming, arguendo, that the company's failure even to consider [plaintiffs'] applications was discriminatory, the company was entitled to prove at trial that the [plaintiffs] had not been injured because they were not qualified and would not have been hired in any event." Id. at 404 n.9.

In Firefighters Local Union No. 1784 v. Stotts, 467 U.S. 561 (1984), the Court again considered the issue of relief to persons not shown to be discrimination victims. The statute "provide[s] make-whole relief only to those who have been actual victims of illegal discrimination." Id. at 580. This Court reviewed the legislative history, noting that Title VII's opponents had sought to scuttle the bill by speculating that employers could be ordered to grant formula relief to non-discriminatees. The Stotts Court quoted Senator Hubert Humphrey's dispositive response in the legislative history at the time:

> [Under the proposed bill] [n]o court order can require . . . payment of back pay for anyone who was not . . . refused employment or advancement . . . by an act of discrimination forbidden by this title. This is stated expressly in [§ 706(g)] . . . .

Id. (quoting 110 Cong. Rec. 6549 (1964)) (remarks of Sen. Humphrey). Stotts also quoted "the authoritative" interpretative memorandum of the bill by Senators Clark and Case, "the bipartisan 'captains' of Title VII." Id. at 580 n.14. Under the proposed bill, those Senators explained, "a court was not authorized to give [any relief] to nonvictims." Id. at 581 (quoting 110 Cong. Rec. at 7214).

Where there is a pattern or practice of discrimination, a court of course may order injunctive or other affirmative relief to put a stop to the discriminatory practice. But individual-specific monetary or equitable relief cannot be granted to non-victims, Stotts explained. This Court cited Title VII's bipartisan sponsors' newsletter: "[N]ot even a court, much less the [Equal Employment Opportunity] Commission, could order . . . payment of back pay for anyone who was not discriminated against in violation of this title." Id. at 581-82 (quoting 110 Cong. Rec. at 14465).

Thereafter, in PriceWaterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228 (1989), the Court considered the special problem of plaintiffs who may have been denied job benefits partly for legitimate and partly for discriminatory motives. Citing § 706(g), the Court reiterated "that Title VII does not authorize affirmative relief for individuals as to whom, the employer shows, the existence of systemic discrimination had no effect. [Citations to Franks, Teamsters and Rodriguez omitted.] These decisions suggest that the proper focus of § 706(g) is on claims of systemic discrimination . . . ." Id. at 245. Systemic discrimination is exactly the allegation here.[9] [9] The Civil Rights Act of 1991 codified PriceWaterhouse in part and modified it in part on grounds not material here. "The 1991 Act affirmed the PriceWaterhouse holding that mixed

---

(cont'd)

The en banc majority's decision here is irreconcilable with Teamsters and the other above-described cases of this Court construing § 706(g).[10] What has essentially been done is that substantive law (Wal-Mart's right not to pay money to non-victims) has been ignored in order to cram a particular case into the class action device.[11] The Rules Enabling Act says otherwise. 28 U.S.C.

(cont'd)
motive is an affirmative defense" for the employer to invoke. Barbara Lindemann & Paul Grossman, EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION LAW 99 & n.318 (4th ed. 2007) (quoting 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B)) (permitting the employer to demonstrate that it "would have taken the same action in the absence of the impermissible motivating factor").

[10] The en banc majority relies on the outlier case of Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 1996), which was a class action protesting torture, summary execution and disappearance at the hands of Ferdinand Marcos, the Philippines' former President. Id. at 771. Even ignoring the outlier nature of Hilao, it was not an employment discrimination case. Thus, § 706(g) and the Teamsters line of Supreme Court decisions, barring relief to non-victims, were inapplicable.

[11] One fallacy, not expressed in but perhaps underlying the en banc majority's decision, is that it must be "this class or no class," and that Wal-Mart because of its size is seeking an effective exemption from the law. Not so. More narrowly tailored litigation of course is possible. Here, as noted above, the undisputed store-by-store statistics show that only 10% of Wal-Mart stores had a statistically significant difference in pay (with one-fourth of those stores favoring women). If this Court reverses class certification, the nationwide consortium of law firms representing plaintiffs surely will bring individual store class actions at the stores where the statistics indicate that a real problem may have existed in the past. Wal-Mart stores are
(cont'd)

§ 2072(b). As the Supreme Court said, in discussing Rule 23:

> The Rules Enabling Act underscores the need for caution. As we said in Amchem, no reading of [Rule 23] can ignore the Act's mandate that rules of procedure shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right.

Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 845 (1999) (internal quotation marks and citations omitted); accord: e.g., In Re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012, 1020 (7th Cir. 2002) ("Tempting as it is to alter doctrine in order to facilitate class treatment, judges must resist so that all parties' legal rights may be respected.").

II. THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S REFUSAL TO RESOLVE THE DIRECT CONFLICT BETWEEN TWO STATISTICAL APPROACHES (AGGREGATED VERSUS STORE-BY-STORE) DIRECTLY CONFLICTS WITH THE SECOND CIRCUIT'S REPUDIATION OF THE CARIDAD DECISION IN IPO AND THE THIRD CIRCUIT'S HYDROGEN PEROXIDE DECISION.

There could not be a more direct conflict between the two sides' statistical experts. The lower court record reveals that Wal-Mart's statistical expert did two different store-by-store studies: (1) she compared each store's entire store operations, excluding only a large, and an individual store class action would average hundreds of class members, the size of a typical, manageable Title VII class action.

---

(cont'd)

separate line of business, the grocery departments, for those stores that had grocery departments; and (2) she compared the core merchandising business of each store, and, separately, the specialty departments such as tires, hearing aids, optical and grocery. Each led to substantially similar findings: At 90% of Wal-Mart's 3,400 stores, there was no statistically significant difference in pay between men and women; at 30-40% of the stores women were favored, although not to a statistically significant degree. Women were favored in 2.5% of the stores to a statistically significant degree; 7.5% of the stores favored men to a statistically significant degree. Plaintiffs' expert admitted that he began a store-by-store analysis, but abandoned it. He submitted only aggregated statistics, nationwide and by region (a region includes approximately 80 stores). The district court refused to resolve the conflict, citing the now repudiated Second Circuit decision in Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., 191 F.3d 283 (2d Cir. 1999), for the following proposition: "The statistical dueling in which defendant sought to engage the Court was not relevant to the certification determination . . . ." Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 222 F.R.D. 137, 159 n.29 (N.D. Cal. 2004) (internal quotations to Caridad omitted).

The Ninth Circuit majority purports to agree with the recent seminal opinions of the Second and Third Circuits in In re Initial Pub. Offering Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006), decision clarified on denial of reh'g, 483 F.3d 70 (2d Cir. 2007), and In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008). Dukes, 603 F.3d at 594. IPO repudiated Caridad. Both IPO and Hydrogen Peroxide held that conflicts between experts must be resolved at the class certification stage if relevant to Rule 23 issues even if also relevant to the merits. But the en banc panel majority then limits the IPO/Hydrogen Peroxide requirement to resolve conflicts between dueling experts to securities class actions despite the fact that Hydrogen Peroxide was not a securities class action, it was an antitrust case. Id. at 610. Then, out of whole cloth, the Ninth Circuit creates a Title VII exception to the rule that conflicts between dueling experts must be resolved when relevant to class certification issues:

> [I]n contrast to a securities class action based on a fraud-on-the-market theory, in a pattern and practice discrimination case, a plaintiff will typically not come to court in the first place without anecdotal evidence. For practical purposes . . . the plaintiff's statistical evidence does not overlap with the merits, it largely is the merits. [citations omitted] This means that disputes over whose statistics are more persuasive are often not disputes about whether the plaintiffs raise common issues or questions, but are really arguments going to proof of the merits.

Id. at 591 (emphasis in original).

The conflict between the experts could not be more critical. Plaintiffs' theory, as the dissent points out (Id. at 628), is purely and simply that individual store managers using subjective judgments made biased decisions. But the store-by-store statistical analysis, if accepted as the more probative for Rule 23 purposes, demonstrates a total lack of commonality and typicality.

As the dissent points out, a female class member in California, where perhaps the statistics indicate men are favored, has nothing in common with a female class member in Wyoming, where the statistics might indicate that females are favored. Id. at 632 (dissent).

The Second and Third Circuits laid down a rule of law applicable to all requests for Rule 23 certification: Where there is an overlap between expert testimony relevant to Rule 23 requirements and the merits, conflicts between experts must be resolved. The Ninth Circuit's refusal to allow this in Title VII cases creates the clearest possible circuit conflict.

III. IN APPROVING A MULTIPLE-FACILITY EXCESS SUBJECTIVITY NATIONWIDE CERTIFICATION BASED ON AGGREGATED STATISTICS, THE NINTH CIRCUIT HAS CREATED THE CLEAREST POSSIBLE CONFLICT WITH THE D.C. CIRCUIT.

Even without the store-by-store statistics referenced above, it is intuitively obvious that when the plaintiffs' theory is "excess subjectivity" – that managers at geographically separate locations made biased subjective judgments at the local level – the effect of these subjective judgments would differ facility-by-facility, rendering a multiple-facility excess subjectivity case, absent unusual facts, analytically impossible. There would be no commonality and typicality – every location would require a separate analysis. That is precisely what the D.C. Circuit has held.

In Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006), a national origin lending discrimination case, the allegation was that multiple-facility decisionmaking was subjective and led to discrimination. The D.C. Circuit affirmed a denial of class certification:

> Establishing commonality for a disparate treatment class is particularly difficult where, as here, multiple decisionmakers with significant local autonomy exist.

Id. at 632.

> [T]heir claims arise from multiple individual decisions . . . . [Plaintiffs did] not cite a single reversal of a district court's denial of class certification based on no commonality resulting from the geographic spread of the decisionmakers. [numerous citations omitted]

Id. at 633. Plaintiffs argued, as do the plaintiffs in the Wal-Mart case, that excess subjectivity was both disparate treatment and disparate impact. The D.C. Circuit rejected the idea that either could be attacked on an excess subjectivity theory spread over numerous decisionmaking locations: The "subjective decisionmaking process constitutes the [allegedly] common facially neutral practice." Id. at 633-34. "We reject both theories and instead affirm the district court's denial of class certification because the appellants failed to show a common facially neutral . . . policy . . . ." Id. at 634.

In language equally applicable herein, the D.C. Circuit stated: "It does not suffice under Rule 23(a)(2) to show an ethnic imbalance . . .; rather the appellants must show that a common facially neutral policy caused the imbalance." Id. at 635.

The D.C. Circuit in Love v. Johanns, a companion case charging sex discrimination in lending at multiple geographic locations, noted in language also equally applicable to the Wal-Mart case that if the class was certified "the outcome . . . would nevertheless turn on a series of individualized inquiries into . . . practices in more than 2,700 . . . offices across the country . . . ." Id. at 730. "The District Court concluded that the geographic dispersal and decentralized organization . . . 'cut[] against any inference for class action commonality.'" Id.

Perhaps the most extensive analysis of why an excess subjectivity multiple-facility class action cannot be certified was done in Reid v. Lockheed Martin Aeronautics Co., 205 F.R.D. 655 (N.D. Ga. 2001). After reviewing numerous excess subjectivity multiple-facility cases, the court denied class certification because plaintiffs seemed to be contending that the employer "had a centralized policy of decentralization, which is insufficient . . . to satisfy commonality or typicality" with respect to a multi-facility class. Id. at 670. The court noted that this Court in Falcon required significant proof to justify certification of a broad class based on excess subjectivity and this is not shown by aggregated statistics.

IV. THE EN BANC COURT'S WILLINGNESS TO CERTIFY THIS NATIONWIDE CLASS WITHOUT AN APPROVED TRIAL PLAN DIRECTLY CONFLICTS WITH THE THIRD CIRCUIT'S RECENT DECISION IN HOHIDER.

Hohider v. United Parcel Service, Inc., 574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009), reversed a nationwide class certification in an employment discrimination case. Justice Sandra Day O'Connor sat on the unanimous panel by designation. The Third Circuit rejected the concept of a conditional certification, holding that a trial court must make a definitive determination that the requirements of Rule 23 have been met and cannot rely on later developments to determine whether certification is appropriate. The Third Circuit relied on the advisory committee's 2003 note to Rule 23 in holding that there must be an approved "trial plan." The Third Circuit concluded: "The court's deferral of this analysis [how the trial plan would deal with monetary relief issues] post-class certification was an abuse of discretion." Id. at 202.

What the Third Circuit rejected in Hohider is exactly what the en banc majority did in the instant case. The history of the efforts of the Ninth Circuit panel and later the en banc court to come up with a trial plan that met statutory and due process requirements is instructive. The original panel decision affirmed the trial court's trial plan, describing it as follows:

> [T]he district court reasoned that if, at the merits stage, Wal-Mart was found liable of discrimination, the court could employ a formula to determine the amount of back pay and punitive damages owed to the class members.

In sections of its opinion entitled "Teamsters does not require individualized hearings," "Title VII does not require individualized hearings," and "Statistical methods may be applied to determine relief," the original panel expressly held that this trial plan was permissible. En banc review was sought. The CELC amicus brief in support of en banc review focused on the statutory language prohibiting any back pay to non-discriminatees and the Teamsters line of cases, requiring a Phase II at which the employer could contest individual entitlement to monetary relief. The panel reassumed jurisdiction, gutted its original opinion, took out everything pertaining to a defense of the district court's trial plan, and merely held that it was confident that the district court could come up with some trial plan that would meet statutory and due process requirements.

The en banc panel majority has now done the same thing:

> At this stage, we express no opinion regarding Wal-Mart's objections to the district court's tentative trial plan (or that trial plan itself), but simply note that because there are a range of possibilities–which may or may not include the district court's proposed course of action–that would allow this class action to proceed in a manner that is both manageable and in > accordance with due process, manageability concerns present no bar to class certification here.

Dukes, 603 F.3d at 625.

There is the clearest possible conflict between the Third Circuit's requirement of a manageable trial plan as a condition of class certification, and the Ninth Circuit's affirmance of a nationwide certification without an approved trial plan.

CONCLUSION

The Petition should be granted to resolve the numerous conflicts between the Ninth Circuit en banc decision, other circuits, the statute, and this Court's prior opinions. Only in the Ninth Circuit is, as the dissent makes clear, nationwide Title VII class certification automatic based simply on the submission of three categories of evidence: (1) the opinion of a sociologist which will not be reviewed under Daubert; (2) anecdotal claims of discrimination from 1/100th of 1% of the class which cannot be tested; and (3) aggregated nationwide statistics which are exempt from the requirement of resolving the conflict between the experts – the issue of which expert's opinion is more probative with respect to Rule 23 issues. Dissent, Id. at 652 ("Put simply, the door is now open to Title VII lawsuits targeting national and international companies . . . based on nothing more than general and conclusory [expert] allegations, a handful of anecdotes, and statistical disparities that bear little relation to the alleged discriminatory decisions.").

Respectfully submitted,

PAUL GROSSMAN
Counsel of Record
PAUL HASTINGS JANOFSKY & WALKER LLP
515 South Flower Street,
Twenty-Fifth Floor
Los Angeles, CA 90071
(213) 683-6203
paulgrossman@paulhastings.com

General Counsel for Amicus Curiae
California Employment Law Council

AMICUS
CURIAE
BRIEF

172

④

No. 10-277

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 24 2010
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,
Respondents.

On Petition For A Writ Of Certiorari
To The United States Court Of Appeals
For The Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

ROBIN S. CONRAD
SHANE B. KAWKA
NATIONAL CHAMBER
LITIGATION CENTER, INC.
1615 H STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20062
(202) 463-5337

JOHN H. BEISNER
Counsel of Record
CLIFFORD M. SLOAN
KAREN L. CORMAN
JESSICA D. MILLER
CHRISTOPHER G. CLARK
SKADDEN, ARPS, SLATE,
MEAGHER & FLOM LLP
1440 New York Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 371-7000
John.Beisner@skadden.com

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

Table of Contents

Page

STATEMENT OF INTEREST 1

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 3

ARGUMENT 5

I. THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION TAKES RULE 23(b)(2) FAR BEYOND ITS INTENDED SCOPE, CREATING GRAVE RISKS FOR AMERICAN BUSINESS. 5

A. This Court Should Resolve The Circuit Split On Application Of Rule 23(b)(2) – And Adopt A Standard Consistent With The Language And Intent Of That Provision. 5

B. By Opening The (b)(2) Door To Claims For Damages – While Rejecting The Cohesiveness Approach Adopted By Other Courts – The Ninth Circuit Has Effectively Embraced Standard-Free Class Certification. 12

II. THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION SACRIFICES SUBSTANTIVE LAW TO PROMOTE EFFICIENCY. 17

CONCLUSION 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES

Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp.,
151 F.3d 402 (5th Cir. 1998) 5, 6, 7, 14

In re Allstate Insurance Co.,
400 F.3d 505 (7th Cir. 2005) 8

Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor,
521 U.S. 591 (1997) 18

Barabin v. Aramark Corp.,
No. 02-8057, 2003 U.S. App. LEXIS 3532 (3d Cir. Jan. 24, 2003) 8

Barnes v. American Tobacco Co.,
161 F.3d 127 (3d Cir. 1998) 13, 14

Bolin v. Sears, Roebuck & Co.,
231 F.3d 970 (5th Cir. 2000) 12

Boshes v. General Motors Corp.,
59 F.R.D. 589 (N.D. Ill. 1973) 12

Boughton v. Cotter Corp.,
65 F.3d 823 (10th Cir. 1995) 6

In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc.,
288 F.3d 1012 (7th Cir. 2002) 18

Broussard v. Meineke Discount Muffler Shops, Inc.,
155 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1998) 20

Castano v. American Tobacco Co.,
84 F.3d 734 (5th Cir. 1996) 17

DG ex rel. Stricklin v. Devaughn,
594 F.3d 1188 (10th Cir. 2010) 14

Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.,
222 F.R.D. 137 (N.D. Cal. 2004) 11, 19

Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.,
603 F.3d 571 (9th Cir. 2010) .... passim

Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin,
391 F.2d 555 (2d Cir. 1968) 6

Eubanks v. Billington,
110 F.3d 87 (D.C. Cir. 1997) 5-6

Holmes v. Continental Can Co.,
706 F.2d 1144 (11th Cir. 1983) 6, 14

International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States,
431 U.S. 324 (1977) 18

Jenkins v. United Gas Corp.,
400 F.2d 28 (5th Cir. 1984) 6

Lemon v. International Union of Operating Engineers,
216 F.3d 577 (7th Cir. 2000) 13

Maldonado v. Ochsner Clinic Foundation, 493
F.3d 521 (5th Cir. 2007) 13

McLaughlin v. American Tobacco Co.,
522 F.3d 215 (2d Cir. 2008) 20

Murray v. Auslander,
244 F.3d 807 (11th Cir. 2001) 8

Reeb v. Ohio Department of Rehabilitation & Corrections,
435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006) 8

In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc.,
51 F.3d 1293 (7th Cir. 1995) 17

San Antonio Telegraph Co. v. American Telephone & Telegraph Co., 68 F.R.D. 435 (W.D. Tex. 1975) 11

In re School Asbestos Litigation,
789 F.2d 996 (3d Cir. 1986) 6

Simer v. Rios,
661 F.2d 655 (7th Cir. 1981) 6

Smilow v. Sw. Bell Mobile System, Inc.,
323 F.3d 32 (1st Cir. 2003) 14

In re St. Jude Medical Inc.,
425 F.3d 1116 (8th Cir. 2005) 13

Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Insurance Co., 445 F.3d 311 (4th Cir. 2006) 13

Zimmerman v. Bell,
800 F.2d 386 (4th Cir. 1986) 6

FEDERAL STATUTE & RULE

28 U.S.C. § 2072(b) 18

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 .... 5, 6

OTHER AUTHORITY

Jim Copland,
These actions have no class, San Francisco Examiner, Sept. 15, 2004 17

Drug and Device Law,
Dukes v. Wal-Mart – On to the Supreme Court, We Hope, Apr. 26, 2010 16

Howard M. Erichson,
En Banc Rehearing in Dukes v. Wal-Mart, Mass Tort Litigation Blog, Feb. 19, 2009 16

Donald Falk et al.,
Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores: Ninth Circuit Lowers the Bar for Class Certification and Creates Circuit Split in Approving Largest Class Action Ever Certified, Antitrust Chronicle, Competition Policy International, Aug. 10, 2010 15

Bruce Hoffman,
Remarks, Panel 7: Class Actions as an Alternative to Regulation: The Unique Challenges Presented by Multiple Enforcers and Follow-

On Lawsuits,
18 Geo. J. Legal Ethics 1311 (2005) 16

Mark Moller,
The Anti-Constitutional Culture of Class Action Law: An expected Supreme Court case involving Wal-Mart may radically alter the American legal landscape, 30 Regulation 50 (Summer 2007) 16

Richard A. Nagareda,
Common Answers for Class Certification, 64 Vand. L. Rev. En Banc (forthcoming 2010) 14, 16

David L. Wallace,
A Litigator's Guide to the 'Siren Song' of 'Consumer Law' Class Actions, LJN's Product Liability Law & Strategy (Feb. 2009) 17

BRIEF OF THE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

The Chamber of Commerce of the United States of America ("Chamber") respectfully submits this brief as amicus curiae in support of petitioner Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.[1]

STATEMENT OF INTEREST

The Chamber is the world's largest business federation, representing three hundred thousand direct members and indirectly representing an underlying membership of more than three million U.S. businesses and professional organizations. The Chamber represents its members' interests by, among other activities, filing briefs in cases implicating issues of vital concern to the nation's business community.

The Chamber's members operate in nearly every industry and business sector in the United States, and many are subject to Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, which is a focus of the decision below. The Chamber's members devote extensive resources to developing employment practices and compliance programs designed to ensure compliance with Title VII and other legal requirements.

---

[1] Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 37.6, counsel for amicus curiae states that no counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no party or counsel for a party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than amicus curiae, its members, or its counsel made a monetary contribution to its preparation or submission. Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 37.2, amicus curiae states that Petitioner and Respondent, upon timely receipt of notice of the Chamber's intent to file this brief, have consented to its filing. Petitioner and Respondent have each filed with the Clerk of the Court a letter granting blanket consent to the filing of amicus briefs.

The Chamber's members also have an interest in the ruling below because the Ninth Circuit's ill-considered application of Rule 23(b)(2) will likely encourage an avalanche of new class action litigation on a broad array of subject matters, beyond employment issues. If allowed to stand, the ruling thus has the potential to dramatically increase the class action exposure of the Chamber's members and all companies doing business in the United States.

INTRODUCTION AND SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

In a 6-5 en banc decision with four opinions, the Ninth Circuit affirmed a district court decision that certified a massive Rule 23(b)(2) class of female Wal-Mart employees – with "little in common but their sex and this lawsuit" – who seek billions of dollars in monetary compensation. Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571, 652 (9th Cir. 2010) (Kozinski, J., dissenting).

By considering plaintiffs' proposed class under the rubric of Rule 23(b)(2) – despite the enormity of their damages request – and then applying a liberal construction of Rule 23(b)(2)'s procedural requirements – in contrast to nearly every other Circuit – the courts below have issued an invitation to plaintiffs' attorneys across the country to bring their employment, antitrust, medical monitoring, consumer fraud and other class actions to the Ninth Circuit and masquerade million- and billion-dollar damages claims under the guise of requests for injunctive relief.

The Ninth Circuit's ruling badly misreads the scope of Rule 23(b)(2) and rashly sacrifices substantive law to the gods of efficiency. First, it expands the scope of Rule 23(b)(2) – which lacks the express procedural protections set forth in Rule 23(b)(3) – to include sprawling class actions that seek billions of dollars in potential damages. Second, it suggests that federal courts can certify a class pursuant to Rule 23(b)(2) in any area of the law without regard to whether doing so alters – or even eviscerates – the defendant's substantive rights. This lawless approach violates the clear mandate of the Rules Enabling Act – and the separation-of-powers principles on which that act is premised.

The Ninth Circuit's loose approach to class certification places it in conflict with numerous other Circuits – and threatens to establish the West Coast as a haven for class actions that would be rejected in the rest of the country. If allowed to stand, the Ninth Circuit's decision will thus have deeply destructive effects on businesses nationwide, as plaintiffs will suddenly flock to its district courts with a broad array of class actions that purportedly seek "injunctive relief" against local and national companies – but are in fact damages actions in disguise. This Court should grant the petition for a writ of certiorari to ensure that the courts of the Ninth Circuit do not become the destination of choice for improper class actions that deprive our nation's critical industries of the fundamental due process right to defend themselves when they are sued.

ARGUMENT

I. THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION TAKES RULE 23(b)(2) FAR BEYOND ITS INTENDED SCOPE, CREATING GRAVE RISKS FOR AMERICAN BUSINESS.

A. This Court Should Resolve The Circuit Split On Application Of Rule 23(b)(2) – And Adopt A Standard Consistent With The Language And Intent Of That Provision.

Rule 23(b)(2) permits the certification of a class only if "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). While the Rule "is silent as to whether monetary remedies may be sought in conjunction with injunctive or declaratory relief," Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 411 (5th Cir. 1998), the Advisory Committee Notes on Rule 23 state that class certification under Rule 23(b)(2) "does not extend to cases in which the appropriate final relief relates exclusively or predominantly to money damages." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 (advisory committee notes) (emphasis added).

In addressing "what monetary relief is permissible in a (b)(2) class action," courts have generally adopted the same position "taken by the advisory committee that monetary relief may be obtained in a (b)(2) class action so long as the predominant relief sought is injunctive or declaratory." Allison, 151 F.3d at 413 (citing Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87, 92 (D.C. Cir. 1997); Jenkins v. United Gas Corp., 400 F.2d 28, 34 n.14 (5th Cir. 1984); Boughton v. Cotter Corp., 65 F.3d 823, 827 (10th Cir. 1995); Zimmerman v. Bell, 800 F.2d 386, 389-90 (4th Cir. 1986); In re School Asbestos Litig., 789 F.2d 996, 1008 (3d Cir. 1986); Holmes v. Cont'l Can Co., 706 F.2d 1144, 1155 (11th Cir. 1983); Simer v. Rios, 661 F.2d 655, 668 n.24 (7th Cir. 1981); Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 391 F.2d 555, 564 (2d Cir. 1968)).

The Advisory Committee Notes do not define or explain what the concept of "predominating relief" means – instead interpreting the term literally as "controlling, dominating, [or] prevailing." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 (advisory committee notes). But, as courts have noted, that does not "translate[] into a workable formula for comparing different types of remedies." Allison, 151 F.3d at 412. As a result, federal appellate courts have struggled to find a logical standard by which to assess the applicability of Rule 23(b)(2) in actions involving requests for both injunctive/declaratory and monetary relief.

The simplest approach would be to read Rule 23(b)(2) at its word – as applying only to cases seeking pure injunctive relief. Most courts have adopted a more nuanced approach, however, as best expressed by the Fifth Circuit in Allison, which held that "monetary relief predominates in (b)(2) class actions unless it is incidental to requested injunctive or declaratory relief." Id. at 415. According to the court, "[b]y incidental, we mean damages that flow directly from liability to the class as a whole on the claims forming the basis of the injunctive or declaratory relief." Id. "Ideally," the court noted, "incidental damages should be only those to which class members automatically would be entitled once liability to the class (or subclass) as a whole is established." Id. (citing Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) at 348 (2004)). "Moreover, such damages should at least be capable of computation by means of objective standards and not dependent in any significant way on the intangible, subjective differences of each class member's circumstances." Id. In short, [l]iability for incidental damages should not require additional hearings to resolve the disparate merits of each individual's case; it should neither introduce new and substantial legal or factual issues, nor entail complex individualized determinations." Id.

Applying this test in Allison, the Fifth Circuit affirmed the trial court's refusal to apply Rule 23(b)(2) to a proposed Title VII class seeking injunctive relief, as well as monetary relief in the form of back pay, front pay, compensatory damages and punitive damages. Id. at 416. The court agreed with the district court that the relief sought "did not flow directly from proof of liability on the aspects of the plaintiffs' disparate impact or pattern or practice claims that entitled them to injunctive or declaratory relief." Id. Instead, "[e]ntitlement to back pay and other equitable monetary remedies [would require] separate hearings in which each class member would have to show that the discrimination caused a loss." Id. "Similarly, recovery of compensatory and punitive damages required particularly individualized proof of injury, including how each class member was personally affected by the discriminatory conduct." Id. Thus, the trial court correctly held that the proposed class could not be certified under Rule 23(b)(2).

This "incidental damages" approach has also been adopted by the Third, Sixth, Seventh and Eleventh Circuits. See Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 646-51 (6th Cir. 2006); In re Allstate Ins. Co., 400 F.3d 505, 507 (7th Cir. 2005); Barabin v. Aramark Corp., No. 02-8057, 2003 U.S. App. LEXIS 3532 (3d Cir. Jan. 24, 2003) (adopting "incidental damages" test; "whether damages are incidental depends on: (1) whether such damages are of a kind to which class members would be automatically entitled; (2) whether such damages can be computed by 'objective standards' and not standards reliant upon 'the intangible, subjective differences of each class member's circumstances;' and (3) whether such damages would require additional hearings to determine") (citation omitted); Murray v. Auslander, 244 F.3d 807, 812 (11th Cir. 2001) (proposed class's "damages claim predominates over its claims for equitable relief" because "assessing damages for these inherently individual injuries compels an inquiry into each class member's individual circumstances") (citation omitted).

According to the Seventh Circuit in In re Allstate, "[t]he operational meaning of 'incidental' damages . . . is that the computation of damages is mechanical, 'without the need for individual calculation,' so that a separate damages suit by individual class members would be a waste of resources. 400 F.3d at 507 (quoting Manual for Complex Litigation (Fourth) § 21.221 (2004)). Thus, "just as the presence of a damages claim does not always require insisting that the case proceed under Rule 23(b)(3), so the fact that declaratory or injunctive relief is sought (and no, or only incidental, damages) should not automatically entitle the class to proceed under Rule 23(b)(2)." Id. This is because "[t]here can be critical differences among class members that are independent of differences in the amount of damages." Id. "[W]hen, though the suit is for declaratory relief, the effect of the declaration on individual class members will vary with their particular circumstances," application of Rule 23(b)(2) is not appropriate. Id. at 508.

The Ninth Circuit declined to follow the incidental-damages model. Instead, it minted a new standard, fashioned from the dictionary definition of "predominant." Dukes, 603 F.3d at 616. Based on that definition, it determined that a request for monetary relief predominates when it is "'superior [in] strength, influence, or authority' to injunctive and declaratory relief." Id. (quoting Merriam-Webster's Collegiate Dictionary 978 (11th ed. 2004)). Under this standard, a district court apparently will consider "the objective effect of the relief sought in the litigation." Id. at 617 (citation and internal quotation marks omitted). "Factors such as whether the monetary relief sought determines the key procedures that will be used, whether it introduces new and significant legal and factual issues, whether it requires individualized hearings, and whether its size and nature – as measured by recovery per class member – raise particular due process and manageability concerns would all be relevant, though no single factor would be determinative." Id.

This new standard for determining whether monetary relief predominates is insufficiently rigorous, as revealed by its application to this case. In applying the standard, the court first considered the likely size of the class members' damages awards, explaining that the relevant inquiry involves a "comparison between the amount of monetary damages available for each plaintiff and the importance of injunctive . . . relief for each." Id. at 618. It offered no standards to guide such an apples-and-oranges comparison, instead resting on an unexplained conclusion that "Wal-Mart has not shown that the size of the monetary request undermines Plaintiffs' claim that injunctive and declaratory relief predominate." Id.[2]

The court then found that the plaintiffs' request for declaratory and injunctive relief predominated solely because – apparently as a categorical matter – "the calculation of backpay generally involves relatively uncomplicated factual determinations and few individualized issues" and because "back pay is an integral component of Title VII's 'make whole' remedial scheme." Id. at 619 (citation, alterations, and some internal quotation marks omitted).

The court's adherence to this rote principle – even assuming it is generally valid[3] – blinded it to the glaring distinction between this case and others addressing demands for backpay – the substantial size and diversity of the class. It gives no consideration to whether the backpay claims of a class comprising at least 1.5 million women[4] and "encompassing both salaried and hourly employees in a range of positions" at over "3,400 stores across the country" would really involve only "relatively uncomplicated factual determinations." Id. at 598, 619. Owing to this diversity, the class is teeming with individualized facts, all of which would be directly relevant both to entitlement to relief in the first place and to the calculation of any backpay. See, e.g., id. at 652 (Kozinski, J., dissenting) (highlighting illustrative differences within the class). The court simply swept these concerns aside, concluding that "the predominance test turns on the primary goal and nature of the litigation – not the theoretical or possible size of the total damages award." Id. at 618.

---

[2] At the same time, however – again without analysis or articulation of any standard – it concluded that the potential for an award of $300,000 in punitive damages per class member "militates in favor of a finding that monetary relief predominates" as to the punitive damages claims. Dukes, 603 F.3d at 622.

[3] In fact, as set forth in Wal-Mart's Petition, the better-reasoned view is that backpay "weighs on the monetary side of the scale." (See Pet. 16 (citing App. 91a n.40).)

This analysis missed the mark, and it reveals the problem with the Ninth Circuit's novel test. The size of the class and potential damages award does matter – particularly when there are individualized issues within the class. As district courts have long observed in the Rule 23(b)(3) context, individualized issues make class action trials extremely difficult as a practical matter, even in cases with much smaller classes. San Antonio Tel. Co. v. Am. Tel. & Tel. Co., 68 F.R.D. 435, 438 (W.D. Tex. 1975) ("Once again, the fact of damage must be proved as to each individual member of the class. Such proof, in light of a class size of up to 500, makes the class action unmanageable in this respect."). And even when common issues predominate over individualized ones in Rule 23(b)(3) classes, the class size can reach a breaking point from the perspective of manageability. Boshes v. Gen. Motors Corp., 59 F.R.D. 589, 599 (N.D. Ill. 1973) ("[E]ven if common questions predominate, a class action may not be a superior or, to be more exact, a feasible method of adjudication because the 'class' is simply unmanageable. It is the opinion of this court that the proposed class falls into the latter category. Although size, in and of itself, will not generally be enough to make a class unmanageable, this court is unaware of any case that certified a class of the potential size proposed in this case. The figures are nothing less than staggering.").

---

[4] The class included 1.5 million women over a five-year period when it was certified in 2004. Since then, the class has vastly expanded, and it is still growing, as are the potential damages. See Dukes, 603 F.3d at 577-78 & n.3, 598; id. at 628-30 (Ikuta, J., dissenting); Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 222 F.R.D. 137, 142 (N.D. Cal. 2004).

In sum, the Ninth Circuit's novel approach to deciding what qualifies as a (b)(2) class action is neither principled nor practical. Instead, it invites plaintiffs to "attempt to shoehorn damages actions into the Rule 23(b)(2) framework" and thereby avoid the strict procedural protections of Rule 23(b)(3), including manageability and, as discussed in the next section, predominance. See Bolin v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 231 F.3d 970, 976 (5th Cir. 2000).

B. By Opening The (b)(2) Door To Claims For Damages – While Rejecting The Cohesiveness Approach Adopted By Other Courts – The Ninth Circuit Has Effectively Embraced Standard-Free Class Certification.

The Ninth Circuit's liberal view of what constitutes a Rule 23(b)(2) class is particularly problematic in light of its implicit rejection of the "cohesiveness" standard for (b)(2) certification that has been adopted by nearly every other Circuit. The result is that (b)(2) class actions can proceed in the Ninth Circuit even if common questions do not predominate.

As noted above, this is not the first case to present the question of how to categorize a class action with both injunctive relief and damages components. In attempting to deal with such "hybrid" class actions, most courts have made it clear that even where these cases qualify for Rule 23(b)(2) treatment, that does not give plaintiffs a free pass on satisfying the core requirements of Rule 23(b)(3). To the contrary, eight of the U.S. Courts of Appeals have expressly recognized that Rule 23(b)(2) incorporates a cohesiveness requirement, which, like the predominance requirement of Rule 23(b)(3), bars class treatment unless "the case will not depend on adjudication of facts particular to any subset of the class nor require a remedy that differentiates materially among class members." Lemon v. Int'l Union of Operating Eng'rs, 216 F.3d 577, 580 (7th Cir. 2000).[5] In the words of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Third Circuit: Rule 23(b)(2) classes require "more cohesiveness than a (b)(3) class" – not less. Barnes, 161 F.3d at 142-43;[6] see also Smilow v. Sw. Bell Mobile Sys., Inc., 323 F.3d 32, 41 (1st Cir. 2003) ("Rule 23(b)(3) is intended to be a less stringent requirement than Rule 23(b)(1) or (b)(2)").

---

[5] See also Barnes v. Am. Tobacco Co., 161 F.3d 127, 143 n.18 (3d Cir. 1998) (stating that under Rule 23(b)(2) it is "well established that the class claims must be cohesive"); Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 445 F.3d 311, 314 (4th Cir. 2006) (recognizing that a Rule 23(b)(2) class must be "sufficiently cohesive" for the class-action device to be employed); Maldonado v. Ochsner Clinic Found., 493 F.3d 521, 524 (5th Cir. 2007) (holding that a Rule 23(b)(2) class cannot be certified where "individualized issues . . . overwhelm class cohesiveness") (citing Allison, 151 F.3d at 414); In re St. Jude Med. Inc., 425 F.3d 1116, 1121-22 (8th Cir. 2005) ("Because unnamed members are

The Ninth Circuit's decision swims against this tide, implicitly rejecting the need to test the homogeneity of proposed class members as long as a court determines that Rule 23(b)(2) applies. This liberalized approach will have far-reaching implications for the treatment of class actions in Ninth Circuit courts – and likely result in the certification of cases that would be rejected nearly everywhere else in the country.

---

bound by the action without the opportunity to opt out of a Rule 23(b)(2) class, even greater cohesiveness generally is required than in a Rule 23(b)(3) class.") (citation and internal quotation marks omitted); DG ex rel. Stricklin v. Devaughn, 594 F.3d 1188 (10th Cir. 2010) (noting that Rule 23(b)(2) requires "cohesiveness among class members with respect to their injuries") (internal citation and quotation marks omitted); Holmes, 706 F.2d 1144.

[6] The Barnes court identified two reasons why (b)(2) classes require greater cohesion. 161 F.3d at 143. First, unnamed class members are bound by the action without notice or an opportunity to opt out. Id. Therefore, it is the court's responsibility to "ensure that significant individual issues do not pervade the entire action." Id. (internal quotation marks omitted). Second, without this inquiry, "the suit could become unmanageable and little value would be gained in proceeding as a class action . . . if significant individual issues were to arise consistently." Id. (internal citation and quotation marks omitted).

* * *

The combined effect of these two deviations from standard Rule 23 analysis threatens to turn the Ninth Circuit into a haven for class action plaintiffs and a deathtrap for American businesses. See Richard A. Nagareda, Common Answers for Class Certification, 64 Vand. L. Rev. En Banc (forthcoming 2010) (manuscript at 19) ("If left unchecked [by the Supreme Court], . . . Dukes threatens to undermine the progress made in the law of class certification elsewhere among the federal appellate courts by virtually inviting certification efforts in the anomalous circuit – indeed, by doing so especially in the kinds of high-stakes, national-market class actions in which careful certification analysis is most needed.").

Employment cases are just the tip of the iceberg. As commentators have recognized, Dukes will have broad implications for a variety of class actions against a host of industries, from antitrust cases to product liability actions to medical-monitoring claims. See, e.g., Donald Falk et al., Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores: Ninth Circuit Lowers the Bar for Class Certification and Creates Circuit Split in Approving Largest Class Action Ever Certified, Antitrust Chronicle, Competition Policy International, Aug. 10, 2010 ("Because Dukes lowers the bar to class certification in the Ninth Circuit, businesses that may be targeted by antitrust class actions should be prepared to face more litigation there, and should be sure to preserve important issues for potential Supreme Court review."); Drug and Device Law, Dukes v. Wal-Mart – On to the Supreme Court, We Hope, Apr. 26, 2010 (advocating reversal of Ninth Circuit decision); Howard M. Erichson, En Banc Rehearing in Dukes v. Wal-Mart, Mass Tort Litigation Blog, Feb. 19, 2009 ("OK, it's not a mass tort. But for anyone interested in mass litigation, the Dukes case represents an important test of the limits of Rule 23(b)(2) class actions in which significant monetary damages are sought along with injunctive relief."); see also Nagareda, supra, at 4 ("[T]he potential impact of Dukes on the law of class certification extends well beyond the employment discrimination context.").

These implications cannot be overstated. It has long been recognized that loose certification standards have serious repercussions for American business because they present a risk of gargantuan verdicts – and even bankruptcy. Mark Moller, The Anti-Constitutional Culture of Class Action Law: An expected Supreme Court case involving Wal-Mart may radically alter the American legal landscape, 30 Regulation 50, 53 (Summer 2007) ("[L]oose certification standards are vulnerable to trial judges' political biases. A populist trial judge with a strong aversion to large corporations might, for example, want to punish big corporate interests, 'sending a message' that they must respect the little guy. Inaugurating a large class action, triggering reams of negative press and sending the defendant's stock price through the floor, is a good way to do so."). "Following certification, class actions often head straight down the settlement path because of the very high cost for everybody concerned, courts, defendants, plaintiffs of litigating a class action . . . ." Bruce Hoffman, Remarks, Panel 7: Class Actions as an Alternative to Regulation: The Unique Challenges Presented by Multiple Enforcers and Follow-On Lawsuits, 18 Geo.

J. Legal Ethics 1311, 1329 (2005) (panel discussion statement of Bruce Hoffman, then Deputy Director of the Federal Trade Commission's Bureau of Competition). For this reason, "certification is the whole shooting match" in most cases, David L. Wallace, A Litigator's Guide to the 'Siren Song' of 'Consumer Law' Class Actions, LJN's Product Liability Law & Strategy (Feb. 2009), and defendants faced with improvidently certified, meritless lawsuits feel "intense pressure to settle" before trial, see In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 51 F.3d 1293, 1298 (7th Cir. 1995) (stating that defendants in a class action lawsuit "may not wish to roll these dice. That is putting it mildly. They will be under intense pressure to settle"); Castano v. Am. Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 746 (5th Cir. 1996) ("These settlements have been referred to as judicial blackmail.") (citation omitted); Jim Copland, These actions have no class, San Fran. Examiner, Sept. 15, 2004 (analyzing Dukes v. Wal-Mart and stating: "to permit hundreds or even millions of plaintiffs to join class action suits without letting the employers address individual bias claims on their merits is . . . no more than [a] corporate shakedown[]"). That pressure will be all the greater in the Ninth Circuit because, as discussed below, its ruling not only extends welcoming arms to dubious class actions but also promises to dilute the substantive law that will apply in those cases.

II. THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION SACRIFICES SUBSTANTIVE LAW TO PROMOTE EFFICIENCY.

The Rules Enabling Act provides that a procedural rule may not "abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b). As numerous courts have recognized, the Act plays a particularly important role in the area of class actions, where courts may be "tempt[ed]" to sacrifice substantive law for the sake of procedural efficiency. In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc., 288 F.3d 1012, 1020 (7th Cir. 2002) ("tempting as it is to alter doctrine in order to facilitate class treatment, judges must resist so that all parties' legal rights are respected"); see also Eisen, 479 F.2d at 1014 ("Amended Rule 23 was not intended to affect the substantive rights of the parties to any litigation."); Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 620 (1997) (noting that the Rules Enabling Act "limits judicial inventiveness" with respect to Rule 23). The Ninth Circuit gave in to that temptation, stripping defendants of the right to present defenses under Title VII that have been recognized by this Court, simply to facilitate use of the class device.

In International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1977), this Court reversed a verdict for the Government in an employment-discrimination action alleging pattern-or-practice discrimination against a class of minorities who decided not to apply for positions because they were deterred by discriminatory hiring practices. In rejecting the verdict, the Court explained that it was troubled by the possibility that some of the class members either did not want the jobs at issue – or were not qualified for them. Id. at 369. The Court thus concluded that the Government needed to prove that each class member was qualified and would have applied for the relevant jobs "but for" his or her knowledge of the employer's discriminatory policies. Id. at 371 (emphasizing that this burden of proof would have to be carried "with respect to each specific individual"). To satisfy this burden, the Court held, the district court would have to conduct mini-hearings "recreat[ing] the conditions and relationships that would have been had there been no unlawful discrimination." Id. at 372 (citations and internal quotation marks omitted). Although the task would not be a "simple one," such mini-trials were necessary to shave off frivolous claims and to determine whether each individual class member would be entitled to relief: "[a]fter the evidentiary hearings to be conducted on remand, both the size and composition of the class of minority employees entitled to relief may be altered substantially. Until those hearings have been conducted and both the number of identifiable victims and the consequent extent of necessary relief have been determined, it is not possible to evaluate abstract claims . . . ." Id. at 371-76.

Despite this clear guidance, the district court's certification ruling brushed aside the need to comply with Teamsters on the ground that "holding individual hearings for the number of women . . . in this case is impractical on its face." Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 176. "[T]hus," the court concluded, "the traditional Teamsters mini-hearing approach is not feasible here." Id. The Ninth Circuit agreed, endorsing a sampling approach, under which Wal-Mart would be allowed to "present individual defenses in the randomly selected 'sample cases,' thus revealing the approximate percentage of class members whose unequal pay or nonpromotion was due to something other than gender discrimination." Dukes, 603 F.3d at 627 n.56. At the end of the day, such a trial by probability could well leave Wal-Mart liable to hundreds – if not thousands – of class members who could not prove their claims in an individual trial. As Judge Ikuta noted in her dissent, "[i]t seems obvious that the district court's determination that it could not certify the class in compliance with Teamsters compels the conclusion that it could not certify the class at all." Id. at 644 (Ikuta, J., dissenting); see also Broussard v. Meineke Disc. Muffler Shops, Inc., 155 F.3d 331, 343 (4th Cir. 1998) (the "shortcut [of denying individual hearings that] was necessary in order for this suit to proceed as a class action should have been a caution signal to the district court that class-wide proof of damages was impermissible"). But the majority en banc opinion did not find this conclusion to be "obvious" at all.

Once again, the Ninth Circuit's approach was contrary to that of other Circuits – and will have broad implications for a variety of class actions against a broad swath of industries. Indeed, the "sampling" approach condoned by the court is no different from the "fluid recovery" method of proof that has been sharply condemned by other courts in consumer fraud and product liability cases. In McLaughlin v. American Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215, 230-31 (2d Cir. 2008), for example, the plaintiffs sought to demonstrate damages through aggregate statistical proof and distribute those damages to the entire class based on a similar sampling approach to that endorsed by the Ninth Circuit. The Second Circuit said no, rejecting this approach on the ground that it would impermissibly "alter defendants' substantive right to pay damages reflective of their actual liability." Id. at 231.

The Ninth Circuit's apparent disregard for the Rules Enabling Act and the principles on which it rests strongly suggest that it would have reached the opposite outcome in McLaughlin, allowing plaintiffs to go forward with class claims even though many class members were not entitled to recovery. This implication will not be lost on plaintiffs' counsel, and absent review by this Court, it will only add to the allure of filing dubious, sprawling class actions in the Ninth Circuit that bring American companies to their knees. Such a result would undermine judicial integrity, increase the "blackmail" effect of class actions, and threaten the stability of an already-vulnerable American economy. For this reason too, the Court should grant the petition for a writ of certiorari.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, and for those stated by petitioner Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., the Court should grant the petition for a writ of certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

ROBIN S. CONRAD
SHANE B. KAWKA
NATIONAL CHAMBER
LITIGATION CENTER, INC.
1615 H STREET, N.W.
WASHINGTON, D.C. 20062
(202) 463-5337

JOHN H. BEISNER
Counsel of Record
CLIFFORD M. SLOAN
KAREN L. CORMAN
JESSICA D. MILLER
CHRISTOPHER G. CLARK
SKADDEN, ARPS, SLATE,
MEAGHER & FLOM LLP
1440 New York Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 371-7000
John.Beisner@skadden.com

Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

September 24, 2010

AMICUS
CURIAE
BRIEF

172

②

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 24 2010
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. 10-277

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPKNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,
Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF DRI—THE VOICE OF THE DEFENSE BAR AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

JOHN R. KOURIS
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
DRI—THE VOICE OF
THE DEFENSE BAR
55 West Monroe Street
Suite 2000
Chicago, IL 60603
(312) 795-1101

CARTER G. PHILLIPS*
JONATHAN F. COHN
MATTHEW D. KRUEGER
SIDLEY AUSTIN LLP
1501 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 736-8000
cphillips@sidley.com

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

September 24, 2010

* Counsel of Record

WILSON-EPES PRINTING CO., INC. – (202) 789-0096 – WASHINGTON, D. C. 20002

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES ii

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE 1

INTRODUCTION 2

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION 4

I. THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION CONFLICTS WITH THE RULES ENABLING ACT AND THIS COURT'S PRECEDENTS 4

A. The Rules Enabling Act Prohibits Courts From Construing The Federal Rules To Alter Substantive Rights 5

B. The Class Certification Affirmed By The Ninth Circuit Alters Substantive Rights Under Title VII In Violation Of The Rules Enabling Act 9

II. THE DECISION BELOW CONFLICTS WITH CLASS CERTIFICATION DECISIONS OF OTHER CIRCUITS 15

III. THE DECISION BELOW WILL HAVE FAR REACHING, UNTOWARD CONSEQUENCES FOR DEFENDANTS AND IMPLICATES THIS COURT'S DUTY TO ENSURE UNIFORMITY OF FEDERAL PROCEDURES 19

CONCLUSION 22

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

CASES Page

Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591 (1997) .... passim

Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519 (1983) 19

Blaz v. Belfer, 368 F.3d 501 (5th Cir. 2004) 9

Burlington N. R.R. v. Woods, 480 U.S. 1 (1987) 5, 21

Castano v. Am. Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734 (5th Cir. 1996) 8, 19

Catlett v. Mo. Highway & Transp. Comm'n, 828 F.2d 1260 (8th Cir. 1987) 16

Cimino v. Raymark Indus., Inc., 151 F.3d 297 (5th Cir. 1998) 17

Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank of Richmond, 467 U.S. 867 (1984) 10

Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695 (11th Cir. 2004), overruled on other grounds by Ash v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 546 U.S. 454 (2006) 16

Dillon v. Coles, 746 F.2d 998 (3d Cir. 1984) 16

Domingo v. New England Fish Co., 727 F.2d 1429 (9th Cir.), modified, 742 F.2d 520 (9th Cir. 1984) 13

Dura Pharm., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336 (2005) 19

E. Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395 (1977) 11

Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Fla. Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568 (1988) 6

Page

EEOC v. O & G Spring & Wire Forms Specialty Co., 38 F.3d 872 (7th Cir. 1994) 15

In re Fibreboard Corp., 893 F.2d 706 (5th Cir. 1990) 17

Franks v. Bowman Transp. Co., 424 U.S. 747 (1976) 11

Hanna v. Plumer, 380 U.S. 460 (1965) 21

Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 1996) 13

Hohider v. UPS, Inc., 574 F.3d 169 (3d Cir. 2009) 18

In re Hotel Tel. Charges, 500 F.2d 86 (9th Cir. 1974) 18

INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983) 6

Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1977) 10, 11, 14

McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215 (2d Cir. 2008), overruled on other grounds by Bridge v. Phx. Bond & Indem. Co., 553 U.S. 639 (2008), as recognized in UFCW Local 1776 v. Eli Lilly & Co., ___ F.3d ___, 2010 WL 3516183 (2d Cir. 2010) 9, 18

Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361 (1989) 5

Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815 (1999) 7, 8, 15

Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228 (1989), superseded on other grounds by statute, Civil Rights Act of 1991, Pub. L. No. 102-166, 105 Stat. 1072, as recognized in Landgraf v. USI Film Prods., 511 U.S. 244 (1994) 11, 12

Page

Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006) 16

In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Inc., 51 F.3d 1293 (7th Cir. 1995) 8

Sacred Heart Health Sys., Inc. v. Humana Military Healthcare Servs., Inc., 601 F.3d 1159 (11th Cir. 2010) 17

Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249 (D.C. Cir. 1984) 15

Seijas v. Republic of Arg., 606 F.3d 53 (2d Cir. 2010) 18

Shipes v. Trinity Indus., 987 F.2d 311 (5th Cir. 1993) 16, 17

Sibbach v. Wilson & Co., 312 U.S. 1 (1941) 5

St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502 (1993) 11

Stoneridge Inv. Partners, LLC v. Scientific-Atlanta, Inc., 552 U.S. 148 (2008) 20

U.S. Postal Serv. Bd. of Governors v. Aikens, 460 U.S. 711 (1983) 11

United States v. Reliable Transfer Co., 421 U.S. 397 (1975) 21

Windham v. Am. Brands, Inc., 565 F.2d 59 (4th Cir. 1977) 18

CONSTITUTION AND STATUTES

U.S. Const. art. I, § 1 5

U.S. Const. art. III, § 2 5

Class Action Fairness Act of 2005, Pub. L. No. 109-2, 119 Stat. 4 20

28 U.S.C. § 2072 .... 3, 5, 9, 14

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a) 10, 13

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g) 11, 13, 14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—continued

RULE Page

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 .... 2, 8, 20

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

S. Rep. No. 69-1174 (1926) 6, 7, 9, 15
S. Rep. No. 70-440 (1928) 7
S. Rep. No. 109-14 (2005) 20

SCHOLARLY AUTHORITIES

Stephen B. Burbank, The Rules Enabling Act of 1934, 130 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1015 (1982) 6, 21
James D. Cox et al., Do Differences in Pleading Standards Cause Forum Shopping in Securities Class Actions?: Doctrinal and Empirical Analyses, 2009 Wis. L. Rev. 421 21
Richard A. Nagareda, Common Answers for Class Certification, 64 Vand. L. Rev. En Banc (forthcoming 2010), available at http://ssrn.com/abstract_id=1662620 22
Martin H. Redish & Uma M. Amuluru, The Supreme Court, the Rules Enabling Act, and the Politicization of the Federal Rules: Constitutional and Statutory Implications, 90 Minn. L. Rev. 1303 (2006) 6

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE[1]

Amicus curiae DRI—the Voice of the Defense Bar is an international organization that includes more than 23,000 attorneys involved in the defense of civil litigation. DRI is committed to enhancing the skills, effectiveness, and professionalism of defense attorneys. Because of this commitment, DRI seeks to address issues germane to defense attorneys, to promote the role of the defense lawyer, to improve the civil justice system, and to preserve the civil jury. DRI has long been a voice in the ongoing effort to make the civil justice system more fair, efficient, and—where national issues are involved—consistent.

To promote these objectives, DRI participates as amicus curiae in cases raising issues of importance to its members, their clients, and the judicial system. This is just such a case. In approving certification of the largest employment class action in history, the Ninth Circuit disregarded this Court's precedent, deepened a well-recognized circuit conflict, and distorted Title VII, the Rules Enabling Act, and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

The issues raised here can have considerable, and even dispositive, impact on countless class actions in virtually all contexts, including employment discrimination, products liability, insurance, securities, and antitrust. DRI's members are frequently confronted with the precise issues raised by petitioner, and their clients are affected by the lack of clear, uniform rules governing class certification. This Court's review is essential to prevent unseemly and improper forum-shopping and to bring fairness, consistency, and predictability to class certification.

---

[1] Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 37.6, amicus curiae states that no counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part and that no entity or person, aside from amicus curiae, its members, and its counsel, made any monetary contribution towards the preparation and submission of this brief. Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 37.2(a), amicus curiae certifies that counsel of record for both parties received timely notice of amicus curiae's intent to file this brief. Counsel of record for both parties have consented to its filing in letters on file with the Clerk's office.

INTRODUCTION

In a 6-5 en banc decision, the Ninth Circuit affirmed certification of the largest employment class action in history, allowing over 1.5 million plaintiffs with factually distinct claims to proceed together as a single unit. In reaching that result, the Ninth Circuit majority widened an acknowledged circuit conflict and approved a certification order that deprives the defendant of its substantive right to defend against each individual plaintiff's claims. This Court's intervention is urgently needed.

Petitioner has persuasively demonstrated that this Court should grant review of both questions presented. In this brief, DRI does not separately address the first question but fully supports review of it because the lower courts are deeply split regarding whether, and to what extent, a class action that includes a claim for monetary relief may proceed under Rule 23(b)(2). See Pet. 10-12. The stakes of this debate are high for plaintiffs and defendants alike: Rule 23(b)(2) authorizes "mandatory" class actions, which do not require that individual plaintiffs receive notice or allow them to opt out. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2), (3). Further, this disagreement among the courts of appeals invites forum shopping by plaintiffs and deprives parties of the consistency and predictability of decision-making that the Federal Rules are intended to guarantee.

DRI also supports review of the second question presented and submits this brief to highlight additional reasons why review is necessary to vindicate the protections of the Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072. That Act empowers the Judiciary to adopt rules of "practice and procedure," but expressly provides that no such rule, including Rule 23, may "abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." Id. § 2072(a), (b). The Act's legislative history and this Court's decisions make clear that the statute requires courts to exercise particular caution in applying Rule 23 because class certification can have a dramatic impact on a lawsuit and parties' rights. See Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 629 (1997). This caution promotes stability in the law by ensuring that rules of decision do not change just because plaintiffs filed a class action.

In the decision below, however, the Ninth Circuit majority abandoned caution and approved a certification order that negates a substantive defense of the employer, in direct violation of the Rules Enabling Act. Under Title VII and this Court's precedents, when plaintiffs allege a pattern or practice of intentional discrimination, the employer is entitled to show that any individual employment action was not discriminatory before the affected plaintiff may obtain individualized relief. Infra at 10-12. The lower courts rightly perceived that, in this case, individualized hearings on the employer's defense and each plaintiff's claimed injury were "not feasible." Pet. App. 251a; see also id. at 104a-105a. But rather than reject class certification, the Ninth Circuit allowed the district court to strip the employer's right to individualized hearings in favor of a formula-based "'rough justice'" approach that, concededly, would "generat[e] a 'windfall'" for some employees who were not "genuine victims of discrimination." Id. at 254a. Unsurprisingly, this application of Rule 23—which contravenes the Rules Enabling Act by modifying Title VII's substantive provisions—conflicts with the decisions of other circuits.

The troubling consequences of the Ninth Circuit's approach to class certification militate heavily in favor of review. By sanctioning the district court's misuse of Rule 23, the Ninth Circuit's decision introduces unpredictability regarding class certification procedures and the substantive rules of decision. Plaintiffs will be emboldened to propose creative methods of generalized proof in order to assemble ever larger classes that should be ineligible for certification under Rule 23 due to substantive requirements of individualized proof. The incentives for forum shopping created by the decision below are obvious. Indeed, for cases in which plaintiffs allege that a defendant engaged in nationwide conduct, the Ninth Circuit's lenient approach to class certification will effectively become the nationwide rule as plaintiffs will naturally file suit in courts bound by the decision below. The enormous hydraulic pressure on defendants to settle cases that lack merit becomes overwhelming. To prevent these intolerable results, certiorari should be granted.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. THE NINTH CIRCUIT'S DECISION CONFLICTS WITH THE RULES ENABLING ACT AND THIS COURT'S PRECEDENTS.

The decision below approved an unprecedented class certification that sacrifices the defendant's substantive defense under Title VII and violates the plain terms of the Rules Enabling Act. This Court should grant review and clarify the important restraints the Act places on "'adventuresome'" uses of Rule 23. Amchem, 521 U.S. at 617-18.

A. The Rules Enabling Act Prohibits Courts From Construing The Federal Rules To Alter Substantive Rights.

1. The Rules Enabling Act empowers the Judiciary to promulgate "general rules of practice and procedure." 28 U.S.C. § 2072(a). But in the same breath, Congress also provided that "[s]uch rules shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right." Id. § 2072(b). Thus, to comply with the Rules Enabling Act, a Federal Rule may "affect[ ] only the process of enforcing litigants' rights, and not the rights themselves." Burlington N. R.R. v. Woods, 480 U.S. 1, 8 (1987).

The commands of the Rules Enabling Act track the Constitution's separation of powers. Congress holds "[a]ll legislative Powers," U.S. Const. art. I, § 1, and "the judicial power" is "limited to 'Cases' and 'Controversies.'" Mistretta v. United States, 488 U.S. 361, 385 (1989) (quoting Muskrat v. United States, 219 U.S. 346, 356 (1911)); see U.S. Const. art. III, § 2. Congress may delegate rulemaking authority that is "appropriate to the central mission of the Judiciary," only if the rulemaking "do[es] not trench upon the prerogatives of another Branch." Mistretta, 488 U.S. at 388. The Rules Enabling Act provides such a limited delegation, authorizing the Court to make rules of "practice and procedure" only. 28 U.S.C. § 2072(a); see Sibbach v. Wilson & Co., 312 U.S. 1, 9-10 (1941). A broader delegation, which permitted the Court to make or modify "substantive right[s]," 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b), would impermissibly convey legislative authority and violate the Constitution's exclusive "prescription for legislative action," INS v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919, 951 (1983).

In light of the Rules Enabling Act's constitutional underpinnings, the principle of constitutional avoidance should guide its application. If a court has any doubt that an interpretation of a Federal Rule would stray into the legislative domain by altering substantive rights, the constitutional infirmity should be avoided by choosing the plausible interpretation that does not give rise to a serious risk of violating the Constitution. See Edward J. DeBartolo Corp. v. Fla. Gulf Coast Bldg. & Constr. Trades Council, 485 U.S. 568, 575 (1988).

2. That restrained approach is precisely what Congress envisioned. The legislative history of the Rules Enabling Act makes clear that Congress intended the Judiciary to adhere strictly to the narrow confines of its delegation.

During the twenty-year campaign leading to enactment of the Rules Enabling Act, opponents "protested that the judiciary's rulemaking authority would usurp legislative power." Martin H. Redish & Uma M. Amuluru, The Supreme Court, the Rules Enabling Act, and the Politicization of the Federal Rules: Constitutional and Statutory Implications, 90 Minn. L. Rev. 1303, 1312 (2006); see S. Rep. No. 69-1174, at 20, 33 (1926). To meet that objection, proponents of the Act added the statement that the Court's rules could not "'abridge, enlarge, nor modify . . . substantive rights.'" Redish & Amuluru, supra at 1312; see also Stephen B. Burbank, The Rules Enabling Act of 1934, 130 U. Pa. L. Rev. 1015, 1073-80 (1982). The key Senate report explained:

> In view of the express provision inhibiting the court from affecting "the substantive rights of any litigant," any court would be astute to avoid an interpretation which would attribute to the words "practice and procedure" an intention on the part of Congress to delegate a power to deal with such substantive rights and remedies . . . .
>
> . . . .
>
> Where a doubt exists as to the power of a court to make a rule, the doubt will surely be resolved by construing a statutory provision in such a way that it will not have the effect of an attempt to delegate to the courts what is in reality a legislative function.

S. Rep. No. 69-1174, at 11.

Congress thus made clear that the Act did not countenance rules that modified "substantive rights and remedies." Id.; see also S. Rep. No. 70-440, at 16 (1928) ("Matters of jurisdiction and of substantive right are clearly within the power of the legislature. These are not to be affected. It cannot be too strongly emphasized that the general rules of court contemplated under this bill will deal only with the details of the operation of the judicial machine."). Pertinent here, Congress expected that, in close cases, "any doubt will surely be resolved" by selecting the construction that would not intrude the legislative domain by modifying substantive rights. S. Rep. No. 69-1174, at 11.

3. Such restraint is especially appropriate when considering Rule 23 class certifications, as this Court has warned. See, e.g., Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 845 (1999). Unlike most procedural rules, which typically have little effect on a case, a class certification "dramatically affects the stakes for defendants." Castano v. Am. Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 746 (5th Cir. 1996). By aggregating claims, a class certification "makes it more likely that a defendant will be found liable" and "creates insurmountable pressure on defendants to settle." Id.; see also In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Inc., 51 F.3d 1293, 1298 (7th Cir. 1995) (observing that class certification puts defendants "under intense pressure to settle" and calling "settlements induced by a small probability of an immense judgment in a class action 'blackmail settlements'") (quoting Henry J. Friendly, Federal Jurisdiction: A General View 120 (1973)).

Class certification also poses potential harms to absent plaintiffs that counsel in favor of restraint. Absent plaintiffs may prefer to assert their claims separately (or not at all), and yet Rule 23(b)(2) certification binds them to the class action's disposition without giving them notice or an opportunity to opt out. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)(A), (c)(3)(A). Under Rule 23(b)(2), the success or failure of the named plaintiffs becomes the success or failure of every absent plaintiff. For that reason, this Court has advised that "mandatory class actions aggregating damages claims," like the action here, "implicate the due process 'principle'" that requires service of process before one is bound to a judgment in personam. Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 846; see also Amchem, 521 U.S. at 628 ("we recognize the gravity of the question whether class action notice sufficient under the Constitution and Rule 23 could ever be given to legions so unselfconscious and amorphous").

In view of Rule 23's potency and potential harms, the Court has stressed that "Rule 23's requirements must be interpreted in keeping with Article III constraints, and with the Rules Enabling Act." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 613; see also Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 845 ("no reading of [Rule 23] can ignore the Act's mandate that rules of procedure shall not abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right") (internal quotation marks omitted). Regardless of the efficiencies promised by Rule 23, a defendant cannot be subject to liability more easily just because plaintiffs choose to plead a class action. 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b); see also McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215, 231 (2d Cir. 2008) ("federal rules of procedure, such as Rule 23, cannot be used to abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right") (internal quotation marks omitted); Blaz v. Belfer, 368 F.3d 501, 504 (5th Cir. 2004) ("A class action is merely a procedural device; it does not create new substantive rights . . . .") (internal quotation marks omitted).

Rule 23 is not an invitation to "judicial inventiveness." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620. Particularly when, as here, "individual stakes are high and disparities among class members [are] great," this Court has "call[ed] for caution." Id. at 625. Any doubts about whether certifying a proposed class under Rule 23 would "abridge, enlarge or modify any substantive right" must be resolved by denying class certification. 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b); see Amchem, 521 U.S. at 621; S. Rep. No. 69-1174, at 11.

B. The Class Certification Affirmed By The Ninth Circuit Alters Substantive Rights Under Title VII In Violation Of The Rules Enabling Act.

Disregarding the Rules Enabling Act and this Court's warnings, the Ninth Circuit affirmed a class certification order that modified the substantive Title VII cause of action. In so doing, the Ninth Circuit increased the unpredictability that already plagues class certification decisions. This Court's intervention is needed to correct the Ninth Circuit's alteration of substantive law.

1. The substantive law governing plaintiffs' claims is clear. Plaintiffs allege that the petitioner engaged in a pattern or practice of intentional discrimination on the basis of sex in violation of 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2. See Pet. App. 278a. This Court has allowed pattern and practice claims to proceed as class actions under the two-stage framework developed in International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324 (1977). In stage one, plaintiffs must prove that the employer engaged in a "systemwide pattern or practice of" intentional discrimination—i.e., that sex "discrimination was the company's standard operating procedure." Id. at 336. "Without any further evidence," however, plaintiffs who prevail at stage one are entitled only to "prospective relief" to the class, such as "an injunctive order against continuation of the discriminatory practice." Id. at 361; see also Cooper v. Fed. Reserve Bank of Richmond, 467 U.S. 867, 876 (1984).

If plaintiffs seek "individual relief," as plaintiffs do here, a second stage consisting of individualized proceedings is required. See Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 361 ("a district court must usually conduct additional proceedings . . . to determine the scope of individual relief"); see also Cooper, 467 U.S. at 876. This requirement of individualized proof follows directly from Title VII's text. The operative provision makes it unlawful for an employer "to discriminate against any individual with respect to his compensation, terms, conditions, or privileges of employment, because of such individual's . . . sex." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(a)(1) (emphasis added). Title VII expressly prohibits granting relief to "an individual" if the evidence shows that the adverse employment action was taken for "any reason other than discrimination on account of . . . sex." Id. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(A); see also id. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B)(ii) (court "shall not award damages or issue an order requiring . . . payment" if the employer demonstrates that it "would have taken the same action in the absence of the impermissible motivating factor").

Contrary to the Ninth Circuit majority's view, Pet. App. 104a-105a & n.53, this Court's decisions establish that, in the second stage, the employer is "entitled to prove" that individual plaintiffs were not victims of discrimination.[2] E. Tex. Motor Freight Sys., Inc. v. Rodriguez, 431 U.S. 395, 404 n.9 (1977) (emphasis added); see also Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 362 (employer may "demonstrate that the individual applicant was denied an employment opportunity for lawful reasons"); Franks v. Bowman Transp. Co., 424 U.S. 747, 772 (1976) (employer may show that "individuals . . . were not in fact victims of previous hiring discrimination"). Thus, "Title VII does not authorize affirmative relief for individuals as to whom, the employer shows, the existence of systemic discrimination had no effect." Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 245 n.10 (1989) (plurality); id. at 266 (O'Connor, J., concurring in the judgment) (same).

---

[2] This Court's decisions in Teamsters and Franks hold that the employer has the burden of proof at the second stage because plaintiffs' stage one "proof of the pattern or practice supports an inference that any particular employment decision . . . was made in pursuit of that policy." Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 362; see Franks v. Bowman Transp. Co., 424 U.S. 747, 772 (1976). However, this Court's subsequent decisions addressing individual disparate treatment claims (as opposed to class action pattern-or-practice disparate treatment claims) have clarified that the plaintiff always retains the ultimate burden to prove intentional discrimination. See, e.g., St. Mary's Honor Ctr. v. Hicks, 509 U.S. 502, 507 (1993); U.S. Postal Serv. Bd. of Governors v. Aikens, 460 U.S. 711, 716 (1983). These subsequent cases cast doubt on Teamster's and Frank's placement of the burden on defendants. See Price Waterhouse v. Hopkins, 490 U.S. 228, 267 (1989) (plurality) (O'Connor, J., concurring in the judgment). Regardless of where the burden lies, however, the decision below gives the defendant no opportunity to present its defense in violation of the Rules Enabling Act.

2. Despite the plain requirements of Title VII and the Rules Enabling Act, the lower courts in this case modified the Title VII cause of action by dispensing with individualized proof solely in order to make the class action manageable.

The district court acknowledged that conducting "individual hearings" in stage two is the "norm," but found that conducting such hearings would be "impractical on its face" and "not feasible." Pet. App. 251a-252a. Given the size of the putative class and plaintiffs' theory of discrimination through "subjective criteria," the court reasoned that "it is virtually impossible" to determine "which class members were the actual victims of the defendant's discriminatory policy." Id. at 252a-253a. As the dissent below explained, the district court's findings "compel[ ] the conclusion that it could not certify the class at all." Id. at 146a.

Instead, the district court denied defendant its substantive right to mount individualized defenses. Pet. App. 247a-258a; see id. at 247a (Wal-Mart "is not, however, entitled to circumvent or defeat the class nature of the proceeding by litigating whether every individual store discriminated against individual class members"). The court proposed a formula-based approach to determine individual plaintiffs' relief without considering petitioner's defense to their claims. Id. at 251a-276a. The district court would calculate a class-wide, lump-sum backpay award, and then use employment information from petitioner's corporate records to fashion individual awards. Id. This approach would preclude the petitioner from showing that a non-discriminatory reason not evident in corporate records—such as a plaintiff's inferior pre-Wal-Mart work experience, id. at 272a-273a & n.55—actually motivated the lower pay or non-promotion. See id. at 272a-276a. Even though plaintiffs allege that discrimination occurred through local store managers' subjective decisions, id. at 77a-78a, the defendant's ability to show that any given manager did not act "because of" a plaintiff's sex is sharply limited. This result transgresses Title VII's express provisions. 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e-2(a), 2000e-5(g).

The Ninth Circuit majority justified allowing this wayward approach on the ground that, in stage one, "the pattern and practice has to be proven on a group basis." Pet. App. 105 n.53. But that truism says nothing about the employer's right to contest individual plaintiffs' claims in stage two.[3] That is the stage when the statutorily created right to present individualized defenses is vindicated. Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 362. A court cannot use Rule 23 to abridge that right. 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b).

---

[3] On that critical point, the majority principally relied on two inapposite Ninth Circuit decisions to claim that the district court could dispense with individualized hearings. Pet. App. 105a-110a & n.53. The first case actually undermines the majority's conclusion because it properly held that a Title VII defendant could avoiding making backpayment by "proving that the applicant was unqualified or showing some other valid reason why the claimant was not, or would not have been, acceptable." Domingo v. New England Fish Co., 727 F.2d 1429, 1445 (9th Cir. 1984). The second decision involved Alien Tort Claims Act claims, not Title VII claims, and, in any event, was based on the same flaws that plague this case. Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767, 768 (9th Cir. 1996); see id. at 788 (Rymer, J., dissenting) ("If . . . a real prove-up of causation and damages cannot be accomplished because the class is too big or to do so would take too long, then . . . the class is unmanageable and should not have been certified in the first place.").

It is no answer to suggest, as the Ninth Circuit majority did, Pet. App. 110a n.56, that an employer's right could be protected by "allow[ing] Wal-Mart to present individual defenses in the randomly selected 'sample cases,' thus revealing the approximate percentage of class members whose unequal pay or non-promotion was due to something other than gender discrimination." Id. This "'rough justice'" approach—to use the district court's words, id. at 254a—does not accord with the text of Congress's enactment. Congress prohibited affording relief to "an individual" if the evidence shows that the employment action was taken against that individual for a reason other than sex discrimination. 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(A); see also id. § 2000e-5(g)(2)(B). Congress did not authorize "'approximat[ions]'" of aggregate liability based on "rough" statistical models, which (the district court frankly admitted) would "generat[e] a 'windfall for some employees'" who were not actual victims of discrimination. Pet. App. 254a. Nor did Congress permit district courts, in the name of judicial efficiency, to "'undercompensat[e] the genuine victims of discrimination.'" Id. Because the district court's approach would "enlarge" the substantive rights of uninjured plaintiffs and "abridge" the rights of any actual victims, as well as the defendant, it contravenes Title VII and the unmistakable terms of the Rules Enabling Act. 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b).

Rather than approve the district court's experiment, the Ninth Circuit should have interpreted Rule 23's requirements "with fidelity to the Rules Enabling Act." Amchem, 521 U.S. at 629; see also Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 845. At a minimum, the district court's approach raises serious doubts about whether it has trenched upon Congress's prerogative to design Title VII, and therefore, the Ninth Circuit should have resolved doubts by reversing the class certification. See S. Rep. No. 69-1174, at 11; see also supra Part I.A.1. Certiorari should be granted to clarify the proper approach to class certification and foreclose any further class action inventiveness.

II. THE DECISION BELOW CONFLICTS WITH CLASS CERTIFICATION DECISIONS OF OTHER CIRCUITS.

This Court's review is all the more necessary because the Ninth Circuit's decision exacerbates confusion among the circuits regarding an employer's right to present individualized defenses to a Title VII class action and intensifies a broader conflict regarding the Rules Enabling Act's limits on class certification.

In the context of Title VII, two circuits have approved class certifications that, like the flawed certification approved here, would forgo individualized determinations required by substantive law in favor of generalized determinations. See EEOC v. O & G Spring & Wire Forms Specialty Co., 38 F.3d 872, 880 & n.9 (7th Cir. 1994) (affirming certification without individualized hearings because conducting them "would have been unreasonable" and it "would be impossible to determine which specific class members would have been hired absent discrimination"); Segar v. Smith, 738 F.2d 1249, 1291-92 (D.C. Cir. 1984) (affirming certification without individualized hearings even "[t]hough Section 706(g) generally does not allow for backpay to those whom discrimination has not injured," and even though this created a "risk that a small number of undeserving individuals might receive backpay"). In addition, the Fifth Circuit, while recognizing that "only those individuals who have suffered a loss of pay because of the illegal discrimination are entitled to compensation," has nonetheless approved a class action judgment that awarded individual relief using a formula-based approach that excluded certain undeserving plaintiffs, but did not allow the employer to present all of its individualized defenses. Shipes v. Trinity Indus., 987 F.2d 311, 318-19 (5th Cir. 1993).

At least four other circuits, however, have recognized that an employer has a right to show that any particular adverse employment action was not discriminatory—even though plaintiffs moved for class certification. See Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 651 (6th Cir. 2006) (reversing class certification and explaining that "whether the discriminatory practice actually was responsible for the individual class member's harm, the applicability of nondiscriminatory reasons for the action, showings of pretext, and any affirmative defense all must be analyzed on an individual basis"); Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695, 722 (11th Cir. 2004) (affirming denial of class certification and noting that even if the court found grounds for prospective injunctive relief, "it would still be necessary for a single jury to hear and rule on more than 2,000 individual claims for compensatory damages") (emphasis added); Catlett v. Mo. Highway & Transp. Comm'n, 828 F.2d 1260, 1267 (8th Cir. 1987) (remanding class certification decision and noting that an employer "is entitled" to show that "individual class claimants" were "not qualified" receive a backpay award) (emphasis added); Dillon v. Coles, 746 F.2d 998, 1004 (3d Cir. 1984) ("Until the individual has demonstrated actual injury to himself, the court may not direct individual relief. . . . [D]iscrimination in general does not entitle an individual to specific relief.").

The decision below is also at odds with cases outside the Title VII context that refuse to sanction class actions that would potentially modify the substantive cause of action in contravention of the Rules Enabling Act. For example, in In re Fibreboard Corp., 893 F.2d 706 (5th Cir. 1990), the Fifth Circuit reversed a class certification that, like here, depended on forgoing individual determinations of causation and injury in favor of statistical analyses of general causation.[4] Id. at 712. The court held that, because the resulting trial plan would modify substantive law, it could not proceed consistent with the Rules Enabling Act. Id. (the trial plan would "treat[ ] discrete claims as fungible claims" and "lift[ ] the description of the claims to a level of generality that tears them from their substantively required moorings to actual causation and discrete injury"); see also Cimino v. Raymark Indus., Inc., 151 F.3d 297, 312, 319 (5th Cir. 1998) (rejecting trial plan that would use test cases to determine liability and damages for other plaintiffs as inconsistent with the Rules Enabling Act).

Other court of appeals decisions are in accord, conflicting with the decision below. See, e.g., Sacred

---

[4] This decision is in tension with the Fifth Circuit's later decision in Shipes, 987 F.2d at 318-19, which, as noted, supra at 16, improperly approved class certification in a Title VII case. The inconsistency may be explained, however, by the fact that the defendant in Shipes failed to raise the Rules Enabling Act issue. See Shipes, 987 F.2d at 316-19. In any event, this intra-circuit conflict demonstrates the confusion surrounding these important class certification issues that warrants this Court's review.

Heart Health Sys., Inc. v. Humana Military Healthcare Servs., Inc., 601 F.3d 1159, 1176 (11th Cir. 2010) (reversing class certification as inconsistent with the Rules Enabling Act because there likely "'was a breach of contract with some class members, but not with other class members,'" such that class-wide relief would lead to "an abridgment of the defendant's rights"); Hohider v. UPS, Inc., 574 F.3d 169, 185-86, 196-98 (3d Cir. 2009) (reversing class certification of Americans With Disabilities Act discrimination claim because "the statutorily required inquiry into qualification is incompatible with the requirements of Rule 23," rendering certification improper under the Rules Enabling Act); McLaughlin, 522 F.3d at 231 (reversing class certification premised on an "aggregate determination" of damages that "would inevitably alter defendants' substantive right to pay damages reflective of their actual liability"); Windham v. Am. Brands, Inc., 565 F.2d 59, 66 (4th Cir. 1977) (en banc) (affirming district court's refusal to certify an antitrust class action because "issues of injury and damages" were "strictly individualized" such that class-wide determination would "contravene the mandate of the Rules Enabling Act"); cf. Seijas v. Republic of Arg., 606 F.3d 53, 58 (2d Cir. 2010) (approving Rule 23(b)(3) certification, but vacating damage award calculated on class-wide basis because the "likely inflated" award "'offends the Rules Enabling Act'"). Indeed, the decision below diverges even from the Ninth Circuit's own precedent, which has reversed class certification when "individual questions" of causation and damages would "overwhelm the common questions, unless some of the required elements or allowed defenses . . . are eliminated or impaired." In re Hotel Tel. Charges, 500 F.2d 86, 90 (9th Cir. 1974).

The decision below thus creates both inter-circuit and intra-circuit conflicts, compounding the uncertainty defendants face when served with a class action complaint. This Court should grant the petition and confirm that the Rules Enabling Act fully applies in the class-action context.

III. THE DECISION BELOW WILL HAVE FAR REACHING, UNTOWARD CONSEQUENCES FOR DEFENDANTS AND IMPLICATES THIS COURT'S DUTY TO ENSURE UNIFORMITY OF FEDERAL PROCEDURES.

Even aside from the demonstrable flaws in the Ninth Circuit's decision, this Court's intervention is necessary to blunt the widespread, unfair consequences that the decision below will have on defendants and to ensure uniformity on potentially dispositive issues of class action procedure.

A. The impact of the Ninth Circuit's class certification decision will not be limited to employment discrimination suits. It will also affect plaintiffs' bids to obtain class certification in myriad other contexts, including products liability, securities, and antitrust cases. In each of these areas, plaintiffs assert claims that require proof that a defendant's conduct actually caused some injury. See, e.g., Castano, 84 F.3d at 740 (products liability); Dura Pharm., Inc. v. Broudo, 544 U.S. 336, 341-42 (2005) (securities fraud); Associated Gen. Contractors of Cal., Inc. v. Cal. State Council of Carpenters, 459 U.S. 519, 538 (1983) (antitrust). Thus, a critical part of a defendant's case is often to dispute causation and injury. For example, here, Wal-Mart would be entitled to show that it paid a particular plaintiff a lower wage not because of her sex, but because she was less willing to work weekends or rotating shifts. See Pet. App. 272a-273a & n.55.

Cases that involve varying individual proof of causation and injury generally are not eligible for class certification, as individual issues overwhelm the common issues. See Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620; Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a). To avoid that result, the trial court discarded the defendant's individual defenses, severely impairing the defendant's right to a fair trial. The Ninth Circuit's decision invites plaintiffs to propose novel changes to other areas of substantive law to skirt the individual issues that would otherwise preclude class treatment.

This potential for lopsided trials will intensify the pressure that any class certification order puts on a defendant to settle, making the class action procedure an even stronger magnet for frivolous claims. In enacting the Class Action Fairness Act of 2005, Pub. L. 109-2, 119 Stat. 4, members of Congress expressed considerable concern that, "[b]ecause class actions are such a powerful tool, they can give a class attorney unbounded leverage." S. Rep. No. 109-14, at 20 (2005). "Such leverage can essentially force corporate defendants to pay ransom to class attorneys by settling—rather than litigating—frivolous lawsuits." Id. On numerous occasions, DRI's members have represented defendants placed in this precise situation. Needless to say, "when plaintiffs seek hundreds of millions of dollars in damages, basic economics can force a corporation to settle the suit, even if it is meritless and has only a five percent chance of success." Id. at 21; see also Stoneridge Inv. Partners, LLC v. Scientific-Atlanta, Inc., 552 U.S. 148, 163-64 (2008) (explaining how the prospect of "extensive discovery" can enable "plaintiffs with weak claims to extort settlements from innocent companies"). This Court should grant review and deter such abusive practices.

B. Review is also warranted because the Ninth Circuit's decision implicates this Court's duty to ensure uniformity of federal procedure across the country. The very purpose of the Rules Enabling Act (and the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, which the Act empowers this Court to promulgate) is to create a single uniform system of procedure. See Woods, 480 U.S. at 5 n.3; Burbank, supra at 1024.

Divergent practices among federal courts on important issues of procedure, like the Rule 23 issues presented here, inevitably give rise to forum shopping. This Court has repeatedly warned "that it would be unfair for the character or result of a litigation materially to differ" merely because of where the suit is filed. Hanna v. Plumer, 380 U.S. 460, 467 (1965); see also, e.g., United States v. Reliable Transfer Co., 421 U.S. 397, 404, 411 (1975). In addition to its basic unfairness, forum shopping "overburdens jurisdictions with the most plaintiff-friendly approach, tends to place the suit in a locale that is removed from the source of the contest so that the litigants' expenses are greater, and perpetuates a negative perception of the fairness of the legal system." James D. Cox et al., Do Differences in Pleading Standards Cause Forum Shopping in Securities Class Actions?: Doctrinal and Empirical Analyses, 2009 Wis. L. Rev. 421, 452.

By affirming a class certification order that dispenses with statutorily required individualized proof, the decision below provides a strong incentive for plaintiffs to choose to litigate in courts within the Ninth Circuit. Class certification is a high-stakes issue that effectively resolves many cases before they ever reach the merits. See supra at 7-8, 20. Given the central importance of class certification, plaintiffs will seek out jurisdictions with procedural rules that favor and facilitate class certification. Because defendants that operate nationwide are effectively subject to suit anywhere, plaintiffs that allege class actions arising from nationwide conduct have their pick of the circuits. In those circumstances, "a single divergent circuit stands to swallow up the stance of all others." Richard A. Nagareda, Common Answers for Class Certification, 64 Vand. L. Rev. En Banc, at 6 (forthcoming 2010), available at http://ssrn.com/abstract_id=1662620.

Unless this Court intervenes, the Ninth Circuit's errant approach to class certification will become the de facto nationwide approach, as plaintiffs gravitate toward the Ninth Circuit and away from the courts that follow the text of Title VII and the Rules Enabling Act.

CONCLUSION

For these reasons, and those stated by petitioner, the petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN R. KOURIS
EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR
DRI—THE VOICE OF
THE DEFENSE BAR
55 West Monroe Street
Suite 2000
Chicago, IL 60603
(312) 795-1101

CARTER G. PHILLIPS*
JONATHAN F. COHN
MATTHEW D. KRUEGER
SIDLEY AUSTIN LLP
1501 K Street, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20005
(202) 736-8000
cphillips@sidley.com

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

September 24, 2010

* Counsel of Record

AMICUS
CURIAE
BRIEF

8

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED

SEP 24 2010

OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. 10-277

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Petitioner,
v.
BETTY DUKES, et al.,
Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT ADVISORY COUNCIL IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

RAE T. VANN
Counsel of Record
NORRIS, TYSSE, LAMPLEY &
LAKIS, LLP
1501 M Street, N.W.
Suite 400
Washington, DC 20005
rvann@ntll.com
(202) 629-5624

September 2010

WILSON-EPES PRINTING CO., INC. – (202) 789-0096 – WASHINGTON, D. C. 20002

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iii

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE 2

SUMMARY OF REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT 3

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT 6

I. REVIEW OF THE DECISION BELOW IS NECESSARY IN ORDER TO PROVIDE MUCH NEEDED CLARITY ON ISSUES OF SUBSTANTIAL IMPORTANCE TO THE EMPLOYER COMMUNITY 6

A. Despite This Court's Admonition In Falcon, There Remains Considerable Disagreement Regarding The Proper Analysis Required Of District Courts In Evaluating Rule 23 Motions For Class Certification 7

B. Without Definitive Guidance From This Court, The Lower Courts Will Continue To Apply Vastly Different Standards Of Proof Applicable To Plaintiffs Seeking Rule 23 Class Certification 12

C. The Decision Below Magnifies The Conflict In The Courts Regarding Whether Rule 23(b)(2) Class Certification Is Permissible In Title VII Discrimination Cases Seeking Substantial Monetary Relief 15

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

II. IMPROPER CERTIFICATION OF EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION CLASS ACTIONS PROFOUNDLY DISADVANTAGES EMPLOYERS, WHO OFTEN ACQUIESCE TO THE PRESSURE TO SETTLE SUCH CLAIMS, REGARDLESS OF THEIR MERIT 20

CONCLUSION 23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

FEDERAL CASES Page

Alaska Electrical Pension Fund v. Flowserve Corp., 572 F.3d 221 (5th Cir. 2009) 5, 13

Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402 (5th Cir. 1998) 17, 18, 19

Brown v. American Honda (In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Export Antitrust Litigation), 522 F.3d 6 (1st Cir. 2008) 8

Brown v. Nucor, 576 F.3d 149 (4th Cir.), modified, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 22224 (4th Cir. 2009), cert. denied, ___ U.S. ___, 130 S. Ct. 1720 (2010) 5, 14

Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter Railroad, 191 F.3d 283 (2d Cir. 1999), overruled on other grounds by In re Initial Public Offerings Securities Litigation, 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006) 9

Castano v. American Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734 (5th Cir. 1996) 21

Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695 (11th Cir. 2004), overruled on other grounds by Ash v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 546 U.S. 464 (2006) 17

Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463 (1978) 8

Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156 (1974) 7, 8

Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 5, 13, 14

General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982) .... passim

Page

In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litigation, 552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008)............passim

In re Initial Public Offering Securities Litigation, 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006).....8, 9, 22

In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 51 F.3d 1293 (7th Cir. 1995).............................. 21

In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litigation, 280 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 2001), overruled on other grounds by In re Initial Public Offerings Securities Litigation, 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006)........... 22

Jefferson v. Ingersoll International, Inc., 195 F.3d 894 (7th Cir. 1999).................... 19

Kolstad v. American Dental Association, 527 U.S. 526 (1999).................................. 18

McReynolds v. Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80002 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 9, 2010)...... 16

Molski v. Gleich, 318 F.3d 937 (9th Cir. 2003)...17, 18, 19

Murray v. Auslander, 244 F.3d 807 (11th Cir. 2001).. 18, 19

Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154 (3d Cir. 2001).. 22

Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815 (1999)... 6

Prescott v. Prudential Insurance Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 76293 (D. Me. July 27, 2010).. 5

Reeb v. Ohio Department of Rehabilitation & Correction, 435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006).. 17

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter Railroad, 267 F.3d 147 (2d Cir. 2001) 18, 19
Rutstein v. Avis Rent-A-Car Systems, Inc., 211 F.3d 1228 (11th Cir. 2000) 21
Szabo v. Bridgeport Machines, Inc., 249 F.3d 672 (7th Cir. 2001) 8, 10
Teamsters Local 445 Freight Division Pension Fund v. Bombardier, Inc., 546 F.3d 196 (2d Cir. 2008) 5, 12, 13, 14
Ticor Title Insurance Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117 (1994) 6
Vega v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 564 F.3d 1256 (11th Cir. 2009) 5, 13, 14

FEDERAL STATUTES

42 U.S.C. § 1981a 18
42 U.S.C. § 1981a(b)(1) 18
Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e et seq. 15

FEDERAL RULES

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 .... passim
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a) 15
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a)(3) 16
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b) 15
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) 6, 15, 20
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) 15

OTHER AUTHORITIES

U.S. Census Bureau, Annual Estimates of the Population for the United States, Regions, States and Puerto Rico: April 1, 2000 to July 1, 2009, Table 1 (July 1, 2009) 12

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

No. 10-277

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Petitioner,
v.
BETTY DUKES, et al.,
Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

---

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE EQUAL EMPLOYMENT ADVISORY COUNCIL IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

The Equal Employment Advisory Council (EEAC) respectfully submits this brief amicus curiae with the consent of the parties. The brief supports the petition for a writ of certiorari.[1]

---

[1] Counsel of record for all parties received notice of the amicus curiae's intention to file this brief at least 10 days prior to its due date. Both parties have consented to the filing of this brief. No counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than amicus curiae, its members, or its counsel made a monetary contribution to its preparation or submission.

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE

The Equal Employment Advisory Council (EEAC) is a nationwide association of employers organized in 1976 to promote sound approaches to the elimination of employment discrimination. Its membership includes over 300 major U.S. corporations. EEAC's directors and officers include many of industry's leading experts in the field of equal employment opportunity. Their combined experience gives EEAC a unique depth of understanding of the practical, as well as legal, considerations relevant to the proper interpretation and application of equal employment policies and requirements. EEAC's members are firmly committed to the principles of nondiscrimination and equal employment opportunity.

Comprising potential defendants to large-scale employment class action litigation, the nationwide constituency that EEAC represents has a direct and ongoing interest in the issues presented in this case regarding the type of analysis a district court must undertake in deciding whether class certification is appropriate under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. The en banc decision below effectively rejects the "rigorous analysis" standard established by this Court in General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161 (1982), for district court review of class certification motions by requiring only a minimal evidentiary showing that Respondents' claims meet the threshold requirements of Rule 23. Such a rule, if permitted to stand, would allow class certification of virtually any well-pled complaint, thus undermining the purposes of the class action tool and profoundly disadvantaging the employers having to defend such actions.

EEAC seeks to assist the Court by highlighting the impact the decision below may have beyond the immediate concerns of the parties to the case. Accordingly, this brief brings to the Court's attention relevant matters that the parties have not raised. Because of its experience in these matters, EEAC is well-situated to brief the Court on the concerns of the business community and the significance of this case to employers.

SUMMARY OF REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

This case presents the Court with the opportunity to resolve a persistent conflict in the courts regarding the proper standards to be applied in evaluating the propriety of class certification under Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. While this Court in General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982), instructed courts to conduct a "rigorous analysis" in determining whether the requirements of Rule 23 have been satisfied, further clarification is desperately needed regarding the breadth of analysis contemplated under Falcon, as well as the standard of proof applicable to plaintiffs seeking Rule 23 class certification.

The sharply divided en banc court below affirmed certification of a class of at least half a million – and as many as 1.5 million – current and former female employees of Petitioner who were "employed for any period of time over the past decade, in any of [Petitioner's] approximately 3,400 separately managed stores, 41 regions, and 400 districts, and who held positions in any of approximately 53 departments and 170 different job classifications." Pet. for Cert., at i. It rejected the argument that the district court failed to require Respondents to present significant proof of a company-wide practice, which as applied to all 1.5 million purported class members resulted in them falling victim to the same type of discrimination under similar circumstances and at the hands of the same decisionmakers.

Instead, the court below found that even though individual workers "in different stores with different managers may have received different levels of pay or may have been denied promotion or promoted at different rates," Pet. App. 30a, because Petitioners asserted that they were subjected to sex discrimination "through alleged common practices – e.g., excessively subjective decisionmaking in a corporate culture of uniformity and gender stereotyping" – the district court did not commit reversible error in concluding that they established common questions of fact that are typical of the claims or defenses of the class as a whole. Id. Thus, while expressly acknowledging the many differences in each individual class members' circumstances, the court below nevertheless concluded that the mere allegation of a corporate culture of subjective decisionmaking was sufficient to permit the district court to find that the requirements of Rule 23 were satisfied. Id. at 30a-32a.

The decision below magnifies the already pronounced conflict among the lower courts regarding the role of the district courts in evaluating and ruling upon Rule 23 motions for class certification, as well as the proper evidentiary standard applicable to plaintiffs seeking Rule 23 class certification. The Second, Third, and Fifth Circuits all have held that such plaintiffs must establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, "each fact necessary to meet the requirements of Rule 23," In re Hydrogen Peroxide

Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 320 (3d Cir. 2008). See also Teamsters Local 445 Freight Div. Pension Fund v. Bombardier, Inc., 546 F.3d 196, 202 (2d Cir. 2008); Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Flowserve Corp., 572 F.3d 221, 228-29 (5th Cir. 2009), while the Fourth, Eleventh and District of Columbia Circuits, apply different, seemingly lower standards. See Brown v. Nucor Corp., 576 F.3d 149, 153 (4th Cir.), modified, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 22224, at *8 (4th Cir. 2009), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 130 S. Ct. 1720 (2010); Vega v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 564 F.3d 1256, 1267 (11th Cir. 2009); Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625, 634 n.10 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

As one trial court observed:

> [T]he Circuit Courts in recent years have severely tightened the requirements for certifying a class under Rule 23. The First Circuit remains circumspect about "whether 'findings' regarding the class certification criteria are ever necessary," holding only that "when a Rule 23 requirement relies on a novel or complex theory as to injury . . . the district court must engage in a searching inquiry into the viability of that theory and the existence of the facts necessary for the theory to succeed." But other Circuits clearly require the trial judge to make factual findings by a preponderance of the evidence on all the Rule 23 criteria before certifying a Rule 23 class. . . . These decisions purport to flow from the language of Rule 23, but policy concerns (such as the make-or-break decision of certifying a huge class action) clearly drive some of the decisions.

Prescott v. Prudential Ins. Co., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 76293, at *20-*21 (D. Me. July 27, 2010) (citations omitted).

The decision below also adds to the disagreement among lower courts over whether actions seeking monetary damages, in addition to equitable and injunctive relief, ever are suitable for class certification under Rule 23(b)(2). This Court has indicated that granting class certification status under Rule 23(b)(2) where monetary damages are sought raises constitutional and due process concerns, Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 846 (1999), strongly suggesting that a "substantial possibility" exists that certification of such claims is never appropriate. Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117, 121 (1994).

The persistent lack of consistency in the courts regarding the propriety of Rule 23 class certification creates substantial uncertainty in an area of law that is of great importance to the business community. This inconsistency threatens to undermine the traditional role of the courts as gatekeepers in eliminating meritless cases at the class certification stage, thereby minimizing the enormous pressure placed on defendants to settle such claims.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I. REVIEW OF THE DECISION BELOW IS NECESSARY IN ORDER TO PROVIDE MUCH NEEDED CLARITY ON ISSUES OF SUBSTANTIAL IMPORTANCE TO THE EMPLOYER COMMUNITY

The decision below, which held that the district court properly examined whether Respondents satisfied the strict class certification requirements of Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, establishes such a low evidentiary bar that it is difficult to imagine an employer that would not be extremely vulnerable under that framework. It departs from decisions of other courts of appeals and, while paying lip service to this Court's admonition in General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 161 (1982), that district courts perform a "rigorous analysis" as to whether the plaintiffs' evidence supports Rule 23 class certification, ultimately disregards that principle. Given the conflict in the lower courts on what standards apply to motions for class certification under Rule 23, review of the decision below by this Court is warranted.

A. Despite This Court's Admonition In Falcon, There Remains Considerable Disagreement Regarding The Proper Analysis Required Of District Courts In Evaluating Rule 23 Motions For Class Certification

In General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, this Court declared that district courts, in determining whether plaintiffs seeking class certification have met the requirements of Rule 23, must engage in a "rigorous analysis" of the facts presented in support of the request. 457 U.S. 147, 161 (1982). It noted that in doing so, it sometimes "may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings before coming to rest on the certification question." Id. at 160.

Falcon appeared to dispel the misconception that the Court's earlier ruling in Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156 (1974), created a bright-line rule barring merits-based inquiries at the class certification stage. In Eisen, the Court observed that there is "nothing in either the language or history of Rule 23 that gives a court any authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits" when considering whether or not the requirements of Rule 23 have been met. 417 U.S. at 177. Shortly after Eisen was decided, the Court went on to observe that the "[e]valuation of many of the questions entering into determination of class action questions is intimately involved with the merits of the claims ... [of which] typicality ... adequacy ... and the presence of common questions of law or fact are obvious examples." Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 469 n.12 (1978) (citation and internal quotation omitted). It is this overlap between the merits of plaintiffs' claims and the Rule 23 class certification standards that makes it necessary, as the Court eventually instructed in Falcon, to "probe behind the pleadings" and inquire into the merits of plaintiffs' allegations. Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160.

Because the Court in Falcon did not expressly reconcile the "rigorous analysis" approach with its earlier caution in Eisen against merits-based inquiries, lower courts have struggled in determining what level of review satisfies the "rigorous analysis" test. A number of courts, most notably the Second, Third and Seventh Circuits, hold that district courts must not refrain from examining the merits of the plaintiffs' allegations at the expense of conducting a thorough Rule 23 analysis. See In re Initial Pub. Offering (IPO) Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006); In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008); Szabo v. Bridgeport Machs., Inc., 249 F.3d 672 (7th Cir. 2001); see also Brown v. Am. Honda (In re New Motor Vehicles Canadian Exp. Antitrust Litig.), 522 F.3d 6, 24 (1st Cir. 2008) ("Our sister circuits agree that when class criteria and merits overlap, the district court must conduct a searching inquiry regarding the Rule 23 criteria, but how they articulate the necessary degree of inquiry ranges along a spectrum which suggests substantial differences") (citing cases).

The Second Circuit recently clarified the proper standard for granting class certification in the context of so-called "statistical dueling" between the parties on the commonality issue, abandoning the approach it previously had adopted in Caridad v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., 191 F.3d 283 (2d Cir. 1999). In re IPO Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d at 39-40. In In re IPO, the court noted that Caridad condemned "statistical dueling" between experts based on the no-merits-inquiry approach taken by this Court in Eisen. Id. at 35. It observed that "Caridad, by the imprecision of its language, left unclear whether the merits dispute between the experts was not to be resolved at the class certification stage or whether their dispute about a class certification requirement was not to be resolved at that stage." Id. (footnote omitted). The court thus repudiated its prior holding in Caridad, concluding that judges must resolve factual disputes relevant to each Rule 23 requirement before ruling on whether to certify a class:

> With Eisen properly understood to preclude consideration of the merits only when a merits issue is unrelated to a Rule 23 requirement, there is no reason to lessen a district court's obligation to make a determination that every Rule 23 requirement is met before certifying a class just because of some or even full overlap of that requirement with a merits issue.

Id. at 41.

The Seventh Circuit also has held that where a Rule 23 class certification issue is so closely tied to the merits of the underlying claim, the court "must make a preliminary inquiry into the merits" in order to determine whether class certification is proper. Szabo, 249 F.3d at 676. Giving uncontestable weight to the plaintiffs' allegations "moves the court's discretion to the plaintiff's attorneys," and essentially permits the plaintiffs to "tie the judge's hands by making allegations relevant to both the merits and class certification." Id. at 677. Relying on the Seventh Circuit's rationale in Szabo, the Third Circuit similarly found in In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litigation that district courts "must resolve all factual or legal disputes relevant to class certification, even if they overlap with the merits—including disputes touching on elements of the cause of action." 552 F.3d at 307.

In contrast, the court below, joined by lower courts within its jurisdiction, evokes the "rigorous analysis" framework, while in fact applying a much less stringent standard than that adopted by other circuits striving to properly apply Falcon. Indeed, when the legal principles purportedly endorsed by the en banc court below are actually applied to the facts, it becomes abundantly clear that the district court refused to conduct any meaningful, merits-based review in determining whether the requirements of Rule 23 were satisfied.

The district court granted class certification based on evidence that Petitioner maintained a "common policy" of allowing local managers to use some discretion in making employment decisions and that its uniform corporate culture "could be" subject to gender stereotyping and, in doing so, refused to consider evidence offered by Wal-Mart undermining class certification, concluding that delving into the merits in such a manner would be improper. Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 222 F.R.D. 137 (N.D. Cal. 2004). It said:

> In Falcon, the Court reiterated the well-recognized precept that the class determination generally involves considerations that are enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's cause of action. Nevertheless, we find nothing in either the language or history of Rule 23 that gives a court any authority to conduct a preliminary inquiry into the merits of a suit in order to determine whether it may be maintained as a class action. Thus, although some inquiry into the substance of a case may be necessary to ascertain satisfaction of the commonality and typicality requirements of Rule 23(a), it is improper to advance a decision on the merits to the class certification stage.

Id. at 144 (citations and internal quotations omitted).

Despite the district court's strained interpretation and improper application of Falcon, a three judge panel of the Ninth Circuit, in a 2-1 decision, nevertheless affirmed class certification. Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 509 F.3d 1168 (9th Cir. 2007), vacated and reh'g granted, 556 F.3d 919 (9th Cir. 2009). A divided en banc court below, endorsing the district court's flawed approach, also affirmed. Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571 (9th Cir. 2010). Stripped of its rhetoric, its decision can only be viewed as establishing the very lowest standard of rigor applicable to district courts deciding the propriety of class certification under Rule 23.

Continued inconsistency in this area of the law will have a profound effect on the business community in general, but in particular on large companies that operate and employ staff across the United States. For instance, companies doing business within the Ninth Circuit's jurisdiction (which includes California, the nation's most populous state)[2] will be subject to Title VII class actions that might never have been certified under the more rigorous approach applied by the Second and Third Circuits – whose jurisdictions includes New York, Connecticut, Vermont, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, and the U.S. Virgin Islands.

B. Without Definitive Guidance From This Court, The Lower Courts Will Continue To Apply Vastly Different Standards Of Proof Applicable To Plaintiffs Seeking Rule 23 Class Certification

> Although it is clear that the party seeking certification must convince the district court that the requirements of Rule 23 are met, little guidance is available on the subject of the proper standard of "proof" for class certification. The Supreme Court has described the inquiry as a "rigorous analysis" and a "close look," but it has elaborated no further.

In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d at 315-16 (citations and footnote omitted). Indeed, left to figure it out, the lower courts have applied wide ranging standards of proof on plaintiffs seeking to proceed on a class-wide basis. See Teamsters Local 445 Freight Div. Pension Fund v. Bombardier, Inc.,

---

[2] U.S. Census Bureau, Annual Estimates of the Population for the United States, Regions, States and Puerto Rico: April 1, 2000 to July 1, 2009, Table 1 (July 1, 2009), available at http://www.census.gov/popest/states/tables/NST-EST2009-01.xls

546 F.3d 196 (2d Cir. 2008); In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008); Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Flowserve Corp., 572 F.3d 221 (5th Cir. 2009); Vega v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 564 F.3d 1256 (11th Cir. 2009); Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006).

The Second, Third, and Fifth Circuits all have held that plaintiffs seeking Rule 23 class certification must establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, "each fact necessary to meet the requirements of Rule 23." In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d at 320; Teamsters Local 445 Freight Div. Pension Fund v. Bombardier, Inc., 546 F.3d at 202; Alaska Elec. Pension Fund v. Flowserve Corp., 572 F.3d at 228-29. As the Second Circuit explained:

> Although we did not use the words "preponderance of the evidence" in In re IPO to describe the standard of proof applicable to Rule 23 issues, we in effect required the application of a cognate standard by directing district courts "to assess all of the relevant evidence admitted at the class certification stage," to "resolve[] factual disputes relevant to each Rule 23 requirement," and "[to] find[] that whatever underlying facts are relevant to a particular Rule 23 requirement have been established," notwithstanding an issue's overlap with the merits. Today, we dispel any remaining confusion and hold that the preponderance of the evidence standard applies to evidence proffered to establish Rule 23's requirements.

Teamsters, 546 F.3d at 202 (citations omitted).

By contrast, the Eleventh Circuit has suggested that plaintiffs, in order to proceed as a class, must make "some showing" that all of the requisite Rule 23 requirements have been satisfied, Vega v. T-Mobile USA, Inc., 564 F.3d 1256, 1267 (11th Cir. 2009), while the District of Columbia Circuit seems to endorse a "significant showing" proof standard. Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625, 632 (D.C. Cir. 2006) (citation omitted). The Fourth Circuit in Brown v. Nucor Corp., recently endorsed a "facial" showing standard, 576 F.3d 149, 156 n.10 (4th Cir.), modified, 2009 U.S. App. LEXIS 22224, at *19 n.10 (4th Cir. 2009), cert. denied, __ U.S. __, 130 S. Ct. 1720 (2010), which seems to comport most closely with the "threshold showing" approach expressly rejected by both the Second and Third Circuits in Teamsters Local 445 and In re Hydrogen Peroxide. As the Third Circuit explained:

> A "threshold showing" could signify, incorrectly, that the burden on the party seeking certification is a lenient one (such as a prima facie showing or a burden of production) or that the party seeking certification receives deference or a presumption in its favor. So defined, "threshold showing" is an inadequate and improper standard.

552 F.3d at 321.

To the extent that the decision below rejected the more robust standard of proof endorsed by most other circuit courts in favor of a lower, more nebulous one, it exacerbates a problematic conflict among the courts. Without further clarification from this Court, the lower courts will continue to apply remarkably differing standards of proof to plaintiffs seeking class certification under Rule 23, as employers subject to class litigation in multiple jurisdictions continue to face substantial uncertainty in defending such claims.

C. The Decision Below Magnifies The Conflict In The Courts Regarding Whether Rule 23(b)(2) Class Certification Is Permissible In Title VII Discrimination Cases Seeking Substantial Monetary Relief

To maintain a class action alleging violations of Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (Title VII), as amended, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e et seq., plaintiffs must satisfy all four requirements of Rule 23(a), and at least one of the requirements of Rule 23(b), of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. Fed. R. Civ. P. 23. Rule 23(a) permits class certification only when "(1) the class is so numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable; (2) there are questions of law or fact common to the class; (3) the claims or defenses of the representative parties are typical of the claims or defenses of the class; and (4) the representative parties will fairly and adequately protect the interests of the class." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(a).

Rule 23(b)(2), in turn, allows certification only when the defendant "has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2). Rule 23(b)(3) permits certification where "questions of law or fact common to class members predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and that a class action is superior to other available methods for fairly and efficiently adjudicating the controversy." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3).

Here, the en banc court below affirmed class certification under Rule 23(b)(2). It found no error in the district court's analysis under Rule 23(a), agreeing that evidence of Petitioner's "subjective decisionmaking policies suggests a common legal or factual question regarding whether [Petitioner's] policies or practices are discriminatory," thus satisfying the commonality requirement. Pet. App. 78a. As for typicality, the en banc majority determined that even though individual workers "in different stores with different managers may have received different levels of pay or may have been denied promotion or promoted at different rates, because the discrimination they claim to have suffered occurred through alleged common practices – e.g., excessively subjective decisionmaking in a corporate culture of uniformity and gender stereotyping" – the district court did not commit reversible error in concluding the claims of the class members also were sufficiently typical to satisfy Rule 23(a)(3).[3] Pet. App. 30a.

---

[3] Notably, the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of Illinois recently denied class certification in a Title VII race discrimination case involving allegations and factual circumstances strikingly similar to the instant case. McReynolds v. Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 2010 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 80002 (N.D. Ill. Aug. 9, 2010). There, the plaintiffs claimed that the defendant "has a corporate culture of racial discrimination that it implements through the discretionary decisions of over 15,000 [financial advisors], over 600 branch office managers, 135 complex directors, 30 Regional Managing Directors and 5 Divisional Managers situated across the entire United States." Id. at *14. Rejecting the plaintiffs' motion for Rule 23(b)(2) class certification, the district court observed, "[a]fter identifying these so-called common issues, however, plaintiffs offer little to establish the 'significant proof' required by Falcon to establish that the asserted discriminatory culture manifested itself in the 'same general fashion' as to all putative class members." Id. at *13. It went on to point out

> In fact, however, the plaintiffs' attempt to make this showing is undermined by the different experiences of the

The en banc majority also affirmed the district court's finding that the class is maintainable under Rule 23(b)(2). Despite the billions of dollars in backpay and punitive damages being sought, the district court concluded that injunctive relief is the primary purpose of the litigation. It observed that while Rule 23 precludes class certification where the relief sought "relates exclusively or predominately to money damages," it does not bar plaintiffs from seeking any monetary damages on a class wide basis.

In deciding when monetary relief actually does predominate over injunctive relief, the en banc majority reviewed its prior ruling in Molski v. Gleich, as well as precedent in other jurisdictions, observing that courts have disagreed over the years as to whether class certification under Rule 23(b)(2) is improper unless the claim for monetary damages is merely incidental to the injunctive relief being sought. 318 F.3d 937, 949-50 (9th Cir. 2003). See Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 415 (5th Cir. 1998) (citing cases); Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 645-50 (6th Cir. 2006); Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695, 720-21 (11th Cir. 2004), overruled on other grounds by Ash v. Tyson Foods, > proposed class members, in terms of length of service with the defendant, income, position levels, the people who made the relevant employment decisions, and the conflicting and unconvincing anecdotal evidence found in their declarations . . . Plaintiffs' position essentially is that all of these decisions were made by racist employees of a racist company. As numerous decisions from this district demonstrate, however, class certification should be denied when the plaintiffs' class definition implicates numerous, independent decision-makers resulting in the need for numerous individual inquiries.

Id. at *13-*15.

Inc., 546 U.S. 464 (2006); Robinson v. Metro-North Commuter R.R., 267 F.3d 147, 163-64 (2d Cir. 2001).

Molski focused on evaluating the "subjective intent" of the plaintiffs in bringing the action, while at the other end of the spectrum, the Fifth Circuit in Allison focused on whether the monetary claims amounted to no more than "incidental damages." 151 F.3d at 415-16. There, the Fifth Circuit examined the impact of the Civil Rights Act of 1991 on Rule 23(b)(2) class certification determinations in Title VII cases. It observed that the Civil Rights Act significantly changed the character of Title VII actions by creating a right of both parties to a jury trial and expanding statutory remedies for violations to include up to $300,000 in compensatory and punitive damages, in addition to injunctive and equitable relief. 42 U.S.C. § 1981a. The amendments emphasized the need for individual remedies, particularly in the case of punitive damages awards, which require individualized proof "that the respondent engaged in a discriminatory practice or discriminatory practices with malice or with reckless indifference to the federally protected rights of an aggrieved individual." 42 U.S.C. § 1981a(b)(1) (emphasis added); see also Kolstad v. American Dental Ass'n, 527 U.S. 526, 534 (1999) (noting that "Congress plainly sought to impose two standards of liability—one for establishing a right to compensatory damages and another, higher standard that a plaintiff must satisfy to qualify for a punitive award").

For that reason, the Fifth Circuit in Allison concluded, "monetary relief predominates in (b)(2) class actions unless it is incidental to requested injunctive or declaratory relief." Allison, 151 F.3d at 415; see also Murray v. Auslander, 244 F.3d 807, 812 (11th Cir. 2001); Jefferson v. Ingersoll Int'l, Inc., 195 F.3d 894, 898-99 (7th Cir. 1999). It explained, "[b]y incidental, we mean damages that flow directly from liability to the class as a whole on the claims forming the basis of the injunctive or declaratory relief." Allison at 415.

In Robinson, however, the Second Circuit held that claims for monetary relief do not automatically render class certification inappropriate; rather, the district court must assess on a case-by-case basis whether the monetary relief predominates, and whether class treatment would be efficient and manageable. 267 F.3d at 164. The Ninth Circuit in Molski adopted Robinson's case-by-case test, and expressly rejected the Fifth Circuit's approach in Allison. 318 F.3d at 949-50.

The en banc court below ultimately refused to endorse any of the existing standards, expressly rejecting Molski. It held, "to the extent Molski required the district court to inquire only into the intent of the plaintiffs and focus primarily on determining whether reasonable plaintiffs would bring suit to obtain injunctive or declaratory relief in the absence of a possible monetary recovery, it is overruled." Pet. App. 37a (citation omitted). It went on to articulate a different, arguably more confusing rule under which class certification will be improper where monetary relief is "predominant" over injunctive relief, as determined on a case-by-case basis by considering the objective effect the relief has on the litigation. Factors relevant to the "objective effect" determination include whether the monetary relief sought dictates what procedures are used; introduces "new and significant" legal and factual issues into the litigation; and requires individualized hearings. Pet. App.

33a. Also relevant is whether the size and the nature of the monetary relief raise due process and litigation manageability concerns.

Applying the new standard, the court below concluded that the district court did not abuse its discretion in granting certification under Rule 23(b)(2). It rejected Petitioner's argument that given the enormous size of the class – and the possibility of monetary liability amounting to several billion dollars – monetary relief necessarily predominates, making class certification improper, noting that the amount of potential damages "is principally a function of Wal-Mart's size, and the predominance test turns on the primary goal and nature of the litigation – not the theoretical or possible size of the total damages award." Pet. App. 39a.

Because the new principles established by the en banc court below only further perpetuate confusion over the extent to which Rule 23(b)(2) class certification ever is appropriate in Title VII cases seeking monetary damages, review by this Court is warranted.

II. IMPROPER CERTIFICATION OF EMPLOYMENT DISCRIMINATION CLASS ACTIONS PROFOUNDLY DISADVANTAGES EMPLOYERS, WHO OFTEN ACQUIESCE TO THE PRESSURE TO SETTLE SUCH CLAIMS, REGARDLESS OF THEIR MERIT

A district court's decision on a Rule 23 motion for class certification "is often the defining moment in class actions (for it may sound the 'death knell' of the litigation on the part of plaintiffs, or create unwarranted pressure to settle nonmeritorious claims on the part of defendants)." In re Hydrogen Peroxide, 552 F.3d at 310 (citation omitted). Indeed, class certification "'may force a defendant to settle rather than incur the costs of defending a class action and run the risk of potentially ruinous liability.'" Id. (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 advisory committee's note, 1998 Amendments). Because of the importance of Rule 23 class certification determinations, courts must be able to understand and rigorously apply the rules in a manner that ensures consistency and fairness for both plaintiffs and defendants.

The larger a class, the greater the potential liability and defense costs, which very well could lead to what some courts have called judicial "blackmail." Castano v. Am. Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 746 (5th Cir. 1996) (footnote omitted). As the Eleventh Circuit has found:

> Once one understands that the issues involved in the instant case are predominantly case-specific in nature, it becomes clear that there is nothing to be gained by certifying this case as a class action; nothing, that is, except the blackmail value of a class certification that can aid the plaintiffs in coercing the defendant into a settlement.

Rutstein v. Avis Rent-A-Car Sys., Inc., 211 F.3d 1228, 1241 n.21 (11th Cir. 2000) (emphasis added).

Judge Posner also astutely has observed that when companies face millions, or in some cases, billions, of dollars in potential liability as a result of a class action, "[t]hey may not wish to roll these dice. That is putting it mildly. They will be under intense pressure to settle." In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 51 F.3d 1293, 1298 (7th Cir. 1995) (citation omitted).

See also In re Visa Check/Mastermoney Antitrust Litig., 280 F.3d 124, 152 (2d Cir. 2001) (Jacobs, J., dissenting) (quoting Rhone-Poulenc Rorer), overruled on other grounds by In re IPO Sec. Litig., 471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006); Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 167-68 n.8 (3d Cir. 2001) (same).

Traditionally, it has been the role of the courts to act as gatekeepers in eliminating meritless cases at the certification stage, minimizing the enormous "blackmail value" of large classes. Rutstein, 211 F.3d at 1241 n.21. The panel majority's improper application of Rule 23's class certification requirements represents an abandonment of that role. By allowing unchallenged evidence to form the basis for class certification on the theory that the evidence will be evaluated at trial, the panel majority ignores the reality that class certification almost invariably leads to a settlement, making it likely that the evidence will never be evaluated. The decision below will make it easier to certify large class actions, increasing exponentially the pressure on employers to settle even meritless claims.

CONCLUSION

Accordingly, the amicus curiae Equal Employment Advisory Council respectfully requests the Court grant the petition for a writ of certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

RAE T. VANN
Counsel of Record
NORRIS, TYSSE, LAMPLEY &
LAKIS, LLP
1501 M Street, N.W.
Suite 400
Washington, DC 20005
rvann@ntll.com
(202) 629-5624

September 2010

AMICUS
CURIAE
BRIEF

172

③

No. 10-277

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 24 2010
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

In the Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,

Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF INTEL CORPORATION AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

A. DOUGLAS MELAMED
Senior Vice President &
General Counsel
Intel Corporation
2200 Mission College
Blvd.
Santa Clara, CA 95054

ROY T. ENGLERT, JR.
Counsel of Record
MARK T. STANCIL
EVA A. TEMKIN
Robbins, Russell, Englert, Orseck, Untereiner & Sauber LLP
1801 K Street, N.W.
Suite 411
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 775-4500
renglert@robbinsrussell.com

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

Page

TABLE OF CONTENTS

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iii

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE 1

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT 2

ARGUMENT 3

I. Improper Class Certification Puts Inappropriate Settlement Pressure On Defendants 4

A. The Prospect Of "Blackmail Settlements" Drives Companies To Settle Even The Weakest Cases 6

B. The Ninth Circuit's Rule Will Exacerbate Settlement Pressure 11

II. The Decision Below Misconstrues Rule 23(b)(2) 12

A. Class Actions Seeking Monetary Relief Cannot Be Certified Under Rule 23(b)(2) 13

B. A 23(b)(2) Class Should Not Be Certified When Damages Are More Than Incidental To Injunctive Or Declaratory Relief 18

TABLE OF CONTENTS - cont'd

Page

III. Rule 23 Cannot Undermine A Defendant's Right To Present An Individualized Defense 20

CONCLUSION 24

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page(s)

Cases

Abdallah v. Coca-Cola Co.,
186 F.R.D. 672 (N.D. Ga. 1999) 10

Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp.,
151 F.3d 402 (5th Cir. 1998) 16, 18

Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor,
521 U.S. 591 (1997) 20, 23

Black v. United States,
No. 08-876, slip op. (June 24, 2010) 15

Broussard v. Meineke Disc. Muffler Shops, Inc.,
155 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1998) 22

Business Guides, Inc. v. Chromatic Communications Enters., Inc.,
498 U.S. 533 (1991) 15

Califano v. Yamasaki,
442 U.S. 682 (1979) 17

Castano v. American Tobacco Co.,
84 F.3d 734 (5th Cir. 1996) 10

Coleman v. GMAC,
296 F.3d 443 (6th Cir. 2002) 17

Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin,
417 U.S. 156 (1974) 12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont'd

Page(s)

Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin,
479 F.2d 1005 (2d Cir. 1973) 22

Elizabeth M. v. Montenez,
458 F.3d 779 (8th Cir. 2006) 19

Eubanks v. Billington,
110 F.3d 87 (D.C. Cir. 1997) 18

Hilao v. Estate of Marcos,
103 F.3d 767 (9th Cir. 1996) 21, 23

In re "Agent Orange" Product Liability Litig.,
611 F. Supp. 1223 (E.D.N.Y. 1985) 9

In re "Agent Orange" Product Liability Litig.,
818 F.2d 145 (2d Cir. 1987) 9

In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. Tires Prods. Liab. Litig., 288 F.3d 1012 (7th Cir 2002) 12

In re Brooklyn Navy Yard Asbestos Litigation,
971 F.2d 831 (2d Cir. 1992) 22

In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 289 F.3d 98 (D.C. Cir. 2002) 8

In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc.,
51 F.3d 1293 (7th Cir. 1995) 2, 6

In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation,
280 F.3d 124 (2d Cir. 2001) 12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont'd

Page(s)

Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States,
431 U.S. 324 (1977) 20, 21

Krupski v. Costa Crociere S.p.A.,
No. 09-337, slip op. (June 7, 2010) 15

Lindsey v. Normet,
405 U.S. 56 (1972) 20

McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215
(2d Cir. 2008) 22

Monreal v. Potter,
367 F.3d 1224 (10th Cir. 2004) 14

Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp.,
527 U.S. 815 (1999) 20, 23

Oscar Private Equity Invs. v. Allegiance Telecom, Inc.,
487 F.3d 261 (5th Cir. 2007) 12

Parker v. Time Warner Entertainment Co.,
331 F.3d 13 (2d Cir. 2003) 17

Pavelic & LeFlore v. Marvel Entertainment Group, 493 U.S. 120 (1989) 15

Philip Morris USA v. Williams,
549 U.S. 346 (2007) 20, 21

Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts,
472 U.S. 797 (1985) 23

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont'd

Page(s)

Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. and Corr.,
435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006) 19

Regents of University of California v. Credit Suisse First Boston (USA), Inc.,
482 F.3d 372 (5th Cir. 2007) 9

Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 130 S. Ct. 1431 (2010) 8, 21

Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co.,
445 F.3d 311 (4th Cir. 2006) 18

Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown,
511 U.S. 117 (1994) 16

Tome v. United States,
513 U.S. 150 (1995) 15

Wershba v. Apple Computer, Inc.,
110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 145 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001) 23

Rules and Statutes

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) 14

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3) 17

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)(A) 16

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)(B) 16

Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b) 20

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont'd

Page(s)

Other Authorities

Robert G. Bone & David S. Evans, Class Certification and the Substantive Merits, 51 DUKE L.J. 1251 (2002) 10

HENRY J. FRIENDLY, FEDERAL JURISDICTION: A GENERAL VIEW 120 (1973) 6, 13

Bruce Hay & David Rosenberg, "Sweetheart" and "Blackmail" Settlements in Class Actions: Reality and Remedy, 75 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 1377 (2000) 3

Sarah Kirk, Ninth Circuit Discrimination Case Could Change The Ground Rules For Everyone, 14 TEX. REV. L. & POL. 163 (Fall 2009) 19, 20

Gary M. Kramer, No Class: Post-1991 Barriers to Rule 23 Certification of Across-the-Board Employment Discrimination Cases, 15 LAB. LAW. 415 (2000) 9

Bartlett H. McGuire, The Death Knell for Eisen*: Why the Class Action Analysis Should Include an Assessment of the Merits*, 168 F.R.D. 366 (1996) 8

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont'd

Page(s)

Richard A. Nagareda, Aggregation and Its Discontents: Class Settlement Pressure, Class-Wide Arbitration, And CAFA, 106 COLUM. L. REV. 1872 (2006) 5

Richard A. Nagareda, Class Certification in the Age of Aggregate Proof, 84 N.Y.U. L. REV. 97 (2009) 22

George L. Priest, Procedural Versus Substantive Controls of Mass Tort Class Actions, 26 J. LEGAL STUD. 521 (1997) 11

S. REP. NO. 109-14 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3 8

Linda Silberman, The Vicissitudes of the American Class Action—With a Comparative Eye, 7 TUL. J. INT'L & COMP. L. 201 (1999) 8

Michael E. Solimine & Christine Oliver Hines, Deciding to Decide: Class Action Certification and Interlocutory Review by the United States Courts of Appeals Under Rule 23(f), 41 WM. & MARY L. REV. 1531 (2000) 5

Roger H. Trangsrud, James F. Humphreys Complex Litigation Lecture: The Adversary System and Modern Class Action Practice, 76 GEO. WASH. L. REV. 181 (2008) 6, 14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – cont'd

Page(s)

WORKING PAPERS OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CIVIL RULE 23 pt. 3 (1997) 10

7AA CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ARTHUR R. MILLER & MARY KAY KANE, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE (3d ed. 2005) 14

BRIEF OF INTEL CORPORATION AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

INTEREST OF THE AMICUS CURIAE[1]

Intel Corporation is the world's largest semiconductor manufacturer and is also a leading manufacturer of computer, networking, and communications hardware and software products. Given its size, Intel frequently is named as a defendant in litigation in which plaintiffs seek class certification, including certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2). At present, there are nearly 100 putative class actions pending against Intel. Indeed, for the past ten years Intel has continuously been named as a defendant in one or more putative class actions.

As a result, Intel has a significant interest in maintaining proper limitations on class-action procedures. Class certification can transform an ordinary lawsuit into "bet-the-company" litigation, even for a company of Intel's size. But companies can seldom afford to make such bets—no matter how small the odds are of an adverse judgment—so class certification almost always coerces an immediate settlement. "Blackmail settlements," as Judge Friendly aptly termed such results, damage Intel, impose costs on its customers, and ultimately harm its shareholders. Furthermore, as a company headquartered in California, Intel is especially vulnerable to lawsuits filed under the extraordinarily permissive standards for class certification that the Ninth Circuit adopted by a 6-5 vote in the decision below. Intel is therefore well positioned to explain the pressing need for further review of the deeply flawed decision reached by the majority below.

---

[1] The parties received timely notice of amicus's intent to file this brief and have consented to its filing. No counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel for a party or a party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person or entity other than amicus or its counsel made a monetary contribution to the preparation or submission of this brief.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

I.A. Improper class certification puts inappropriate settlement pressure on defendants. Defendants simply cannot risk a multi-billion-dollar jury verdict awarding damages to thousands (or millions) of members of a certified class. Improper certification gives plaintiffs unfair leverage to extract an outsized settlement from even moderately risk-averse defendants. Corporate decisionmakers must often settle even meritless cases because they cannot "stake their companies on the outcome of a single jury trial." In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer, Inc., 51 F.3d 1293, 1299 (7th Cir. 1995). Courts must therefore vigilantly guard against erroneous certifications.

B. The decision below exacerbates the problem of coerced settlements. It effectively reduces the requirements for certification of a class, and it permits courts to make that crucial determination before squarely resolving whether all the threshold requirements imposed by Rule 23 are met. Consequently, the majority's rule creates a loophole through which classes may be wrongly certified. Because certification often is the ballgame, such errors will translate to erroneous and massive liability for corporate defendants.

II.A. The plain text of Rule 23(b)(2) does not provide for the certification of class actions seeking monetary relief. Rather, that subsection permits certification only of classes seeking injunctive or declaratory relief. Wrongly authorizing the availability of money damages is bad enough; doing so when that mistake is then multiplied by thousands or even millions of plaintiffs is an error of the highest order.

B. To the extent that a class seeking monetary relief may be certified under Rule 23(b)(2) at all, such certification is limited to actions in which damages are truly incidental to injunctive or declaratory relief. The decision below misconstrues Rule 23(b)(2) and exacerbates existing, mature, and acknowledged circuit conflicts by allowing the certification of an action seeking billions of dollars in monetary relief.

III. Particularly in employment-discrimination actions, a defendant has a right (and the need) to present an individualized defense against each plaintiff. Rule 23 cannot alter that essential requirement in the name of aggregation or convenience. By denying petitioner the right to present individualized defenses, the courts below violated the Due Process Clause, the Rules Enabling Act, and Title VII itself.

ARGUMENT

"[C]lass actions are without doubt the most controversial subject in the civil process today." Bruce Hay & David Rosenberg, "Sweetheart" and "Blackmail" Settlements in Class Actions: Reality and Remedy, 75 NOTRE DAME L. REV. 1377, 1377 (2000). Much of the controversy centers on certification; indeed, class certification can transform a comparatively modest case into one with millions of claimants and billions of dollars in claimed damages. Here, the order certifying the class expanded a Title VII action, brought by a variety of plaintiffs who claim to be victims of biased subjective decisionmaking by a handful of different supervisors, into a behemoth comprising 1.5 million plaintiffs and with potentially billions at stake. Pet. App. 112a (Ikuta, J., dissenting), 89a. Many scholars and observers have rightly criticized decisions that, like the majority opinion below, permit class certification without fully addressing and resolving the difficulties posed by that crucial threshold inquiry.

Intel takes no position on the merits of the underlying Title VII action but concurs with petitioner, and with Judge Ikuta in dissent, that the majority decision rests on a deeply flawed interpretation of Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 and this Court's precedents. Intel also agrees with petitioner that the majority opinion is in conflict with decisions of other federal appellate courts, by allowing the certification under Rule 23(b)(2) of an action in which the billions of dollars in monetary relief sought cannot be construed as incidental to injunctive or declaratory relief. This brief focuses principally on three particular reasons why it is essential to confine class certification to the precise limits set forth in Rule 23, and why this Court's review of the decision below is therefore so urgently needed.

I. Improper Class Certification Puts Inappropriate Settlement Pressure On Defendants

Even in ordinary cases, litigation can be enormously expensive for businesses. The out-of-pocket costs alone can be massive, not to mention the distractions and lost business opportunities that frequently accompany lawsuits. The prospect of erroneous outcomes—such as a mistaken finding of liability or (as is all too common) an outsized damages award—also looms large. These costs and risks are a fact of life for businesses, and they present significant obstacles under the best of circumstances.

If an action is brought on behalf of not one plaintiff but thousands or millions, the stakes skyrocket. Once a class of that magnitude is certified, an action that individually might represent only a modest risk—and thus could be fully adjudicated or otherwise appropriately resolved—can instantly metastasize into a potentially catastrophic judgment worth billions of dollars. Faced with those circumstances, defendants almost invariably will settle. See, e.g., Richard A. Nagareda, Aggregation and Its Discontents: Class Settlement Pressure, Class-Wide Arbitration, And CAFA, 106 COLUM. L. REV. 1872, 1875 (2006) ("Whatever their partisan stakes in a given litigation, all sides recognize that the overwhelming majority of actions certified to proceed on a class-wide basis (and not otherwise resolved by dispositive motion) result in settlements."); Michael E. Solimine & Christine Oliver Hines, Deciding to Decide: Class Action Certification and Interlocutory Review by the United States Courts of Appeals Under Rule 23(f), 41 WM. & MARY L. REV. 1531, 1546 n.74 (2000) ("[T]hat defendants would rather settle large class actions than face the risk, even if it be small, of crushing liability from an adverse judgment on the merits is widely recognized.").

Accordingly, careful analysis of and fidelity to the text of the rule are paramount. As Wal-Mart's petition explains and as Intel will explain further in this brief, the majority opinion below, instead of guarding against procedures that will lead to coerced settlements, throws open the barn door. If left undisturbed, the decision below will make it far more likely that plaintiffs with weak cases will nonetheless be able to extract massive settlements.

A. The Prospect Of "Blackmail Settlements" Drives Companies To Settle Even The Weakest Cases

Certification of a class action forces a defendant to settle, even if the claim has no merit. "Judge Friendly, who was not given to hyperbole, called settlements induced by a small probability of an immense judgment in a class action 'blackmail settlements.'" In re Rhone-Poulenc, 51 F.3d at 1298 (quoting HENRY J. FRIENDLY, FEDERAL JURISDICTION: A GENERAL VIEW 120 (1973)). As one commentator recently explained: "[I]f class action certification is granted, defendants are often unwilling to suffer the risks of trial—even in marginal cases—and face enormous pressure to settle the case for a very substantial amount." Roger H. Trangsrud, James F. Humphreys Complex Litigation Lecture: The Adversary System and Modern Class Action Practice, 76 GEO. WASH. L. REV. 181, 189 (2008).

Those pressures are so overwhelming because defendants face massive exposure for the slightest miscalculation or error in determining liability. Suppose, for example, that a defendant faces lawsuits by one hundred plaintiffs claiming a combined $100 million in damages, but the defendant believes those claims are really worth no more than $10 million. If those claims are addressed individually, the defendant has good reason to believe that most of the time the correct result will be achieved and something close to the expected aggregate liability will result. Errors are likely to be few in number and evenly distributed—that is, sometimes the plaintiff will win too big, and sometimes the defendant will get off too easy. The net effect of such errors is therefore likely to be minimal, and defendants can act in accordance with their best estimate of their true liability.

In a class action, the defendant is forced to gamble all at once against thousands or even millions of opponents. Even a moderately risk-averse defendant will settle rather than face the truly disastrous consequences of an unexpected outcome. Unless one can predict the result of a jury trial with certainty—and no such thing is possible—the strength of one's case is almost irrelevant. Because the price of a single error (however remote the prospect) could be hundreds of millions (or, as here, billions) of dollars, the only rational strategy is to settle.

That harsh reality is no secret. As the Senate Judiciary Committee recently observed, class certification > can give a class attorney unbounded leverage * * * * [that] can essentially force corporate defendants to pay ransom to class attorneys by settling—rather than litigating—frivolous lawsuits. * * * [W]hen plaintiffs seek hundreds of millions of dollars in damages, basic economics can force a corporation to settle the > suit, even if it is meritless and has only a five percent chance of success. Not surprisingly, the ability to exercise unbounded leverage over a defendant corporation and the lure of huge attorneys' fees have led to the filing of many frivolous class actions.

S. REP. NO. 109-14, at 20-21 (2005), reprinted in 2005 U.S.C.C.A.N. 3, 21; see Bartlett H. McGuire, The Death Knell for Eisen*: Why the Class Action Analysis Should Include an Assessment of the Merits*, 168 F.R.D. 366, 370-371 (1996) ("class certification can give plaintiffs tremendous leverage in settlement negotiations, even where the claims are tenuous. * * * [T]enuous claims are hard to dispose of before trial; and jury trials are risky propositions * * *."). The result is an in terrorem effect that compels defendants to settle claims that have no merit. See, e.g., Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A. v. Allstate Ins. Co., 130 S. Ct. 1431, 1465 n.3 (2010) (Ginsburg, J., dissenting) ("A court's decision to certify a class * * * places pressure on the defendant to settle even unmeritorious claims."); In re Lorazepam & Clorazepate Antitrust Litig., 289 F.3d 98, 102 (D.C. Cir. 2002) ("[T]he grant of class status can put substantial pressure on the defendant to settle independent of the merits of the plaintiffs' claims."); see also Linda Silberman, The Vicissitudes of the American Class Action—With a Comparative Eye, 7 TUL. J. INT'L & COMP. L. 201, 205 (1999) ("[T]he specter of huge damage awards against defendants in a class action suit and the expense of litigating these large suits in a system without cost-shifting frequently led defendants to settle even marginal cases.").

Those concerns are grounded in real-world experience. Beginning in the late 1970s, for example, veterans of the Vietnam War filed lawsuits against chemical companies alleging that their exposure to an herbicide manufactured by the defendants caused various health problems. In re "Agent Orange" Product Liability Litig., 611 F. Supp. 1223, 1228 (E.D.N.Y. 1985). The district court ultimately certified a huge, multinational class over defendants' objections. Id. at 1229. Facing the untenable risk of an adverse judgment, defendants settled the case for $180 million. See In re "Agent Orange" Product Liability Litig., 818 F.2d 145, 151 (2d Cir. 1987). Yet the plaintiffs' claims were so weak that, when adjudicating the claims of plaintiffs who had opted out of the class, the district court eventually granted summary judgment in favor of defendants. 611 F. Supp. at 1264; see also Regents of University of California v. Credit Suisse First Boston (USA), Inc., 482 F.3d 372, 379 (5th Cir. 2007) ("[C]lass certification may be the backbreaking decision that places insurmountable pressure on a defendant to settle, even where the defendant has a good chance of succeeding on the merits.") (internal quotation marks omitted).

Not only is the risk of losing at trial magnified, but so are the costs of getting there. See, e.g., Gary M. Kramer, No Class: Post-1991 Barriers to Rule 23 Certification of Across-the-Board Employment Discrimination Cases, 15 LAB. LAW. 415, 416-417 (2000) (discussing increased costs associated with litigating class action). Moreover, defending a class action can do substantial damage to a defendant's reputation, because such lawsuits often attract publicity out of proportion to their merit and because the mere aggregation of plaintiffs suggests to the public that, where there is so much smoke, there must be fire. See, e.g., Abdallah v. Coca-Cola Co., 186 F.R.D. 672, 676 (N.D. Ga. 1999) (describing negative publicity resulting from class action). And class actions are likely to be tried in a manner that is ultimately prejudicial to the defendant. "[T]he playing field changes dramatically when there is a class certified. All the rules are different." WORKING PAPERS OF THE ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO CIVIL RULE 23 pt. 3, 107-108 (1997). Most significantly, "[f]or each plaintiff who may have been in a different period of time, with different facts in a single trial, much of the evidence would not come in to that particular plaintiff, that particular claim." Ibid; see also Castano v. American Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 746 (5th Cir. 1996) ("Aggregation of claims also makes it more likely that a defendant will be found liable * * *."). In the face of all that, corporate defendants typically have no choice but to settle, with little regard for the merits of the underlying claims.

What is more, every large award coerced in settlement of a dubious claim further entices other plaintiffs (and plaintiffs' lawyers) to file still more specious lawsuits. A "lack of attention to the merits make[s] the class action an attractive vehicle for frivolous suits." Robert G. Bone & David S. Evans, Class Certification and the Substantive Merits, 51 DUKE L.J. 1251, 1302 (2002). As one scholar has noted:

> It is surely a curious circumstance in a country committed to the rule of law to accept the propositions (1) that class certification alone creates great negotiating power, (2) that that power leads to actual settlements, sometimes > large dollar settlements, and, simultaneously, (3) that this great negotiating power can be created without any judicial review of a claim on the merits and, in some cases, without any merit to the claim.

George L. Priest, Procedural Versus Substantive Controls of Mass Tort Class Actions, 26 J. LEGAL STUD. 521, 547 (1997). In short, certification of a dubious class action not only produces a settlement that far exceeds the merits of the claim, but it also guarantees the persistent recurrence of such lawsuits.

B. The Ninth Circuit's Rule Will Exacerbate Settlement Pressure

Instead of recognizing the problems created by careless class certification and committing to a careful and thorough analysis, the decision below aggravates the problem of coerced settlements by permitting the certification of actions that are inappropriate for class treatment. Among its most glaring defects, the majority opinion does not require the district court actually to determine how a case will be tried on a class-wide basis as required by Rule 23(c)(1)(B). Instead, a class may be certified even where (as here) it does not meet the basic requirements of Rule 23(b)(2), see Part II, infra, and where individual hearings of the type necessary for a defendant to present individual defenses in a case seeking back pay are deemed "impractical," Pet. App. 251a; see Part III, infra. Certification thus will be available to classes that would not be certified under a correct reading of Rule 23. The net result is a system in which a class may be easily—and incorrectly—certified, at which point "plaintiffs and their counsel * * * have in hand the means to extract a favorable settlement of what may be weak claims." In re Visa Check/MasterMoney Antitrust Litigation, 280 F.3d 124, 152 (2d Cir. 2001) (Jacobs, J., dissenting) (citing Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177 (1974)); see also Oscar Private Equity Invs. v. Allegiance Telecom, Inc., 487 F.3d 261, 267 (5th Cir. 2007) ("We cannot ignore the in terrorem power of certification.").

Plaintiffs here seek billions of dollars in damages on behalf of 1.5 million current and former employees. Their untested allegations of discrimination should not suffice to erect a barrier to a meaningful examination of such a massive class-action complaint and the unfair burdens that allowing such a gargantuan lawsuit to proceed would impose on a defendant. Yet the courts below have "ma[de] the case so unwieldy, and the stakes so large, that settlement becomes almost inevitable—and at a price that reflects the risk of a catastrophic judgment as much as, if not more than, the actual merit of the claims." In re Bridgestone/Firestone, Inc. Tires Prods. Liab. Litig., 288 F.3d 1012, 1016 (7th Cir 2002).

II. The Decision Below Misconstrues Rule 23(b)(2)

Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23(b)(2), promulgated in 1966, allows a class action to be maintained if "the party opposing the class has acted or refused to act on grounds that apply generally to the class, so that final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." The rule mentions only two kinds of relief – injunctive and declaratory. It does not mention monetary relief.

The 1966 amendments to Rule 23 "greatly augmented the volume of private litigation" through the "expanded concept of the class action." FRIENDLY, FEDERAL JURISDICTION, supra, at 118. Initially, as Judge Friendly noted, there were "few grounds for serious criticism of Rule 23(b)(2)" because "[t]he relief sought is generally an injunction or decree." Ibid. If properly confined to injunctive or declaratory relief, the overarching goal of a (b)(2) class action was to "prevent[] further litigation." Ibid. That stands in stark contrast to class actions for money damages under Rule 23(b)(3), which coerce unwarranted settlements and thereby ignite seemingly endless additional litigation. See FRIENDLY, FEDERAL JURISDICTION, supra, at 119; Part I, supra.

For that reason, class actions seeking monetary relief generally cannot be certified under Rule 23(b)(2); they must instead meet the more stringent requirements imposed by Rule 23(b)(3). By certifying under the former a class seeking billions of dollars, the majority strayed from the plain text of Rule 23(b)(2). The majority's decision also adds to the widely recognized split among the circuits over the extent to which a Rule 23(b)(2) class may seek monetary relief.

A. Class Actions Seeking Monetary Relief Cannot Be Certified Under Rule 23(b)(2)

A plain reading of Rule 23(b)(2) compels the conclusion that it cannot be used to certify class actions seeking monetary relief. Again, that rule permits certification only of classes for which "final injunctive relief or corresponding declaratory relief is appropriate respecting the class as a whole." Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(2) (emphasis added). There is, quite conspicuously, no mention of suits for money damages.

Indeed, scholars have long recognized that "Rule 23(b)(2) was not originally drafted to provide a vehicle for obtaining compensatory damages and other forms of monetary relief." Trangsrud, supra, 76 GEO. WASH. L. REV. at 186. Rather, the touchstone of Rule 23(b)(2) "is whether the party's actions would affect all persons similarly situated so that those acts apply generally to the whole class. If they do not, then Rule 23(b)(2) cannot be properly invoked." 7AA CHARLES ALAN WRIGHT, ARTHUR R. MILLER & MARY KAY KANE, FEDERAL PRACTICE AND PROCEDURE § 1775, at 41 (3d ed. 2005) (footnote omitted); see, e.g., Monreal v. Potter, 367 F.3d 1224, 1236 (10th Cir. 2004) (affirming denial of certification "[b]ecause the variety of claims asserted in the Complaint do not lend themselves to the formulation of appropriate class-wide injunctive or declaratory relief and because it is clear from the pleadings here that the primary relief sought is monetary damages").

It was only by "seizing on certain language in the advisory committee notes to the rule, [that] the plaintiffs' bar was successful in persuading federal courts that monetary relief should be allowed * * *." Trangsrud, supra, 76 GEO. WASH. L. REV. at 186. In fact, every circuit to allow such class actions under Rule 23(b)(2) has relied on a portion of the text of an Advisory Committee Note to alter—not merely to interpret—the text of Rule 23(b)(2). What is more, even those circuits cannot agree on the extent to which money damages should be available, most likely because there is no textual basis for such relief in the first place. See Pet. 10-12. The better course would be—as this Court's cases instruct—to follow the Rule's unambiguous text, which makes Rule 23(b)(2) available only for injunctive and declaratory relief and requires use of Rule 23(b)(3) when monetary relief is sought.

"As with a statute, our inquiry is complete if we find the text of [a Federal] Rule [of Civil Procedure] to be clear and unambiguous." Business Guides, Inc. v. Chromatic Communications Enters., Inc., 498 U.S. 533, 540-541 (1991); accord Pavelic & LeFlore v. Marvel Entertainment Group, 493 U.S. 120, 123 (1989). The text of Rule 23(b)(2) cannot be altered by Advisory Committee Notes. Krupski v. Costa Crociere S.p.A., No. 09-337, slip op. at 1 (June 7, 2010) (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring the judgment) ("The Advisory Committee's insights into the proper interpretation of a Rule's text * * * * have no effect on the Rule's meaning. Even assuming that we and the Congress that allowed the Rule to take effect read and agreed with those intentions, it is the text of the Rule that controls."); Black v. United States, No. 08-876, slip op. at 1 (June 24, 2010) (Scalia, J., joined by Thomas, J., concurring in part and concurring the judgment) ("The Committee's view is not authoritative"); Tome v. United States, 513 U.S. 150, 167-168 (1995) (Scalia, J., concurring in part and concurring the judgment) ("the Notes cannot, by some power inherent in the draftsmen, change the meaning that the Rules would otherwise bear").

The practical effect of distorting Rule 23(b)(2) is to offer the same relief contemplated by Rule 23(b)(3), but without the latter's tight limitations. See Pet. App. 151a (Ikuta, J., dissenting) (citing Ticor Title Ins. Co. v. Brown, 511 U.S. 117, 121 (1994)). Most notably, Rule 23(b)(3) requires that a court find—before certifying a class—that common questions predominate and that a class action is the superior method of resolving the dispute. Rule 23(b)(2) contains no such protections for defendants. Rule 23(b)(3) also protects plaintiffs, requiring notice and the opportunity to opt out of the suit. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)(B). Rule 23(b)(2), by its terms, is not so limited. See Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(c)(2)(A).[2] Rather, because suits under Rule 23(b)(3) can seek only injunctive or declaratory relief, the benefits and burdens of the class action properly run to the class as a whole. See Allison v. Citgo Petroleum Corp., 151 F.3d 402, 412-15 (5th Cir. 1998). As one judge rightly observed, courts > risk unduly extending (b)(2) in cases with monetary claims by inviting district judges to use it and then protect claimants with individualized damage amounts either by affording them opt-out rights or certifying only the liability issue.

---

[2] Some courts—including the district court and court of appeals below, Pet. App. 95a-96a; 243a—have concluded that the absence of an opt-out provision in Rule 23(b)(2) does not prevent granting opt-out rights for money damages claims sought under that provision. It would be unnecessary to invent such rights, however, if these courts had confined the rule to its proper scope to allow class actions seeking only injunctive and declaratory relief.

> Such devices strike me as a way of undermining the (b)(3) requirement that "a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of the controversy."

Parker v. Time Warner Entertainment Co., 331 F.3d 13, 24 (2d Cir. 2003) (Newman, J., concurring) (quoting Fed. R. Civ. P. 23(b)(3)).

Moreover, certifying classes seeking damages under 23(b)(2) only magnifies opportunities for abuse in class actions seeking predominantly money damages. As this Court has noted, "the limitations on class size associated with Rule 23(b)(3) actions do not apply" to classes certified under 23(b)(2). Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 702 (1979). While "a nationwide class" certified under 23(b)(2) may not necessarily be "inconsistent with principles of equity jurisprudence," ibid., the same cannot be said for damages actions that typically rest on even more highly individualized inquiries. Allowing the pursuit of money damages by a Rule 23(b)(2)-certified class ignores that critical distinction and avoids the strict limitations imposed under Rule 23(b)(3) See Coleman v. GMAC, 296 F.3d 443, 447 (6th Cir. 2002) ("These procedural protections are considered unnecessary for a Rule 23(b)(2) class because its requirements are designed to permit only classes with homogenous interests."). This case perfectly illustrates that potential: Some 1.5 million plaintiffs have been aggregated under Rule 23(b)(2) and effectively seek billions of dollars in money damages, but they could not possibly do so in a single class under Rule 23(b)(3).

B. A 23(b)(2) Class Should Not Be Certified When Damages Are More Than Incidental To Injunctive Or Declaratory Relief

The court below, parsing a word that does not appear in the Rule's text but only in an Advisory Committee Note, saw its task as determining "the appropriate standard for determining when monetary relief 'predominates' over declaratory and injunctive relief and therefore precludes certification of a Rule 23(b)(2) class." Pet. App. 85a. If courts are to go down that path at all, they must remain extraordinarily vigilant that such relief is only incidental to injunctive or declaratory relief. As Judge Ikuta recognized in dissent below, "Rule 23(b)(2) was designed for classes seeking class-wide injunctive relief to remedy a common injury to the class as a whole, not for classes seeking individual damages, back pay, or other individual relief." Pet. App. 149a (Ikuta, J., dissenting); see Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 445 F.3d 311, 331 (4th Cir. 2006) ("Because Appellants' injunction request is illusory, their prayer for injunctive relief cannot predominate over their prayer for non-injunctive, non-declaratory equitable relief under any reasonable interpretation of Rule 23(b)(2)."); Allison, 151 F.3d at 413 ("The underlying premise of the (b)(2) class * * * 'begins to break down when the class seeks to recover back pay or other forms of monetary relief to be allocated based on individual injuries.'") (quoting Eubanks v. Billington, 110 F.3d 87, 95 (D.C. Cir. 1997)).

The claims for monetary relief in this case "predominate"—under any meaningful standard for such an inquiry—and thus cannot be shoehorned into a Rule 23(b)(2) class action. At least two-thirds of the class members are former employees who lack standing to pursue injunctive relief. See Elizabeth M. v. Montenez, 458 F.3d 779, 784-85 (8th Cir. 2006) (holding that that the district court had abused its discretion by certifying a 23(b)(2) class including both past and current mental health facility patients, because the former lacked Article III standing to seek injunctive relief). And the multi-billion-dollar price tag plaintiffs attach to their lawsuit belies any claim that injunctive relief is their primary target. See Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. and Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 641 (6th Cir. 2006) ("Title VII cases in which plaintiffs seek individual compensatory damages are not appropriately brought as class actions under Rule 23(b)(2) because such individual claims for money damages will always predominate over requested injunctive or declaratory relief."); Sarah Kirk, Ninth Circuit Discrimination Case Could Change The Ground Rules For Everyone, 14 TEX. REV. L. & POL. 163, 168 (Fall 2009) ("[T]he court erred by certifying, under Rule 23(b)(2), an unmanageable class in which claims for declaratory and injunctive relief plainly do not predominate.").

As Wal-Mart's petition explains, and Intel will not repeat, the circuit conflict over what it means for monetary relief to "predominate" in a Rule 23(b)(2) class action is mature, acknowledged, and implicated by this case. If that inquiry is to be pursued at all (instead of following the text of the Rule and disallowing monetary damages altogether in such actions), this case is an appropriate vehicle to resolve the conflict.

III. Rule 23 Cannot Undermine A Defendant's Right To Present An Individualized Defense

Rules of procedure may not abridge, enlarge, or modify any substantive right. Ortiz v. Fibreboard Corp., 527 U.S. 815, 845 (1999); Amchem Prods., Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 613 (1997); Rules Enabling Act, 28 U.S.C. § 2072(b). A court therefore "must ensure that its certification of a class does not affect the substantive rights of either party." Pet. App. 139a (Ikuta, J. dissenting).

The Due Process Clause "prohibits a State from punishing an individual without first providing that individual with 'an opportunity to present every available defense.'" Philip Morris USA v. Williams, 549 U.S. 346, 353 (2007) (quoting Lindsey v. Normet, 405 U.S. 56, 66 (1972)); ICC v. Louisville & Nashville R.R. Co., 227 U.S. 88, 93 (1913). Due process does not permit elimination of defenses merely because trying them would preclude fashioning a class-wide remedy. See Pet. App. 146a (Ikuta, J. dissenting).

"[I]t is well established that every [defendant]" in an employment-discrimination suit "is entitled to put on evidence showing that particular plaintiffs are not entitled to relief because they were denied an employment opportunity for lawful reasons." Kirk, supra, 14 TEX. REV. L. & POL. at 174. Accordingly, trial of a claim based on disparate treatment typically will require individual hearings, both in order to compensate each plaintiff for her respective injury and to permit the defendant to present individualized defenses. Int'l Bhd. of Teamsters v. United States, 431 U.S. 324, 368 (1977).

Even though the district court here acknowledged that Wal-Mart's defenses to the various plaintiffs' claims would be individualized, Pet. App. 251a, the Ninth Circuit upheld the denial of Wal-Mart's right to individual hearings. Pet. App. 145a-146a (Ikuta, J., dissenting). Wal-Mart is thus effectively barred from explaining to the jury why individual employees were treated in a certain way, thereby nullifying Wal-Mart's basic right to "to present every available defense." Philip Morris USA, 549 U.S. at 353; Teamsters, 431 U.S. at 360-62 (an employer-defendant cannot be deprived of the right to raise individualized defenses simply because plaintiffs claim a pattern or practice of discrimination).

As the petition correctly explains, short-circuiting the defense in the name of convenience violates both the Due Process Clause and Title VII itself. Pet. 28-30. The petition also correctly notes that, under the Rules Enabling Act, Rule 23 cannot alter the substance of a claim, only the procedure by which it is vindicated. Pet. 28-30; see Shady Grove Orthopedic Assocs., P.A., 130 S. Ct. at 1461 (Ginsburg, J., dissenting). Finally, the petition correctly argues that the statistical sampling method invoked in Hilao v. Estate of Marcos, 103 F.3d 767, 786-787 (9th Cir. 1996) (allowing "a probabilistic prediction (albeit an extremely accurate one) of how many of the total claims are invalid") is no substitute for a resolution of each claim on its individual merits. Pet. 32-33.

A rule that deprives defendants of the ability to present individual defenses—particularly coupled with the enormous settlement pressures that accompany class actions, see Part I, supra—will allow plaintiffs who sustained no damage at all to reap significant monetary rewards. "If a cohesive class can be created through such savvy crafting of the evidence, then there would seem to be little limit to class certification in our modern world of increasingly sophisticated aggregate proof. The law would run a considerable risk of unleashing the settlement-inducing capacity of class certification based simply upon the say-so of one side." Richard A. Nagareda, Class Certification in the Age of Aggregate Proof, 84 N.Y.U. L. REV. 97, 103 (2009).

It is no answer to assert—particularly in the absence of the rigorous commonality and superiority requirements imposed by Rule 23(b)(3)—that the injury is sustained not by the individual members of a class but by the "class as a whole." Courts have rightly voiced serious due process concerns about that conception of liability in lawsuits that press, at bottom, individualized claims. See, e.g., McLaughlin v. Am. Tobacco Co., 522 F.3d 215, 231 (2d Cir. 2008). ("[r]oughly estimating the gross damages to the class as a whole and only subsequently allowing for the processing of individual claims would inevitably alter defendants' substantive right to pay damages reflective of their actual liability" and thus offends due process); Broussard v. Meineke Disc. Muffler Shops, Inc., 155 F.3d 331, 344-45 (4th Cir. 1998) (condemning class action procedure in which defendant is "forced to defend against a fictional composite" or "a 'perfect plaintiff' pieced together for litigation"); In re Brooklyn Navy Yard Asbestos Litigation, 971 F.2d 831, 853 (2d Cir. 1992) ("[W]e must take care that each individual plaintiff's—and defendant's—cause not be lost in the shadow of a towering mass litigation."); Eisen v. Carlisle &

Jacquelin, 479 F.2d 1005, 1018 (2d Cir. 1973) (rejecting "fluid recovery" that would replace individual damages with relief for the "class as a whole"), rev'd on other grounds, 417 U.S. 156 (1974). But that is precisely what improper certification of a money damages action under Rule 23(b)(2) would permit. While the theoretical "class as a whole" might benefit from injunctive or declaratory relief, it should have no need for money damages.

This case presents an ideal opportunity for the Court to provide much-needed guidance on the extent to which the Due Process Clause establishes minimum requirements for class-action adjudication. Despite this Court's repeated warnings that class actions cannot be employed to override fundamental elements of due process, see Ortiz, 527 U.S. at 845-848; Amchem, 521 U.S. at 620; Phillips Petroleum Co. v. Shutts, 472 U.S. 797, 812 (1985), the extent to which those limits are respected in the lower courts varies widely. Compare, e.g., Wershba v. Apple Computer, Inc., 110 Cal. Rptr. 2d 145, 158 (Cal. Ct. App. 2001) (California courts "are not bound to follow the certification requirements of Rule 23") with Amchem, 521 U.S. at 626 n.20 (noting that the due process adequacy-of-representation requirement tends to merge with the typicality and commonality requirements of Rule 23). Disagreement on such a fundamental and practically significant constitutional question should not be tolerated. At a minimum, the Ninth Circuit should not be allowed to continue its open and notorious violation of the Rules Enabling Act by allowing class procedures to alter substantive rights. See Hilao, 103 F.3d at 786-787; Pet. App. 105a-110a.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted.

A. DOUGLAS MELAMED
Senior Vice President &
General Counsel
Intel Corporation
2200 Mission College
Blvd.
Santa Clara, CA 95054

ROY T. ENGLERT, JR.
Counsel of Record
MARK T. STANCIL
EVA A. TEMKIN
Robbins, Russell, Englert, Orseck, Untereiner & Sauber LLP
1801 K Street, N.W.
Suite 411
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 775-4500
renglert@robbinsrussell.com

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

September 2010

AMICUS
CURIAE
BRIEF

172

9

No. 10-277

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 2 4 2010
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

In the

Supreme Court of the United States

◆

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, et al.,

Respondents.

◆

On Petition for Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

◆

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF PACIFIC LEGAL FOUNDATION IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

◆

DEBORAH J. LA FETRA
TIMOTHY SANDEFUR
Counsel of Record
Pacific Legal Foundation
3900 Lennane Drive
Suite 200
Sacramento, California 95834
Telephone: (916) 419-7111
Facsimile: (916) 419-7747
E-mail: djl@pacificlegal.org
E-mail: tms@pacificlegal.org

Counsel for Amicus Curiae Pacific Legal Foundation

QUESTION PRESENTED

Does Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 authorize the certification of a class where the plaintiff alleges that the absence of an employment policy is itself a discriminatory policy that inflicts a "common injury" on the members of that class?

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

QUESTION PRESENTED i

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iv

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE 1

SUMMARY OF REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION 2

ARGUMENT 3

I. THE DECISION BELOW CONFLICTS WITH OTHER COURTS' APPLICATION OF FALCON'S "SUBJECTIVITY" DICTUM, GIVING THE GREEN LIGHT TO CASES SEEKING TO RESOLVE SOCIETAL GRIEVANCES 3

A. There Is Substantial Confusion Over the Meaning and Application of Falcon's "Subjectivity" Dictum 3

B. The Decision Below Allows Plaintiffs to Sue Over General Social Grievances Instead of Actual Cases or Controversies 9

II. THE DECISION BELOW CONFLICTS WITH DECISIONS DENYING CLASS CERTIFICATION FOR PLAINTIFFS ALLEGED TO HAVE SUFFERED A VARIETY OF INJURIES FROM A VARIETY OF CAUSES 13

TABLE OF CONTENTS—Continued

Page

III. RULE 23'S BALANCE OF PUBLIC POLICY CONCERNS IS UNDERMINED BY THE OVERLY EXPANSIVE CLASS CERTIFIED IN THIS CASE 17

CONCLUSION 20

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page

Cases

Abram v. UPS of Am., Inc.,
200 F.R.D. 424 (E.D. Wis. 2001) 16

Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor,
521 U.S. 591 (1997) 12

Ash v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 546 U.S. 454 (2006) 15

Bacon v. Honda of Am. Mfg., Inc.,
370 F.3d 565 (6th Cir. 2004) 13-15

Barber v. American Airlines,
No. 110092 (Ill. filed Mar. 18, 2010) 1

Broussard v. Meineke Discount Muffler Shops, Inc., 155 F.3d 331 (4th Cir. 1998) 18

Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682 (1979) 13

Castano v. American Tobacco Co.,
84 F.3d 734 (5th Cir. 1996) 17

Cooper v. Southern Co.,
390 F.3d 695 (11th Cir. 2004) 15

Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay,
437 U.S. 463 (1978) 17

Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank of Jackson, Miss. v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326 (1980) 19

Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.,
603 F.3d 571 (9th Cir. 2010) 2, 5, 10

Garcia v. Johanns,
444 F.3d 625 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 13-14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

Gen. Tel. Co. of the Sw. v. Falcon,
457 U.S. 147 (1982) 2-9, 12, 15

Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244 (2003) 6-7

Grosz v. Boeing Co., No. SACV-02-71-CJC,
2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25341
(C.D. Cal. Nov. 7, 2003), aff'd,
136 Fed. Appx. 960 (9th Cir. 2005) 10

Gutierrez v. Johnson & Johnson,
467 F. Supp. 2d 403 (D.N.J. 2006) 15-16

Harris v. Mexican Specialty Foods, Inc.,
564 F.3d 1301 (11th Cir. 2009) 1

Hartman v. Duffey,
19 F.3d 1459 (D.C. Cir. 1994) 9

In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Inc.,
51 F.3d 1293 (7th Cir. 1995) 19

In re Tobacco II Cases, 207 P.3d 20 (Cal. 2009) 1

Lott v. Westinghouse Savannah River Co., Inc.,
200 F.R.D. 539 (D.S.C. 2000) 16

Love v. Johanns,
439 F.3d 723 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 8-9

Mace v. Van Ru Credit Corp.,
109 F.3d 338 (7th Cir. 1997) 13

*Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner &
Smith, Inc.*, 259 F.3d 154 (3d Cir. 2001) 17

Philip Morris USA v. Williams,
549 U.S. 346 (2007) 4

Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006) 7-8

Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208 (1974) 9, 11

Skilling v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 2896 (2010) 4

Sperling v. Hoffman-La Roche, Inc., 924 F. Supp. 1346 (D.N.J. 1996) 16

Stastny v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 628 F.2d 267 (4th Cir. 1980) 15

Sw. Ref. Co., Inc. v. Bernal, 22 S.W.3d 425 (Tex. 2000) 18

Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 445 F.3d 311 (4th Cir. 2006) 8

Webb v. Merck & Co., Inc., 206 F.R.D. 399 (E.D. Pa. 2002) 16

Wright v. Circuit City Stores, Inc., 201 F.R.D. 526 (N.D. Ala. 2001) 16

Zachery v. Texaco Exploration & Prod., Inc., 185 F.R.D. 230 (W.D. Tex. 1999) 4

Federal Statute

42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k)(B)(i) 13

Page

Rules of Court

Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 . . . . 3, 8, 13-14, 16-17, 19

U.S. Sup. Ct. R. 37.2(a) 1

U.S. Sup. Ct. R. 37.6 1

Miscellaneous

Berry, Stephen, Ending Substance's Indenture to Procedure: The Imperative for Comprehensive Revision of the Class Damage Action, 80 Colum. L. Rev. 299 (1980) 17

Coffee, John C., Jr., Class Wars: The Dilemma of the Mass Tort Class Action, 95 Colum. L. Rev. 1343 (1995) 19

Green, Tristin K., Targeting Workplace Context: Title VII as a Tool for Institutional Reform, 72 Fordham L. Rev. 659 (2003) 10-11

Handler, Milton, The Shift from Substantive to Procedural Innovations in Antitrust Suits—The Twenty-Third Annual Antitrust Review, 71 Colum. L. Rev. 1 (1971) 18-19

Kirk, Sarah, Ninth Circuit Discrimination Case Could Change the Ground Rules for Everyone, 14 Tex. Rev. Law & Pol. 163 (2009) 12

La Fetra, Deborah J., Freedom, Responsibility, and Risk: Fundamental Principles Supporting Tort Reform, 36 Ind. L. Rev. 645 (2003) 2

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES—Continued

Page

La Fetra, Deborah J., A Moving Target: Property Owners' Duty to Prevent Criminal Acts on the Premises, 28 Whittier L. Rev. 409 (2006) 2

Levit, Nancy, Megacases, Diversity, and the Elusive Goal of Workplace Reform, 49 B.C. L. Rev 367 (2008) 11

Rabiej, John K., The Making of Class Action Rule 23: What Were We Thinking?, 24 Miss. C. L. Rev. 323 (2005) 18

Sandefur, Timothy, The Right to Earn a Living (2010) 2

INTEREST OF AMICUS CURIAE

Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 37.2(a), Pacific Legal Foundation (PLF) respectfully submits this brief amicus curiae in support of Petitioner.[1] PLF was founded more than 35 years ago and is widely recognized as the largest and most experienced nonprofit legal foundation of its kind. PLF engages in research and litigation over a broad spectrum of public interest issues at all levels of state and federal courts, representing the views of thousands of supporters nationwide who believe in limited government, individual rights, and free enterprise. PLF's Free Enterprise Project engages in litigation, including the submission of amicus briefs, in cases affecting America's economic vitality, and in particular in cases involving the abuses of civil rights law and class action procedures which harm businesses, and stifle entrepreneurialism and job creation. See, e.g., Barber v. American Airlines, No. 110092 (Ill. filed Mar. 18, 2010); In re Tobacco II Cases, 207 P.3d 20 (Cal. 2009); Harris v. Mexican Specialty Foods, Inc., 564 F.3d 1301 (11th Cir. 2009). PLF participated as amicus in this case before the Ninth Circuit.

---

[1] Pursuant to this Court's Rule 37.2(a), all parties have consented to the filing of this brief. Counsel of record for all parties received notice at least 10 days prior to the due date of the Amicus Curiae's intention to file this brief. Letters evidencing such consent have been filed with the Clerk of the Court.

Pursuant to Rule 37.6, Amicus Curiae affirms that no counsel for any party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than Amicus Curiae, its members, or its counsel made a monetary contribution to its preparation or submission.

In addition, PLF staff have published extensively on the effects of tort liability on the business community. See, e.g., Timothy Sandefur, The Right to Earn a Living 239-55 (2010); Deborah J. La Fetra, Freedom, Responsibility, and Risk: Fundamental Principles Supporting Tort Reform, 36 Ind. L. Rev. 645 (2003); Deborah J. La Fetra, A Moving Target: Property Owners' Duty to Prevent Criminal Acts on the Premises, 28 Whittier L. Rev. 409 (2006). PLF believes its public policy experience will assist this Court in considering the merits of this case.

SUMMARY OF REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

The decision below, in conflict with decisions in other circuits, and relying on an ambiguous sentence in a footnote of this Court's decision in Gen. Tel. Co. of the Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982), upheld class certification despite the fact that the class members alleged a wide variety of dissimilar injuries resulting from the absence of a common employment policy. The Ninth Circuit allowed this because it was "well established" that a corporation's decision not to have a single policy, but to allow local store managers to make hiring and promotion decisions autonomously, qualified as a single policy. Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571, 612 (9th Cir. 2010). Such a principle is not well established; indeed, it rests on ambiguous language in a single footnote which is so unclear as to have given rise to substantially different decisions in the courts of appeals and district courts.

The Fourth, Sixth, and D.C. Circuits have rejected this interpretation of the Falcon footnote, because the procedure allowed by the Ninth Circuit here would essentially allow class plaintiffs to evade Rule 23's commonality requirement by sweeping together a broad array of diverse injuries as a single injury. In context, Falcon does not appear to countenance such an approach, but this Court's review is necessary to clarify this point, and set forth the circumstances in which "excessive subjectivity" can qualify as a single injury for purposes of class certification. If upheld, the precedent established below would dramatically alter class action litigation, expose virtually every employer to unforseen—and unforeseeable—liability, increase the cost of business, and hamper innovation and job creation. The enormity of the class in this case is alone enough to warrant Supreme Court review, but the legal basis for that certification is so unprecedented and its consequences so extreme that certiorari is essential.

ARGUMENT

I

THE DECISION BELOW CONFLICTS WITH OTHER COURTS' APPLICATION OF FALCON'S "SUBJECTIVITY" DICTUM, GIVING THE GREEN LIGHT TO CASES SEEKING TO RESOLVE SOCIETAL GRIEVANCES

A. There Is Substantial Confusion Over the Meaning and Application of Falcon's "Subjectivity" Dictum

Wal-Mart's decentralized corporate structure leaves decisions regarding hiring and promotion to be made at the local level, by managers who are in the best position to know the strengths and character of their employees. Wal-Mart essentially has no single corporate employment policy, choosing to rely instead on the judgment of myriad autonomous managers all over the United States, rather than demanding adherence to a single authority or rulemaker. As a district court observed in similar circumstances, the class here consists "of a large number of plaintiffs spread across a number of geographically widespread facilities," and whose complaints refer to employment decisions that "are subject to local control." Zachery v. Texaco Exploration & Prod., Inc., 185 F.R.D. 230, 239 (W.D. Tex. 1999) (denying certification).

Yet by characterizing Wal-Mart's lack of any central policy as itself a central policy—a policy of "excessive subjectivity in personnel decisions"—the Ninth Circuit swept together a scattershot of completely different injuries and circumstances into one vaguely defined "common injury." This is analogous to a case in which a defendant is alleged to have committed the tort of conversion against one plaintiff, the tort of trespass against another, the tort of defamation against a third, and the crime of murder against a fourth, and in which all the plaintiffs attempt to describe themselves as victims of the defendant's single policy of "unfair conduct." Such a legal standard would be unconstitutionally vague, Skilling v. United States, 130 S. Ct. 2896, 2928 (2010), and would deprive the defendant of its due process right to defend itself in court. Philip Morris USA v. Williams, 549 U.S. 346, 353 (2007). Yet thanks to the Ninth Circuit's interpretation of an ambiguous footnote in Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15, the court below allowed something very similar: a gargantuan class consisting of countless different people complaining of countless different incidents are permitted to assert that their injuries are a common injury from an allegedly unitary policy of unfair treatment, and thereby qualify as a class. Dukes, 603 F.3d at 600-13.

Like virtually every federal decision in this contentious area of the law, the Ninth Circuit's conclusion rests heavily on one sentence in footnote 15 in Falcon. Lower courts have interpreted that footnote in different ways, creating substantial confusion over what standards apply to the certification of class actions in employment discrimination cases. Certiorari is warranted to clarify those standards and provide lower courts with guidance in determining when the commonality element is met in cases involving corporations that allow local managers broad discretion in making hiring and promotion decisions.

Falcon rejected the certification of a class in an employment discrimination case where the plaintiff who alleged that his employer failed to promote him because he was Mexican-American, wanted also to represent Mexican-American applicants for employment who had allegedly not been hired because of their race. This Court held that the fact that a plaintiff is a member of a minority group alleging one type of employment discrimination does not suffice to justify certifying a class consisting of plaintiffs alleging different types of employment discrimination. This is because there is a "wide gap" between, on one hand, the (alleged) fact that a plaintiff suffered discrimination by being denied a promotion, and, on the other hand, the conclusion that the plaintiff's injuries are of the same sort as those of purported class members who had never been hired. 457 U.S. at 157. To connect these two points required the plaintiff to prove, among other things, that the alleged discrimination "is reflected in [the defendant's] other employment practices . . . in the same way it is manifested in the promotion practices." Id. at 158. Regarding any such inference as "tenuous," this Court then commented in a footnote that if an employer "operated under a general policy of discrimination," evidence to that effect "conceivably could justify" class certification "if the discrimination manifested itself . . . in the same general fashion, such as through entirely subjective decisionmaking processes." Id. at 159 n.15. The decision below interpreted this language as allowing a class to demonstrate commonality by showing the existence of "subjective decisionmaking processes."

This sentence was non-binding dictum, and provided no explanation of what types of "decision making processes" can and cannot be grouped together as a single source of injury. Moreover, an earlier sentence in the same footnote indicates that the presence of subjectivity is only relevant if it is an aspect of a common policy that gives rise to common injuries; if subjectivity, for example, is a feature of "a biased test[]" which all members of the class are required to take. Id. The test would then be the common injury, of which subjectivity was the allegedly discriminatory feature.

This Court applied Falcon consistent with this narrow approach in Gratz v. Bollinger, 539 U.S. 244, 267 (2003). There, the Court considered whether a class maintained by a student applying for transfer to the University of Michigan could include students who were applying for admission as freshmen. Relying on Falcon's hypothetical "biased testing procedure to evaluate both applicants for employment and incumbent employees," the Court held that the class could encompass both types of admissions candidates because the transfer policy and the freshman admissions policy were fundamentally the same. Id. at 267 and 266 n.16.

Circuit courts have reached different conclusions in their attempts to apply the ambiguous language of the footnote in Falcon. In Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. & Corr., 435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006), women working at a correctional institution sought class certification to represent women who had suffered from what they called their employers' "general policy of discrimination," a designation covering alleged discrimination in promotions, denials of leave and overtime, undesirable assignments, and being replaced by men. Id. at 642. The Sixth Circuit reversed the certification, noting that if a class could be certified on the mere basis that an employer's general attitude was discriminatory, "every plaintiff seeking to certify a class in a Title VII action would be entitled to that certification." Id. at 644. The Reeb plaintiffs had tried to leverage Falcon in the same manner as the court below, arguing that "the Falcon case allows for a finding of commonality whenever a plaintiff asserts that an employer's decision-making with regard to all employees in the protected group manifests itself in the same general fashion." Id. at 644-45. But the Sixth Circuit rejected this reading of Falcon, holding that "this argument ignores the fact that the same general policy of discrimination can affect many different aspects of employment, such as hiring, firing, promoting, giving benefits, providing vacation time, or delegating work assignments." Id. at 645. Thus, "a general policy of discrimination is not sufficient to allow a court to find commonality or typicality." Id. at 645.

The Fourth Circuit has also taken a narrow view of the class certification permitted under the Falcon decision. In Thorn v. Jefferson-Pilot Life Ins. Co., 445 F.3d 311, 318 (4th Cir. 2006), the court held that "to protect . . . the right of the defendant to present facts or raise defenses that are particular to individual class members," judges should take care to ensure that members of a purported class have been injured in the same way by the same challenged policy. The purported class in that case consisted of 1.4 million insurance policy holders, id. at 314, who asserted that the insurance company discriminated against them on the basis of race. The court found that certification was improper because to determine whether the plaintiffs' claims were brought within the statute of limitations would "generally require individual examination of testimony from each particular plaintiff to determine what he knew and when he knew it." Id. at 320.

In Love v. Johanns, 439 F.3d 723 (D.C. Cir. 2006), the D.C. Circuit rejected class certification in a case in which a group of women farmers sued the United States Department of Agriculture for discriminating against them by denying them loans. They tried to group the various circumstances of their loan applications and denials as a single common source of injury for purposes of the commonality element in Rule 23, and asserted that this was permitted under Falcon. The court of appeals disagreed. The plaintiffs' allegations "differ[ed] widely, and their complaints of discrimination [were] interspersed with nondiscriminatory evidence and innocuous explanations." Id. at 729. Thus while the plaintiffs had standing "to bring individual suits," the circumstances of their loan applications and denials differed too much for the trial court to "infer the existence of a 'common policy of discrimination.' The bald allegation that the declarants and non-declarants alike are unified by a 'common policy' of gender discrimination is insufficient to show the District Court abused its discretion under . . . Falcon." Id. at 729. Likewise, in Hartman v. Duffey, 19 F.3d 1459, 1472 (D.C. Cir. 1994), the court of appeals concluded that Falcon requires plaintiffs to "make a significant showing to permit the court to infer that members of the class suffered from a common policy of discrimination that pervaded all of the employer's challenged employment decisions." By contrast, the Ninth Circuit in this case relied on Falcon to encompass all these disparate contentions into a single "common" claim.

B. The Decision Below Allows Plaintiffs to Sue Over General Social Grievances Instead of Actual Cases or Controversies

Jurisdictional rules like standing and the case-or-controversy requirement exist to prevent the exploitation of judicial authority by parties asserting abstract political or social grievances that are more properly addressed to the Legislature. Schlesinger v. Reservists Comm. to Stop the War, 418 U.S. 208, 218-19 (1974). But the rationale adopted by the Ninth Circuit below expands the scope of potential class action lawsuits in a way that allows plaintiffs to sue businesses for the abstract "unfairness" of their corporate structures. By allowing a class with completely different injuries under a variety of diverse circumstances to cast their claims as the result of a common "excessive subjectivity" injury, the Ninth Circuit's decision empowers plaintiffs to challenge the undesigned consequences of millions of independent transactions as if those outcomes were a single discriminatory policy. See Tristin K. Green, Targeting Workplace Context: Title VII as a Tool for Institutional Reform, 72 Fordham L. Rev. 659, 688 (2003) (lawsuits like this case "seek . . . organizational change" to eliminate "subtle, often unconscious bias in individuals").

As one district court observed, "'[e]xcessive subjectivity' . . . is a criticism, not an actual company-wide policy or practice. Without some evidence of the class-wide use of common decisional criteria or practices, Plaintiffs have failed to show the requisite commonality." Grosz v. Boeing Co., No. SACV-02-71-CJC, 2003 U.S. Dist. LEXIS 25341, at *16-*17 (C.D. Cal. Nov. 7, 2003), aff'd, 136 Fed. Appx. 960 (9th Cir. 2005) (emphasis added, citation omitted). The class action procedure does not exist to vindicate generalized social grievances, or to allow plaintiffs to sue over "a kaleidoscope" of perceived unfair practices. Dukes, 603 F.3d at 652 (Kozinski, C.J., dissenting).

As Professor Green explains, supra, at 710-11, the "excessive subjectivity" rationale is intended to "alter the specific organizational structures or institutional practices that may continue to enable ongoing discrimination," rather than to redress a concrete and particular injury; this rationale "does not depend, in other words, on influencing individual decision makers." Although Green concedes that "modern-day organizations do not subscribe to decentralized, subjective decision-making systems to discriminate" intentionally, she contends that decentralized procedures result in disparate outcomes "because workers are influenced more subtly on a day-to-day basis by forms of cognitive and motivational bias . . . . Subjectivity in decision making in the modern workplace must be seen as part of a larger problem of organizational influence on decisions made by individuals and groups." These unconscious biases "need[] to be understood as a contextual problem that depends on cultural and structural variables that may vary from institution to institution." The "complexity" of this "problem of institutionally enabled discrimination" demands "an equally complex, contextual remedial process." Id. at 713-14. Whatever merit these sociological arguments may have, the very complexity and abstraction involved indicates that these concerns do not constitute "a particular injury caused by the action challenged as unlawful." Schlesinger, 418 U.S. at 221.

The theory applied by the Ninth Circuit in this case—which "is inevitably in tension with the class requirements of commonality and predominance"—would "permit[] sweeping challenges to company-wide practices and make[] class lawsuits more likely." Nancy Levit, Megacases, Diversity, and the Elusive Goal of Workplace Reform, 49 B.C. L. Rev 367, 377 (2008). Plaintiffs could sue businesses for widely different, ill-defined harms, all grouped together (strategically, but without any principled likeness) as a single common source of injury.

The purpose of class action litigation is to combine identical or nearly identical claims; not to ignore the differences between diverse claims. See Amchem Products, Inc. v. Windsor, 521 U.S. 591, 609 (1997) (denying certification where purported class members "were exposed to different asbestos-containing products, in different ways, over different periods, and for different amounts of time; some suffered no physical injury, others suffered disabling or deadly diseases"). The court below, however, reads the Falcon footnote as allowing precisely that: any number of different decisionmakers, overseeing an indefinite array of positions in myriad different geographical locales, are treated as a single employment policy and thus as a "common" source of injury for the members of this exceptionally large class. Such an interpretation of Falcon's footnote 15 is not only implausible, but abusive: it allows courts to find commonality precisely in the fact that there is no commonality.

Such a procedure is too vague to satisfy the requirements of due process. In cases relying on the "excessive subjectivity" argument, trial lawyers generally "argue the case to a jury using broad generalities in order to get some sweeping condemnation of the 'atmosphere' of the employer," or asserting that the business had a "discriminatory culture. It is virtually impossible to defend against abstract claims of that kind." Sarah Kirk, Ninth Circuit Discrimination Case Could Change the Ground Rules for Everyone, 14 Tex. Rev. Law & Pol. 163, 166 (2009).

II

THE DECISION BELOW CONFLICTS WITH DECISIONS DENYING CLASS CERTIFICATION FOR PLAINTIFFS ALLEGED TO HAVE SUFFERED A VARIETY OF INJURIES FROM A VARIETY OF CAUSES

The purpose of class action lawsuits is to provide a mechanism whereby a large group of people who have suffered the same injury or similar injuries on account of the defendant's conduct to pool their right of recovery and sue, in circumstances where each person's injury is too small to make it feasible for a particular individual to sue. See Califano v. Yamasaki, 442 U.S. 682, 701 (1979). The prototypical case is one in which a flawed product or fraudulent service is used by many people, inflicting the same, small injury on each of them. The victims would normally not invest the time and money needed to bring a lawsuit. But the class action device enables them to obtain representation together and recover for their common injuries. See Mace v. Van Ru Credit Corp., 109 F.3d 338, 344 (7th Cir. 1997).

Title VII does allow a plaintiff who "demonstrate[s] to the court that the elements of a [defendant's] decisionmaking process are not capable of separation for analysis" to characterize "decisionmaking process . . . as one employment practice." 42 U.S.C. § 2000e-2(k)(B)(i). But as the D.C. Circuit pointed out in Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625, 633 n.10 (D.C. Cir. 2006), this statute sets forth the elements for a cause of action, and does not alter Rule 23's "commonality" requirement. Accord, Bacon v. Honda of Am. Mfg., Inc., 370 F.3d 565, 572 (6th Cir.

2004). The two must not be conflated. Rule 23 still requires a plaintiff to "show that the putative class members have something in common—they all suffered an adverse effect from the same facially neutral policy—and their showing must be 'significant.'" Garcia, 444 F.3d at 633 n.10 (emphasis added, citations omitted).

The Garcia court observed that it was "particularly difficult" to certify a class that alleges that it was harmed by "multiple decisionmakers with significant local autonomy." Id. at 632. Other Circuit Courts of Appeals have likewise refused to certify classes in which the defendant decisionmakers enjoyed broad autonomy, were geographically separated, and where the hiring and promotion decisions at issue included the assessment of many different factors. In Bacon, 370 F.3d at 571, the Sixth Circuit found no abuse of discretion in denying certification of a class of 800 past and present African-American employees alleging discrimination in promotions at four separate facilities of defendant over a twenty-year period. The court noted, > Plaintiffs failed to show how hourly wage earners and salaried employees would have the same interests, especially in terms of promotion procedures in which at least some of the nonexempt employees would be competing to join the ranks of exempt management. They also did not demonstrate how differing promotion criteria for jobs as diverse as welding, accounting, and engine-building could discriminate against each African-American employee.

Id. Similarly, in Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695, 714-15 (11th Cir. 2004), overruled in part on other grounds, Ash v. Tyson Foods, Inc., 546 U.S. 454, 458 (2006), the Eleventh Circuit found no abuse of discretion in denying class certification where "the compensation and promotion decisions affecting each of the named plaintiffs were made by individual managers in disparate locations, based on the individual plaintiffs' characteristics, including their educational backgrounds, experiences, work achievements, and performance in interviews, among other factors." See also Stastny v. S. Bell Tel. & Tel. Co., 628 F.2d 267, 278-79 & nn.17, 19 (4th Cir. 1980) (class certification denied to employees working in twenty-four different facilities throughout the state, with a "general pattern of local autonomy").

In Gutierrez v. Johnson & Johnson, 467 F. Supp. 2d 403 (D.N.J. 2006), the district court refused to certify a large class of employees in an employment discrimination case for similar reasons. Like the plaintiffs in this case, the plaintiffs in Gutierrez

> [did] not challenge an express policy of [the corporate defendant]. Nor do they dispute that the employment policies and practices varied widely from operating company to company. Rather, Plaintiffs' theory of commonality is that Johnson & Johnson's policy of delegating discretion to the operating companies to implement general employment guidelines resulted in excessively subjective employment practices.

Id. at 409. But this was insufficient to satisfy the commonality requirement because, under Falcon, "Plaintiffs must identify a specific policy or practice of discrimination that was excessively subjective." Id. at 410.

Other district courts have also refused to certify classes in circumstances like this, concluding that "a decision by a company to give managers the discretion to make employment decisions, and the subsequent exercise of that discretion by some managers in a discriminatory manner, is not tantamount to a decision by a company to pursue a systematic, companywide policy of intentional discrimination." Sperling v. Hoffman-La Roche, Inc., 924 F. Supp. 1346, 1363 (D.N.J. 1996); see also Webb v. Merck & Co., Inc., 206 F.R.D. 399 (E.D. Pa. 2002); Wright v. Circuit City Stores, Inc., 201 F.R.D. 526, 541 (N.D. Ala. 2001) ("The purported class is comprised of a large group of diverse and differently situated employees whose highly individualized claims of discrimination do not lend themselves to class-wide proof."); Lott v. Westinghouse Savannah River Co., Inc., 200 F.R.D. 539, 552-53 (D.S.C. 2000) ("the true nature of the suit is a consolidation of 99 separate accounts of individualized disparate treatment"); Abram v. UPS of Am., Inc., 200 F.R.D. 424, 430 (E.D. Wis. 2001) ("The decision to permit some consideration of subjective factors is not, in and of itself, a discriminatory practice that provides the unifying thread necessary for 'commonality' to exist.").

Class certification in this case conflicts with the decisions cited above because it allows Plaintiffs to satisfy the commonality requirement of Rule 23 by alleging that the employer's lack of a general policy is a kind of discriminatory policy—that is, to prove commonality by the very fact that they lack commonality. By christening their grab-bag of diverse alleged harms as a common consequence of a single policy, the Plaintiffs are able to essentially sue Wal-Mart for having an "unfair" corporate structure, skimming over the manifold differences between each incident of alleged discrimination.

III

RULE 23'S BALANCE OF PUBLIC POLICY CONCERNS IS UNDERMINED BY THE OVERLY EXPANSIVE CLASS CERTIFIED IN THIS CASE

The class certification decision below calls for this Court's review now, rather than later, because in class action lawsuits the certification decision often qualifies as a de facto guilty verdict. Particularly in cases involving exceptionally large classes, defendants cannot afford the risk of an award of damages, and are essentially forced to settle the case to survive. See Coopers & Lybrand v. Livesay, 437 U.S. 463, 476 (1978) ("Certification of a large class may so increase the defendant's potential damages liability and litigation costs that he may find it economically prudent to settle and to abandon a meritorious defense."); Newton v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc., 259 F.3d 154, 165 (3d Cir. 2001) ("[A]n adverse certification decision will likely have a dispositive impact on the course and outcome of the litigation."); Castano v. American Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 746 (5th Cir. 1996) ("In addition to skewing trial outcomes, class certification creates insurmountable pressure on defendants to settle."). See also Stephen Berry, Ending Substance's Indenture to Procedure: The Imperative for Comprehensive Revision of the Class Damage Action, 80 Colum. L. Rev. 299, 300-01 (1980) ("The enormous potential damage exposure that flows from a certification decision often pressures defense counsel into early settlements regardless of their perception of the merits of the case."); John K. Rabiej, The Making of Class Action Rule 23: What Were We Thinking?, 24 Miss. C. L. Rev. 323, 354 (2005) ("Even though the defendant would likely prevail if the class action went to trial, defendants often [are] not willing to accept the small risk of defeat, which might ruin their companies.").

Armed with the enormous advantage of class status, a plaintiff need not prove a case or even provide any evidence of duty, breach, causation, or damages before obtaining a windfall settlement from a business defendant that cannot afford the risk of offering even meritorious defenses and incurring the expense of litigation in addition to damages. As the Fourth Circuit observed, class treatment can hide the weaknesses in the claims of individual plaintiffs because the plaintiffs collectively are "able to litigate not on behalf of themselves but on behalf of a 'perfect plaintiff' pieced together for litigation." Broussard v. Meineke Discount Muffler Shops, Inc., 155 F.3d 331, 344 (4th Cir. 1998). Moreover, "[i]f claims are not subject to some level of individual attention, defendants are more likely to be held liable to claimants to whom they caused no harm." Sw. Ref. Co., Inc. v. Bernal, 22 S.W.3d 425, 438 (Tex. 2000).

This abuse weakens the rule of law and drives up the costs of living for consumers. "Any device which is workable only because it utilizes the threat of unmanageable and expensive litigation to compel settlement is not a rule of procedure—it is a form of legalized blackmail." Milton Handler, The Shift from Substantive to Procedural Innovations in Antitrust Suits—The Twenty-Third Annual Antitrust Review, 71 Colum. L. Rev. 1, 9 (1971). The justice system—including class action procedures—was created to allow injured parties an opportunity for redress, not to empower profiteering plaintiffs' attorneys to enrich themselves. Deposit Guar. Nat'l Bank of Jackson, Miss. v. Roper, 445 U.S. 326, 339 (1980) ("That there is a potential for misuse of the class-action mechanism is obvious. Its benefits to class members are often nominal and symbolic, with persons other than class members becoming the chief beneficiaries.").

In certifying the class here, the Ninth Circuit gave in to "well-nigh irresistible pressure to bend the normal rules." In re Rhone-Poulenc Rorer Inc., 51 F.3d 1293, 1304 (7th Cir. 1995). Once bent, legal rules tend to stay bent, and legal rationalizations tailor-made for one context will inevitably be cited and, to a considerable extent, followed in other cases as well. John C. Coffee, Jr., Class Wars: The Dilemma of the Mass Tort Class Action, 95 Colum. L. Rev. 1343, 1462-63 (1995). This case should be reviewed now, before the certification order coerces Wal-Mart into a settlement that deprives this Court of the opportunity to address the important issues of Rule 23's commonality requirement.

◆

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

DATED: September, 2010.

Respectfully submitted,

DEBORAH J. LA FETRA
TIMOTHY SANDEFUR
Counsel of Record
Pacific Legal Foundation
3900 Lennane Drive,
Suite 200
Sacramento, California 95834
Telephone: (916) 419-7111
Facsimile: (916) 419-7747
E-mail: djl@pacificlegal.org
E-mail: tms@pacificlegal.org

Counsel for Amicus Curiae Pacific Legal Foundation

AMICUS
CURIAE
BRIEF

172

(7)

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
SEP 24 2010
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. 10-277

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Petitioner,
v.
BETTY DUKES, et al.,
Respondents.

On Petition for a Writ of Certiorari to the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF RETAIL LITIGATION CENTER, INC. AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER WAL-MART STORES, INC.

LISA S. BLATT
ARNOLD & PORTER LLP
555 Twelfth Street, N.W.
Washington, DC 20004
(202) 942-5842

W. STEPHEN CANNON
Counsel of Record
SETH D. GREENSTEIN
EVAN P. SCHULTZ
CONSTANTINE CANNON LLP
1301 K Street, N.W.
Suite 1050 East
Washington, DC 20005
(202) 204-3500
scannon@constantinecannon.com

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

September 24, 2010

WILSON-EPES PRINTING CO., INC. – (202) 789-0096 – WASHINGTON, D. C. 20002

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

STATEMENT OF INTEREST AND INTRODUCTION 1

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION ... 4

- I. THE NINTH CIRCUIT FAILED TO REQUIRE SIGNIFICANT PROOF OF A GENERAL POLICY OF DISCRIMINATION BEFORE CLASS CERTIFICATION, AS REQUIRED BY FALCON....... 4
- II. "SIGNIFICANT PROOF" IS REQUIRED WHERE EMPLOYERS USE SUBJECTIVE JUDGMENTS IN MAKING EMPLOYMENT DECISIONS.................. 7
- III. THE NINTH CIRCUIT DECISION CONFLICTS WITH MANY CIRCUITS THAT HAVE EMBRACED THE "SIGNIFICANT PROOF" STANDARD 9

CONCLUSION 12

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

FEDERAL CASES

Page

Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571 (9th Cir. 2010) passim
Engquist v. Or. Dep't of Agric., 53 U.S. 591 (2008) 8
Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625, 631-32 (D.C. Cir. 2006) 9
Gen. Tel. Co. of the Sw. v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982) passim
Goodman v. Lukens Steel Co., 777 F.2d 113 (3d Cir. 1985) 9
Griffin v. Dugger, 823 F.2d 1476 (11th Cir. 1987) 10
Holsey v. Armour & Co., 743 F.2d 199 (4th Cir. 1984) 10
Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. and Corr., 435 F.3d 639 (6th Cir. 2006) 10
Vuyanich v. Republic Nat'l Bank of Dallas, 723 F.2d 1195 (5th Cir. 1984) 10
Watson v. Fort Worth Bank and Trust, 487 U.S. 977 (1988) 8

FEDERAL STATUTES

42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. 3

FEDERAL RULES

Sup. Ct. R. 10 11
Sup. Ct. R. 37.2(a) 1
Sup. Ct. R. 37.6 1
Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 3, 7

STATEMENT OF INTEREST AND INTRODUCTION[1]

The Retail Litigation Center, Inc. ("RLC") is a public policy organization that identifies and engages in legal proceedings which affect the retail industry. The RLC, whose members include some of the country's largest retailers, was formed to provide courts with retail industry perspectives on significant legal issues, and highlight the potential industry-wide consequences of legal principles that may be determined in pending cases.

RLC's members employ many thousands of persons in several states, multiple regions, and myriad stores across the nation. They endeavor to honor and abide by the laws that govern their activities, including laws that prohibit discrimination on the basis of gender and other protected grounds. They have and enforce policies forbidding discrimination. And they take pride in the talented and diverse workforces they employ.

Nonetheless, RLC's members can find themselves vulnerable to unjustified class action litigation that can have debilitating effects on their businesses and reputations. The large size and national scope of many retailers make them attractive targets to aggregated suits, whatever the strength of a given individual claim. The Ninth Circuit's misguided and expansive interpretation of the class action rules paves the way for enterprising plaintiffs and their counsel to seek and obtain certification of potentially significant class sizes with little evidence to establish a discriminatory practice by the employer. Once certified, a class can exert tremendous and unjustifiable leverage on the retailers to settle, with the resulting reputational harm. RLC's members cannot afford to pay exorbitant settlements for class actions that should not be certified in the first place. Nor should they have to

---

[1] Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 37.2(a), amicus curiae states that the parties received timely notice of the intent to file this brief, and that the parties consented to its filing. Pursuant to Rule 37.6, amicus curiae further states that no counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part, and no counsel or party made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation or submission of this brief. No person other than amicus curiae, its members, or their counsel made such a monetary contribution.

The risk that RLC's members will suffer such harm becomes markedly higher if this Court does not correct the decision below. Many retail companies base employment decisions on subjective, as well as objective, measures that help them to identify workers whose creativity, diligence, and other intangible qualities may not show up in standardized evaluation methods. Similarly, many retail companies delegate part of their promotion and other employment decisions to on-site managers who are closest to workers, and so are also best able to identify employees whose advancement will most help the company. This Court's decisions recognize that those employment practices are entirely appropriate. RLC's members are therefore troubled by the Ninth Circuit's unprecedented certification of a class of over one million employees based on allegations that the use of subjective criteria in employment may mask discrimination in individual cases.

Specifically, the Ninth Circuit crucially erred in disregarding the standard that this Court established in General Telephone Company of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147 (1982), for certifying classes in cases alleging violations of Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq. Under Falcon, the fact that one or more employees sharing a common protected trait allege discrimination does not justify class certification under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23. A plaintiff must provide "[s]ignificant proof that an employer operated under a general policy of discrimination." The Ninth Circuit disregarded that instruction, finding instead that "[p]laintiffs here need not meet" the "significant proof" standard. Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 603 F.3d 571, 595 (9th Cir. 2010). Instead, the Ninth Circuit affirmed the district court's superficial review of the plaintiffs' thin evidence. In so doing, the Ninth Circuit allowed a handful of plaintiffs to claim that allegations of isolated discrimination in a fraction of Wal-Mart's stores entitled them to represent roughly a million women who work or once worked at every Wal-Mart store in the country, in a wide range of positions, and at all levels of salary. RLC members are especially concerned that the Ninth Circuit ignored Falcon's instruction on class actions, because this Court directed its language at precisely the sort of situation at issue in this litigation, in which an employer uses subjective standards as part of its promotion system.

Finally, with this decision, the Ninth Circuit has turned its back on the "significant proof" standard that other circuits have embraced, and therefore is in direct conflict with other circuit courts. This conflict concerns RLC's members because it opens the door for plaintiffs to bring similarly massive class actions throughout the populous Ninth Circuit against large national retailers, even where there is no "significant proof" of common elements between class members and those who claim to serve as their representatives.

Falcon warned that "[i]f one allegation of specific discriminatory treatment were sufficient to support an across-the-board attack, every Title VII case would be a potential companywide class action." 457 U.S. at 159. This case proves that point. Before the Ninth Circuit's decision permits massive class actions to wreak havoc on retailers, this Court should grant Wal-Mart's petition for certiorari and reverse the decision below.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

I. THE NINTH CIRCUIT FAILED TO REQUIRE SIGNIFICANT PROOF OF A GENERAL POLICY OF DISCRIMINATION BEFORE CLASS CERTIFICATION, AS REQUIRED BY FALCON.

Falcon forecloses class certification in this case. Falcon held that a plaintiff could not act as a class representative for a wide-ranging "across-the-board" class action consisting of all Mexican-American persons who worked for the employer, or who had applied to work for the employer. 457 U.S. at 160-161. The Court explained that certification conflicted with the conceptually "wide gap" between the individual's claim of discrimination and a class that shares the same protected trait. Id. at 157. "[T]o bridge that gap," the Court held, the class representative must make a "specific presentation identifying the questions of law or fact" that the putative class representative has in common with the putative class. Id. at 158.

Falcon further concluded that a higher showing was necessary if the plaintiff asserts that the employer used "subjective decision-making processes." Id. at 159 n.15. In such situations, certification was conceivable only if there is "[s]ignificant proof that an employer operated under a general policy of discrimination." Id. That heightened standard applies because "Title VII prohibits discriminatory employment practices, not an abstract policy of discrimination." Id. (emphasis in original). It follows that "[t]he mere fact that an aggrieved private plaintiff is a member of an identifiable class of persons of the same race or national origin is insufficient to establish his standing to litigate on their behalf." Id.

As Judge Ikuta's dissent below points out, Falcon had no occasion to define with precision the "significant proof" required for class certification in these circumstances. Dukes, 603 F.3d at 632 (IKUTA, J., dissenting). Nonetheless, Falcon forecloses the Ninth Circuit's expansive and unprecedented certification in this case. Falcon requires courts to perform a "rigorous analysis" and "evaluate carefully" a plaintiff's claim that he is an appropriate class representative, and the decision further instructs that "it may be necessary for the court to probe behind the pleadings." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 160-161. As Judge Ikuta stated, Falcon at the very least makes clear that "[e]vidence of discrete instances of discrimination are insufficient to sustain an inference of an employer's general policy and do not rise to the level of 'significant proof.'" Dukes, 603 F.3d at 632 (IKUTA, J., dissenting).

Rather than conscientiously apply this standard, the Ninth Circuit disregarded it. The majority below held that a requirement of "significant proof" "is an unusually high standard that Plaintiffs here need not meet." Dukes, 603 F.3d at 595. The majority offered up a litany of reasons to ignore this Court's instructions: the standard is allegedly merely dicta; it is limited to the "distinct legal theories of recovery" that the plaintiff in Falcon itself alleged; and it is only "a demonstrative example." Id. at 595-596. These do not persuade, given that Falcon's "significant proof" standard is the Supreme Court's only discussion of the standard for class actions in Title VII cases, especially when plaintiffs allege excessive subjectivity in making employment decisions. Even the majority admits that it may not "shrug[] off" statements of this Court "because they were not a holding." Dukes, 603 F.3d at 595 n.15 (internal punctuation and citation omitted).

More important, aside from the fact that they worked for Wal-Mart, the only commonality that could justify a class here between the seven class representatives and the over one million class members is their sex. Certification here thus makes a mockery of the Court's admonishment, mentioned above, that the fact a putative class representative and members of the putative class are "persons of the same race or national origin is insufficient to establish his standing to litigate on their behalf." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 159 n.15.

Perhaps because it understood the significance of this Court's instruction in Falcon, the majority at one point confusingly claimed that the "[p]laintiffs here have introduced 'significant proof.'" Id. at 597 (emphasis added). But they have not. As Judge Ikuta's dissent points out, the plaintiffs' evidence is deeply flawed. The purported class representatives offer disturbingly few affidavits for the size of the class they purport to represent, and their experts' findings are superficial. Dukes, 603 F.3d at 634-642 (IKUTA, J., dissenting). For example, one of the plaintiffs' experts claimed to have found a trend of discrimination at Wal-Mart's stores, even though the expert failed to analyze data at the level of each store, instead looking to more generalized data that encompassed whole regions of Wal-Mart's structure. Id. at 636. The district court's failings were equally serious. As Judge Ikuta convincingly explained, the district court accepted the plaintiffs' evidence without conducting a sufficiently close independent examination, as required by Falcon. The district court also inexplicably barred Wal-Mart from challenging the plaintiffs' evidence, improperly claiming that Wal-Mart's examination concerned questions related to the merits of the case. Ibid. That is hardly the "rigorous analysis" required by Falcon.[illegible]

II. "SIGNIFICANT PROOF" IS REQUIRED WHERE EMPLOYERS USE SUBJECTIVE JUDGMENTS IN MAKING EMPLOYMENT DECISIONS.

The Ninth Circuit's refusal to apply Falcon's "significant proof" standard is especially egregious because the plaintiffs' claims in this case involve precisely the sort of subjective decision-making that Falcon makes clear requires a heightened showing. As discussed above, the "significant proof" standard applies where the plaintiff claims that the employer used "subjective decisionmaking processes." Falcon, 457 at 159 n.15. That is unquestionably the situation

---

[illegible] Amicus also fears that by disregarding the "significant proof" standard in the Title VII context, as occurred here, the Ninth Circuit may be setting a precedent that could spill over to other areas of law. If that were to occur, then plaintiffs' lawyers would have even more opportunities to force the aggregation of huge classes based on the claims of just a few individuals, even where they could not satisfy the commonality and typicality tests that Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23 require.

here. The majority below acknowledged "the absence of a specific discriminatory policy promulgated by Wal-Mart." Dukes, 603 F.3d at 603. That should have prompted the majority to apply Falcon's heightened standard, applicable to claims alleging excessively subjective employment practices, to hold that class certification was plainly improper.

A "significant proof" test that applies to cases of subjective hiring is particularly apt in light of the Court's later confirmation that "an employer's policy of leaving promotion decisions to the unchecked discretion of lower level supervisors should itself raise no inference of discriminatory conduct." Watson v. Fort Worth Bank and Trust, 487 U.S. 977, 990 (1988). Using subjective criteria is a perfectly legitimate, and effective, means of making employment decisions. "[E]mployment decisions are quite often subjective and individualized, resting on a wide array of factors that are difficult to articulate and quantify." Engquist v. Or. Dep't of Agric., 553 U.S. 591, 604 (2008). But instead of accepting the legitimacy of subjective hiring procedures, the Ninth Circuit disparaged them. The majority relied on the findings of one of the plaintiffs' experts who claimed that "substantial decisionmaker discretion tends to allow people to seek out and retain stereotyping-confirming information and ignore or minimize information that defies stereotypes." Dukes, 603 F.3d at 601. In casting aspersions on subjective decision-making in this manner, the majority disregarded this Court's instructions in Falcon, Watson, and Engquist.

In short, this Court has made clear that subjective decision-making is valid, and that class actions alleging discrimination on that basis must meet a high threshold of "significant proof." But the majority below went in the opposite direction by questioning the legitimacy of subjective decision-making and by refusing to apply the appropriate heightened standard. Because such a decision threatens to turn every subjective employment decision into a massive class action, this Court should grant review.

III. THE NINTH CIRCUIT DECISION CONFLICTS WITH MANY CIRCUITS THAT HAVE EMBRACED THE "SIGNIFICANT PROOF" STANDARD.

By refusing to follow the "significant proof" standard, the Ninth Circuit has glaringly split with other circuits. As is discussed above, the Ninth Circuit declined to rigorously apply the "significant proof" test to this case, or to facts that vary at all from what that this Court discussed in Falcon. Other circuits have not given this Court's statement so miserly an interpretation, and have used it to defeat class certification. Those courts' decisions include:

- D.C. Circuit: Garcia v. Johanns, 444 F.3d 625, 631-632 (D.C. Cir. 2006) ("Following Falcon, we have required a plaintiff seeking to certify a disparate treatment class under Title VII to make a significant showing to permit the court to infer that members of the class suffered from a common policy of discrimination that pervaded all of the employer's challenged employment decisions." (internal quotation marks omitted)).
- Third Circuit: Goodman v. Lukens Steel Co., 777 F.2d 113, 124 (3d Cir. 1985) ("The findings of the district court, which rejected some of the plaintiffs' claims, belie the existence of a 'general policy' of discrimination and plaintiffs did not produce 'significant proof' of such a scheme.").

- Fourth Circuit: Holsey v. Armour & Co., 743 F.2d 199, 216 (4th Cir. 1984) ("[W]e conclude that the significant proof for . . . class treatment required by Falcon is lacking in this case, and thus the plaintiffs cannot adequately represent the outside applicants for sales and supervisory positions.").
- Fifth Circuit: Vuyanich v. Republic Nat'l Bank of Dallas, 723 F.2d 1195, 1200 (5th Cir. 1984) ("Footnote fifteen of Falcon observed that if significant proof of a general policy of discrimination was present, it would justify an across-the-board class action. Such proof was not present here.").
- Sixth Circuit: Reeb v. Ohio Dep't of Rehab. and Corr., 435 F.3d 639, 644 (6th Cir. 2006) ("[T]he Supreme Court's decision in [Falcon] requires plaintiffs requesting class certification in a case raising generalized Title VII discrimination claims to allege 'significant proof'") (some internal punctuation omitted).
- Eleventh Circuit: Griffin v. Dugger, 823 F.2d 1476, 1490 (11th Cir. 1987) (requiring "Significant proof that an employer makes both discriminatory hiring and promotion decisions using an entirely subjective decisionmaking process for each employment practice [which] is a manifestation of a general policy of discrimination.").

While circuit splits generally create risks for potential defendants, this one is particularly dangerous. If it stands uncorrected, the decision below will undoubtedly turn the Ninth Circuit into a favored forum for plaintiffs. The Ninth Circuit should not serve as a platform for massive class action suits against companies with operations across the country that do not meet the standards for certification.

*   *   *   *   *

Certiorari review is appropriate when an opinion disregards this Court's decisions, and also when an opinion conflicts with the decisions of other circuit courts. See Supreme Court Rule 10. The opinion below contains both of these flaws. Under it, retailers with nationwide operations face an unwarranted risk of massive class-actions arising in Ninth Circuit courts, even where there is no "significant proof" of a general policy of discrimination. This Court should reaffirm Falcon.

CONCLUSION

The petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

LISA S. BLATT
ARNOLD & PORTER LLP
555 Twelfth Street, N.W.
Washington, DC 20004
(202) 942-5842

W. STEPHEN CANNON
Counsel of Record
SETH D. GREENSTEIN
EVAN P. SCHULTZ
CONSTANTINE CANNON LLP
1301 K Street, N.W.
Suite 1050 East
Washington, DC 20005
(202) 204-3500
scannon@constantinecannon.com

Counsel for Amicus Curiae

September 24, 2010

AMICUS CURIAE BRIEF

172

⑥

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED

SEP 2 4 2010

No. 10-277

IN THE
Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Petitioner,
v.

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, KAREN WILLIAMSON, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, and CLEO PAGE, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,
Respondents.

On Petition for Writ of Certiorari
To the United States Court of Appeals
For the Ninth Circuit

BRIEF OF WASHINGTON LEGAL FOUNDATION AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

Daniel J. Popeo
Richard A. Samp
(Counsel of Record)
Washington Legal Found.
2009 Mass. Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 588-0302
rsamp@wlf.org

Jennifer L. Brown
Rachael M. Weinfeld
Shook, Hardy & Bacon L.L.P
333 Bush Street, Suite 600
San Francisco, CA 94104
(415) 544-1900
jbrown@shb.com

Date: September 24, 2010

WILSON-EPES PRINTING CO., INC. – (202) 789-0096 – WASHINGTON, D.C. 20002

QUESTION PRESENTED

More than a decade ago, this Court set forth a uniform standard for determining the reliability and admissibility of expert testimony in federal courts in Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579 (1993). In certifying the largest employment class action in history, the district court, as affirmed by the Ninth Circuit, rejected application of the standard to plaintiff's expert offered in support of class certification. Amicus curiae addresses the following narrow question:

Whether this Court's mandate to rigorously analyze the requirements of Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 before certifying a class requires district courts to apply Daubert and ensure the reliability of expert testimony offered at the class certification stage.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES iv

INTERESTS OF AMICUS CURIAE 1

STATEMENT OF THE CASE 2

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION 4

I. REVIEW IS WARRANTED BECAUSE RIGOROUS ANALYSIS OF THE RULE 23 REQUIREMENTS COMPELS EVALUATION OF THE RELIABILITY OF EXPERT TESTIMONY AT THE CLASS CERTIFICATION STAGE 5

II. PERMITTING COURTS TO CONSIDER EXPERT TESTIMONY IN SUPPORT OF CLASS CERTIFICATION WITHOUT TESTING ITS RELIABILITY UNDER DAUBERT IS INEFFICIENT AND PREJUDICES DEFENDANTS AND ABSENT CLASS MEMBERS 10

CONCLUSION 13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

Page(s)

Cases:

Am. Honda Motor Co. v. Allen,
600 F.3d 813 (7th Cir. 2010) 7, 8

Blades v. Monsanto Co.,
400 F.3d 562 (8th Cir. 2005) 6

Castano v. American Tobacco Co.,
84 F.3d 734 (5th Cir. 1996) 9

Conn. Retirement Plans and Trust Funds v. Amgen,
No. 09-56965 (9th Cir., dec. pending) 1

Cooper v. Southern Co.,
390 F.3d 695 (11th Cir. 2004) 6

Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals,
509 U.S. 579 (1993) . . . . passim

Dukes v. Wal-Mart,
222 F.R.D. 189 (N.D. Cal. 2004) 3, 9

Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin,
417 U.S. 156 (1974) 3, 9

Engle v. Liggett Group, Inc., 945 So.2d 1246 (Fla. 2006), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 942 (2007) 1

Gariety v. Grant Thornton, LLP,
368 F.3d 356 (4th Cir. 2004) 6

Page(s)

General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon,
457 U.S. 147 (1982) 5, 7, 11

Gilchrist v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co.,
390 F.3d 1327 (11th Cir. 2004) 1

In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig.,
552 F.3d 305 (3d Cir. 2008) 6, 8

In re Public Offering Securities Litig. ("IPO"),
471 F.3d 24 (2d Cir. 2006) 6, 9

Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc.,
417 F.2d 1122 (5th Cir. 1969) 12

Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Epstein,
516 U.S. 367 (1996) 1

Polymedica Corporate Securities Litigation,
432 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2005) 7

Szabo v. Bridgeport Machines, Inc.,
249 F.3d 672 (7th Cir. 2001) 5

Tardiff v. Knox County,
365 F.3d 1 (1st Cir. 2004) 6

Unger v. Amedisys Inc.,
401 F.3d 316 (5th Cir. 2005) 6, 8

West v. Prudential Securities, Inc.,
282 F.3d 935 (7th Cir. 2002) 6, 7

Page(s)

Statutes and Rules:

Title VII, Civil Rights Act of 1964,
42 U.S.C. § 2000e, et seq. 12

Fed.R.Civ.P. 23 . . . . passim

Fed.R.Evid. 702 3

Rule 702 Advisory Committee's Notes . . . 7-8

BRIEF OF WASHINGTON LEGAL FOUNDATION AS AMICUS CURIAE IN SUPPORT OF PETITIONER

INTERESTS OF AMICUS CURIAE

The Washington Legal Foundation ("WLF") is a public interest law and policy center headquartered in Washington, D.C., with supporters nationwide.[1] WLF's primary mission is the defense and promotion of free enterprise, individual rights, and a limited and accountable government. In particular, WLF devotes a substantial portion of its resources to advocating and litigating against excessive and improperly certified class action lawsuits. Among the many federal and state court cases in which WLF has appeared to express its views on the proper scope of class action litigation are Engle v. Liggett Group, Inc., 945 So. 2d 1246 (Fla. 2006), cert. denied, 552 U.S. 941 (2007); Matsushita Electric Industrial Co. v. Epstein, 516 U.S. 367 (1996); Conn. Retirement Plans and Trust Funds v. Amgen, Inc., No. 09-56965 (9th Cir., dec. pending); and Gilchrist v. State Farm Mut. Auto. Ins. Co., 390 F.3d 1327 (11th Cir. 2004). WLF also filed briefs in this case when it was before the Ninth Circuit.

WLF is submitting this brief because it believes that the en banc panel committed legal error when it affirmed the district court's consideration of testimony from plaintiff's expert in support of class certification without determining whether the expert's opinions were reliable under the standards articulated by the Supreme Court in Daubert. WLF submits this brief because it is concerned that failing to test the reliability of expert testimony at class certification runs afoul of this Court's mandate that district courts conduct a "rigorous analysis" of whether Rule 23's prerequisites are met. Certifying a class on untested expert testimony casts aside the carefully crafted balance of plaintiffs' interests, defendant's interests, and judicial efficiency embedded in Rule 23.

---

[1] Pursuant to Supreme Court Rule 37.6, WLF states that no counsel for a party authored this brief in whole or in part; and that no person or entity, other than WLF and its counsel, made a monetary contribution intended to fund the preparation and submission of this brief. Ten days prior to the due date, counsel for WLF provided counsel for Respondents with notice of its intent to file this brief. All parties have consented to the filing of this brief, by lodging with the Court letters granting blanket consent to all amicus curiae briefs.

WLF has no direct interest, financial or otherwise, in the outcome of this case. Because of its lack of a direct interest, WLF believes that it can provide the Court with a perspective that is distinct from that of the parties.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Six women brought a nationwide class action on behalf of 1.5 million women alleging that Wal-Mart has across-the-board discriminatory policies and practices in all of its 3,400 stores, and that this discrimination is common to all women who work or have worked in a Wal-Mart store over the past decade. In support of class certification, plaintiffs and the district court relied in part on the testimony of Dr. William Bielby, a sociology expert who opined that gender stereotyping likely exists at Wal-Mart. As he has done against many other companies, Dr. Bielby testified that Wal-Mart's organizational structure made it "vulnerable" to gender stereotyping, but he could not say how often such stereotyping occurred in connection with employment decisions at the company. Pet. App. 195a. Indeed, as noted by the district court, Dukes v. Wal-Mart, 222 F.R.D. 189, 192 (N.D. Cal. 2004), Dr Bielby could not say that gender stereotyping occurred 95% or 0.5% of the time. Nonetheless, Dr. Bielby's testimony was crucial to plaintiffs' attempts to demonstrate how millions of discretionary and subjective decisions made by thousands of individual managers at the local level could meet Rule 23's commonality and typicality requirements.

Wal-Mart moved to strike Dr. Bielby's testimony under Rule 702 of the Federal Rules of Evidence and pursuant to Daubert, but the district court refused to test the reliability of expert testimony at the class certification stage. The district court reasoned that it was prohibited from applying the full Daubert standard under Eisen v. Carlisle & Jacquelin, 417 U.S. 156, 177 (1974). Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 191. Although the Ninth Circuit did not agree that Eisen precluded a court from delving into the merits at class certification if those merits overlapped with the Rule 23 inquiry, the court nevertheless rejected the necessity of applying the Daubert standard at the class certification stage. Pet. App. 57a n.22; see also id. at 133a-137a (Ikuta, J., dissenting) (discussing majority's failure to require the appropriate level of scrutiny of expert opinion in support of class certification as required by Daubert).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE PETITION

In 2003, the Civil Rules Advisory Committee amended Fed. R. Civ. P. 23 to remove the provision that class certification "may be conditional." The amendment reflected the growing consensus among federal appellate courts that class certification should be denied unless a critical evaluation of the evidence supported findings that each of the Rule 23 requirements had been met. This often requires the judge to step into the role of fact finder and resolve disputed factual issues pertinent to determining whether Rule 23's requirements are met, even when those issues overlap with the ultimate merits of the case. The Ninth Circuit's approach in affirming class certification – deferring an evaluation of plaintiff's expert's opinions pursuant to Daubert v. Merrell Dow Pharmaceuticals, Inc., 509 U.S. 579 (1993) – effectively resurrects conditional certification in the largest employment class action in history.

Such an approach falls far short of the rigorous class certification analysis mandated by this Court and followed by other circuits across the country. If not reversed, the court's implicit adoption of a lower admissibility threshold for expert opinion on class certification could have far-reaching, adverse effects, including making the district courts in the Ninth Circuit a magnet for the filing of class actions, certification a nearly foregone conclusion, and defendants a target of specious classwide claims. In addition, it could have serious adverse consequences on absent class members. The fundamental importance of the question of what evidentiary standards should be applied to class certification justifies this Court accepting Wal-Mart's petition for a writ of certiorari.

I. REVIEW IS WARRANTED BECAUSE RIGOROUS ANALYSIS OF THE RULE 23 REQUIREMENTS COMPELS EVALUATION OF THE RELIABILITY OF EXPERT TESTIMONY AT THE CLASS CERTIFICATION STAGE

This Court has mandated that trial courts conduct a "rigorous analysis" of the Rule 23 requirements, which "generally involves considerations that are enmeshed in the factual and legal issues comprising the plaintiff's causes of action." General Telephone Co. of the Southwest v. Falcon, 457 U.S. 147, 160 (1982). A "rigorous analysis" requires courts to make factual determinations and to not merely accept plaintiff's allegations as true. Id.; see also Pet. App. 13a ("district courts are not only at liberty to, but must, perform a rigorous analysis to ensure that the prerequisites of Rule 23 have been satisfied, and this will often, though not always, require looking behind the pleadings to issues overlapping with the merits of the underlying claims"); Szabo v. Bridgeport Machines, Inc., 249 F.3d 672, 677 (7th Cir. 2001) ("The proposition that a district judge must accept all of the complaint's allegations when deciding whether to certify a class cannot be found in Rule 23 and has nothing to recommend it.").

Evidence proffered in support of the Rule 23 requirements must be carefully scrutinized and weighed against competing evidence or argument. "A district judge may not duck hard questions by observing that each side has some support . . . . Tough questions must be faced and squarely decided, if necessary by holding evidentiary hearings and choosing between competing perspectives." West v. Prudential Securities, Inc., 282 F.3d 935, 938 (7th Cir. 2002); see also Tardiff v. Knox County, 365 F.3d 1, 4 (1st Cir. 2004) ("in our view a court has the power to test disputed premises early on if and when the class action would be proper on one premise but not on another"); Gariety v. Grant Thornton, LLP, 368 F.3d 356, 366 (4th Cir 2004); Blades v. Monsanto Co., 400 F.3d 562, 575 (8th Cir. 2005) ("a court may be required to resolve disputes concerning the factual setting of the case," which "extends to the resolution of expert disputes concerning the import of evidence"); Cooper v. Southern Co., 390 F.3d 695, 712 (11th Cir. 2004).

Expert testimony is no different than any other form of evidence relevant to a Rule 23 inquiry. In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d 305, 323 (3d Cir. 2008); In re Public Offering Securities Litig. ("IPO"), 471 F.3d 24, 42 (2d Cir. 2006); West, 282 F.3d at 938. But before a court may even begin to evaluate whether expert testimony supports a finding that Rule 23's requirements are met, it must first determine whether the expert testimony is reliable. As the Fifth Circuit observed, "[i]n order to consider Plaintiffs' motion for class certification with the appropriate amount of scrutiny, the Court must first determine whether Plaintiffs' expert testimony supporting class certification is reliable." Unger v Amedisys Inc., 401 F.3d 316, 325 (5th Cir 2005) (citation omitted) (court "must engage in a thorough [class certification] analysis, weigh the relevant factors, require both parties to justify their allegations, and base its ruling on admissible evidence"); see also Am. Honda Motor Co. v. Allen, 600 F.3d 813, 816 (7th Cir 2010) (per curiam) ("The court must also resolve any challenge to the reliability of information provided by an expert if that information is relevant to establishing any of the Rule 23 requirements for class certification.").

The Seventh Circuit similarly endorsed a rigorous review of expert opinion testimony in West when it held that it would "amount[] to a delegation of judicial power to the plaintiffs" to permit them class certification merely because they have the support of an expert. West, 282 F.3d at 938; see also Polymedica Corporate Securities Litigation, 432 F.3d 1, 17 (1st Cir. 2005) (holding that court "must evaluate the plaintiff's evidence . . . critically"). And now that Falcon has made clear that Eisen does not bar consideration of issues on class certification that overlap with merits issues – such as the reliability of an expert's testimony – there is no justification for not requiring the same scrutiny of expert testimony by the district courts in the Ninth Circuit.

This Court has established a standard for evaluating the reliability of expert testimony in federal court – Daubert. Daubert established a non-exhaustive list of guideposts to evaluate the reliability, and thus admissibility, of an expert's opinions, including whether the theory has been tested and subjected to peer review and publication, and whether it is generally accepted in the relevant scientific or technical community. Daubert, 509 U.S. at 593-94. In addition, the 2000 Advisory Committee's Notes to Rule 702 recommended additional benchmarks, including whether the expert's opinions resulted from independent research or are a product of litigation; whether the expert has accounted for alternative explanations; and whether the expert was as careful in forming his opinions for litigation as he would be in his non-testifying professional work. There is no justification for requiring a lower standard at the class certification stage and every reason to apply the same standard for testing the reliability of expert testimony at every step of the litigation.

It is no wonder then that the Ninth Circuit's opinion in this case is an outlier. Every Circuit Court of Appeal to publish an opinion addressing this issue has determined that expert testimony must be carefully scrutinized during class certification. See, e.g., Unger, 401 F.3d at 324 ("[R]eliance on unverifiable evidence [in determining class certification] is hardly better than relying on bare allegations."); In re Hydrogen Peroxide Antitrust Litig., 552 F.3d at 323 (noting that expert testimony should not be "uncritically accepted" even if it is found reliable under Daubert). Just a few months ago, the Seventh Circuit reversed class certification where the lower court relied on expert testimony without first resolving whether the testimony would be admissible under Daubert. Am. Honda Motor Co., 600 F.3d at 815-16. Although the district court had "definite reservations" about the reliability of the expert's opinions, the court declined to conduct a full Daubert analysis at the early stage of the proceedings. Id. at 814-16. This, the Seventh Circuit determined, was an abuse of discretion. Id. at 816. Holding that "a district court must make the necessary factual and legal inquiries and decide all relevant contested issues prior to certification," the Seventh Circuit determined that the lower court's failure to evaluate plaintiff's expert's opinions pursuant to Daubert was a return to "provisional" class certification, a practice it has roundly rejected. Id. at 817.

The district court here refused to properly scrutinize Dr. Bilby's testimony, believing that Eisen prohibited such a review for purposes of class certification. See Dukes, 222 F.R.D. at 191. While it purported to determine that Dr. Bielby's opinions were not "fatally flawed," the Second Circuit in IPO expressly rejected the "fatally flawed" standard as an appropriate reliability standard. 471 F.3d at 42. The Ninth Circuit correctly rejected the district court's reading of Eisen as prohibiting an inquiry into facts overlapping with the merits of the case in analyzing the Rule 23 requirements, but it nevertheless erroneously adopted the mistaken corollary that Daubert should not apply at class certification because it is a merits-type inquiry. See Pet. App. 22a-25a, 31a, 57a n.22.

The Ninth Circuit's view is not supported by reason or the jurisprudence of this Court and marks a departure from other federal Courts of Appeal. If left undisturbed, the Dukes opinion will have far-reaching and adverse consequences on defendants and absent class members.

II. PERMITTING COURTS TO CONSIDER EXPERT TESTIMONY IN SUPPORT OF CLASS CERTIFICATION WITHOUT TESTING ITS RELIABILITY UNDER DAUBERT IS INEFFICIENT AND PREJUDICES DEFENDANTS AND ABSENT CLASS MEMBERS

Failure to test the reliability of plaintiff's expert testimony at the class certification stage as compelled by Daubert is inefficient at best and at worst prejudices the parties. Class certification dramatically raises the stakes in the litigation for defendants, often creating "insurmountable pressure . . . to settle" even weak claims (a situation tantamount to "judicial blackmail"). Castano v. American Tobacco Co., 84 F.3d 734, 746 (5th Cir. 1996). Defendants who bow under this pressure may never get the opportunity to compel the required scrutiny of plaintiffs' experts' testimony. See Szabo, 249 F.3d at 676 ("[A]n order certifying the class usually is the district judge's last word on the subject; there is no later test of the decision's factual premises (and if the case is settled, there could not be such an examination . . .)."). Moreover, forcing defendants to conduct classwide discovery and expend the resources necessary to reach the merits phase of a class action only to have it determined that the expert testimony on which the court based its class certification decision is unreliable is fundamentally unfair.

Finally, and perhaps more importantly, absent class members' rights may be substantially impaired or lost altogether when a class is certified based on unreliable expert testimony that is ultimately excluded following a full Daubert review. This is precisely why Rule 23 requires courts to probe beyond the pleadings and scrutinize the evidence to ensure that absent class members' interests are adequately represented and their rights are preserved.

As this Court observed in Falcon, in Title VII class actions, plaintiffs must bridge the gap between their individual claims of discrimination and "the existence of a class of persons who have suffered the same injury . . . such that the individual's claim and the class claims will share common questions of law and fact and that the individual's claim will be typical of the class claims." Falcon, 457 U.S. at 157. Here, plaintiffs offered Dr. Bielby's testimony to "bridge the gap" between their individual claims of gender discrimination and those of more than 1.5 million women in 3,400 stores. Pet. App. 115a-117a (Ikuta, J., dissenting). The district court relied on this evidence, without even considering whether the testimony was reliable under Daubert to determine that plaintiffs satisfied the requirements of Rule 23.

This same evidence will be critical to carrying plaintiffs' burden of proof at trial. If, after conducting the reliability and admissibility analysis required by Daubert prior to trial, the court determines that Dr. Bielby's testimony should be excluded, it could have "catastrophic consequences" to absent class members. While the loss of such evidence could lead to decertification of the class, it may also be deemed a failure of proof on the class claims, resulting in a defense verdict:

> Envision the hypothetical attorney with a single client, filing a class action to halt all racial discrimination in all the numerous plants and facilities of one of America's mammoth corporations. One act, or a few acts, at one or a few places, can be charged to be part of a practice or policy quickening an injunction against all racial discrimination by the employer at all places. It is tidy, convenient for the courts fearing a flood of Title VII cases, and dandy for the employees if their champion wins. But what of the catastrophic consequences if the plaintiff loses and carries the class down with him, or proves only such limited facts that no practice or policy can be found, leaving him afloat but sinking the class?

Johnson v. Georgia Highway Express, Inc., 417 F.2d 1122, 1126 (5th Cir. 1969) (Godbold, J., concurring specially). Daubert affords another level of protection to absent class members in the Rule 23 inquiry by exposing, at a preliminary stage, expert testimony that is unreliable and would not likely be admissible at trial. For this reason, it is important that this Court affirmatively rule that Daubert, and not a lesser standard of review, must apply at class certification.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, amicus curiae Washington Legal Foundation requests that the Court grant Wal-Mart's petition for a writ of certiorari.

Respectfully submitted,

Jennifer L. Brown
Rachael M. Weinfeld
Shook, Hardy & Bacon L.L.P.
333 Bush Street, Suite 600
San Francisco, CA 94104
(415) 544-1900
jbrown@shb.com

Daniel J. Popeo
Richard A. Samp
(Counsel of Record)
Washington Legal Foundation
2009 Massachusetts Ave., NW
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 588-0302
rsamp@wlf.org

Dated: September 24, 2010

JOINT APPENDIX

Supreme Court, U.S.
FILED
JAN 20 2011
OFFICE OF THE CLERK

No. 10-277

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, ET AL.,

Respondents.

On Writ Of Certiorari
To The United States Court Of Appeals
For The Ninth Circuit

JOINT APPENDIX
Volume 1 of 3
(Pages 1a-577a)

THEODORE J. BOUTROUS, JR.
Counsel of Record
GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER LLP
333 South Grand Avenue
Los Angeles, CA 90071
(213) 229-7000
tboutrous@gibsondunn.com

Counsel for Petitioner

BRAD SELIGMAN
Counsel of Record
THE IMPACT FUND
125 University Ave., Suite 102
Berkeley, CA 94710
(519) 845-3473
bseligman@impactfund.org

Counsel for Respondents

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI FILED AUGUST 25, 2010
CERTIORARI GRANTED DECEMBER 6, 2010

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Relevant Docket Entries from the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, No. 04-16688 .... 1a

Relevant Docket Entries from the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, No. 04-16720 .... 14a

Relevant Docket Entries from the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, No. 04-80057 .... 26a

Relevant Docket Entries from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, No. 3:01-cv-02252-VRW 29a

Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint (Sept. 12, 2002) 47a

Defendant Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.'s Answer and Affirmative Defenses to Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint (Nov. 25, 2002) 81a

Exhibits to Declaration of Christine Webber in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (April 24, 2003)

- Deposition of Kevin Harper (Mar. 12, 2002) (Exhibit 1) 105a
- Deposition of John Butler (June 21, 2002) (Exhibit 4) 143a
- Deposition of Trent Burner (July 31, 2002) (Exhibit 5) 154a

Deposition of Roxanne Wigger (Apr. 18, 2002) (Exhibit 7) 159a

Deposition of Kevin Harper (Oct. 9, 2002) (Exhibit 11) 163a

Deposition of Celia Swanson (Nov. 6, 2002) (Exhibit 14) 205a

Deposition of Thomas M. Coughlin, III (Jan. 17, 2003) (Exhibit 15) 209a

Deposition of Coleman Peterson (Dec. 18, 2002) (Exhibit 16) 222a

Deposition of Melinda Hass (Apr. 24, 2002) (Exhibit 27) 235a

Deposition of Ulonda Crawford (July 17, 2002) (Exhibit 30) 259a

Deposition of Craig Arnold (June 4, 2002) (Exhibit 31) 271a

Deposition of Jeffrey B. Reeves (Jan. 14, 2003) (Exhibit 33) 291a

Deposition of Rhonda Harper (Mar. 17, 2003) (Exhibit 36) 303a

Deposition of Kendall Schwindt (Sept. 11, 2002) (Exhibit 38) 307a

Deposition of Rose M. Reza (Jan. 3, 2003) (Exhibit 39) 321a

Deposition of Sharon M. Bilgischer (Oct. 15, 2002) (Exhibit 45) 326a

Deposition of Mark O. Bosler (May 15, 2002) (Exhibit 57) 332a

Deposition of Brenda J. Deno (Oct. 21, 2002) (Exhibit 69) 335a

2001 Company Accountability Goals (Exhibit 79) 339a

Sam Walton & John Huey, Made in America: My Story (1992) (Exhibit 87) 363a

Defendant's Supplemental Objections and Answers to Plaintiffs' First and Second Sets of Interrogatories (Nos. 11, 17, 22) (Exhibit 97) 371a

Promotional Guidelines (Exhibit 98) 390a

Memo from Andy Wilson re: Management Selection Process (Nov. 20, 2000) (Exhibit 98) 393a

Retail Benchmarks on Diversity (Exhibit 110) 397a

Bentonville '99 People Strategic Planning Session, Coleman Peterson Memo (Exhibit 111) 405a

3/4/99 Minutes of Meeting of the Compensation and Nominating Committee of the Board of Directors (Exhibit 112) 406a

Memo from Cole Peterson re: Catalyst Census of Women Corporate Officers and Top Earners (Feb. 13, 2001) (Exhibit 114) 410a

E-mail from Susan Smith re: Women in Leadership (May 13, 1996) (Exhibit 115) 414a

Diversity Ideas (Dec. 12, 2001) (Exhibit 116) 416a

Relocation Agreement (Exhibit 117) 419a

Map Identifying Locations of Each Wal-Mart Facility About Which Declarant Has Provided Testimony Relevant to Plaintiffs' Motion (Exhibit 125) 420a

Declaration of Marc Bendick, Jr., Ph.D. in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 421a

Declaration of Richard Drogin, Ph.D. in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 465a

Declaration of William T. Bielby, Ph.D. in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 520a

Declaration of Sheila Acree in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 578a

Declaration of Donna Adair in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 583a

Declaration of Gretchen Adams in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 590a

Declaration of Wanda Akley in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 603a

Declaration of Edith Arana in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 606a

Declaration of Lori Arhangelsky in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 625a

Declaration of Patricia Bebee in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 632a

Declaration of Geanette Bell in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 640a

Declaration of Sandra Berkowitz in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 645a

Declaration of Joan Berry in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 650a

Declaration of Paula Bird in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 654a

Declaration of Lisa Bourdeaux in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 660a

Declaration of Danette Brown Ballou in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 665a

Declaration of Sue Brown in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 672a

Declaration of Patricia Buckley in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 676a

Declaration of Vivian Calimee in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 679a

Declaration of Thearsa Collier in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 686a

Declaration of Jeanette Connaker in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 695a

Declaration of Rita Coones in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 702a

Declaration of Mary Crawford in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 707a

Declaration of Trudy Crom in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 716a

Declaration of Darlene Crowder in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 722a

Declaration of Laurie Dewall in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 729a

Declaration of Anna Dobbs in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 735a

Declaration of Julie Donovan in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 740a

Declaration of Betty Dukes in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 743a

Declaration of Diane Durfey in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 750a

Declaration of Micki Earwood in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 757a

Declaration of Penny Elkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 765a

Declaration of Shirley Ervine in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 772a

Declaration of Gina Espinoza-Price in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 779a

Declaration of Brenda Evans in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 789a

Declaration of Dedra Farmer in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 793a

Declaration of Jennifer Furtado in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 805a

Declaration of Anita Galentine in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 813a

Declaration of Catherine Gorba in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 817a

Declaration of Earnestine Gordon in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 822a

Declaration of Deborah Gunter in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 827a

Declaration of Sheila Hall in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 839a

Declaration of Tammy Hall in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 844a

Declaration of Rene Harkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 859a

Declaration of Cecilia Harrison in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 864a

Declaration of Teresa Hawkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 874a

Declaration of Tina Herndon in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 881a

Declaration of Susan Hitch in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 885a

Declaration of Dawn Hittle in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 891a

Declaration of Nancy Hom in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 896a

Declaration of Angela Horton in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 907a

Declaration of Amy Houchins-Post in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 916a

Declaration of Brenda Houle in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 920a

Declaration of Melissa Howard in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 924a

Declaration of Tammy Howard in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 934a

Declaration of Frances Jackson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 943a

Declaration of Joanne Jaso in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 947a

Declaration of Jennifer Johnson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 952a

Declaration of Katheryn Johnson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 958a

Declaration of Lucretia Johnson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 964a

Declaration of Laverne Jones in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 970a

Declaration of Sheila Joyce in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 975a

Declaration of Gayle Kellems in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 980a

Declaration of Martha Kettle in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 992a

Declaration of Christine Kwapnoski in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 997a

Declaration of Jaime Lanois in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1007a

Declaration of Darlene Leadingham in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1011a

Declaration of Phyllis Lehman in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1016a

Declaration of Van Le-Kohler in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1022a

Declaration of Lorrina Letterer in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1027a

Declaration of Gail Lovejoy in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1030a

Declaration of Kathleen MacDonald in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1035a

Declaration of Barbara Mack in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1040a

Declaration of Sandra Marshall in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1048a

Declaration of Nancy Martin in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1053a

Declaration of Irma Mathis in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1059a

Declaration of Lori B. McCarthy in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1064a

Declaration of Alix McKenna in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1072a

Declaration of Kim McLamb in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1077a

Declaration of Umi Jean Minor in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1081a

Declaration of Michella Minton in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1088a

Declaration of Elizabeth Monroe in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1093a

Declaration of Joyce Moody in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1097a

Declaration of Denise Mott in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1104a

Declaration of Stephanie Odle in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1112a

Declaration of Cleo Page in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1124a

Declaration of Carolyn Perkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1131a

Declaration of Lori Pidich in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1136a

Declaration of Sue McFarland Ramirez in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1144a

Declaration of Sandra Ratliff in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1158a

Declaration of Donna Reed in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1165a

Declaration of Claudia Renati in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1168a

Declaration of Karla Rojas in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1174a

Declaration of Kathleen Schmeida in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1183a

Declaration of Ramona Scott in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1186a

Declaration of Dawnia Self in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1190a

Declaration of Susan Servatius in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1195a

Declaration of Jody Shearer in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1211a

Declaration of Barbara Steele in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1215a

Declaration of Sandra Stevenson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1222a

Declaration of Anna Stumpf in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1228a

Declaration of Patricia Surgeson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1242a

Declaration of Dawn Sweeny in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1248a

Declaration of Andrea Tallent in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1254a

Declaration of Sandra Thomas in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1258a

Declaration of Vicki Thornton in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1261a

Declaration of Melodie Underwood in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1268a

Declaration of Dawn White in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1274a

Declaration of Deanna Willard in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1279a

Declaration of Jenny Williams in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1285a

Declaration of Lorie Williams in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1292a

Declaration of Karen Williamson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1298a

Declaration of Jan Wolsleger in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1302a

Declaration of Wei Wu-Emmert in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1306a

Declaration of Detrix Young in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1311a

Declaration of Tamara Zumbrun in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1315a

Declaration of Wei Ming Bogardus in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1322a

Declaration of Joan G. Haworth, Ph.D. in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1330a

Declaration of Charlyn Jarrells-Porter in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1576a

Declaration of Jina Jordan in Rebuttal to Declaration of Designated Class Member Katheryn Johnson (June 12, 2003) 1597a

Declaration of Marie Perkins in Rebuttal to Declaration of Designated Class Member Earnestine Gordon (June 12, 2003) 1601a

Declaration of Margaret Daniel in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1606a

Declaration of Sandy Ellison in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1612a

Declaration of Victoria Howard in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1618a

Declaration of Julie Jeneane Murphy in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1630a

Declaration of Janice Tree in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1637a

Declaration of Stacey Wiggins in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1647a

Declaration of Linda Donath in Rebuttal to Declaration of Designated Class Member Sheila Acree (June 12, 2003) 1652a

Declaration of Sandra Jean Ellison in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (Ellison Decl. II) (June 25, 2003) 1655a

Supplemental Declaration of Christine Kwapnoski in Reply to Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (July 3, 2003) 1659a

Supplemental Declaration of Dr. Richard Drogin in Support of Plaintiffs' Reply Brief in Support of Motion to Strike Portions of Haworth Declaration for Failure to Comply with Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 26(a)(2) (July 11, 2003) 1662a

The following documents have been omitted in printing this joint appendix because they appear on the following pages in the appendix to the petition for a writ of certiorari:

Opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit 1a

Order of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California Granting in Part and Denying in Part Motion for Class Certification 162a

Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit Granting Rehearing En Banc 284a

General Docket
United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Court of Appeals Docket #: 04-16688
Nature of Suit: 3442 Jobs
Dukes, et al v. Wal-Mart Stores
Appeal From: U.S. District Court for Northern California, San Francisco
Fee Status: Paid

Docketed: 08/30/2004
Termed: 04/26/2010

Case Type Information:
1) civil
2) private
3) null

Originating Court Information:
District: 0971-3 : CV-01-02252-MJJ
Trial Judge: Martin J. Jenkins, District Judge
Date Filed: 06/08/2001
Date Order/Judgment: 06/21/2004
Date NOA Filed: 08/13/2004

Prior Cases:
02-80008
Date Filed: 01/23/2002 Date Disposed: 03/18/2001 Disposition: Denied – Judge Order

Current Cases:

Lead	Member	Start	End
Cross-Appeal
04-16688	04-16720	09/01/2004

* * *

08/30/2004	6	DOCKETED CAUSE AND ENTERED APPEARANCES OF COUNSEL. CADS SENT (Y/N): NO. setting schedule as follows: Fee payment is due 9/13/04 ; ap-pellant's designation of RT is due 8/23/04; appellee's designation of RT is due 9/2/04,, ; appellant shall order transcript by 9/13/04; court reporter shall file transcript in DC by 10/13/04; certificate of record shall be filed by 10/20/04 ; appellant's opening brief is due 11/29/04; appellees' brief is due 12/29/04,, ; appellants' reply brief is due 1/12/05; [04-16688] (MF)

* * *

08/31/2004	13	Filed MOATT order (Mary M. SCHROEDER, CONSUELO M. CALLAHAN,): The crt, in its discretion, grants the cross petition for permission to appeal the dc's 6/22/04, class action order. Within 10 days of this order, aples/respondents shall perfect the x-appeal in accordance with FRAP 5(d). After the x-appeal is perfected, the clk is directed to expedite the briefing & hearing of the x-appeal in accordance with appeal 04-16688. The provisios of 9th Cir. 31-2.2(a) shall not apply to this briefing schedule. [04-16688, 04-80057] (MF)

* * *

09/01/2004	21	DOCKETED CAUSE AND

		ENTERED APPEARANCES OF COUNSEL. CADS SENT (Y/N): y. setting cross appeal briefing schedule as follows: CADS is past due; CADS must be filed no later than 9/8/04; first cross-appeal brief is due 11/29/04; second cross-appeal brief is due 12/29/04 ; third cross-appeal brief is due 1/28/04 ; optional cross-appeal reply brief is due 2/11/04 [04-16720, 04-16688] (KKW)

* * *

11/29/2004	41	Filed original and 15 copies Appellant Cross Appellee Wal-Mart, Inc.'s first brief on cross-appeal, (Informal: No) of 61 pages; 5 vols. of EOR; served on 11/29/04 [04- 16688, 04-16720] (RT)

* * *

01/03/2005	48	Filed original and 15 copies Appellees Cross Appellants Betty Dukes et al. second brief on cross-appeal (Informal: No) of 61 pages; 3 vols. of Supp EOR; served on 12/29/04 [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)

* * *

01/28/2005	53	Filed original and 15 copies Appellant Cross Appellee Wal-Mart, Inc.'s third brief on cross-appeal (Informal: No) of 59 pages; 1 vol. of Supp EOR; served on 1/28/05 [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)
02/14/2005	54	Filed original and 15 copies Appellees Cross Appellants Betty Dukes et al. cross appeal reply brief. (Informal: No) of 32 pages; 1 vol. of Supp EOR; served on 2/11/05 [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)

* * *

08/08/2005	72	ARGUED AND SUBMITTED TO Harry PREGERSON, Andrew J. KLEINFELD, Michael D. HAWKINS. [04-16688, 04-16720] (EL)

* * *

02/06/2007	95	FILED OPINION: AFFIRMED (Terminated on the Merits after Oral Hearing; Affirmed; Written, Signed, Published. Harry PREGERSON, author; Andrew J. KLEINFELD, dissenting; Michael D. HAWKINS.) FILED AND ENTERED JUDGMENT. [04-16688, 04-16720] (GV)
02/20/2007	97	[6094962] Filed original & 50 copies Appellant Wal-Mart,

		Inc.'s petition for rehearing en banc of 18 pages [4,199 words]; served on 2/20/07 (PANEL AND ALL ACTIVE JUDGES AND ALL INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) [04-16688, 04-16720] (GV)
02/23/2007	98	Filed order (Harry PREGERSON, Andrew J. KLEINFELD, Michael D. HAWKINS,): Plaintfiff appellees are directed to file a response to appellant's peition for rehearing en banc. Said response shall be filed with the Court within twenty one (21) days of the date of filing of this order. (phoned counsel for parties: 4:10 pm) [04-16720, 04-16688] (RT)

* * *

03/16/2007	115	Filed Appellees x-appellants Betty Dukes et al.'s opposition to appellant xappellee's petition for rehearing en banc; served on 3/15/07 (PANEL & ALL ACTIVE & INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)

* * *

03/27/2007	117	Received Aplt's Reply brief in support of petition for rehearing en banc; served on 3/27/07 (PANEL AND ALL ACTIVE JUDGES AND ALL INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) [04-16688] (GV)

* * *

07/20/2007	137	Filed order (Harry PREGERSON, Andrew J. KLEINFELD, Michael D. HAWKINS, Circuit Judges): The motions for exemption from Circuit Rule 45-5 filed on behalf of Julia Campins and Jaime Byrnes are GRANTED. Motions for leave to file following documents are GRANTED: California Employment Law Council's proposed amicus curiae brief in support of Wal-Mart's petition for rehearing; Equal Employment Advisory Council's amicus curiae letter brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Chamber of Commerce of USA' amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Product Liability Advisory Council's amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Retail Industry Leaders Association's amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Washington Legal Foundation's amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; The Employer's Group's amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law et al.'s amici curiae brief in support of Duke's opposition to the petition for rehearing en banc; Wal Mart, Inc.'s reply brief in support of its petition for rehearing en banc; US Women's Chamber of Commerece's amicus curiae letter brief in support of Dukes's opposition to the petition for rehearing en banc; The National Employment Lawyers Association et al.'s amici curiae brief in support of Dukes's opposition to the petition for rehearing en banc; Consumers Union's et al.'s proposed amici curiae brief in opposition to Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; American Association of Retired Person's amici curiae brief in support of Duke's opposition to the petition for rehearing en banc; Public Justice's amicus brief in opposition to Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc. [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)

12/11/2007	141	FILED ORDER AND OPINION:

		vacating opinion AFFIRMED [95] in 04-16688, 04- 16720, denying petition for enbanc rehearing [97] AFFIRMED. (Terminated on the Merits after Oral Hearing; Affirmed; Written, Signed, Published. Harry PREGERSON, author; Andrew J. KLEINFELD, dissenting; Michael D. HAWKINS). FILED AND ENTERED JUDGMENT. [04-16688, 04-16720] (GV)

* * *

01/08/2008	147	Filed original and 50 copies Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc. in 04-16688 petition for panel rehearing and petition for rehearing en banc. p.pages, served on 1/8/08 (PANEL AND ALL ACTIVE JUDGES AND ANY INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) [04- 16688, 04-16720] (JE)

* * *

01/09/2008	150	Filed original and 3 copies Appellees Betty Dukes, Patricia Surgeson, Edith Arana, Karen Williamson, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Page Cleo in 04-16688, cross-Appellants Betty Dukes, Patricia Surgeson, Edith Arana, Karen Williamson, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Page Cleo in 04-16720 petition for rehearing, 13 p.pages, served on 1/8/08 (FEDEX TO PANEL) [04-16688, 04- 16720] (LA)

* * *

06/23/2008	164	Filed order (HARRY PREGERSON, ANDREW J. KLEINFELD and MICHAEL DALY HAWKINS): Plaintiffs are hereby ordered to file a response to Defendant's Petition for Panel Rehearing and Petition for Rehearing En Banc. Defendant is hereby ordered to file a response to Plaintiffs' Petition for Panel Rehearing. See FED. R. APP. P. 35(e) and 40(a)(3); Circuit Rule 40-1(a). Responses must be received within 21 days of the date of this order. [04-16688, 04-16720] (AF)
07/14/2008	165	Filed original and 3 copies of Appellant/ Cross-Appellee Wal-Mart, Inc.'s response to Appellee/ Cross-Appellant's petition for panel rehearing, 17 pages; served on 07/14/2008. (PANEL) PLEASE NOTE: THE ATTACHED DOCUMENT IS A DOCUMENT INTERNAL TO THE COURT AND IS NOT ACCESSIBLE ON PACER OR

		ECF. [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)
07/14/2008	166	Filed original and 50 copies of Appellee/ Cross-Appellant' Betty Dukes, et al's opposition to Appellant/ Cross-Appellee's petition for rehearing en banc; 18 pages; served on 06/11/2008. (PANEL-ACTIVE JUDGES-ANY INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) PLEASE NOTE: THE ATTACHED DOCUMENT IS A DOCUMENT INTERNAL TO THE COURT AND IS NOT ACCESSIBLE ON PACER OR ECF. [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)

* * *

07/28/2008	170	Filed Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc.'s motion to file reply in support of petition for rehearing en banc. Served on 07/28/2008. [04-16688, 04-16720] (fed-ex PANEL) (LC)
07/28/2008	171	Received Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc.'s reply brief in support of petition for rehearing en banc. Served on 07/28/2008 [04-16688, 04-16720] (motion pending w/ PANEL) (fed-ex PANEL) (LC)

* * *

09/08/2008	174	Filed order (HARRY PREGERSON, ANDREW J. KLEINFELD and MICHAEL

		DALY HAWKINS)Defendant's Motion for Leave to File Reply Brief in Support of Petition for Rehearing En Banc is hereby GRANTED. Defendant's Reply Brief, received on July 28, 2008, is hereby ordered FILED. [04-16688, 04-16720] (KKW)
09/09/2008	175	Filed original and 50 copies of Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc.'s reply brief in support of petition for rehearing en banc, 9 pages; Served on 07/28/2008. (PANEL - ALL ACTIVE JUDGES - ANY INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)

* * *

02/13/2009	186	Filed En Banc Order for PUBLICATION KOZINSKI, Chief Judge: Upon the vote of a majority of nonrecused active judges, it is ordered that this case be reheard en banc pursuant to Circuit Rule 35-3. The three-judge panel opinion shall not be cited as precedent by or to any court of the Ninth Circuit. Judges McKeown, Rawlinson and Bybee did not participate in the deliberations or vote in this case. [04-16688, 04-16720] (PH)

* * *

03/24/2009	262	ARGUED AND SUBMITTED TO Judges ALEX KOZINSKI, STEPHEN R. REINHARDT, PAMELA ANN RYMER, MICHAEL DALY HAWKINS, BARRY G. SILVERMAN, SUSAN P. GRABER, RAYMOND C. FISHER, RICHARD A. PAEZ, MARSHA S. BERZON, CARLOS T. BEA and SANDRA S. IKUTA. (AT)

* * *

04/26/2010	301	FILED OPINION (ALEX KOZINSKI, STEPHEN R. REINHARDT, PAMELA ANN RYMER, MICHAEL DALY HAWKINS, BARRY G. SILVERMAN, SUSAN P. GRABER, RAYMOND C. FISHER, RICHARD A. PAEZ, MARSHA S. BERZON, CARLOS T. BEA and SANDRA S. IKUTA) AFFIRMED IN PART; REMANDED IN PART. Each party shall bear its own costs on appeal. Judge: AK Dissenting, Judge: MDH Authoring, Judge: SPG Concurring, Judge: SSI Dissenting. FILED AND ENTERED JUDGMENT. [7313593] [04-16688, 04-16720] (RP)

* * *

07/09/2010	303	Received letter from the Supreme Court dated 07/07/2010 re: The application for an ext of time to file a petition for writ of certiorari has be granted to and including 8/25/10. [7401551] [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)
08/26/2010	304	Received notice from the Supreme Court: petition for certiorari filed on 08/25/2010. Supreme Court Number 10-277. [7453259] [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)
10/20/2010	305	MANDATE ISSUED.(AK, SR, PAR, MDH, BGS, SPG, RCF, RAP, MSB, CTB and SSI) [7516125] [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)
12/08/2010	306	Received notice from the Supreme Court. Petition for certiorari GRANTED on 12/06/2010 Supreme Court Number 10-277. [7571647] [04-16688, 04-16720] (SW)

General Docket
United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Court of Appeals Docket #: 04-16720
Nature of Suit: 3442 Jobs
Wal-Mart Stores Inc., et al v. Dukes
Appeal From: U.S. District Court for Northern California, San Francisco
Fee Status: Paid

Docketed: 09/01/2004
Termed: 04/26/2010

Case Type Information:
1) civil
2) private
3) null

Originating Court Information:
District: 0971-3 : CV-01-02252-MJJ
Trial Judge: Martin J. Jenkins, District Judge
Date Filed: 06/08/2001
Date Order/Judgment: 06/21/2004
Date NOA Filed: 08/31/2004

Prior Cases:
None

Current Cases:

	Lead	Member	Start	End
Cross-Appeal
	04-16688	04-16720	09/01/2004

* * *

09/01/2004	1	Case No. 04-16688 and 04-80057. Order filed. Before SCHROEDER, Chief Judge, and CALLAHAN, Circuit Judge. The court, in its discretion, grants the cross-petition for permission to appeal the district court's 6/22/04, class action certification order. See FRCP 23(f). Within 10 days of this order, aples/res shall perfect the cross-appeal in accordance with FRAP 5(d). After the cross-appeal is perfrected, the clerk is directed to expedite the briefing and hearing of the cross appeal in accordance with appeal no. 04-16688. The provisions of 9th Cir. Rule 31-2.2 (as) shall not apply to this briefing schedule. [04-16720] (KKW)

09/01/2004	2	DOCKETED CAUSE AND ENTERED APPEARANCES OF COUNSEL. CADS SENT (Y/N): y. setting cross appeal briefing schedule as follows: CADS is past due; CADS must be filed no later than 9/8/04; first cross-appeal brief is due 11/29/04 ; second cross-appeal brief is due 12/29/04; third cross-appeal reply brief is due 2/11/04 [04-16720, 04-16688] (KKW)

* * *

11/29/2004	9	Filed original and 15 copies Appellant Cross Appellee Wal-Mart, Inc.'s first brief on cross-appeal, (Informal: No) of 61 pages; 5 vols. of EOR; served on 11/29/04 [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)

* * *

01/03/2005	16	Filed original and 15 copies Appellees Cross Appellants Betty Dukes et al. second brief on cross-appeal (Informal: No) of 61 pages; 3 vols. of Supp EOR; served on 12/29/04 [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)

* * *

01/28/2005	21	Filed original and 15 copies Appellant Cross Appellee Wal-Mart, Inc.'s third brief on cross-appeal (Informal: No) of 59 pages; 1 vol. of Supp EOR; served on 1/28/05 [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)
02/14/2005	22	Filed original and 15 copies Appellees Cross Appellants Betty Dukes et al. cross appeal reply brief, (Informal: No) of 32 pages; 1 vol. of Supp EOR; served on 2/11/05 [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)

* * *

08/08/2005	34	ARGUED AND SUBMITTED TO Harry PREGERSON, Andrew J. KLEINFELD, Michael D. HAWKINS. [04-16688, 04-16720] (EL)

* * *

02/06/2007	53	FILED OPINION: AFFIRMED (Terminated on the Merits after Oral Hearing; Affirmed; Written, Signed, Published. Harry

		PREGERSON, author; Andrew J. KLEINFELD, dissenting; Michael D. HAWKINS.) FILED AND ENTERED JUDGMENT. [04-16688, 04-16720] (GV)
02/20/2007	55	[6094962] Filed original & 50 copies Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc.'s petition for rehearing en banc of 18 pages [4,199 words]; served on 2/20/07 (PANEL AND ALL ACTIVE JUDGES AND ALL INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) [04-16688, 04-16720] (GV)
02/23/2007	56	Filed order (Harry PREGERSON, Andrew J. KLEINFELD, Michael D. HAWKINS,): Plaintfiff appellees are directed to file a response to appellant's peition for rehearing en banc. Said response shall be filed with the Court within twenty one (21) days of the date of filing of this order. (phoned counsel for parties: 4:10 pm) [04-16720, 04- 16688] (RT)

* * *

03/16/2007	71	Filed Appellees x-appellants Betty Dukes et al.'s opposition to appellant x-appellee's petition for rehearing en banc; served on 3/15/07 (PANEL & ALL ACTIVE & INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) [04-16688, 04-16720]

		(RT)

* * *

07/20/2007	90	Filed order (Harry PREGERSON, Andrew J. KLEINFELD, Michael D. HAWKINS, Circuit Judges): The motions for exemption from Circuit Rule 45-5 filed on behalf of Julia Campins and Jaime Byrnes are GRANTED. Motions for leave to file following documents are GRANTED: California Employment Law Council's proposed amicus curiae brief in support of Wal-Mart's petition for rehearing; Equal Employment Advisory Council's amicus curiae letter brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Chamber of Commerce of USA' amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Product Liability Advisory Council's amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Retail Industry Leaders Association's amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Washington Legal Foundation's amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; The Employer's Group's amicus curiae brief in support of Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; Lawyers' Committee for Civil Rights Under Law et al.'s amici curiae brief in support of Duke's opposition to the petition for rehearing en banc; Wal Mart, Inc.'s reply brief in support of its petition for rehearing en banc; US Women's Chamber of Commerece's amicus curiae letter brief in support of Dukes's opposition to the petition for rehearing en banc; The National Employment Lawyers Association et al.'s amici curiae brief in support of Dukes's opposition to the petition for rehearing en banc; Consumers Union's et al.'s proposed amici curiae brief in opposition to Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc; American Association of Retired Person's amici curiae brief in support of Duke's opposition to the petition for rehearing en banc; Public Justice's amicus brief in opposition to Wal Mart's petition for rehearing en banc. [04-16688, 04-16720] (RT)

12/11/2007	92	FILED ORDER AND OPINION: vacating opinion AFFIRMED [53] in 04-16688, 04- 16720, denying petition for enbanc rehearing [55] AFFIRMED. (Terminated on the Merits after Oral Hearing; Affirmed; Written, Signed, Published. Harry PREGERSON, author; Andrew J. KLEINFELD, dissenting; Michael D. HAWKINS). FILED AND ENTERED JUDGMENT. [04-16688, 04-16720] (GV)

* * *

01/08/2008	97	Filed original and 50 copies Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc. in 04-16688 petition for panel rehearing and petition for rehearing en banc. p.pages, served on 1/8/08 (PANEL AND ALL ACTIVE JUDGES AND ANY INTERESTED SENIIOR JUDGES) [04- 16688, 04-16720] (JE)

* * *

01/09/2008	99	Filed original and 3 copies Appellees Betty Dukes, Patricia Surgeson, Edith Arana, Karen Williamson, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Page Cleo in 04-16688, cross-Appellants Betty Dukes, Patricia Surgeson, Edith Arana, Karen Williamson, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Page Cleo in 04-16720 petition for rehearing. 13 p.pages, served on 1/8/08 (FEDEX TO PANEL) [04-16688, 04-16720] (LA)

* * *

06/23/2008	113	Filed order (HARRY PREGERSON, ANDREW J. KLEINFELD and MICHAEL DALY HAWKINS): Plaintiffs are hereby ordered to file a response to Defendant's Petition for Panel Rehearing and Petition for Rehearing En Banc. Defendant is hereby ordered to file a response to Plaintiffs' Petition for Panel Rehearing. See FED. R. APP. P. 35(e) and 40(a)(3); Circuit Rule 40-1(a). Responses must be received within 21 days of the date of this order. [04-16688, 04-16720] (AF)
07/14/2008	114	Filed original and 3 copies of Appellant/ Cross-Appellee Wal-Mart, Inc.'s response to Appellee/ Cross-Appellant's petition for panel rehearing, 17 pages; served on 07/14/2008. (PANEL) PLEASE NOTE: THE ATTACHED DOCUMENT IS A DOCUMENT INTERNAL TO THE COURT AND IS NOT ACCESSIBLE ON PACER OR ECF. [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)
07/14/2008	115	Filed original and 50 copies of Appellee/ Cross-Appellant' Betty Dukes, et al's opposition to Appellant/ Cross-Appellee's petition for rehearing en banc; 18 pages; served on 06/11/2008. (PANEL-

		ACTIVE JUDGES-ANY INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) PLEASE NOTE: THE ATTACHED DOCUMENT IS A DOCUMENT INTERNAL TO THE COURT AND IS NOT ACCESSIBLE ON PACER OR ECF. [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)

* * *

07/28/2008	119	Filed Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc.'s motion to file reply in support of petition for rehearng en banc. Served on 07/28/2008. [04-16688, 04-16720] (fed-ex PANEL) (LC)
07/28/2008	120	Received Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc.'s reply brief in support of petition for rehearing en banc. Served on 07/28/2008 [04-16688, 04-16720] (motion pending w/ PANEL) (fed-ex PANEL) (LC)

* * *

09/08/2008	122	Filed order (HARRY PREGERSON, ANDREW J. KLEINFELD and MICHAEL DALY HAWKINS)Defendant's Motion for Leave to File Reply Brief in Support of Petition for Rehearing En Banc is hereby GRANTED. Defendant's Reply Brief, received on July 28, 2008, is hereby ordered FILED. [04-16688, 04-16720] (KKW)

09/09/2008	123	Filed original and 50 copies of Appellant Wal-Mart, Inc.'s reply brief in support of petition for rehearing en banc, 9 pages; Served on 07/28/2008. (PANEL - ALL ACTIVE JUDGES - ANY INTERESTED SENIOR JUDGES) [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)

* * *

02/13/2009	133	Filed En Banc Order for PUBLICATION KOZINSKI, Chief Judge: Upon the vote of a majority of nonrecused active judges, it is ordered that this case be reheard en banc pursuant to Circuit Rule 35-3. The three-judge panel opinion shall not be cited as precedent by or to any court of the Ninth Circuit. Judges McKeown, Rawlinson and Bybee did not participate in the deliberations or vote in this case. [04-16688, 04-16720] (PH)

* * *

03/24/2009	244	ARGUED AND SUBMITTED TO ALEX KOZINSKI, STEPHEN R. REINHARDT, PAMELA ANN RYMER, MICHAEL DALY HAWKINS, BARRY G. SILVERMAN, SUSAN P. GRABER, RAYMOND C.

		FISHER, RICHARD A. PAEZ, MARSHA S. BERZON, CARLOS T. BEA and SANDRA S. IKUTA. [7323734] (JD)

* * *

04/26/2010	242	FILED OPINION (ALEX KOZINSKI, STEPHEN R. REINHARDT, PAMELA ANN RYMER, MICHAEL DALY HAWKINS, BARRY G. SILVERMAN, SUSAN P. GRABER, RAYMOND C. FISHER, RICHARD A. PAEZ, MARSHA S. BERZON, CARLOS T. BEA and SANDRA S. IKUTA) AFFIRMED IN PART; REMANDED IN PART. Each party shall bear its own costs on appeal. Judge: AK Dissenting, Judge: MDH Authoring, Judge: SPG Concurring, Judge: SSI Dissenting. FILED AND ENTERED JUDGMENT. [7313593] [04-16688, 04-16720] (RP)

* * *

07/09/2010	245	Received letter from the Supreme Court dated 07/07/2010 re: The application for an ext of time to file a petition for writ of certiorari has be granted to and including 8/25/10. [7401551] [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)

08/26/2010	246	Received notice from the Supreme Court: petition for certiorari filed on 08/25/2010. Supreme Court Number 10-277. [7453259] [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)
10/20/2010	247	MANDATE ISSUED.(AK, SR, PAR, MDH, BGS, SPG, RCF, RAP, MSB, CTB and SSI) [7516125] [04-16688, 04-16720] (LC)
12/08/2010	248	Received notice from the Supreme Court. Petition for certiorari GRANTED on 12/06/2010 Supreme Court Number 10-277. [7571647] [04-16688, 04-16720] (SW)

General Docket
United States Court of Appeals
for the Ninth Circuit

Court of Appeals Docket #: 04-80057 Wal-Mart Stores, Inc, et al v. Dukes Appeal From: U.S. District Court for Northern California, San Francisco Fee Status: -	Docketed: 07/07/2004 Termed: 08/13/2004

Case Type Information:

1) 1292(b) petition

2) private

3) null

Originating Court Information:

District: 0971-3 : CV-01-02252-MJJ

Trial Judge: Martin J. Jenkins, District Judge

Date Filed: 06/08/2001

Date Order/Judgment: 06/21/2004

Prior Cases:

None

Current Cases:

None

* * *

07/07/2004	1	FILED ON 7/6/04 ORIGINAL AND 4 PETITIONS FOR PERMISSION TO APPEAL PURSUANT TO RULE 23(f); served on 7/6/04 (MOATT) (BY)

* * *

07/19/2004	4	Received Respondent's opposition to the petition for permission to appeal from order granting class certification and conditional cross-petition; served on 7/19/04 (MOATT) (FT)

07/19/2004	9	Filed Respondent Betty Dukes, Respondent Patricia Surgeson, Respondent Cleo Page, Respondent Deborah Gunter, Respondent Karen Williamson, Respondent Christine Kwapnoski, Respondent Edith Arana response in opposition to the petition for permission to apepal; served on 7/19/04[04-80057] (FT)
07/26/2004	5	Filed Petitioner Wal-Mart Stores, Inc's motion for leave to file reply and reply in support of petition for permission to appeal from order granting class certification; [04-80057] served on 7/26/04 [5129800] (MOATT) [04-80057] (FT)
08/13/2004	6	Order filed: The clerk shall file the letter brief of amicus curiae EEAC rec'd 7/7/04. The motion of Chamber of Commerce of the U.S. for leave to file an amicus curiae brief is granted. The Clerk shall file the amicus curiae brief rec'd 7/14/04. The Clerk shall file respondent's opposition to the petition for permission to appeal rec'd 7/19/04. Petitioners motion for leave to file a reply ro respondents' opposition is granted. The court, in its discretion, grants the petition for permission to appeal the dc's 6/22/04, order granting class action certification. Within 10 days of this order, petitioner shall perfect the appeal in accordance with FRAP 5(d). After the appeal is perfected, the Clerk is directed to expedite the briefing and hearing of the appeal. The provisions of Ninth Circuit Rule 31-2.2(a) shall not apply to this briefing schedule. (Terminated on the Merits after Submission Without Oral Hearing; Other; Written, Unsigned Without Comment, Mary M. SCHROEDER, CONSUELO M. CALLAHAN) [04-80057] (Phoned and faxed; 12:10) (FT)

08/31/2004	10	Filed MOATT order (Mary M. SCHROEDER, CONSUELO M. CALLAHAN,): The crt, in its discretion, grants the cross petition for permission to appeal the dc's 6/22/04, class action order. Within 10 days of this order, aples/respondents shall perfect the x-appeal in accordance with FRAP 5(d). After the x-appeal is perfected, the clk is directed to expedite the briefing & hearing of the x-appeal in accordance with appeal 04-16688. The provisios of 9th Cir. 31-2.2(a) shall not apply to this briefing schedule. [04-16688, 04-80057] (MF)

* * *

U.S. District Court
California Northern District (San Francisco)
CIVIL DOCKET FOR CASE #:
3:01-cv-02252-VRW

Dukes et al v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. Assigned to: Hon. Vaughn R. Walker Referred to: Magistrate Judge Edward M. Chen Member case: (View Member Case) Cause: 28:1332 Diversity-Employment Discrimination	Date Filed: 06/08/2001 Jury Demand: Plaintiff Nature of Suit: 442 Civil Rights: Jobs Jurisdiction: Federal Question

* * *

Date Filed	#	Docket Text
06/08/2001	1	COMPLAINT ; summons issued against Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (Filing fee $150.00 receipt number 3323026). Filed by pro se Betty Dukes. (slh,) (Entered: 06/11/2001)

* * *

06/19/2001	3	FIRST AMENDED COMPLAINT against Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. Filed by Micki Earwood, Kimberly Miller, Stephanie Odle, Sandra Stevenson, Patricia Surgeson, Betty Dukes. (slh) (Entered: 06/20/2001)

* * *

08/10/2001	16	MOTION to Dismiss, or in the alternative, Motion to Transfer Case with Memorandum of Points and Authorities filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. Motion Hearing set for 9/25/2001 09:30 AM. (slh) (Entered: 08/13/2001)

* * *

09/04/2001	28	Memorandum in Opposition re 16 defendant's Motion to Dismiss filed by Betty Dukes, Micki Earwood, Kimberly Miller, Stephanie Odle, Sandra Stevenson, Patricia Surgeson. (slh,) (Entered: 09/07/2001)

* * *

09/12/2001	30	Reply to Opposition re 16 Motion to Dismiss filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 09/14/2001)

* * *

12/03/2001	36	ORDER by Judge Martin J. Jenkins GRANTING IN PART and DENYING IN PART defendant's Motion to Dismiss or alternatively to Transfer Case 16 ; the Court elects to dismiss the improperly venued plaintiffs pursuant to Rule 21, allowing the named California class representatives to litigate this action in this forum; Status Conference set for 12/17/01 at 1:30 PM; Joint status conference statement due not later than 5 days prior to conference. (slh) (Entered: 12/04/2001)

* * *

12/26/2001	40	SECOND AMENDED COMPLAINT against Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. Filed by Betty Dukes, Patricia Surgeson. (slh) (Entered: 01/09/2002)

* * *

01/31/2002	46	ANSWER to Second Amended Complaint by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. (slh) (Entered: 02/01/2002)

* * *

09/12/2002	82	AMENDED COMPLAINT (THIRD) against Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. Filed by Edith Arana, Karen Williamson, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Betty Dukes, Patricia Surgeson. (slh,) (Entered: 09/13/2002)

* * *

11/25/2002	90	ANSWER to Amended

		Complaint (Third) by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 11/25/2002)

* * *

04/28/2003	99	MOTION to Certify Class and Memorandum of Points and Authorities filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. Motion Hearing set for 7/25/2003 10:00 AM. (slh,) (slh, COURT STAFF). (Entered: 04/29/2003)

* * *

06/12/2003	223	Memorandum in Opposition re 99 plaintiff's Motion for Class Certification filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (slh, COURT STAFF). (Entered: 06/16/2003)

* * *

06/12/2003	232	MOTION to Strike Portions of the Declarations of the Named Plaintiffs and Designated Class Members Filed in Support of Plaintiff's Motion for Class Certification filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. Motion Hearing set for 7/25/2003 10:00 AM. (slh,) (Entered: 06/16/2003)

* * *

06/12/2003	263	MOTION to Strike declaration, opinion, and testimony of plaintiffs' expert William T. Bielby, Ph.D. filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. Motion Hearing set for 7/25/2003 10:00 AM. (slh,) (Entered: 06/16/2003)

* * *

06/12/2003	265	MOTION to Strike declaration of Marc Bendick, Jr., Ph.D. filed by Wal- Mart Stores, Inc.. Motion Hearing set for 7/25/2003 10:00 AM. (slh,) (Entered: 06/16/2003)

* * *

06/20/2003	538	MOTION to Strike Declarations of Ten Undisclosed Witnesses filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. Motion Hearing set for 7/25/2003 10:00 AM. (mmt, COURT STAFF) (Entered: 06/25/2003)

* * *

06/20/2003	540	MOTION to Strike Store Manager Declarations and Portions of Declaration of Joan

		Haworth filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. Motion Hearing set for 7/25/2003 10:00 AM. (mmt, COURT STAFF) (Entered: 06/25/2003)

* * *

06/20/2003	542	MOTION to Strike Portions of Haworth Declaration for Failure to Comply with Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(a)(2) filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. Motion Hearing set for 7/25/2003 10:00 AM. (mmt, COURT STAFF) (Entered: 06/25/2003)

* * *

07/03/2003	546	Memorandum in Opposition re 540 plaintiff's Motion to Strike Store Manager Declarations and Portions of Declaration of Joan Haworth filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 07/10/2003)

* * *

07/03/2003	549	Memorandum in Opposition re 538 plaintiff's Motion to Strike

		Declarations of Ten Undisclosed Witnesses filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 07/10/2003)

* * *

07/03/2003	551	Memorandum in Opposition re 542 plaintiff's Motion to Strike Portions of Haworth Declaration for Failure to Comply with Fed.R. Civ.P.26(a)(2) filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 07/10/2003)

* * *

07/03/2003	557	Memorandum in Opposition re 232 defendant's Motion to Strike Portions of the Declarations of the Named Plaintiffs and Designated Class Members Filed in Support of Motion for Class Certification filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh,) (Entered: 07/10/2003)

* * *

07/03/2003	559	Memorandum in Opposition re 263 defendant's Daubert Motion Strike declaration, opinion, and testimony of plaintiffs' expert William T. Bielby, Ph.D. filed by

		Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh,) (Entered: 07/10/2003)

* * *

07/03/2003	562	Reply Memorandum to Motion re 99 Motion for Class Certification filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh,) (Entered: 07/10/2003)

* * *

07/03/2003	567	Memorandum in Opposition re 265 defendant's Motion to Strike declaration of Marc Bendick, Jr., Ph.D. filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh,) (Entered: 07/10/2003)

* * *

07/11/2003	570	Memorandum in Opposition re 99 : SURREPLY in Opposition to Motion for Class Certification filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 07/14/2003)

* * *

07/11/2003	575	MOTION to Strike Portion of declaration of Dr. Richard Drogin in support of plaintiff's Reply Brief in support of class certification filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. Motion Hearing set for 7/25/2003 10:00 AM. (slh,) (Entered: 07/14/2003)
07/11/2003	576	Reply Memorandum to Motion re 265 Motion to Strike declaration of Marc Bendick, Jr. Ph.D. filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 07/14/2003)

* * *

07/11/2003	578	Reply Memorandum to Motion re 263 Motion to Strike declaration, opinion, and testimony of plaintiffs' expert William T. Bielby, Ph.D filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 07/14/2003)

* * *

07/11/2003	580	Reply Memorandum to Motion re 232 Motion to Strike Portions of the Declarations of the Named Plaintiffs and Designated Class Members Filed in Support of Plaintiff's Motion for Class Certification filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered:

		07/14/2003)

* * *

07/11/2003	582	ERRATA re 551 Opposition to plaintiff's Motion to Stirke Portions of Haworth declaration for failure to comply with Fed.R.Civ.P.26(a)(2) by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh,) (Entered: 07/14/2003)

* * *

07/11/2003	586	Reply Memorandum to Motion re 538 Motion to Strike Declarations of Ten Undisclosed Witnesses filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh,) (Entered: 07/14/2003)

* * *

07/11/2003	588	Reply Memorandum to Motion re 542 Motion to Strike Store Manager Declarations and Portions of Declaration of Joan Haworth filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh,) (Entered: 07/14/2003)

* * *

07/11/2003	590	Reply Memorandum to Motion re 542 Motion to Strike Portions of Haworth Declaration for Failure to Comply with Fed.R.Civ.P. 26(a)(2) filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh,) (Entered: 07/14/2003)

* * *

07/14/2003	595	Memorandum in Opposition re 575 defendant's Motion to Strike filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh,) (Entered: 07/15/2003)

* * *

09/24/2003	613	Minute Entry: Motion Hearing held on 9/25/2003 before Judge Jenkins; that the Motion for Class Certification 99 is submitted; Court to issue Order. (Court Reporter - Sahar Demos.) (slh, COURT STAFF) (Entered: 09/26/2003)

* * *

10/29/2003	618	TRANSCRIPT for dates 9/24/03 (C/R: Sahar McVickar). (slh, COURT STAFF) (Entered: 10/30/2003)

* * *

06/21/2004	634	ORDER by Judge Martin J. Jenkins GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART plaintiff's Motion for Class Certification 99 ; the Court certifies the following class for purposes of liability, injunctive and declaratory relief, punitive damages, and lost pay, except that class members for whom there is no available objective data documenting their interest in challenged promotions shall be limited to injunctive and declaratory relief with respect to plaintiffs' promotion claim: All women employed at any Wal-Mart domestic retail store at any time since 12/26/98, who have been or may be subjected to Wal-Mart's challenged pay and management track promotions policies and practices; this action shall be bifurcated into separate liability and remedy phases; the individual racial discrimination claims asserted by named plaintiffs Betty Dukes and Cleo Page shall be severed from the class case;

		Status Conference set for 7/28/04 at 2:00 PM; Joint Status Statmement due 10 days prior to conference. (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 6/21/2004) (Entered: 06/22/2004)

* * *

06/21/2004	635	ORDER by Judge Martin J. Jenkins GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART plaintiffs' and defendant's Motions to Strike Expert and Non-Expert Testimony; DENYING defendant's Motion to Strike portions of the declarations of the named plaintiffs and designated class members 232 ; DENYING defendant's Motion to Strike declaration of plaintiffs' expert William T. Bielby 263 ; DENYING defendant's Motion to Strike declaration of Marc Bendick Jr. 265 ; DENYING plaintiff's Motion to Strike store manager declarations 540 ; GRANTING IN PART AND DENYING IN PART plaintiff's Motion to Strike portions of Joan Haworth declaration 542 ; GRANTING defendant's Motion to Strike portion of declaration of Dr. Richard Drogin 575 . (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 6/21/2004) (Entered: 06/22/2004)

* * *

07/26/2004	640	MOTION to Stay Disclosures and Discovery Pending Appellate Resolution of Walmart's Petition for permission to appeal from order granting class certification filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. Motion Hearing set for 8/31/2004 09:30 AM. (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 7/26/2004) (Entered: 07/29/2004)

* * *

08/26/2004	647	ORDER of USCA granting the petition for permission to appeal the District Court's 6/22/04 order 635 granting class action certification. (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 8/26/2004) (Entered: 08/30/2004)

* * *

09/03/2004	648	Memorandum in Opposition re 640 MOTION to Stay filed by Edith Arana, Betty Dukes, Deborah Gunter, Christine Kwapnoski, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Karen Williamson. (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 9/3/2004) (Entered: 09/10/2004)

* * *

09/15/2004	654	Reply Brief in support of 640

		Motion to Stay filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 9/15/2004) (Entered: 09/20/2004)

* * *

09/27/2004	665	ORDER Staying Disclosures and Discovery Pending Appellate Resolution by Judge Martin J. Jenkins granting. (mat, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 9/27/2004) (Entered: 09/27/2004)

* * *

02/23/2009	707	ORDER of USCA as to 647 Notice of Appeal filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 667 Notice of Cross Appeal filed by Edith Arana, Christine Kwapnoski, Betty Dukes, Karen Williamson, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Deborah Gunter (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 2/23/2009) (Entered: 02/23/2009)
03/19/2009	708	ORDER of USCA as to 647 Notice of Appeal filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 667 Notice of Cross Appeal, filed by Edith Arana, Christine Kwapnoski, Betty Dukes, Karen Williamson, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Deborah Gunter (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 3/19/2009) (Entered: 03/19/2009)

06/19/2009	709	Record on Appeal Certified and Transmitted to US Court of Appeals re 647 Notice of Appeal (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 6/19/2009) (Entered: 06/19/2009)
05/10/2010	710	USCA Opinion as to 647 Notice of Appeal filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., 667 Notice of Cross Appeal, filed by Edith Arana, Christine Kwapnoski, Betty Dukes, Karen Williamson, Cleo Page, Patricia Surgeson, Deborah Gunter. (slh, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 5/10/2010) (Entered: 05/10/2010)

* * *

06/04/2010	713	Appeal Record Returned (far, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 6/4/2010) (Entered: 06/08/2010)

* * *

09/07/2010	718	SUPREME COURT LETTER.(far, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 9/7/2010) (Entered: 09/07/2010)
09/07/2010	719	WRIT OF CERTIORARI. (far, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 9/7/2010) (Entered: 09/07/2010)
09/16/2010	720	Joint MOTION to Stay Joint Motion to Extend Stay of All Proceedings Pending Supreme Court Review filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. Motion Hearing set for 9/30/2010 10:00 AM in Courtroom 6, 17th Floor, San Francisco. (Attachments: #1 Proposed Order Proposed Order Granting Joint Motion to Extend Stay of All Proceedings Pending Supreme Court Review) (Boutrous, Theodore) (Filed on 9/16/2010) (Entered: 09/16/2010)

* * *

09/17/2010	724	ORDER by Judge Vaughn R. Walker granting 720 Motion to Extend Stay of all proceedings. (rbe, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 9/17/2010) (Entered: 09/17/2010)
12/21/2010	725	JOINT MOTION to Extend Stay of All Proceedings Pending Supreme Court Review filed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.. Motion Hearing set for 12/30/2010 10:00 AM in Courtroom 6, 17th Floor, San Francisco before Hon. Vaughn R. Walker. (Attachments: #1 Proposed Order Proposed Order)(Boutrous, Theodore) (Filed on 12/21/2010) Modified on 12/22/2010 (far, COURT STAFF). (Entered: 12/21/2010)

* * *

12/23/2010	728	ORDER granting 725 Motion to Stay. Accordingly, all proceedings in this case shall remain stayed until the earlier of: 30 days after the Supreme Court's ruling on Wal-Mart's appeal or 8/26/2011. (vrwlc3, COURT STAFF) (Filed on 12/23/2010) (Entered: 12/23/2010)

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ PLAINTIFFS' THIRD AMENDED COMPLAINT [CLASS ACTION] DEMAND FOR JURY TRIAL

INTRODUCTION

1. Wal-Mart is the largest retailer in the world and the largest private employer in the United States. Through its Wal-Mart and Sam's Club divisions, it is the industry leader not only in size, but also in its failure to advance its female employees. There are two workforces at Wal-Mart. By far the largest workforce is female, which comprises over 72% of the hourly sales employees, yet only one-third of management positions. This workforce is predominantly assigned to the lowest paying positions with the least chance of advancement. The other workforce is male. This workforce is the reverse image of the female workforce – it comprises less than 28% of the hourly sales workers, yet holds two-thirds of all store management positions and over 90% of the top Store Manager positions. This disparate distribution of the genders is the result of purposeful discrimination and of practices that serve no reasonable business purpose yet have a disproportionate impact on women.

2. This class action is accordingly brought by present and former Wal-Mart employees on behalf of themselves and all other similarly situated women who have been subjected to Wal-Mart's continuing policies and practices of gender discrimination. Plaintiffs, and the class that they represent, charge that Wal-Mart discriminates against its female employees by advancing male employees more quickly than female employees, by denying female employees equal job assignments, promotions, training and compensation, and by retaliating against those who oppose its unlawful practices.

3. This action seeks an end to Wal-Mart's discriminatory practices, make whole relief for the class, and punitive damages.

JURISDICTION AND VENUE

4. Plaintiffs' claims arise under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000e, et seq. This Court has jurisdiction over this matter pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e5(f), 28 U.S.C. §§ 1331 and 1343(a)(4). The Court has supplemental jurisdiction pursuant to 28 U.S.C. 1367 over claims under the California Fair Employment & Housing Act, Government Code § 12920, et. seq.

5. Venue is proper in this district pursuant to 42 U.S.C. § 2000e5(f) and 28 U.S.C. § 1391(b) & (c). Named plaintiffs' claims arose in California. Mem bers of the plaintiffs' class reside throughout the United States, including the Northern District of California. Many of the acts complained of herein occurred in this District and gave rise to the claims alleged. Wal-Mart operates over 140 stores and Sam's Clubs in California where it employs more than 40,000 workers. It operates at least 18 stores in the Northern District of California.

PARTIES

6. Plaintiff Betty Dukes is an African American woman and a resident of Contra Costa County, California. She is currently employed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.

7. Plaintiff Patricia Surgeson is a woman and a resident of Solano County, California. She was employed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. from August 1997 to March 2001. Plaintiffs are informed and believe she is eligible for rehire.

8. Plaintiff Cleo Page is an African American woman and a resident of Tulsa, Oklahoma. She was employed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. in Livermore, California from approximately December 1999 to November 2000. Plaintiffs are informed and believe she is eligible for rehire.

9. Plaintiff Christine Kwapnoski is a woman and a resident of Concord, California. She has been employed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. since 1986, and has worked for a Sam's Club in Concord, California since 1994. She continues to work at that Sam's Club.

10. Plaintiff Deborah Gunter is a woman and a resident of Riverside County, California. She was employed by Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. from April 1996 until August 1999. Plaintiffs are informed and believe she is eligible for rehire.

11. Plaintiff Karen Williamson is a woman and a resident of Butte County, California. She was employed by Wal-Mart from 1995 to October 1999 at the Wal-Mart store in Pleasanton, California.

12. Plaintiff Edith Arana is an African American woman and a resident of Los Angeles County. She was employed by Wal-Mart from 1995 until October 2001.

13. Defendant Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. is a Delaware corporation with stores throughout California. Its corporate headquarters are located in Arkansas. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. operates retail stores doing business as Wal-Mart, Wal-Mart Supercenters and Sam's Club Stores.

CLASS ALLEGATIONS

14. Plaintiffs bring this action pursuant to Rule 23 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure on behalf of a class of all past, present and future female employees of Wal-Mart's retail stores (including Wal-Mart discount, supercenter and neighborhood markets and Sam's Club stores, hereinafter collectively referred to as "Wal-Mart") in the United States. Plaintiffs are members of the class they seek to represent.

15. The members of the class are sufficiently numerous that joinder of all members is impracticable. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that the class exceeds 700,000 present and former female employees of Wal-Mart.

16. There are questions of law and fact common to the class and these questions predominate over individual questions. Such questions include, without limitation, whether defendant's common operating practices and procedures discriminate against its female employees; whether defendant's policies have an adverse impact upon the class and, if so, whether this impact can be justified by business necessity; whether defendant has a policy and practice of retaliating against class members who object to or oppose unlawful employment practices; and whether injunctive and other equitable remedies and punitive damage relief for the class is warranted.

17. The claims alleged by the plaintiffs are typical of the claims of the class.

18. The named plaintiffs will fairly and adequately represent and protect the interests of the class.

19. This action is properly maintainable under both Federal Rule of Civil Procedure Rule 23(b)(2) and (3) because defendant has acted or refused to act on grounds generally applicable to the class, thereby making appropriate final injunctive relief or corresponding declarative relief with respect to the class as a whole; and because questions of law and fact common to the class predominate over any questions affecting only individual members, and a class action is superior to other available methods for the fair and efficient adjudication of this case. This action is also properly maintainable under Rule 23(c)(4)(A) for all class issues alleged herein.

WAL-MART'S OPERATION AND ITS GENERAL PRACTICE OF DISCRIMINATION

20. Wal-Mart is the largest private employer in the United States and the world's largest retailer. Through its Wal-Mart and Sam's Club divisions, it operates over 3000 stores across the country, encompassing every state. There are so many Wal-Mart locations in the United States that, according to Wal-Mart, the average store is within 30 miles of the next Wal-Mart store. In the United States, Wal-Mart employs nearly one million "associates," Wal-Mart's term for its hourly employees. In its last fiscal year, it had sales exceeding $200 billion. It claims that it has 100 million customers each week.

21. Wal-Mart employs uniform employment and personnel policies throughout the United States. All of its stores are linked by state-of-the-art electronic and video communications, through which all stores regularly report payroll, labor and other employment data. Regardless of division, there are uniform policies for employees, uniform "orientation" procedures, uniform salary, assignment, pay, training, and promotion policies. All stores are regularly audited for compliance with these uniform, company-wide policies and procedures.

22. The vast majority of Wal-Mart store employees are hourly paid sales associates, who report to department heads. Each store has a number of assistant managers who have different functional responsibilities, one or more co-managers and a store manager. District and regional managers supervise the stores.

23. Few objective requirements or qualifications for specific store assignments, promotions, or raises exist. Salaries are supposed to conform to general company guidelines, but store management has substantial discretion in setting salary levels within salary ranges for each employee. Salaries are also adjusted based on performance reviews, which are largely based on subjective judgments of performance. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that Wal-Mart policy prohibits employees from exchanging information about their salary levels.

24. The hourly sales workforce at Wal-Mart is predominantly female, representing over 72% of all hourly employees. Yet, male and female employees are not evenly distributed among the departments in the store. In some departments and positions, such as furniture, garden, electronics, hardware, sporting goods, guns, produce, paper goods and chemicals, and stocking, males are disproportionately assigned. In other departments and positions, such as cashier, customer service, health and beauty aids, cosmetics, house wares, stationery, toys, layaway, fabrics and clothes, women are disproportionately assigned. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that the male-dominated departments and jobs are better paid and offer greater opportunities for advancement than the female-dominated positions and departments.

25. Male employees are more likely than female employees to obtain "cross-training" in other departments or to receive training and support to enter into departments that would aid their advancement.

26. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that female employees are paid less than male employees who perform substantially similar work, with similar or lesser skills and experience. Plaintiffs are further informed and believe that segregated assignment patterns exacerbate such unequal pay, because men are more likely to be assigned to departments that pay better than departments to which women are assigned.

27. Although women comprise the substantial majority of all hourly employees, the source from which most managers are drawn, their representation in management is the polar opposite. Women hold only about one-third of the positions that Wal-Mart identifies as management. However, even this figure overstates the proportion of female managers in true management positions. Thus the "one third" of management positions held by women includes traditionally "female" positions, such as assistant managers whose primary responsibility is supervising cashiers, and the lowest level of managers. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that women comprise less than 10% of all Store Managers and approximately 4% of all District Managers. There are very few female Regional Managers. There is only one woman among the 20 executive officers of the company. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that even when women are promoted, on average they are advanced later, and then more slowly, than similarly situated male employees.

28. The workforce profile of Wal-Mart does not reflect the industry or the profile of its largest competitors. In fact, although it is the largest discount retailer in the country, it lags far behind its competitors in the promotion of women. Thus, while Wal-Mart's store management is only about one-third female, among its 20 top competitors women comprise over 56% of management, even though the proportion of hourly workers that are female at these companies is comparable to Wal-Mart. These differences are consistently found around the country. Moreover, these differences are longstanding. In fact, female representation among managers at Wal-Mart is at a substantially lower level today than the level of representation among Wal-Mart's competitors in 1975.

29. This pattern of unequal assignments, pay, training, and advancement opportunities is not the result of random or non-discriminatory factors. Rather, it is the result of an on-going and continuous pattern and practice of intentional sex discrimination in assignments, pay, training and promotions, and reliance on policies and practices that have an adverse impact on female employees that cannot be justified by business necessity, and for which alternative policies and practices with less discriminatory impact could be utilized that equally serve any asserted justification. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that such policies and practices include, without limitation:

a. Failure to consistently post job and promotional openings to ensure that all employees have notice of and an opportunity to seek advancement or more desirable assignments and training.

b. Reliance upon unweighted, arbitrary and subjective criteria utilized by a nearly all male managerial workforce in making assignments, training, pay, performance review and promotional decisions. Even where Wal-Mart policy states objective requirements, these requirements are often applied in an inconsistent manner and ignored at the discretion of management.

c. Reliance on gender stereotypes in making employment decisions such as assignments, promotions, pay and training.

d. Pre-selection and "grooming" of male employees for advancement, favorable assignments and training.

e. Maintenance of largely sex-segregated job categories and departments.

f. Deterrence and discouragement of female employees from seeking advancement, training, and favorable assignments and pay.

g. Paying female employees lower compensation than similarly situated men.

h. Assigning women to lower paying positions, and positions with lesser advancement potential than those given to men, and advancing women more slowly than similarly situated male employees.

i. Providing less training and support to female employees and managers than that given to male employees and managers.

j. Harassing female employees interested in advancement and subjecting them to a hostile work environment.

k. Requiring, as a condition of promotion to management jobs, that employees be willing to relocate, often to significantly distant stores, and applying this policy to require frequent and substantial relocations of its managers without any reasonable business justification. Plaintiffs are further informed and believe that the relocation policy is applied disparately between male and female employees, to the disadvantage of female employees.

l. Retaliating against female employees who have complained either internally or externally about Wal-Mart's treatment of its female employees. Wal-Mart maintains a company-wide, toll free telephone number, which it encourages employees to use if they have a problem or complaint in their store or with store management. Plaintiffs are informed and believe that Wal-Mart retaliates against women who use this number to report discrimination, sexual harassment or other unfair working conditions.

ALLEGATIONS OF NAMED PLAINTIFFS

BETTY DUKES

30. Betty Dukes is an African American woman currently employed in Wal-Mart store #1615, located in Pittsburg, California. She was hired as a part-time front-end cashier at the Pittsburg store in May 1994. Within one year after her hire date, Ms. Dukes received an excellent 90-day review, a promotion to full-time status and a merit pay raise. She was promoted to Customer Service Manager in June 1997, which also included an increase in salary.

31. In September 1997, Ms. Dukes began to experience harsh and discriminatory treatment from head Customer Service Manager Leilani (Lonnie) Barrett and male Store Manager Ken Cagle. In November 1997, she complained to male District Manager Chuck Salby about the discriminatory treatment.

32. After she complained, Ms. Dukes experienced retaliation from Wal-Mart store management, beginning with a disciplinary write-up on February 13, 1998, for returning late from her breaks, even though male and/or Caucasian employees returned late from their breaks or failed to clock out for breaks and were not disciplined. Ms. Dukes was also written up on March 31, 1998, for having a front-end cashier cover her lunch break, even though she had used this procedure many times before without incident and Caucasian employees used this procedure without being reprimanded. Ms. Dukes complained to male District Manager Jay King but he simply referred her back to the store manager.

33. On June 29, 1999, Ms. Dukes called in sick. Store Manager Cagle reacted in a highly negative and unprofessional way towards her request, even though she was entitled to use sick leave. Ms. Dukes called the district management office about Cagle and, ultimately, she spoke with the male Loss Prevention District Manager Charles Chibante. Only after she threatened to make a complaint to the Wal-Mart home office in Arkansas did she receive a reluctant apology from Store Manager Cagle. However, Cagle's apology only served to escalate the retaliation.

34. In July of 1999, Ms. Dukes expressed interest in becoming a department manager by requesting of Ken Cagle that she receive training for that position, but she was never given the opportunity to be trained. Rather, shortly thereafter on August 14, 1999, Plaintiff was demoted from Customer Service Manager to cashier and falsely accused of violating company policy while performing a transaction that had been performed many times by Plaintiff and other employees without incident. The demotion was Wal-Mart's retaliation for Plaintiff's numerous complaints of discrimination.

35. On August 18, 1999, Ms. Dukes traveled to the Wal-Mart District Office in Livermore and made a complaint to male Wal-Mart District Manager John Scatlin about her demotion and her concerns about employment discrimination at the Pittsburg

Wal-Mart store. Wal-Mart took no steps to address Dukes' concerns.

36. As a result of the demotion, Plaintiff became ineligible for several promotions to positions that she was qualified to perform from August 1999 to August 2000, the year following the demotion. For example, a support manager position was filled in July or August 2000 by Rosa Trevino (Hispanic female). Between July and September 2000, the position of Domestics Department Manager was open and filled by Joseph Topasna (Filipino male). As a result of the demotion, Ms. Dukes' hours and hourly wage were reduced.

37. After August 14, 2000, when Ms. Dukes once again became eligible for promotion, at least four department manager and/or support manager positions at the Pittsburg store were filled by men. None of these positions was posted. Between October and December 2000, Richard Morales (Hispanic male) was promoted from night receiving stocker to night support manager. In November 2000, Joseph Topasna (Filipino male) was promoted to support manager. Between October and December 2000 Robert (Aaron) Mendez (Hispanic male) was promoted to support manager. In December 2000 or January 2001, Will Martines (Caucasian male) filled the position of Department Manager for Tire Lube Express (TLE).

38. After the demotion, Ms. Dukes was discouraged from seeking other positions because of the way she and other women had been treated by Wal-Mart. Dukes did not apply for three department manager positions open after August 14, 2000 (Hardware, Over The Counter Pharmacy and Stationery) because she was discouraged after the discriminatory treatment she and other women received from Wal-Mart managers.

39. Furthermore, Ms. Dukes' knowledge of Wal-Mart's discriminatory practices against other women at the Pittsburg store also discouraged her from seeking a promotion. In June of 2000, Brooke Terrell (African American female) was demoted from department manager to a sales floor position, although she continued to fulfill the responsibilities of a department manager until a replacement was found. The department manager position vacated by Terrell was filled by Kevin Sims (African American male). In 2000, Trina Wallace (African American female) was demoted from a department manager position to a sales floor position and later terminated. The department manager position vacated by Wallace was ultimately filled by Kendall Dimery (African American male). In 1999, Darla Harper (Caucasian woman) was denied a department manager job in which she had expressed an interest. Without posting this position, Wal-Mart selected Spencer Ostrom (Caucasian male) to fill this position.

40. On or about June 1, 2000, Dukes filed a charge of discrimination with the California Department of Fair Employment & Housing (DFEH), a copy of which is attached hereto as Exhibit 1 and incorporated by reference. On June 15, 2000, she received a right to sue letter, and commenced this action in a timely manner.

41. On or about May 2, 2001, Dukes submitted a charge of discrimination to the United States Equal Opportunity Commission (EEOC), a copy of which is attached as Exhibit 2 and incorporated by reference. She received a right to sue letter on or about May 22, 2001 and commenced this action in a timely manner.

PATRICIA SURGESON

42. Patricia Surgeson was hired by Wal-Mart in Vacaville, California in August 1997 as a sales associate. She was assigned to the Tire and Lube Express department and, within two weeks of her hire, was subjected to sexually harassing remarks and touching by a co-worker. After reporting the harassment, she was transferred to the health and beauty aids department. She repeatedly applied to transfer to other positions but was denied.

43. In November 1998, Surgeson was assigned to the Lay-Away Department. In approximately May 1999, she was made the Lay-Away Department manager. Because she was assuming additional responsibilities, her Store Manager promised her a raise. Despite repeated requests, Surgeson was never given the promised raise.

44. In late 1999, the Store Manager decided that the Lay-Away Department no longer needed a manager. Ms. Surgeson's department manager title was taken away but she was expected to continue performing manager responsibilities. When she left the department, a male employee who was given the position and title of Lay-Away Department Manager replaced her. He was paid more than Ms. Surgeson had been paid for working in the same position with the same responsibilities.

45. In June or July 2000, Ms. Surgeson was moved to a position in the Cash Office. Although she assumed greater responsibilities, she again did not receive a raise. She was expected to work overtime without lunches or breaks, locked in the cash office.

In her position, she became aware that many male employees were being paid more than she was, although they had worked at Wal-Mart for less time and had less responsibility.

46. In January 2001, she requested a merit increase. Her request was ignored for two months.

47. Ms. Surgeson was interested in attending the assistant manager-training program and in being promoted to assistant manager. She asked one of her managers for information about how to qualify for the program, as she had not seen any information posted about such opportunities. The manager provided only a vague response.

48. As a result of the discriminatory pay and working conditions, Ms. Surgeson resigned in March 2001.

49. On or about May 14, 2001, Surgeson filed a charge of discrimination with the EEOC, a copy of which is attached hereto as Exhibit 3 and incorporated by reference. The EEOC issued a notice of right to sue on May 31, 2001, and this action was timely commenced thereafter.

CLEO PAGE

50. Cleo Page worked at the Wal-Mart store in Livermore, California from approximately October 1998 to late November 2000. Before joining the Livermore store, Page had worked as a cashier and Customer Service Manager at a Wal-Mart Supercenter store in Tulsa, Oklahoma and, briefly, as a sales associate in the Returns Department at a Wal-Mart store in Union City, California. Page had substantial retail experience before joining Wal-Mart.

51. Page initially worked as an associate in the Returns Department at the Livermore store but, within weeks, was promoted to Customer Service Manager.

52. In late December 1999, Page applied for a Department Manager position in the Men's Department. She was interviewed by an Assistant Manager. During the interview, the Assistant Manager stated to Page that it was a man's world and that men control managerial positions at Wal-Mart. Although Page was offered the Department Manager position, Wal-Mart later rescinded the offer and selected a Caucasian female.

53. Page complained to her Store Manager that she was denied the Department Manager position. Page informed her Store Manager that she wanted to make Wal-Mart her career and that she wanted to be promoted to a management position. The Store Manager informed Page that she needed to obtain more training and promised to assist her in obtaining that training. Despite this promise, at no time during her employment at Wal-Mart did Page receive training to become a manager. Shortly thereafter, the Department Manager position for which Page was rejected reopened and Page was promoted into that position. Three weeks later, Page was transferred to Department Manager in the Boy's Department.

54. In approximately June 2000, Page applied for a Support Manager position. Despite her previous retail experience, Page was not selected. Instead, Wal-Mart selected a Caucasian male for that position.

55. In approximately August 2000, Page learned that there were two Support Manager positions that were open. Page informed her Store Manager that she had previously applied for the position and was interested in being considered again. Once again, Page was not selected for a Support Manager position. Instead, a Latina and a Caucasian female were selected. The Store Manager explained to Page that the reason she was not selected was because she needed training and experience working in a larger department. At no time did the Store Manager assist Page in obtaining training to become a manager.

56. In approximately October 2000, Page asked for but did not receive assistance from other employees to complete a project that she was unable to complete on her own. When Page left work at the end of her shift without completing the project, a male Caucasian Assistant Manager threatened to terminate her. Another Caucasian male employee informed Page that he had done something similar for which he had never been reprimanded.

57. In approximately November 2000, Page became aware that there was an opening for a Department Manager in Sporting Goods. Page was discouraged from applying for the position because the Store Manager told Page that she wanted a man in that position because customers felt more comfortable buying sporting goods from a man. A Caucasian male was selected as the new Department Manager in Sporting Goods.

58. In approximately November 2000, Page learned that she was earning at least $4 an hour less than the male Department Manager in Sporting Goods, despite the fact that Page had more seniority than he.

59. Throughout her employment at Wal-Mart, Page expressed her interest in being promoted to management. Despite her interest and experience, she was never considered for an Assistant Manager position or given training to become a manager.

60. During Page's employment at the Livermore Wal-Mart store, male employees, including an Assistant Manager, made derogatory remarks about women, such as complaining that men were "outnumbered by women" and that "women were taking over." In addition, male employees often asked other male employees whether they knew of men who would be interested in working at Wal-Mart.

61. On or about August 31, 2001, Ms. Page filed a charge of discrimination with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC) and with the California Department of Fair Employment and Housing (DFEH), a copy of which is attached hereto as Exhibit 4 and incorporated by reference. The DFEH issued a right to sue letter on or about September 12, 2001. She also received a right to sue letter from the EEOC on or about February 14, 2002.

CHRIS KWAPNOSKI

62. Chris Kwapnoski was hired by Wal-Mart in 1986, and was originally assigned to a Sam's Club in Missouri. Ms. Kwapnoski worked as a cashier in the cash office and in claims.

63. While at the Sam's Club in Missouri, Ms. Kwapnoski was sent to help open a new Sam's Club in Concord, California. Ms. Kwapnoski was encouraged to transfer permanently to the Concord store. Both her abilities and her work ethic were praised.

64. In 1994, Ms. Kwapnoski transferred to the Sam's Club in Concord, California. She worked in auditing, freezer departments, claims, and in receiving. She repeatedly made it known to the general managers at the Sam's Club and to the District Op erations Manager that she sought a team leader position and an area manager position. These jobs were not posted to permit formal applications. Instead, these positions, as they became open, were repeatedly given to men who were less qualified than Ms. Kwapnoski. Ms. Kwapnoski was required to train several of these men in order for them to assume the responsibilities of the position. Ms. Kwapnoski also observed men receiving higher rates of pay and more frequent increases in their pay rates.

65. Ms. Kwapnoski was told by the store manager that she "needed to blow the cobwebs off" her make-up and "doll up". When Ms. Kwapnoski questioned why a male employee received a large raise, she was told it was because he had a family to support.

66. Ms. Kwapnoski has requested upon more than one occasion the opportunity to join the "Management-in-Training" program, but has been denied this opportunity. In 1999, she was finally made a team leader, an hourly position. In June 2001, Ms. Kwapnoski was made a receiving area coach/manager. Since that date, she has continued to request an opportunity to assume greater managerial positions and receive managerial training, as well as attend management meetings. These requests had been denied.

67. Ms. Kwapnoski filed a Charge of Discrimination with the EEOC on or about February 15, 2002, a copy of which is attached hereto as exhibit 5 and incorporated by reference. She received a right to sue notice in March 2002.

DEBORAH GUNTER

68. Deborah Gunter was hired in April 1996 as a Photo Lab Clerk in Wal-Mart Store #2028 in Riverside, California. She had 30 years of prior retail experience.

69. While employed at Store #2028, Ms. Grunter applied several times for the position of Pets Department Manager between the time she began her employment in 1996 and approximately March 1998. Ms. Gunter was particularly interested in this position because of her extensive experience breeding and raising show dogs. She never received the promotion, although the store Night Manager recommended her for the position. The first time Ms. Gunter applied, a male employee with less experience was given the position. The second time she applied, a male employee with less experience was given the position.

70. In the fall of 1996, Ms. Gunter was transferred to the position of Night Stocker. While employed as a Night Stocker, Ms. Gunter learned that the male employees in the Receiving Department earned a higher wage than the female employees in the department.

71. In March 1998, Ms. Gunter transferred to a position as Service Clerk in the Tire Lube Express Department of Store #1747 in Perris, California after the Perris Store Manager requested that she transfer there.

72. While employed at the Perris store from March 1998 until March 1999, Ms. Gunter performed the duties of Support Manager to the Tire Lube Express Department without the title or salary for that position. On numerous occasions, she requested training from the Tire Lube Express Manager and from the District Manager. She never received the training. The Tire Lube Express Manager told her she did not have sufficient training to fill the position of Support Manager. She again requested additional training and was denied it. Ms. Gunter requested a promotion and pay increase from the Tire Lube Express Manager, but did not receive the promotion.

73. Ms. Gunter trained two male employees in the job responsibilities of Support Manager for the Tire Lube Express Department. After training each male employee, the male employee was promoted to Support Manager. Beginning in the summer of 1998, Ms. Gunter was subjected to sexually harassing remarks by the Tire Lube Express Manager. She complained to the Store Manager in December 1998 and January 1999. However, corrective action was not taken and Ms. Gunter's complaints were ignored. Subsequently, her hours were reduced.

74. Ms. Gunter transferred to Store #2077 in Lake Elsinore, California in March 1999 with the belief that she would get more hours. At the Lake Elsinore store, Ms. Gunter was employed as a Cashier/Clerk in the Tire Lube Express Department. As she had done in the Perris store, she trained a male employee in the job responsibilities of Support Manager for the Tire Lube Express Department. After she trained him, the male employee was promoted to Support Manager, whereas Ms. Gunter's hours were reduced yet again.

75. Ms. Gunter complained to the Tire Lube Express Manager after her hours were reduced. She also requested a meeting with the District Manager to complain about the discriminatory treatment. In August 1999, on the day that the meeting was scheduled, the Store Manager informed her that she had been terminated and handed Gunter her remaining wages and vacation pay.

76. On at least one occasion, Ms. Gunter called Wal-Mart headquarters to request assistance with the difficulties she was having on the job. She never received a reply.

KAREN WILLIAMSON

77. Karen Williamson was hired by Wal-Mart in 1995 to work at the Wal-Mart store in Pleasanton, California, where she remained employed until October 21, 1999. She was hired before the store was opened, and her original job assignment was to help prepare the store for opening. As a part of that assignment, Ms. Williamson was one of eight employees selected to review all merchandise as it arrived, and one of four employees selected to do a computerized scan and inventory of the entire store. Accordingly, Ms. Williamson was one of the first of the hourly employees at the Pleasanton store to be trained on the handheld computer used for such operations and for departmental inventories, orders, and controls.

78. Upon the opening of the new store, Ms. Williamson was assigned to work in three departments: Infants, Boys, and Girls. She was trained to operate the cash register.

79. At her initial evaluation, Ms. Williamson was told she would receive training and become a department manager at some time in the future. During her employment at Wal-Mart, she was interested in obtaining departmental and higher management positions.

80. Ms. Williamson was assigned to several departments over the course of her tenure at Wal-Mart, including Electronics, Housewares and Small Appliances. She also worked in Health and Beauty Aids, Cosmetics, Seasonal Products, Foods, Paper Goods, Pets, and Household Chemicals, helping as needed. She occasionally worked on the cash register. The last department to which she was assigned was Stationery, Books/Greeting Cards and Party Supplies [hereinafter "Stationery"]. During the time in which Ms. Williamson was assigned to Stationery, there was more than one extended period of time in which there was no department manager, and Ms. Williamson was expected to and did perform all the tasks of the department manager.

81. Ms. Williamson made it known repeatedly throughout her employment at Wal-Mart that she sought the position of department manager. She expressed this orally and in writing to the Store Manager on several occasions. She applied through the Wal-Mart computerized procedure. Despite these repeated requests for promotion, Ms. Williamson never received a promotion.

82. Ms. Williamson was qualified to be a department manager. She was often called upon to train recently promoted department managers, and to help out wherever needed. She was recognized on the Wal-Mart "Honor Roll". She had good performance evaluations. Ms. Williamson was never promoted and instead watched men with equal or lesser seniority and equal or lesser qualifications receive promotions. Ms. Williamson did not have the opportunity to apply for some of the promotions, which men received, because the positions were not posted.

EDITH ARANA

83. Edith Arana is an African-American woman who was hired by Wal-Mart Store #2401 in Duarte, California, on September 5, 1995. During her employment, she held the positions of Personnel Manager, Closing Sales Associate, and Inventory Clerk. Prior to working at Wal-Mart, Ms. Arana had nine years of retail experience.

84. In December 1997, Ms. Arana told the Store Manager that she wanted to apply for the assistant manager-training program. He informed Ms. Arana that he would recommend her to the District Manager for the training program. However, he did not give Ms. Arana's name to the District Manager. The Store Manager then said he would recommend Ms. Arana the next time the District Manager asked for names for the training program. However, to her knowledge, he never submitted her name.

85. In October 1999, Ms. Arana applied for the position of Paper Goods and Chemicals Department Manager. Although Ms. Arana understood that Wal-Mart's policy is to interview every applicant, she was not interviewed. A male employee was selected to fill the position.

86. Ms. Arana applied a second time for the position of Paper Goods and Chemicals Department Manager between January and August 2000. She was not interviewed, and a male employee was selected to fill the position.

87. In approximately June 2000, Ms. Arana told the new Store Manager that she wanted to be promoted and that she was interested in the assistant manager-training program. The Store Manager gave only a vague response. On another occasion, the Store Manager told Ms. Arana that he did not want women in the assistant manager-training program. Ms. Arana is not aware of any woman recommended by that Store Manager for the assistant manager-training program.

88. During the months after Ms. Arana told the Store Manager that she wanted to apply for the assistant manager-training program, she also informed various Assistant Store Managers of her desire for a promotion. Ms. Arana also complained to several Assistant Managers about the Store Manager's discriminatory treatment of her. Ms. Arana also wrote a letter to an Assistant Manager expressing her desire to join the assistant manager-training program. That Assistant Manager suggested to Ms. Arana that she write a letter directly to the District Manager.

89. In December 2000, Ms. Arana wrote a letter to the District Manager expressing her interest in the assistant manager-training program. The District Manager replied via letter that Ms. Arana's letter would be forwarded to the new District Manager. Despite her repeated expressions of interest in the assistant manager-training program, Ms. Arana was never considered for that program.

90. In January 2001, Ms. Arana called Wal-Mart's toll free number to complain about the Store Manager's discriminatory refusal to interview women who applied for department manager positions in certain departments. Ms. Arana was informed that her complaint would be forwarded to the Regional Manager. However, to Ms. Arana's knowledge, no steps were taken in response to her complaint.

91. After Ms. Arana complained about the Store Manager's discriminatory treatment, she was transferred in February 2001 to the less desirable position of inventory traveler. Ms. Arana repeatedly told the Store Manager and two Assistant Managers that she did not want to be an inventory traveler because it was not a desirable position.

92. On October 19, 2001, Ms. Arana was falsely accused of "stealing time" and terminated in retaliation for her complaints regarding Wal-Mart's discriminatory failure to promote women.

93. During her six years of employment at Wal-Mart, Ms. Arana observed that few women were promoted to management positions. Women were often put in traditionally "female" departments, whereas men were placed in departments such as Paper Goods and Chemicals, Garden, and Hardware that increased their advancement opportunities.

94. On or about December 11, 2001, Ms. Arana filed a charge of discrimination with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission and the DFEH, a copy of which is attached hereto as Exhibit 6 and incorporated by reference. The DFEH issued a right to sue notice on these charges on or about December 28, 2001. Ms. Arana has requested a right to sue notice from the EEOC on these charges.

FIRST CLAIM FOR RELIEF

(Violation of Title VII)

95. Plaintiffs incorporate Paragraphs 1 through 94.

96. This claim is brought on behalf of all Plaintiffs and the class they represent.

97. On or about October 22, 1999, January 4, 2000 and April 3, 2000, class member and former plaintiff Stephanie Odle filed charges of sex discrimination against Wal-Mart with the United States Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, copies of which are attached hereto as exhibits 7-9 and incorporated by reference. Ms. Odle thereafter received a right to sue notice and commenced this action as a named plaintiff in a timely fashion. From the filing of her EEOC complaints through the initiation of this action, the class-wide nature of Ms. Odle's charges has been communicated to defendant.

98. On or about November 13, 2000, class member and former plaintiff Kimberly Miller filed a charge of discrimination with the EEOC, a copy of which is attached hereto as exhibit 10 and incorporated by reference. Ms. Miller thereafter received a right to sue notice and commenced this action as a named plaintiff in a timely fashion. From the filing of her EEOC complaints through the initiation of this action, the class-wide nature of Ms. Miller's charges has been communicated to defendant.

99. On or about March 15, 2001, class member and former plaintiff Sandra Stevenson filed a charge of discrimination with the EEOC, a copy of which is attached hereto as exhibit 11 and incorporated by reference. Ms. Stevenson thereafter received a right to sue notice and commenced this action as a named plaintiff in a timely fashion. From the filing of her EEOC complaints through the initiation of this action, the class-wide nature of Ms. Stevenson's charges has been communicated to defendant.

100. On or about May 17, 2001 class member and former plaintiff Micki Earwood filed a charge of discrimination with the EEOC, a copy of which is attached hereto as exhibit 12 and incorporated by reference. Ms. Earwood thereafter received a right to sue notice and commenced this action as a named plaintiff in a timely fashion. From the filing of her EEOC complaints through the initiation of this action, the class-wide nature of Ms. Earwood's charges has been communicated to defendant.

101. The foregoing conduct violates Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. §§ 2000(e), et seq.

102. Wal-Mart has maintained a system for making decisions about promotions, assignments, transfers and compensation which is excessively subjective and which has had a disparate impact on female employees. This system is not and cannot be justified by business necessity, but even if it could be so justified, less discriminatory alternatives exist that could equally serve any alleged necessity.

103. Wal-Mart has maintained a 'willingness to relocate' prerequisite for promotion to management which has had a disparate impact on plaintiffs and the class they represent. This requirement is not and cannot be justified by business necessity, but even if it could be so justified, less discriminatory alternatives exist which could equally serve any alleged necessity.

104. Wal-Mart has intentionally discriminated against the class and maintained a system for making decisions about promotions, transfers, assignments and compensation that is excessively subjective and through which Wal-Mart discriminates against female employees by denying them the same opportunities for job assignments, upward mobility and compensation afforded to similarly situated male employees.

105. Defendant's discriminatory practices described above have denied female employees promotional opportunities, transfers, assignments and compensation to which they are entitled, which has resulted in the loss of past and future wages and other job benefits.

106. Wal-Mart has systematically retaliated against women who have complained about discrimination and unfair treatment.

107. Defendant's retaliatory practices have resulted in the loss of past and future wages and other job benefits for class members.

108. Plaintiffs request relief as provided in the Prayer for Relief below.

SECOND CLAIM FOR RELIEF
(Violation of Title VII)

109. Paragraphs 1-108 are incorporated by reference. This claim is brought on behalf of the named plaintiffs individually for their non-class claims.

110. Defendant discriminated against named plaintiffs on the basis of their gender by demoting, terminating, and/or by retaliating against them and by subjecting them to a hostile work environment.

111. Defendant's discriminatory and retaliatory practices have resulted in the loss of past and future wages and other job benefits, and have caused plaintiffs to suffer humiliation, embarrassment and emotional distress.

112. Plaintiffs request relief as provided in the Prayer for Relief below.

THIRD CLAIM FOR RELIEF

(Violation of California Fair Employment and Housing Act-Race Discrimination)

113. Plaintiffs incorporate by reference Paragraphs 30-41 and 50-61.

114. This claim for relief is brought on behalf of Plaintiffs Dukes and Page only.

115. Defendant discriminated against plaintiff Dukes and Page on the basis of their race, African American. The foregoing conduct violates the California Fair Employment and Housing Act, Government Code §§ 12940, et. seq.

116. Defendant's discriminatory and retaliatory practices have resulted in the loss of past and future wages and other job benefits, and have caused plaintiffs to suffer humiliation, embarrassment and emotional distress.

117. Plaintiffs Dukes and Page request relief as provided in the Prayer for Relief below.

RELIEF ALLEGATIONS

118. Plaintiffs and the class they represent have no plain, adequate or complete remedy at law to redress the wrongs alleged herein, and the injunctive relief sought in this action is the only means of securing complete and adequate relief. Plaintiffs and the class they represent are now suffering and will continue to suffer irreparable injury from Defendant's discriminatory acts and omissions.

119. The actions on the part of Defendant have caused and continue to cause Plaintiffs and all class members substantial losses in earnings, promotional opportunities and other employment benefits, in an amount to be determined according to proof.

120. Defendant acted or failed to act as herein alleged with malice or reckless indifference to the protected rights of Plaintiffs' and class members. Plaintiffs and class members are thus entitled to recover punitive damages in an amount to be determined according to proof.

PRAYER FOR RELIEF

WHEREFORE, Plaintiffs and the class pray for relief as follows:

1) Certification of the case as a class action on behalf of the proposed Plaintiff class and designation of Plaintiffs as representatives of the class and their counsel of record as Class Counsel;

2) All damages which individual Plaintiffs and the class have sustained as a result of Defendant's conduct, including back pay, front pay, general and special damages for lost compensation and job benefits that they would have received but for the discriminatory practices of Defendant;

3) For Plaintiffs' individual, non-class claims, all damages they have sustained as a result of defendant's conduct, including back pay, front pay, general and specific damages for lost compensation and job benefits they would have received but for the discriminatory practices of defendant, damages for emotional distress, and punitive damages, according to proof;

4) Exemplary and punitive damages in an amount commensurate with Defendant's ability to pay and to deter future conduct;

5) A preliminary and permanent injunction against Defendant and its directors, officers, owners, agents, successors, employees and representatives, and any and all persons acting in concert with them, from engaging in each of the unlawful practices, policies, customs and usages set forth herein;

6) A declaratory judgment that the practices complained of in this first amended complaint are unlawful and violate 42 U.S.C. § 2000(e), et. seq., Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964;

7) An order restoring class members to their rightful positions at Wal-Mart;

8) An assignment of Plaintiffs and the class to those jobs they would now be occupying but for Defendant's discriminatory practices;

9) An adjustment of the wage rates and benefits for Plaintiffs and the class to that level which Plaintiffs and the class would be enjoying but for Defendant's discriminatory practices;

10) Costs incurred, including reasonable attorneys' fees, to the extent allowable by law;

11) Pre-Judgment and Post-Judgment interest, as provided by law; and

12) Such other and further legal and equitable relief as this Court deems necessary, just and proper.

Dated: September 12, 2002

Respectfully submitted,

THE IMPACT FUND

By: /s/ Jocelyn D. Larkin
JOCELYN D. LARKIN

Attorneys for Plaintiffs

DEMAND FOR JURY TRIAL

Plaintiffs hereby demand a jury trial as provided by Rule 38(a) of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

By: /s/ Jocelyn D. Larkin
JOCELYN D. LARKIN

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, et al., Plaintiffs, v. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Case No. C 01-2252 MJJ DEFENDANT WAL-MART STORES, INC.'S ANSWER AND AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES TO PLAINTIFFS' THIRD AMENDED COMPLAINT

Defendant Wal-Mart stores, Inc., for its answer and affirmative defenses to plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint ("Complaint"), states as follows:

ANSWER

1. Answering paragraph 1 of the Complaint, admits only that Wal-Mart is the largest retailer in the world and the largest private employer in the United States. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 1 of the Complaint.

2. Answering paragraph 2 of the Complaint, admits only that plaintiffs purport to represent a class of similarly situated women. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 2 of the Complaint.

3. Answering paragraph 3 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein and denies that plaintiffs are entitled to the requested relief or to any relief.

4. Answering paragraph 4 of the Complaint Wal-Mart denies the allegations contained therein.

5. Answering paragraph 5 of the Complaint, admits that venue is proper in this district.

6. Answering paragraph 6 of the Complaint, admits only that Betty Dukes is an African American woman who is currently employed by Wal-Mart. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 6 and therefore denies same.

7. Answering paragraph 7 of the Complaint, admits only that Patricia Surgeson is a woman; that she was employed by Wal-Mart from August 1997 to March 2001; and that her exit interview form indicates that she is "eligible to reapply." Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 7 and therefore denies same.

8. Answering paragraph 8 of the Complaint, admits only that Cleo Page is an African-American woman who was employed by Wal-Mart from December 1999 to November 2000.

9. Answering paragraph 9 of the Complaint, admits only that Christine Kwapnoski is a woman who is currently employed by Sam's Club, and that Ms. Kwapnoski, who was hired in 1986, transferred to a Sam's Club in Concord, CA in 1994. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 9 and therefore denies same.

10. Answering paragraph 10 of the Complaint, admits only that Deborah Gunter is a woman who was employed by Wal-Mart from April 1996 until August 1996. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 10 and therefore denies same.

11. Answering paragraph 11 of the Complaint, admits only that Karen Williamson is a woman who was employed by Wal-Mart from September 1995 to October 1999. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 11 and therefore denies same.

12. Answering paragraph 12 of the Complaint, admits only that Edith Arana is an African-American woman who was employed at Wal-Mart from 1995 to October 2001.

13. Answering paragraph 13 of the Complaint, admits that it is a Delaware corporation headquartered in Arkansas with stores in California, but denies that it operates Wal-Mart Supercenters in California.

14. Answering paragraph 14 of the Complaint, admits only that plaintiffs purport to represent a class of past, present, and future female employees of Wal-Mart. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 14 of the Complaint. Further answering, affirmatively states that plaintiffs cannot properly maintain this case as a class action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23.

15. Answering paragraph 15 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

16. Answering paragraph 16 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

17. Answering paragraph 17 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

18. Answering paragraph 18 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

19. Answering paragraph 19 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

20. Answering paragraph 20 of the Complaint, admits only that Wal-Mart is the world's largest retailer, that Wal-Mart is the largest private employer in the United States, with over 1 million employees; that more than 100 million customers visit Wal-Mart stores around the world each week; and that it operates over 3,000 stores.

21. Answering paragraph 21 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

22. Answering paragraph 22 of the Complaint, admits that the vast majority of employees in any particular store or club are non-exempt, hourly employees; that each store or club has several different salaried management positions; and that different parts of stores or clubs are organized into different districts and/or regions. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 22 of the Complaint.

23. Answering paragraph 23 of the Complaint, admits that individual store or club managers have discretion in making job assignments and in setting compensation levels within their stores or clubs, and that performance levels impact compensation. Wal-Mart denies that few objective criteria are applied and denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 23 of the Complaint.

24. Answering paragraph 24 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

25. Answering paragraph 25 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

26. Answering paragraph 26 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

27. Answering paragraph 27 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

28. Answering paragraph 28 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

29. Answering paragraph 29 of the Complaint (including subparts), denies the allegations contained therein.

30. Answering paragraph 30 of the Complaint, admits only that Betty Dukes is an African-American woman currently employed in Wal-Mart store #1615 located in Pittsburgh, California; that Dukes was hired as a part-time front end cashier at the Pittsburgh store in May 1994; and that Dukes was promoted to customer service manager in June 1997. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 30 of the Complaint.

31. Answering paragraph 31 of the Complaint, admits only that in November 1997, Dukes utilized the company's open door policy and contacted district manager Chuck Salby. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 31 of the Complaint.

32. Answering paragraph 32 of the Complaint, admits only that Dukes received written coachings in February 1998 for returning late from breaks and on March 31, 1998 for failing to follow proper procedures in performing her duties as a customer service manager; and that Dukes contacted district manager Jay King regarding the March 31, 1998 written coaching. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 32 of the Complaint.

33. Answering paragraph 33 of the Complaint, admits only that Dukes called in sick on numerous occasions and had frequent absences from work; that, on one occasion when Dukes called in sick, Cagle, the store manager of the Pittsburgh store at the time, contacted Dukes and advised her that she should set a better example regarding attendance; that Dukes contacted Charles Chibante, District Loss Prevention Manager, about Cagle; and that Cagle apologized to Dukes for any comments regarding her absences that may have been misconstrued by her. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 33 of the Complaint.

34. Answering paragraph 34 of the Complaint, admits only that on August 14, 1999, Wal-Mart demoted Dukes from the Customer Service Manager position to cashier. Further answering, affirmatively states that, prior to her demotion, Dukes inquired of Cagle regarding what was required for promotion into management and that Cagle advised her generally that she should first strive to serve successfully as a department manager and then she seek advancement into the management training program. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 34 of the Complaint.

35. Answering paragraph 35 of the Complaint, admits only that in August 1999, Dukes met with John Scantlin at the District Office and complained about her demotion and about alleged race discrimination. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 35 of the Complaint.

36. Answering paragraph 36 of the Complaint, admits only that, as a result of the misconduct that led to her demotion, Dukes became ineligible to apply for promotions for a period of one year; that in August 2000 an open support manager position was filled by the promotion of Rosa Trevino; that Joseph Topasana was promoted to a department manager position in July 2000; and that, as a result of Dukes' demotion in August 1999, her wage rate was reduced. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 36 of the Complaint.

37. Answering paragraph 37 of the Complaint, admits only that, as of August 14, 2000 Dukes once again became eligible to apply for promotions; and that, in January 2001, Will Martines was transferred from one department manager position to the position of department manager for Tire Lube Express. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 37 of the Complaint.

38. Answering paragraph 38 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

39. Answering paragraph 39 of the Complaint, admits only that Brooke Terrell chose to step down from the position of department manager to a sales floor position; that Kevin Sims filed the position vacated by Terrell; that Trina Wallace was terminated on or about June 30, 2000; and that Kendall Dimery replaced Wallace. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 39 of the Complaint.

40. Answering paragraph 40 of the Complaint, admits only that a charge of discrimination for Dukes is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 40 and therefore denies same.

41. Answering paragraph 41 of the Complaint, admits only that a charge of discrimination for Dukes is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 41 and therefore denies same.

42. Answering paragraph 42 of the Complaint, admits only that Patricia Surgeson was hired by Wal-Mart in Vacaville in August 1997 as a sales associate, that her initial assignment was in the Tire and Lube Express Department, and that she transferred to the Health and Beauty Aids Department. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 42 of the Complaint.

43. Answering paragraph 43 of the Complaint, admits only that, in November 1998, Surgeson was assigned to the Layaway Department. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 43 of the Complaint.

44. Answering paragraph 44 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

45. Answering paragraph 45 of the Complaint, admits only that in July 2000, Surgeson applied for and was given a position in the cash office. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 45 of the Complaint.

46. Answering paragraph 46 of the Complaint, admits only that in January 2001, Surgeson inquired about a raise in pay. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 46 of the Complaint.

47. Answering paragraph 47 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether Surgeson was interested in the management training program and therefore denies same. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 47 of the Complaint.

48. Answering paragraph 48 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

49. Answering paragraph 49 of the Complaint, admits that a charge of discrimination for Patricia Surgeson is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 49 and therefore denies same.

50. Answering paragraph 50 of the Complaint, admits only that Page worked at Wal-Mart store #1972 located in Livermore, CA from October 19, 1998 to November 27, 2000; that Page worked at Wal-Mart store #2031 located in Union City, CA from August 19, 1998 to October 19, 1998 as a Courtesy Desk associate; and that Page worked at Wal-Mart store #992 located in Tulsa, OK from July 5, 1997 to July 31, 1998 as a cashier and Courtesy Desk associate. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 50 and therefore denies same.

51. Answering paragraph 51 of the Complaint, admits only that Page worked as a Courtesy Desk associate at Wal-Mart store #1972 located in Livermore, CA from October 19, 1998 to December 12, 1998 and that Page became a Customer Service Manager on December 12, 1998.

52. Answering paragraph 52 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

53. Answering paragraph 53 of the Complaint, admits only that Page became Men's Wear Department Manager on November 27, 1999 and became Boys Wear Department Manager on January 29, 2000. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 53 and therefore denies same.

54. Answering paragraph 54 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

55. Answering paragraph 55 of the Complaint, admits only that on September 14, 2000, Patricia (Alene) Sellen, white female, and Anita Perez, Hispanic female, were selected as Support Managers. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 55 of the Complaint.

56. Answering paragraph 56 of the Complaint, admits only that Page received a written warning on October 7, 2000 for leaving work for the day on October 5, 2000 leaving 15 shopping carts full of fixtures, merchandise, and trash, leaving 32' of counter space empty, and leaving the department unshoppable. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 56 and therefore denies same.

57. Answering paragraph 57 of the Complaint, admits only that Curtis Koonce became Sporting Goods Department Manager on or about November 2000. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 57 of the Complaint.

58. Answering paragraph 58 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 58 and therefore denies same.

59. Answering paragraph 59 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to whether Page had "interest in being promoted to management" and therefore denies same. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 59 of the Complaint.

60. Answering paragraph 60 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

61. Answering paragraph 61 of the Complaint, admits only that a charge of discrimination for Page is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint.

62. Answering paragraph 62 of the Complaint, admits the statements contained in paragraph 62.

63. Answering paragraph 63, admits that while employed at a Sam's Club in Missouri, Ms. Kwapnoski was sent to Concord, California to assist in converting a newly acquired store to a Sam's Club. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 63 and therefore denies same.

64. Answering paragraph 64, admits that while employed at the Sam's Club in Concord, California, Kwapnoski worked in auditing, freezer/cooler department, claims and receiving. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 64 of the Complaint.

65. Answering paragraph 65, denies the allegations contained therein.

66. Answering paragraph 66, admits that Kwapnoski was made a Team Leader in 1999, and that in 2001, Kwapnoski was promoted to Receiving Area Manager. Wal-Mart denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 66 of the Complaint.

67. Answering paragraph 67, admits that a charge of discrimination for Christine Kwapnoski is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 67 and therefore denies same.

68. Answering paragraph 68 of the Complaint, admits only that Deborah Gunter was hired in April 1996 at Wal-Mart store #2028 located in Riverside, California; and that Gunter worked as a sales associate in the Photo Lab for part of her employment at #2028. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 68 and therefore denies same.

69. Answering paragraph 69 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations contained in paragraph 69 and therefore denies same.

70. Answering paragraph 70 of the Complaint, admits only that Gunter worked as a stocker in the receiving area for part of her employment at Wal-Mart store #2028 in Riverside, California. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 70 and therefore denies same.

71. Answering paragraph 71 of the Complaint, admits only that Gunter transferred to Wal-Mart store #1747 located in Perris, California in 1998. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 71 and therefore denies same.

72. Answering paragraph 72 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations contained in paragraph 72 and therefore denies same.

73. Answering paragraph 73 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations contained in paragraph 73 and therefore denies same.

74. Answering paragraph 74 of the Complaint, admits only that Gunter transferred to Wal-Mart store #2077 located in Lake Elsinore, California in 1999; and that Gunter was employed as a sales associate in the Tire Lube Express Department. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 74 and therefore denies same.

75. Answering paragraph 75 of the Complaint, admits only that Gunter terminated her employment with Wal-Mart in August 1999. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 75 and therefore denies same.

76. Answering paragraph 76 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 76 and therefore denies same.

77. Answering paragraph 77 of the Complaint, admits only that Williamson was hired by Wal-Mart in September 1995 to work at Wal-Mart store #2161 located in Pleasanton, California; that her employment with Wal-Mart was terminated in October 1999; and that store #2161 opened in November 1995. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 77 and therefore denies same.

78. Answering paragraph 78 of the Complaint, admits only that Williamson completed CBL training for Cash Drawer Maintenance, Bagging, Check Tendering, and Customer Service while employed at Wal-Mart store #2161 located in Pleasanton, California. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 78 and therefore denies same.

79. Answering paragraph 79 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations contained in paragraph 79 and therefore denies same.

80. Answering paragraph 80 of the Complaint, admits only that Williamson worked as a sales associate in the stationary department during part of her employment at store #2161. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 80 and therefore denies same.

81. Answering paragraph 81 of the Complaint, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the allegations contained in paragraph 81 and therefore denies same.

82. Answering paragraph 82 of the Complaint, admits only that Williamson received a "meets expectations" evaluation on August 20, 1999; received a standard evaluation on August 1, 1998; received an above standard evaluation on August 16, 1997; received a standard evaluation on August 15, 1996; and received an above standard evaluation on January 21, 1996. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 82 and therefore denies same.

83. Answering paragraph 83 of the Complaint, admits only that Edith Arana is an African-American woman who was hired on September 5, 1995 at Wal-Mart store #2401 located in Dnarte, California; that she was hired as a Personnel Manager, and that during her employment she worked as Personnel Manager, UPC associate, Stocker, Sales associate, Inventory Control associate, and Greeting Card associate.

84. Answering paragraph 84 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

85. Answering paragraph 85 of the Complaint, admits only that on November 12, 1999, Arana applied for a Stationary and Books Department Manager position. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 85 of the Complaint.

86. Answering paragraph 86 of the Complaint, admits only that on February 28, 2000 Arana applied for a Household Paper Good Department Manager position and that the position was filled by a male associate. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 86 of the Complaint.

87. Answering paragraph 87 of the Complaint, admits only Arana and Store Manager John Kocharian had general conversations about the management training program and denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 87 of the Complaint.

88. Answering paragraph 88 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

89. Answering paragraph 89 of the Complaint, admits only that Arana contacted District Manager Judy Evans regarding the assistant manager training program and denies all remaining allegations contained therein.

90. Answering paragraph 90 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

91. Answering paragraph 91 of the Complaint, admits only that on September 18, 1999 Arana began working on the Inventory Control team, and denies the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 91 of the Complaint.

92. Answering paragraph 92 of the Complaint, admits only that Arana's employment was terminated on October 19, 2001 for gross misconduct and denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 92 of the Complaint.

93. Answering paragraph 93 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

94. Answering paragraph 94 of the Complaint, admits that a charge of discrimination for Arana is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 94 and therefore denies same.

95. Wal-Mart incorporates paragraphs 1 through 94 above.

96. Answering paragraph 96 of the Complaint, admits only that plaintiffs purport to represent a class. Wal-Mart denies all remaining allegations contained in paragraph 96 of the Complaint. Further answering, affirmatively states that plaintiffs cannot properly maintain this case as a class action under Federal Rule of Civil Procedure 23.

97. Answering paragraph 97 of the Complaint, admits only that a charge of discrimination for Stephanie Odle is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, Wal-Mart states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 97 and therefore denies same.

98. Answering paragraph 98 of the Complaint, admits only that a charge of discrimination for Kimberly Miller is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, Wal-Mart states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 98 and therefore denies same.

99. Answering paragraph 99 of the Complaint, admits only that a charge of discrimination for Sandra Stevenson is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, Wal-Mart states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 99 and therefore denies same.

100. Answering paragraph 100 of the Complaint, admits only that a charge of discrimination for Micki Earwood is attached as an exhibit to the Complaint. Further answering, Wal-Mart states that it is without knowledge or information sufficient to form a belief as to the remaining allegations contained in paragraph 100 and therefore denies same.

101. Answering paragraph 101 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

102. Answering paragraph 102 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

103. Answering paragraph 103 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

104. Answering paragraph 104 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

105. Answering paragraph 105 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

106. Answering paragraph 106 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

107. Answering paragraph 107 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

108. Answering paragraph 108 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein as denies that plaintiffs are entitled to any relief.

109. Wal-Mart incorporates paragraph 1 through 108 above. Further answering, admits only that plaintiffs purport to bring individual claims under Title VII.

110. Answering paragraph 110 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

111. Answering paragraph 111 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

112. Answering paragraph 112 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein and denies that plaintiffs are entitled to any relief.

113. Wal-Mart incorporates paragraphs 30 through 41 and 50 through 61 above.

114. Answering paragraph 114 of the Complaint, admits only that Plaintiffs Dukes and Page purport to bring a claim under the California Fair Employment and Housing Act on their own behalf only.

115. Answering paragraph 115 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

116. Answering paragraph 116 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

117. Answering paragraph 117 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein and denies that Plaintiff Dukes or Plaintiff Page is entitled to any relief.

118. Answering paragraph 118 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

119. Answering paragraph 119 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

120. Answering paragraph 120 of the Complaint, denies the allegations contained therein.

121. Answering the unnumbered prayer for relief (including subparts) on pages 24 and 25 of the Complaint, denies that plaintiffs are entitled to the relief requested or to any relief.

122. Denies each and every allegation set forth in the Complaint not expressly admitted herein.

AFFIRMATIVE DEFENSES

123. To the extent Plaintiffs seek relief under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq., and/or the California Fair Employment and Housing Act, Government Code § 12940 et seq., for employment decisions or actions which were not included in a charge timely filed with the appropriate administrative agency, such claims are barred because of the failure to exhaust administrative remedies and/or the failure to satisfy the statutory prerequisites and the Court therefore lacks subject matter jurisdiction over such claims.

124. To the extent Plaintiffs seek relief under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq., and/or the California Fair Employment and Housing Act, Government Code § 12940 et seq., from or for employment decisions which were not made the subject of a timely charge with the appropriate agency, such claims are barred.

125. To the extent Plaintiffs seek relief under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq., and/or the California Fair Employment and Housing Act, Government Code § 12940 et seq., such claims are barred by the applicable statute of limitations.

126. All of Wal-Mart's employment decisions with respect to Plaintiffs were based on legitimate, nondiscriminatory business reasons and were not pretexts for discrimination.

127. All of Wal-Mart's employment decisions with respect to Plaintiffs were job-related and consistent with business necessity.

128. All of Wal-Mart's employment decisions with respect to Plaintiffs were based on bona fide factors other than sex or race, including but not limited to a bona fide merit system.

129. Plaintiffs' claims are barred in whole or in part by their failure to mitigate, or reasonably attempt to mitigate, their damages.

130. Plaintiffs' claims for exemplary or punitive damages are barred in whole or in part by the provisions of the United States Constitution.

131. Plaintiffs' claims for punitive damages are barred on the grounds that Wal-Mart's actions were not undertaken with malice or reckless indifference to the Plaintiffs' federally protected rights.

132. Plaintiffs are not entitled to recover any punitive or exemplary damages and any allegations with respect thereto should be stricken because:

a. Plaintiffs have failed to plead facts sufficient to support allegations of oppression, fraud and/or malice. Cal. Civ. Code § 3294(a);

b. Plaintiffs have failed to plead facts sufficient to support allegations of gross or reckless disregard for the rights of Plaintiffs or that Defendants were motivated by evil motive or intent;

c. Neither Defendants nor any of their officers, directors or managing agents committed any alleged oppressive, fraudulent or malicious act, authorized or ratified such an act, or had advance knowledge of the unfitness, if any, of any employee or employees who allegedly committed such an act or employed any such employee or employees with a conscious disregard of the rights or safety of others. Cal. Civ. Code § 3294(b); and

d. California's laws regarding the alleged conduct in question in this action are too vague to permit the imposition of punitive damages, and California's laws, rules and procedures regarding punitive damages, as applied to the facts in this case, would violate Defendant's constitutional rights under provisions of the United States and California Constitutions, including, but not limited to, the due process clauses of the Fifth and Fourteenth Amendments to the United States Constitution, and the excessive fines and cruel and unusual punishment clauses of the Eighth Amendment to the United States Constitution.

133. Wal-Mart exercised reasonable care to prevent and promptly correct any sexually harassing or other protected group-harassing behavior.

134. Plaintiff Surgeson and Plaintiff Gunter unreasonably failed to take advantage of the preventive and corrective opportunities provided by Wal-Mart to avoid harm.

135. Any alleged harassment that Plaintiff Surgeson or Plaintiff Gunter may have experienced was not sufficiently pervasive to affect the terms or conditions of her employment, and thus is not actionable.

136. Plaintiffs' Complaint fails to state a claim upon which relief can be granted under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq., and/or the California Fair Employment and Housing Act, Government Code § 12940 et seq., and/or other applicable law.

137. Some or all of the forms of relief sought in the Complaint are barred because Wal-Mart at all times acted in good faith and with the honest belief that its conduct was in compliance with Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e et seq., and the California Fair Employment and Housing Act, Government Code § 12940 et seq.

138. Plaintiffs' claims are barred in whole or in part by the doctrine of laches.

139. Plaintiffs' claims are barred in whole or in part by the doctrine of unclean hands and/or estoppel by reason of the conduct and actions of Plaintiffs and/or each of them.

140. Plaintiffs' claims and/or damages and other relief are barred in whole or in part by the after-acquired evidence doctrine.

141. Plaintiffs' claims are barred in whole or in part by Plaintiffs' failure to perform in accordance with California Labor Code §§ 2854, 2856-59, and 2863, as applicable.

WHEREFORE, Defendant Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. respectfully requests that the Court dismiss this action with prejudice and award Wal-Mart its costs of action, reasonable attorneys' fees, and such other and further relief as may be just and proper.

Respectfully submitted,

/s/ John W. Edwards II
JOHN W. EDWARDS, II
KATHERINE A. ALBERTS
JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE
2882 Sand Hill Road, Suite 240
Menlo Park, California 94025
Telephone: (650) 739-3939
Telecopy: (650) 739-3900

JOHN L. STRAUCH
STEVEN T. CATLETT
LAWRENCE C. DINARDO
ALISON B. MARSHALL
JONES, DAY, REAVIS & POGUE
77 West Wacker Drive
Chicago, Illinois 60601
Telephone: (312) 782-3939
Telecopy: (312) 782-8585

Attorneys for Defendant
WAL-MART STORES, INC.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES,) PATRICIA SURGESON,)
on behalf of themselves)
and all others similarly) situated,) Plaintiffs,) Cause No.
) C-01-2252 MJJ
vs.)
WAL-MART STORES,) INC.,)
Defendant.)

VIDEO DEPOSITION OF KEVIN HARPER

Taken on behalf of the Plaintiffs

March 12, 2002

* * *

[Page 19]

Q. Sure. And what are the Neighborhood Markets?

A. They are a food and drug more a what you might call a regular grocery format. Something that would be similar to a lot of what you see out there with a Kroger perhaps something of that nature today.

Q. Okay. And are those stores located at any particular geographical region at this point?

A. They are in multiple areas primarily in Texas, Arkansas, and Oklahoma.

Q. The – in Division One the non-Supercenter stores non-Supercenter non-Neighborhood Market, do they have a particular name or code? Do they call them like regular Wal-Marts or something like that?

A. Generally referred to as just Wal-Mart. Supercenters is referred to as Supercenters and Neighborhood Markets is Neighborhood Markets.

Q. And the – for purpose of this deposition when we talk about Wal-Mart Stores then if it's all right with you, we'll be referring to those non-Supercenter non-Neighborhood Market stores. Is that – do you understand that distinction, we're making?

A. We can make that distinction.

Q. We'll call them – I'll call them regular Wal-Marts if you don't mind –

A. Understood.

* * *

[Page 32]

parent store.

Q. Well, let's take it step by step. We're – let's say we are in a regular Wal-Mart, and I want to sort of just trace quickly the reporting structure up for management purposes.

A. Okay.

Q. And maybe there's more than one range to go. So let's take them one at a time.

A. Okay.

MR. LAMPE: You haven't answered his question. I think you guys aren't communicating on this point.

Why don't you ask again what the clarification you need, Mr. Harper.

A. Within a Wal-Mart store regular Wal-Mart store, there could be as many as five different management reporting structures.

Q. (BY MR. SELIGMAN) Okay.

A. And so what I want to make sure I understand is do you want me to explain all five of those, and if so, then I can clarify and start with the first and go forward.

Q. Let's do that because I – let's go one at a time so maybe we can sort of draw the chart so I understand what we're talking about. So why don't we start. Ultimately I want to hit all five. So let's take the first.

A. Okay. Let me start with our TLE division.

[Page 33]

Q. Okay.

A. You have a TLE Manager. That TLE Manager would report to a TLE district manger which would report to a TLE regional.

In our optical, you'd have an Optical Manager, reporting to an optical DM, reporting to an optical regional.

In one hour photo, you'd have the Photo Manager, then the photo DM, and then the photo regional.

In – did I say pharmacy? Pharmacy and again it would be Pharmacy Manager. I should clarify that.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. Pharmacy DM pharmacy regional.

Then within the shoes and jewelry group there is not a salaried position, but the two Department Managers would report to the Shoes and Jewelry District Manager.

Q. So the Shoe Department Manager and the Jewelry Department Manager would report to the District Manager?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. And the Shoe Department Manager and the Jewelry Department Manager are not salaried positions?

A. That's correct.

Q. Is what you're saying. Unlike the other Store Managers you've just referred to, those are all salaried TLE, Optical Manager, one hour, and pharmacy?

[Page 34]

A. With the exception of the State of California, that's correct.

Q. And how does California work? It's different?

A. In the state of California, our one hour photos, our pharmacy, and our tire and lube express based under the California Fair Labor Standards Act have been designated as hourly. So all of those management positions in the State of California are hourly not salaried.

Q. Okay. Does that reflect a difference in job duties between California and other states, or is that a – let me just leave it at that. Does that reflect a difference in job duties between California TLE, One Hour, and Pharmacy Managers in California than other states?

A. It does not reflect a job difference.

Q. Okay. Going back to, I'm sorry.

A. Shoes and jewelry report to the – the Department Managers report to DM Shoes and Jewelry DM which then report –

Q. Which is one job?

A. That's correct. Which then reports to the shoes and jewelry regional. Now, all of those that I mentioned across there would also report to their respected divisionals. So there would be a TLE divisional that the regional would report to. Same thing for optical, etc, and then each one of those divisions have an operating head. [Page 35] It's not structured the same in every division.

Pharmacy division has a Vice President of Operations. Our tire and lube express has a Vice President of TLE, and he actually has responsibility for operations as well as the other operating components within the TLE not just the stores.

Our optical has a Vice President or Senior Vice President, pardon me, of optical, but he also has responsibility for merchandising, third party collection, the operations of the stores, I mean, all of the components that make up optical.

The shoes and jewelry has a Vice President of Operations, and then he reports to the Senior Vice President of shoes and jewelry. And then the Senior Vice President again has merchandising as well as operational responsibilities.

Now, on the store's side to kick back over, inside the store you have the Store Manager.

Q. Now, the store side we're now talking about everything except for those five departments we've just talked about?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. In the store, you have several Assistant Manager positions. If you want to start with the first salaried [Page 36] level, that would be where it would begin. Depending on the size of a Wal-Mart store, you could have no assistant mangers because we have some of our very small stores that have none. You could have seven, eight, nine, ten assistants depending on the size or the location. The Assistant Managers would report either to a Co-manager if the store was had one, or they would report to the Store Manager. It'd depend on if that store structure had a Co-manager in it or if we had made the distinction to put a Co-manager in. Then the Store Manager reports to the DM, DM to the regional, then the regional to our divisional.

Q. Now, we've so far been talking regular Wal-Marts. Let's talk about Supercenter.

A. Okay.

Q. And first let me ask you in terms of the five specialty divisions is the reporting structure any different for Supercenters?

A. Reporting structure would be the same.

Q. So that a – to be clear if you're in the same regional area, a Tire and Lube District Manager would have reports from both Supercenters and regular Wal-Marts?

A. That is very possible, yes.

Q. Okay. And same with the other specialty divisions?

A. That is correct. And also it would not be uncommon for an optical or, pardon me, a pharmacy to also have [Page 37] responsibility for a Sam's pharmacy, and it would not be impossible for a one hour photo DM to also have a Sam's within their operating units as well.

Q. Okay. Let me back up a little bit. So the specialty divisions the specialty structure which we're referring to this manager, District Manager, regional.

A. Yes, sir.

Q. The specialty structure would include Sam's as well as regular Wal-Marts and Supercenters?

A. In most cases, yes, but not in all. For example, if you go to a Sam's organization today, they have a what's called a tire area. They have the tire – what we would call tire and lube express on the Wal-Mart side they have a tire area. Our Tire and Lube Express Division does not have responsibility for that Sam's piece. On the optical side, they have both Sam's and Wal-Mart. On the one hour photo, they have Sam's and Wal-Mart, and on the pharmacy they have Sam's and Wal-Mart.

Q. What about shoes and jewelry?

A. Shoes and jewelry do not.

Q. Okay. So –

A. There is a jewelry within Sam's, but it reports through Sam's not through the shoes and jewelry division.

Q. Okay. So in terms of specialty optical, photo, and pharmacy there's a common reporting structure for Sam's and [Page 38] the regular Wal-Marts and Supercenters?

A. Yes.

Q. But for tire and lube and shoes and jewelry there is not a common?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. Let me talk about Supercenters for a moment. Supercenter Store Managers refer to the same – report to the same District Managers as regular Wal-Marts in the same geographic areas?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Is there any other separate reporting structure for Supercenters different from regular Wal-Marts?

A. In a direct line of reporting, no. We do have additional members of management in a Supercenter because of the food business and oftentimes have additional Co-manager in the stores because of the food business. We do have an additional person that works in the field called a field merchandiser or food merchandisers, I'm sorry, and the food merchandiser's responsibility is just that it's the food within the Supercenters and making sure that anything from quality assurance standards all the way through to in stock are maintained. They do not have a direct supervisory responsibility, but they do have an indirect working with the District Managers and those markets.

Q. The food merchandisers do they operate at a [Page 39] district level or are they at for each store as a food merchandiser?

A. No. It's at a district level different than our District Managers because a Wal-Mart District Manager may have six to eight stores. A food merchandiser may have as many as twenty.

Q. Okay. In the Supercenters the additional salaried management positions that might be that are separate from the regular Wal-Marts, what would they be?

A. We have generally a dry grocery assistant.

Q. Assistant Manager?

A. Yes, sir. We generally have a manager that would handle our deli and meat area.

Q. And that would be an Assistant Manager?

A. That's correct. And then we generally have an Assistant Manager who would handle our bakery area as well.

Q. So in terms of salaried positions that are different from the regular Wal-Marts those are the three additional positions?

A. Those are the three additional. I have some Supercenters that only operate with two of those three. I have some that operate with an additional one because of volume. So it's not a set structure. We certainly try to manage our, you know, the appropriate number of people based on the volume, and/or in some cases, it's not even based off [Page 40] the volume. It may be just based off it's a new store so we want to have the additional staff in there until the store gets up and running, and then as it transitions into an existing store maybe move the management out. But it varies based on the need of the individual store.

Q. Okay. Do all Supercenters have Co-managers?

A. All Supercenters have Co-managers with the exception of some of our smaller 108,000 square foots or even 120s where the volume and the need just does not exist.

Q. Okay. And a Co-manager reports to the Store Manager. It's not on equal level as the Store Manager?

A. That's correct.

Q. We'll get to the actual job duties for those positions a little bit further down the line. Do you know why there's a separate management structure for Sam's Club?

A. Separate business.

Q. At what point in the organizational hierarchy do Sam's and Wal-Mart Stores report to the same people?

A. Once it reaches Lee Scott who is our President and CEO, the President of Sam's and the President of Wal-Mart both report to him, and that is where they meet in the general sense. Obviously on the divisions I described earlier with the specialty groups, it happens at the Senior Vice President level in pharmacy, the Senior Vice President level in optical, and the Vice President level in one hour

* * *

[Page 42]

A. Based on what it looks to me is a list of our some of our job descriptions most likely pulled off of our internal web site Pipeline.

Q. The job positions listed on here you said it's some of the positions. It's not a complete list of all of the positions that are in stores?

MR. LAMPE: The document actually says job descriptions not positions.

A. I would say that the list is not complete.

Q. (BY MR. SELIGMAN) Are you aware of a document that would be a complete list of all the job positions in the Wal-Mart Stores?

A. I'm not aware of any single document that would all of them. No.

Q. Okay. Let me ask you to the best of your knowledge and the starting with the regular Wal-Mart Stores to tell me what are the hourly positions in those stores.

A. Okay. The hourly positions and I'm just going to try to go through the store kind of a chunk at a time.

Q. Sure.

A. If that's okay.

Q. However you want to organization it.

A. We'll kind of start with our overall Wal-Mart structure. Obviously cashier positions sales associate positions which would be varied by department. We would [Page 43] have a sales associate for in a regular Wal-Mart store for food department, for health and beauty aids, for stationary, paper goods and chemicals, house wears, toys, pets, sporting goods, hardware, paint, domestics, and a lot of these departments are clustered together. So they're not individual. Our fabrics area all of our apparel departments men's, women's, lingerie and a lot of the determining factors of how many of those associates sales associates would be in each would be based on the volume of the store as well as in some cases as the size.

Q. Let me ask you to stop there for a second. The sales associate jobs when you say varied by departments are they considered to be separate job titles by department or just sales associates appear in every department?

A. In some cases, they will separate because of the specific training required to do the function. If you are a sales associate in optical, you will be referred to as an optical sales associate because there is a difference in some of the aspects or responsibilities of the position as relates to customer service. Same thing could be said of pharmacy. So there are some differences based on what is required in the function.

Q. Okay. Other than the specialty division departments, are there separate – are there associates that whose job positions are specific to those departments?

[Page 44]

A. If you say position, the position titles will be the same. If you are asking if there are other responsibilities or requirements that would be different department to department, the answer would be, yes.

Q. When you say other responsibilities, you mean the job duties are different in the departments?

A. Correct.

Q. Are the job qualifications leaving aside the specialty different between the departments?

A. In some cases, yes.

Q. Okay. If I wanted to find out what those differences are, what kind of documents if any would show me that?

A. The documents that would show that if they are present would be our job descriptions that would actually on the system that would actually on Pipeline that would actually show what the requirements of the position were or qualifications if they – if they existed.

Q. Okay. Other than the job descriptions, are there other documents that would tell me what the qualifications for the different positions are?

A. On an hourly basis, the only thing that might exist would be our job posting, but again that refers right back to our Pipeline. So it is simply a tool that's used that refers you back to where the information is contained on [Page 45] Pipeline.

Q. Okay. And so the job postings would get you back to the job descriptions?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And job postings generally have a shorter description of the position than what's on the actual job description?

A. I believe – I can't answer this with a hundred percent certainty that it refers back to the actual job description on Pipeline. So I don't think there is a difference.

Q. Okay. But those job descriptions are where if I wanted to find out what are the difference in job duties or qualifications that's where they'd be explained?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Has that been true all the time that you've been at Wal-Mart that there are job descriptions that explain those things?

A. No, it has not been.

Q. Okay. How recently has that been true?

A. With certainty I can't say because as we started developing job descriptions and/or requirements they did not all appear at one time. We have been working on those for probably the last ten years.

Q. Okay. At what point were there job descriptions [Page 46] available for the -- for most of the job positions in the stores?

MR. LAMPE: I'll object because I don't believe he's stated that that's the case.

A. Yeah. Job descriptions don't necessarily exist for everything even today. So to state at what point did most it would be within probably the last two to three years.

Q. (BY MR. SELIGMAN) Are there positions in the stores today you're aware of that there are no job descriptions available?

A. Yes.

Q. What positions?

A. A perfect example would be our Mary Kate and Ashley store just opened, and I'm quite sure that there's no job description for that position. I'm quite sure there's probably not any for our candy store that we just opened. We are constantly doing tests and/or structure changes within the organization, and I'm very sure when we do those that we do not write job descriptions for those changes immediately upon the change. Once we get prepared to roll out a structural change, we generally try to make those changes present then, and I'm not so sure that I could even specifically identify the specific jobs because we try to allow our Store Managers and District Managers some flexibility in making decisions on what associates in the areas, and Pipeline?

* * *

[Page 58]

A. Uh-huh.

Q. What role does do the people at Pipeline play in approving descriptions?

A. The Pipeline team is part of the overall training and development team. So they generally drive the approval process. Once any updates have been made, they distribute that update with an approval sheet to all of the people on that particular job description approval list.

Q. So they make sure the paper goes around?

A. Yes.

Q. Do they have any responsibility in terms of the substance of content of a job description?

A. They have responsibility for posting the corrections not the content with the exception of making sure that what's on the paper's the content that gets posted obviously from an accuracy standpoint.

Q. Okay. These job descriptions are used throughout the country at Wal-Mart? There's not separate job descriptions for different regional areas?

A. There's not sperate job descriptions. There may be overlapping job descriptions because in one market we may decide to only put one person where there may be two which may require them to have an understanding of the cashier job description and an understanding of a sales associate in a [Page 59] certain department. Even within our overall assignments of positions we have secondary and primary and secondary functions. So very likely one person could have more than one job description that they might call thier own based on their role in the store.

Q. But the actual job description the written job description there's only one cashier job description in use at Wal-Mart, for example?

A. To the best of my knowledge, that's correct. Yes.

Q. Okay. And that job description you say goes onto the Pipeline system?

A. That's correct.

Q. And who has access to that to these job descriptions?

A. As far as I know, anyone in the Wal-Mart Stores group.

Q. Anyone including hourly associates?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And the access is electronically through the computer system?

A. That's correct.

Q. Is there some other way other than going through the computer that folks have access to these job descriptions?

A. Not that I'm aware of.

* * *

[Page 90]

Q. So Thirty was a division number?

A. That's correct.

Q. And 31 –

A. 31 was a division number for one hour.

Q. Okay.

A. And I apologize. I just can't remember the department numbers.

Q. Now, there's a – we've got a Division 11, a Division 30, a Division 31 where are all the other divisions?

A. They don't exist.

Q. So how many divisions are there –

A. Or they're broken up into home office divisions as well. The divisions numbers as they're laid out in corporation Division One was stores. That's the way that it started. I'm sure there was a Division Two, a Division Three, a Division Four, a Division Five. I have no honest idea what those are. We basically as the company grew and it structured and it ended up with these different operational units they just attached the division number that was not used, and then that became the new P&L reporting structure.

Q. With regard to the field to the store operations, what divisions are there other than you mentioned Division One for the stores; Division 11 which is jewelry; Division [Page 91] 30 which is optical; 31 which is photo; 10 which is pharmacy. Which other divisions are there used out there?

A. Six for tire and lube express.

Q. Okay.

A. Do you have five specialty groups there?

Q. No. Oh, wait. We got shoes –

A. Did you get 25 or 15 is shoes, sorry. Division 15 is shoes.

Q. Okay. And what's 25?

A. No. That's the department number for shoes.

Q. Okay. So I've got stores, jewelry, optical, photo, pharmacy, TLE, and shoes?

A. That should be all the divisions.

Q. Okay. Now, in addition to department codes, are there job codes for each position?

A. There are job codes for position types, yes.

Q. Okay. And the job codes what are the purposes of those?

A. Primary purpose for job codes is to assist in scheduling.

Q. How so?

A. By having – we obviously have the department numbers. We have a sales associate job code. We have a cashier job code, etc. We know what the associate's availability is based on an availability form that they

* * *

[Page 108]

Q. For those positions. Right. And likewise pay class two, three, four, and five are used for the positions that are listed?

A. Correct.

Q. And is it – are the pay classes higher pay as you go to higher numbers that is two is higher more higher paid than one?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. Looking down on the first column on the left side what refers to general merchandise, I assume that's what general MDSE stands for?

A. Yes. That's correct.

Q. All right. And that would refer to the regular Wal-Marts and the general merchandise parts of Supercenters?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. There's a position listed towards the bottom called Support Manager.

A. Correct.

Q. See that? What is that?

A. That is a position that is most often additional responsibility that an associate takes in which they can act as a member of management in some circumstances. Earlier I gave the description of being able to be at the back door while the back door is open while we are receiving freight or perhaps collecting money out of the registers or money of [Page 109] the machines in the front, and in even some cases in our smaller stores, our Support Managers actually act as an assistant when the Store Manager is out of the store for 30 minutes for a quick lunch or something of that nature.

Q. Is a Support Manager a salaried position?

A. It is not.

Q. Is it generally a route into management an entry level management position?

A. It can be. It is certainly by no stretch of the imagination the only route into that position.

Q. Okay. You're familiar with the – there's a job posting system at Wal-Mart for hourly positions?

A. Yes.

Q. And there's also a separate system for management positions?

A. That's correct.

Q. Which system would if either would a Support Manager be posted in?

A. It would be posted on the job announcements at store level.

Q. So the hourly positions?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. And there's a job description for that position?

A. Yes, I believe there is.

* * *

[Page 133]

broadcast series?

A. No.

Q. Under Personnel Manager's Planner, it refers to the Store Manager Recap Report. What is that?

A. There is a Store Manager Recap Report that prints off each morning for the Store Managers that recaps all of the key operational, personnel, and merchandise topics for the day, the week, the month, and it allows them to be able to get kind of a quick snapshot of how their store's performing on those topics.

Q. Okay. What kind of personnel issues would be in the recap report?

A. Evaluations due, where we're at an our CBL module's completion, and if we have any child labor violations with the minors that our associates in our stores.

Q. Does that have anything about jobs that are vacant or promotion decisions or anything like that?

A. No.

Q. No. Okay. Let me ask you to turn to Page 157958 under Coordinate the selection of new Associates by refers to the administration of the TAPS program. How does the TAPS program have to do with the selection of new associates?

A. What it's referring to is simply pulling the information off of the system once it has been sent to them

* * *

[Page 141]

Q. What about for Co-manager?

A. Same as store.

Q. Co-manager has the same form as Store Manager?

A. Yes.

Q. You referred earlier to I think what you called a management trainee position.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And that's a position that is in the store system?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. And do they have – is there a Manager Trainee in every store normally?

A. No.

Q. What stores get management trainees?

A. Most often not always stores that we have selected as training stores.

Q. And typically how many training stores would there be in a district?

A. Two to three.

Q. Out of how many stores on average in a district?

A. Six to eight.

Q. And are these -- are these larger stores, or how do you decide what something?

A. We try very hard to pick stores where we feel that the level of training that they will get will be of the policy number in place with all other policies.

* * *

[Page 150]

Q. Is it significant if something's called a policy as opposed to not being called a policy? Does that mean anything to somebody in a store?

A. It can in the sense that it is an operational policy which this one is. It is often going to still be up to the individual stores to make adjustments, and even within this documents it says in smaller stores will have to double up on responsibilities. So every store is going to have something that resembles an assignment of these responsibilities to the Assistant Managers, but it may look much different than what's on this document based on the overall head count of assistants in a store.

Q. Okay. If I wanted to get this document referred to before which splits up the store and makes recommendations for Assistant Manager assignments, what would I ask for?

A. Again I don't know the title. I would ask for the Assistant Manager merchandise responsibilities.

Q. So that document the Assistant Manager merchandise responsibilities document?

A. Uh-huh. I'm sure that's not the correct terminology, but I'm sure –

Q. Somebody should understand.

A. - somebody will understand what that is.

Q. Okay. Fair enough. The next position above [Page 151] Assistant Manager is often a Co-manager?

A. Correct.

Q. And there's a job description for a Co-manager?

A. I believe so.

Q. What's a Co-manager's duties?

A. Co-manager's duties are very similar to that of a Store Manager, and if you were to look at the responsibilities, there's certainly a financial responsibility, protection of company's assets through shrinkage or theft, as well as driving sales and profit, certainly responsibility from a supervisory impact to the associate base. They would supervise Assistant Managers in the store. They would have an in-stock responsibility, a price responsibility, competitive image, responsibility community involvement, pretty much the majority of the functions that you would see listed at a Co-manager or, pardon me, on a Store Manager's job responsibilities. And we are using that position to train them to run a Wal-Mart store or Supercenter.

Q. Now, some stores don't have a Co-manager?

A. That's correct.

Q. Do some stores have more than one Co-manager?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. And under what circumstances would you have the range zero, one, two, or whatever?

[Page 152]

A. Zero is generally a Wal-Mart store no food. They typically do not have cos. However, in some cases where they are just very high volume or in very difficult markets, we make a decision to put cos in there. In our Supercenters most generally unless they are very low volume, they have at least one co, and that co usually takes care of the food side of the business and typically has some food experience but not always because we are using that position to train people. So from time to time they move into that without food experience. The case where we have two is usually either a very high volume Supercenter and/or a brand new Supercenter where we are supporting that organization with an additional member of management until they – it gets up off the ground and runs. I've even seen us occasionally put three in a brand new stor where we just felt the volume was extremely high. Generally that's for a period of six months or less.

Q. And the next position over a Co-manager is the Store Manager. Correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. The Store Managers have they ever been referred to as Store Directors?

A. At one time, yes.

Q. At what point were they called Store Directors?

A. At one point, the Supercenter Managers were viewed. It is not a position that we view that needs to be permanent because of the type of role it plays in the store.

* * *

[Page 155]

Q. Okay. What is the Co-manager in Training position?

A. Often especially with the expansion of Supercenters we need to hire people with food experience. A lot of those individuals are running food establishments, food organizations, or food retail establishments today. So we bring them in as a Co-manager in training which does have a duration of 12 months, and that way they can get accustomed to Wal-Mart business, Wal-Mart culture, and make the transition to a Store Manager as quickly as possible.

Q. So these are like lateral hires from the outside?

A. That's correct.

Q. Is there a job description for that position?

A. Not that I'm aware of there's not.

Q. Is it used for internal placements at Wal-Mart?

A. It has been, but it has been changed to not include that.

Q. Since when?

A. Since about eight months ago. We still have some people in there that are on the program from before, but as we transition those, we are making that outside hires only.

Q. And why was that decision made to your knowledge?

A. If you're already working for Wal-Mart and you're going to go into training, then go into a Co-manager

* * *

[Page 162]

Q. Let me mark as Exhibit Sixteen a District Manager job description.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit Number Sixteen marked for identification.)

Q. (BY MR. SELIGMAN) Is this the job description for the District Manager?

A. Appears to be.

Q. It's pretty short.

A. Yes, it is.

Q. Does that mean they don't have anything to do?

A. I certainly hope not.

Q. Where are the – strike that. Let me ask a couple of questions here. First of all, where are the Store Managers based? Excuse me, District Managers where are the District Manager based?

A. In the field.

Q. Are their offices typically in a store?

A. Yes.

Q. And how many stores do they normally supervise?

A. Six to eight. We do have a couple of districts that have more stores than that, but that would be the majority.

Q. And who selects the District Manager?

A. District Manager selection is done at the regional level with a Regional Manager RPM and divisional.

[Page 163]

Q. Are there any specialized education or training requirements to be a District Manager?

A. There are not.

Q. Okay. I'm looking under Major Responsibilities, and there's a lot of things listed. A few of them I just want to understand what they are. It says comply with company direction. First is grass roots. Can you tell me what that is?

A. Sure. We do an associate opinion survey annually, and that's what that refers to.

Q. And store structure?

A. Store structure is the number of anything from the member of management, number of management associates in a store, number of hourly associates in the store, the way the store is structured, number of departments, Assistant Manager assignments, anything having to do with that overall responsibility designation away from the store.

Q. Is that – I'm sorry. Is that referring to any particular document or printout, or is that just an overall description of responsibility?

A. It is – it's an overall description of responsibility and certainly is one in which we allow them to have a tremendous amount of autonomy in because every store is simply different.

Q. Okay. What is MOPR?

[Page 164]

A. MOPR was an operational procedural review Merchandise Operational Procedural Review.

Q. What is that?

A. It's a procedural review that we requested the District Managers perform quarterly that goes in and ask the District Managers to report out how the store is performing on a very specific questions having to do with merchandising and operations of the store.

Q. Do any of those questions have to do with personnel function?

A. Yes, they do.

Q. What kind of areas are in personnel function?

A. They are personnel files, how we're doing on store stacking, just basic, you know, are pay raises being put in on time. Those sort of things.

Q. And is this something that's included in a particular document?

A. This particular document does not exist anymore. It is now referred to differently.

Q. Okay. What is it now referred to?

A. It's referred to as a STAR, S-T-A-R.

Q. Okay. How long has the STAR been used as the name of this document?

A. About the last two years.

Q. So prior to that it was referred to as the MOPR?

* * *

[Page 176]

Q. Okay. So if someone's listed as a Regional Manager it means they're new to the job?

A. Generally speaking or they came from outside the company.

Q. How many regions are there in the Wal-Mart system?

A. There are 35 regions on the Division One side, and there are multitudes in each of the specialty groups.

Q. And as with the districts, the specialty regions aren't the same geographical areas as the districts?

A. That's correct.

Q. So there are 35 Regional Managers?

A. That's correct.

Q. Is there a job description for Regional Manager?

A. Not that I'm aware of.

Q. Is there any document that describes the duties and responsibilities of a Regional Manager?

A. Not that I know of, no.

Q. Is there a training plan for them?

A. No.

Q. How does one learn how to be a Regional Manager?

A. By primarily being a successful DM and understanding that that role is now multiplied times ten and working very closely with the Divisional Manager.

Q. Okay. So there's 35 regions. Each region has, what, roughly 100 stores?

[Page 177]

A. Slightly less than that. Usually somewhere between 80 and 85.

Q. What are the job responsibilities of a Regional Manager?

A. Certainly they have a very high level of financial responsibility to the sales and profit of the organization. They have a very high level of responsibility as it relates to the inventory management of the merchandise, the merchandise presentation, etc. They have a strong responsibility to the development of the people who report to them specifically the District Managers and certainly supporting our company as it relates to the relationship that we have with both our customers and our associates. If you got into the core, you know, individual job responsibilities, they follow up on everything from late evaluations to child labor violations to out of stocks to customer complaints to associate complaints to anything and everything in between that is elevated to their level. Certainly they try to get as much of that handled at the positions that are prior to them, but when it's elevated to their level, then they engage, and they try to resolve.

Q. Does anybody other than District Manager report directly to a Regional Manager?

A. The Regional Assistant.

Q. And what are the duties of a Regional Assistant?

[Page 178]

A. Very similar to what I described as the district assistant prior except they do it from a regional level. So they work a great deal with the district assistants to collect that information at the District Manager may be compiling whether that be sales, profit, finance, shrink numbers, any number of operational and merchandise issues.

Q. Are Regional Assistants hourly?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. Do they have a job description?

A. I do not think so.

Q. When we looked at the District Managers job description, we looked at several things. One of them was the MOPR now called STAR. Does the Regional Manager have a similar responsibility in terms of looking at the same kinds of information?

A. They do not not on a quarterly basis as the District Managers do.

Q. Do they have it on some other basis?

A. What they do is manage primarily by exception. The information that is on the STAR review is fed to them systemically both by the reports of the District Managers as well as systems reports that are generated by the support divisions of the home office whether that be our ISD or safety or risk management or quality assurance specialty groups, etc., who generate reports and information that [Page 179] would tell the Regional Manager what is happening in his or her region. A great example would be when we rolled out a video release of Pocahontas. The merchandising division will send a report to the regional that says here are the stores who haven't sold any. Then that way the Regional Manager can react communicate to the DM and say see if we can find out why this store has not moved any of that particular movie. So they have managed through a lot of exception reporting that do not have a specific go visit a store and audit these items on a quarterly or semiannual or biannual basis.

Q. Do they get district wide or region wide reports dealing with the personnel function?

A. They get a roll up of the People P&L that's received at store level.

Q. What do you mean by roll up?

A. The stores have a People P&L for their location. That all six or eight of those stores information rolls together and makes a district report. All of the district reports roll together and make the region report and so on.

Q. Is the same thing true of the STAR reports?

A. STAR reports the overall measurable sections are rolled up to the Regional Managers.

Q. So they get a summery basically for the regional?

A. That's correct.

* * *

[Page 184]

Q. Are Regional Managers considered home office personnel?

A. They are in the standpoint of their charge location and how they get their expenses are booked to the home office department accounts instead of the store locations but from the focus and who they supported is purely field.

Q. Do you know approximately how much time in a year a Regional Manager spends in the field as opposed to home office?

A. Average is four days a week three weeks a month.

Q. Is field?

A. Is field. That's correct. If they happened to live in the field, it would be slightly higher than that.

Q. How do you know that's the average?

A. Because I traveled with them for two and a half years.

Q. Is there any document that summarizes the amount of time they spend out in the field?

A. There is not.

Q. Are there any guidelines that says how much time they should be in the field?

A. There is not.

Q. So this is based on your personal knowledge?

A. That's correct.

Q. You haven't done a survey of the 35 Personnel

* * *

[Page 190]

Q. So they report to the People Directors?

A. That's correct.

Q. Where are they located the Regional Personnel Managers?

A. Most are here. I do have two that live in the field and getting ready to add a third.

Q. Okay. And forgive me if you said this already. What is the position they report to in the people department?

A. People director.

Q. And you said there are three of them?

A. Yes.

Q. And how are – do they divide up the country regionally, or how do they divide it up?

A. They each have one or, pardon me, two operating divisions across the U.S.

Q. So each of those three – you have to run that by me again. I lost you.

A. The Regional Managers have 80, 85 stores and report to a divisional. Each of the divisionals have about six Regional Managers that report to them. The People Directors have two divisional areas that they have the people responsibility for or twelve regions in most cases.

Q. Okay. So let me see if I got the chain correct. The Regional Personnel Manager reports to divisional?

* * *

[Page 195]

has – that's in the center of the region that allows for easy transportation to and from. Some are held in hotels that are big enough to facilitate a room that will hold 30, 35 people. It just depends on the area and whether or not those facilities exist.

Q. So does each region have its own leadership foundation, or is it a company wide thing?

A. It's a company wide foundation. It is often attended by the Regional Managers or the Regional RPMs that stop by and add in their own spin as it relates to their experiences and their region and the focuses for their people, but it is a training program that's put together by the corporate headquarters.

Q. Okay. The foundation part of the title does that refer to a foundation, or does that mean foundation as a support?

A. Support.

Q. I got it. Is there a document which describes this project?

A. Yes.

Q. Or this program. And what's that called?

A. It would just be the Leadership Foundation Training Guide.

Q. And that would include – the folks who would go to that training would include Assistant Managers?

* * *

[Page 215]

Q. Manager?

A. Manager.

Q. Okay. And how many divisions are there?

A. Six.

Q. Are they denominated in some way?

A. A, B, D, E, T, and U.

Q. Do you know why?

A. Unfortunately, yes, I do.

Q. Okay.

A. Division C belonged to a gentleman who retired, and we retired the number with him or the letter with him. T and U were the two divisions that were used when we first started the Supercenter division which was not part of Division One. D and E were obviously the other two in Division One when we retired C, and then we incorporated Supercenters back. We just added T and U and didn't change them.

Q. Okay. And are the divisions other than having different letters are they different anything other than geographically?

A. No. There would be a little bit difference in the number of stores per division. We have one division that has five regions not six, but aside from that, geographical would be the only difference.

Q. So all of these have six regions except for one?

[Page 216]

A. Correct.

Q. And which has one – has five, I'm sorry?

A. I believe it's T.

Q. T. And the Division Managers are they the Vice President level?

A. Senior Vice President.

Q. They're located here in the home office?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. What ther division personnel are there that are involved in this?

A. I have my Divisional People Directors that support two divisions each.

Q. Okay. Let me just.

A. We do have Divisional Loss Prevention Supervisors, and that would be one per division as well. So there's six of those. If we leave out specialty group, that would pretty much be it I believe.

Q. Now, do the specialty group regionals report to the same Divisional Managers as the regular Regional Managers?

A. No, they do not.

Q. So they have their own separate divisional structure?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay.

A. I do have – I do have one that that is not true,

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Cause No. C-01-2252 MJJ

VIDEO DEPOSITION OF JOHN BUTLER

Taken on behalf of the Plaintiffs

March 21, 2002

* * *

[Page 39]

Q. Yeah.

A. The Supercenters that I got were ones that I opened in the Boise market in Pondiray, Idaho and Hermiston, Oregon.

Q. Okay.

A. Then when I lost that district we have been adding Supercenters in the Washington area, some more in Idaho, and another one in Oregon.

Q. Approximately how many stores were in your region when you started?

A. It'd be a guess.

Q. Just a ballpark.

A. Around 80.

Q. I think you indicated there were like 11 districts?

A. Yes.

Q. And how many do you have now?

A. 93 in 13 districts.

Q. And how many of your 93 stores approximately are Supercenters today?

A. Approximately 10.

Q. Your – has your job title or responsibilities changed since you became a Regional Vice President?

A. My job title has not changed. My responsibilities have only changed with regard to the number of stores and the geography that they cover.

* * *

[Page 106]

that I've asked for recently that would give you an example. Yesterday I sent them an e-mail that was attached to a recommendation from one of the District Managers that we wait to take seasonal markdowns on pools and things like that because the weather has been so late in coming in my area. Summer is just now getting here, and typically we mark down inflatable pools and swim suits and other things that are specific to summer in July. Well, one District Manager said, man, I've got a lot of this, and I think we can sell a good deal of it at regular retail. And he had sent that to a buyer who has control of whether, you know, to take the markdowns or not, and he copied me. And I thought, geez, that's a good idea. So I sent it out to all of my District Managers and asked them to respond back. Sorry for the long way of getting you there.

Q. Do you ask them to give you reports about store tours things like that?

A. They send in weekly tour notes. Yes. In our division, I don't know what they do in the other divisions, but in Division A that's – that was a requirement that their tour notes be sent in every week.

Q. Okay. Let me show you an example of what might be one of them. Let me mark this as Exhibit Number Eighteen which is District Manager Store Tour Notes bate stamp on the first page is 200536.

[Page 107]

(Plaintiff's Exhibit Number Eighteen marked for identification.)

Q. (BY MR. SELIGMAN) Let me first ask. Is this form District Manager store Tour Notes a form that's used in your division?

A. I think they have a like a two or three part pressure sensitive form that they use, and this may be it. Yeah. It looks like it is. There's three parts yellow, white, and pink that some use this. Some use, you know, their palm pilot to take notes. Some use paper to take notes, you know. It's a variety of different ways that they recap their visits to the store.

Q. And –

MR. GRAY: Can you just, I'm sorry, I don't – can we just make sure the record's clear? It seems to be sort of like an assemblage of several documents in a different order as well as another e-mail is attached, and I just want to make sure that Mr. Butler –

MR. SELIGMAN: Sure.

MR. GRAY: – has an opportunity, one, that the record's clear what he's looking at and, two, that he's seeing that this is a collective Exhibit.

A. Thank you. I had only looked at the front page.

Q. (BY MR. SELIGMAN) Actually I see the pages do seem to be out of order. These were collectively Exhibit Eight [Page 108] to the deposition of Danny Carter. So I don't know how these things got connected.

MR. GRAY: Unfortunately neither do I.

Q. (BY MR. SELIGMAN) All right. Why don't we focus our attention here on the first four pages of the document which – first five pages. That does seem to be something starting at 200539 which looks like something unrelated to me. I'm looking at these first five pages.

A. The first – okay. So prior to 2039 the first one appears to be tour – it's on a tour note form.

Q. Right.

A. And it's a – it looks like it's a recap of Danny's visit to 1704 Vacaville, California. This is what I was saying before. Different District Managers use different medium for, you know, their notes.

Q. Right.

A. Danny – Danny is obviously using several different medium here for keeping notes of things.

Q. Right. Some are on a form and some are not?

A. Right.

Q. And typically whether they used a form or not, the District Manager would send a copy of their tour notes in?

A. They are requested to send them in after – after each week is complete of their tours.

Q. So you expect to get a weekly tour note from each [Page 109] of your District managers?

A. Frankly, they send them in. We make – it's – it's our way of making sure that they're doing them, and the way that I use these is if I were going to visit Danny Carter's district and I had some concerns about a particular store I might pull his tour notes and review them. But I don't look at these every week.

Q. Okay. But you keep them?

A. They're – yes. They're maintained in the regional office.

Q. Is there a set list of things they're supposed to look at on these tours?

A. Well –

Q. That they're supposed to report on?

A. You can see on the third page he has scores here for this – I don't know whether this is an e-mail or what it is, but he has scores here for people merchandise, operations, and an overall score for each – each store. And that's – I'm remembering back to my early orientation something like that when Joyce Clark was visiting stores.

Q. Is there a written document somewhere that says what the District Manager's supposed to look at on these store tours or what they're supposed to report on?

A. Not on what they're supposed to report on. You know, I don't know. I don't know the answer to your

* * *

[Page 128]

Q. Right. And with regard to those other people, does a Support Manager have a greater deal of supervisory responsibility?

A. If they are the person who is designated as the in charge at that particular time.

Q. Okay. The overnight Support Managers do they have their own departments, or are they full-time Support Managers?

A. Typically they're full-time Support Managers.

Q. Do you have any responsibilities with regard to job assignments of hourly employees?

A. No, not typically. I mean, if I were – if I were in a store, indirectly I might, I mean, I might ask the manager or the Assistant Manager for associates that do something in particular but, no.

Q. Okay. Do you have – do you have any responsibilities for performance evaluation of any hourly employees?

A. Well, I have – I think the responsibility goes up to me that they're done in a timely fashion.

Q. Do you have any responsibilities with regard to wage adjustments for hourly employees?

A. The instance that I can – if there were let's say there are two things that I can think of. One, if there were a complaint by an associate that they were being

* * *

[Page 134]

Q. You have to answer yes or no.

A. If you're asking if I've seen them, I'm not sure that I have, but it seems like I may have in my orientation.

Q. You're aware there's a training department at headquarters of Wal-Mart which is responsible for designing management training programs?

A. I'm aware that we have a training department. Yes.

Q. Okay. What's the difference between the First in Line and management trainee programs at Wal-Mart?

A. I described that the First in Line is someone who is working for Wal-Mart and going to college. When they finish college if they choose to go into the management training program, we have the First in Line program that allows them to do that.

Q. Okay. And the management trainee are non-college attending employees of Wal-Mart?

A. Not necessarily. I mean, someone could be in college but not in the First in Line program.

Q. Is the First in Line program has that been constant during the time you've been at Wal-Mart, or has it been phased in or phased out for that matter in terms of the number of people going in it?

A. I've been aware that it is a program since I've been here, but you're really outside my area of expertise.

Q. Okay. Is there any normal career path among hourly [Page 135] positions that folks who want to go into management normally pursue?

MR. GRAY: Objection. Foundation.

A. Each District Manager kind of has their own way of identifying talent within their district for development. Typically an individual is a Department Manager, has managed a couple of department – departments, maybe somebody that comes from the Support Manager ranks. Their experience varies. Their experience and background varies, and each District Manager is responsible for identifying those individuals and put putting them into the training program.

Q. (BY MR. SELIGMAN) To your knowledge, there's no requirement at Wal-Mart that you come from a particular job before you go into the training program?

A. Not to my knowledge. I think it's preferred that someone has been a Department Manager, but I, you know, I can't speak specifically black and white to that.

Q. Let me separate the First in Line from management trainee for a moment. The First in Line program do you play any roll in that program?

A. Not really.

Q. Who's responsible for selecting First in Line folks?

A. I don't know.

Q. Do you have any idea how many First in Line

* * *

[Page 171]

A. No, they do not.

Q. Okay. Is there an application process that you're aware of a formal application process like job posting or like the MCS process for Assistant Managers to bid to become Co-Managers?

A. I don't know. I really don't. I think that's – that's something that's the individual is interested. They talk to their District Manager when they're in their store. The Store Manager supports the person, and if the District Manager feels, you know, good about that individual to be put into the mix for promotion to Co-Manager, then when a Co-Manager position comes open within my region the District Manager says I'm going to, you know, put Mark in for that particular promotion because he's interested. Then he becomes one of a pool.

Q. Do you know why the Co-Manager jobs are not on the MCS system?

A. Sometimes they are but usually not because that's typically been handled at the local level.

Q. Okay. When you say sometimes, they are – have they been in the MCS system in your region ever?

A. It seems to me that I remember using it that way on one or two occasions, but I can't remember which store it was.

Q. Do you recall why?

* * *

[Page 203]

Q. Strike that. Go ahead.

A. My guess is that this is after all of the District Manager evaluations were done. We looked at their individual People P & Ls and set goals together for improvements in these areas.

Q. Okay. How do you determine the goals for your districts?

A. We look at where we are, and we select what we think – what we consider is a reasonable improvement from one year to the next.

Q. And how do you determine what's a reasonable improvement?

A. Well, it wouldn't be reasonable to go from 39 percent to 51 percent in one year. So we'll – we'll target something in, you know, in between that we agree on, and based on the number of people that work in the store, we have an idea of about how many people we're talking about, you know, for each.

Q. And do you have any guidelines you follow in setting those goals, or is that something that you just –

A. No, not that I'm aware of.

Q. Okay. Why do you have goals? Is that a company requirement?

A. Not – not of me personally but it may be of Jim Winkler in his Regional Personnel Manager's responsibility.

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs,
vs.
WAL-MART STORES, INC.,
Defendant.

Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ

STATE OF ILLINOIS)
) SS.
COUNTY OF COOK)

The videotaped deposition of TRENT BURNER, taken before MARIA MAZZA, CSR, Notary Public, at the offices of Spherion Deposition Services, 11 South LaSalle Street, Chicago, Illinois, commencing at 9:08 o'clock a.m., on the 31st day of July, A.D., 2002.

* * *

[Page 144]

general manager positions at Sam's club and store manager positions at Wal-Mart Stores that were – had the same or similar duties and required the same or similar knowledge of skills and abilities?

A It's my understanding that I have not seen one for Sam's.

Q You are talking about a job analysis?

A Job analysis but because you're comparing job performance to a survey instrument that leap would be quite easy to make based on content valid job descriptions for one or the other, but I have not seen anything from Sam's.

Q Okay. I want to make sure I get an answer to my question.

A Okay.

Q Which is it fair to assume that the people conducting this validation study that was issued in the year 2000 understood that the job duties of the store manager in Wal-Mart and Division One were the same or similar to the job duties of the general managers in Sam's Club and likewise had the same or similar knowledge of skills and abilities required?

A. The essential job duties that would be fair to assume that.

Q And the other half of my question that they [Page 145] had the same or similar knowledge of skills and abilities required?

A Yes, in as far as much that the current validation studies only looked at performance –

Q Slow down again. You've got to slow down.

A Sorry. Insofar as much as the current validation study only looked at current performance in the position, it is fair to assume that those essential KSAs and tasks would be similar.

Q And similar for store manager and general manager?

A That's correct.

Q And when you use the term the current job analysis, you are referring to the job analysis in 1994?

A Yes, sir.

Q Okay. Can we make the same observation and draw the same conclusion about similarities of the job duties that would have been understood for district manager and director of operations for Sam's Club and Wal-Mart Stores, that is they have the same or similar job duties and required the same or similar knowledge of skills and abilities?

A Yes, that would be fair to assume.

Q And likewise can we make the same

* * *

[Page 148]

MR. SELLERS: Okay. Let's give the witness a chance to answer the question.

THE WITNESS: Well, it's kind of what I said before, I'm not – I've never seen anything with regards to the area managers and I'm not even sure with my six-month's tenure at Wal-Mart that an area at Sam's has the same level of assistant manager. We have so much less interaction with Sam's, I really don't know.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q I understand. Well, my question – Let me ask you this: Were the area managers included in this study?

A Without reviewing the actual study I have no idea. I reviewed quite a few this past weekend and I'm not sure. I could take a few minutes to review if you wish me to; but off the top of my head, I don't know.

Q Let me help you out. Let's see. Actually on page Bates No. 377770, under the section Criteria, middle paragraph it refers to Sam's Clubs, do you see that paragraph?

A Yes.

Q They use the term assistant manager but they nonetheless seem to reflect that they analyzed [Page 149] assistant managers at the Sam's Club, would you agree with that interpretation of that paragraph?

A Yes.

Q So whether we called them area managers or assistant managers here is the point I'm trying to make: Would you agree that the people who conducted this study understood that they were – that the job duties of the assistant manager at the Wal-Mart Division One Stores were the same or similar to the job duties of the assistant managers in the Sam's Clubs and likewise that they required same or similar knowledge of skills and abilities?

A Yes.

Q I'm glad we did not get hung up on terminology. Now, in this study and I think unlike the last one they did some different things with the results, am I correct? It may have been a similar procedure but once the results came in they did some other permutations?

A They presented a lot more statics on this one than the previous one. They actually broke it down by the big five in their relationship for the performance which they did not do for the 1977 study.

Q And where were you referring to?

A 377765, second paragraph it even talks

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	)	Cause No. C-01-2252 MJJ

VIDEO DEPOSITION OF ROXANNE WIGGER

Taken on behalf of the Plaintiffs

April 18, 2002

* * *

[Page 68]

we've now covered the only two areas where outside the – where audits outside the store level are conducted?

A. By –

Q. Is that correct?

A. No.

Q. By corporate.

A. By our internal group.

Q. Right.

A. We do have our Regional Personnel Managers in both Wal-Mart and Sam's who do visit, and that was the store visit form that I eluded to at the beginning as well.

Q. Okay. So are you saying that the Regional Personnel Manager also conducts audits of the store?

A. They have a form that they utilize for their visits. It is not always completed in its entirety, but it is a form that was initially used in Sam's and then began being used in Wal-Mart about 18 months ago.

Q. And is the same form used now both at Wal-Mart and Sam's?

A. No, it is not.

Q. Do you know what the deferences are on the form?

A. It's more customized to the business.

Q. Is the format the same?

A. No, they do not look exactly the same.

Q. But as I understand it, you're saying the Wal-Mart [Page 69] practice of using a store visit form actually grew from Sam's practice Sam's Club practice –

A. That is correct.

Q. – of doing that. Is that correct?

A. That is correct.

Q. And that store visit form do you know if that is a form that is retained in Wal-Mart records in a regular course of business?

A. That is a form that our Regional Personnel Managers are asked to complete not in total. It's a very extensive form, but any time they make a visit to the store they are asked to complete at least the top section of the form. Anything that they did verify while they were in the store should be acknowledged. They make a copy of that when they return from their week's travel. A copy is given to their people director, and they keep a copy for their files.

Q. So the people division keeps a copy of all store visit forms?

A. The Regional Personnel Managers keep one for their records. The people directors I eluded to Bob Momfiles at the beginning he's who I gained my information from on retention. So it is kept at those two levels.

Q. Okay. And do you know if there's any time frame for destruction of those store visit forms, or are they kept indefinitely?

* * *

[Page 110]

Manager's workbench, and it actually could be accessed from Pipeline. The path at the bottom tells me exactly how I would get to this document. So it's on Pipeline that, and it can be accessed from there.

Q. Okay. And –

A. Pipeline let me clarify that Pipeline is accessible from workbench but Pipeline or workbench is not accessible.

Q. From Pipeline?

A. Exactly. Okay.

Q. Okay.

A. So many times you'll find the same document.

Q. And so this particular document is accessible – not accessible by associates?

A. This document would be accessible by associates.

Q. It is. Okay.

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. On the second page of this document which is Bates 161464, it says the objective of STAR is to ensure stores for following proper policies and procedures. Is that correct? I mean, is that your understanding of what STAR is –

A. Yes.

Q. – supposed to accomplish?

A. Yes.

Q. And so when you and the other people involved in

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

	)
BETTY DUKES and PATRICIA	)
SURGESON on behalf of	)
themselves and all others	)
similarly situated,	)	Case No.
Plaintiffs,	)	C-01-2252
v.	)	MJJ
	)
WAL-MART STORES, INC.,	)
Defendant.	)
	)

VIDEO DEPOSITION OF MR. KEVIN HARPER

Taken on behalf of the Plaintiffs

October 9, 2002

* * *

[Page 15]

A. No.

Q. Do you have a responsibility of monitoring how stores implement those policies?

A. No.

Q. Do you have a responsibility for approving any changes in the policies regarding pay and compensation?

A. Yes.

Q. What responsibility is that?

A. As part of changes in compensation, the key people representative of all divisions come together, have discussions about those changes and how they would affect all divisions, and then trying to certainly come to some agreeance or decide if it's going to be implemented in one division and not the other.

Q. Okay. Does part of that responsibility have to do with the setting of initial starting wages for employees?

A. No.

Q. Or guidelines for what type of job class somebody – a particular job position would be in?

A. Yes.

Q. Explain what your responsibility is with regard to that.

[Page 16]

A. What we do is review both internal equity of positions, as well as external comparisons.

Q. And what do you do with that information?

A. We use that information to either make decisions to leave classes the same or make recommendations for changes.

Q. As I understand it, at Wal-Mart the hourly jobs are organized into one of I think five different classes for pay purposes?

MS. MARSHALL: Are we talking when you're using the term Wal-Mart, Division 1 or –

MR. SELIGMAN: Yes.

MS. MARSHALL: – if we can get some definition on that.

MR. SELIGMAN: Yeah.

Q. In Division 1 stores, the job positions are organized as one of five different pay classes, is that correct?

A. Correct.

Q. And those pay classes determine what the range for a starting wage would be for a particular job?

A. They – those classes don't determine the starting. They simply determine the difference between those five classes.

[Page 17]

Q. In fact, the pay classes describe Class 2 has to be X amount higher than Class 1 and Class 3 X amount higher than Class 2 and so forth? That's how it's organized?

A. That is how it's organized, yes.

Q. Okay. And in determining what job class to put a particular job, that's what you were referring to when you talked about internal equity and external comparisons?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. What do you mean by internal equity in that context?

A. As we evaluate positions, we simply look at items that would allow us to understand the responsibility of each position, impact to the store, the decision-making that would be allowed in the position, all of the factors that we would have interest in, and then make recommendations off of that. Often it's also based off of the external considerations as to where they get placed.

Q. And what do you mean the external considerations?

A. To give a specific example, in Tire & Lube Express, the reason that the technicians are placed where they are in the class range is because of [Page 18] the external competitive nature in pay.

Q. When you group these jobs, is it your intent to put in each job class job positions that have similar requirements in terms of knowledges, skills, and abilities?

A. Not always.

Q. Okay. What other factors would affect whether you put something in a job class or not?

A. The example I just gave with external competitive pay challenges. The positions are often reviewed from a standpoint of – again like I described earlier, the impact. We look at items having to do with turnover of the position, so there are several factors that go into the decision.

Q. Do you know if there's any analysis that's been at Wal-Mart that would group jobs by similarities and the requirements in terms of the skills and ability and knowledge of the position?

A. None that I'm aware of, no.

Q. When you say we look at these various things, who's the we that's making this decision?

A. The various people heads from all divisions as well as the compensation group.

Q. Is your role limited to, in regard to this pay class delineation, limited to Division 1 [Page 19] stores or do you have any involvement in setting the pay classes for Sam's Club?

A. I do not have involvement with Sam's.

Q. Do you have involvement with setting the pay for the specialty groups?

A. Yes.

Q. You play a similar role for that as you do for the regular Division I?

A. Correct.

Q. Have you reviewed any documents to prepare for this deposition?

A. Yes.

Q. What have you reviewed?

A. I reviewed documents provided by counsel yesterday.

Q. Okay. And what kinds of documents did you look at?

A. There were multiple documents, pay guidelines, information on promotional guidelines, items of that nature.

Q. What kind of pay guidelines did you look at?

A. Just the most recent field pay guidelines.

Q. And you were familiar with those

* * *

[Page 36]

Q. Was aware of the suit?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you discussed with anyone whether any allegations were true or not?

A. Have not.

Q. Have you investigated any of the allegations of the complaint?

A. Have not.

Q. Have the allegations of the complaint caused you or anyone at Wal-Mart to your knowledge to change any policies or practices at Wal-Mart?

A. No.

Q. Has it caused you to investigate any statistical patterns at Wal-Mart?

A. None that I can speak of.

Q. Have you or anyone working with you investigated the claims of any of the individual plaintiffs, present or former, in this case?

A. Have not.

Q. Have you ever talked about Betty Dukes with anybody?

A. No.

Q. Was there ever any discussion that you were involved in about whether the company should change any policies or practices as a result of the [Page 37] allegations in this suit?

MS. MARSHALL: Again I instruct not to disclose any attorney-client communications.

A. No.

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Has the company focused more on promoting women since the filing of the suit?

A. No.

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Has the company examined the pay levels of men and women since the filing of the suit?

A. Can't speak for the company. My area, no.

Q. Do the regional personnel managers have a responsibility of investigating EEOC charges?

A. Are you describing all EEOC charges or specific charges?

Q. Well, first, in general do they have a responsibility for investigating EEOC charges?

A. No.

Q. Do you know if any of the regional personnel managers investigated any of the EEOC charges filed by plaintiffs, current or former, in this case?

A. No.

[Page 38]

Q. And you never saw a report about any investigation?

A. No.

Q. Do you know if Wal-Mart talked to any other companies about their experiences with litigation after the filing of this lawsuit?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

A. When you say talk to other companies, specifically discussing this lawsuit?

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Discussing their experience with similar lawsuits.

A. Not that I'm aware of outside of privilege, no.

Q. Do you get salary exception reports?

A. Could you be a little more specific?

Q. You know what an exception report means at Wal-Mart?

A. Generally, yes.

Q. What does it mean?

A. It could be anything from sales exceptions to markdown exceptions to modular exceptions. Things that typically are not complete.

Q. What about in terms of people practices or policies?

[Page 39]

A. Are you asking if there are exception reports for –

Q. Yes.

A. – people practices? There are some, yes.

Q. What kinds are there?

A. We have notification of social security verification reports. We have exception reports that let us know how performances are versus goals for turnover or training.

Q. What other exception reports are you aware of in the people department?

A. We have measurements to review diversity versus goals. We also review child labor violations. Those are the ones I can think of right now.

Q. What about timely completion of performance evaluations?

A. Yes, we do review that.

Q. Completion of CBLs, computer based learning?

A. Yes. That's training.

Q. Compliance with Management Career Selection time periods?

A. Yes.

Q. Otherwise known as MCS, right?

[Page 40]

A. Correct.

Q. Do you get any exception reports regarding job posting?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection to form. Lack of foundation.

A. Not that I'm aware of.

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. By you I'm asking in terms of your department, not you personally necessarily.

A. Not that I'm aware of.

Q. Do you get exception reports again referring to the – your department regarding whether a salary level is within guidelines?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

A. Which positions?

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Well, first let's look at hourly.

A. No.

Q. Do you get any exception reports regarding hourly compensation?

A. No.

Q. What about for salaried employees?

A. Only those charged to the home office.

Q. And who would that be, what level of employee?

[Page 41]

A. District manager, regional manager.

Q. Do you know if the regional personnel managers get exception reports regarding salaried employees?

A. No.

Q. What about regarding hourly employees?

A No.

Q. Do you know if store personnel managers get exception reports regarding hourly employees?

A. Be more specific, please.

Q. Do you know if store personnel managers or store managers get reports indicating whether pay levels for employees in their stores comply with guidelines?

A. There's not a report that I'm aware of.

Q. Do you have a responsibility for approving exceptions with regard to salaries for district managers or regional managers?

A. Could you restate the question, please?

Q. Do you have any responsibility for approving salary levels for district or regional managers?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is that responsibility?

A. I review the level and communicate that [Page 42] to the divisionals and executive vice president of operations.

Q. Do you have that responsibility for any other positions?

A. No.

Q. Do your people directors ever advise you of salary level issues regarding employees below district manager?

A. Yes.

Q. What type of issues would come up when that happens?

A. The issues that generally come up are store managers and only discussing what their base pay is.

Q. Do your people directors have some responsibility in approving the base pay of store managers?

A. Limited.

Q. And what is that?

A. They can make exceptions based on market need.

Q. So they essentially approve exceptions to the base – the guidelines for base pay for store managers?

A. If needed.

[Page 43]

Q. And they run that by you?

A. Not always, no.

Q. But sometimes they do?

A. Occasionally.

Q. Okay. Any other positions that your people directors have consulted with you in terms of pay levels?

A. No.

Q. Has your department had any responsibilities for setting the pay levels for assistant manager positions?

A. We have responsibility for setting the start rates.

Q. Same true for co-managers?

A. Yes.

Q. And store manager?

A. Correct.

Q. Do you have the responsibility for setting any other store employee start rates other than the pay group discussion we had earlier?

A. We also are involved in the specialty groups as well.

Q. So the salary employees and the specialty groups, your department has responsibility for determining the start rates?

* * *

[Page 51]

Q. Do you know what department it came from?

A. No.

Q. Another way somebody can get a salary adjustment at Wal-Mart who's an hourly employee is through a merit increase, is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is a merit increase at Wal-Mart in that context?

A. Usually identified as someone who goes above and beyond the call of their role.

Q. And who's responsible for making that judgment about whether to give such an employee a merit increase?

A. The recommendations can come from an hourly supervisor, could come from a peer, up through the assistant manager and/or co-manager, ultimately to the store manager.

Q. And who makes the actual decision?

A. Store manager.

Q. Are there any guidelines that you're aware of about under what circumstances such an increase should be given?

A. We do have guidelines for merit increases. Generally the description is, again, performing above and beyond their position, the role the system had the ability of allowing them to key it into a document in which we were simply able to pull it and have automatic – have system automatically do the totals.

* * *

[Page 73]

Q. The totals being the actual adjustment?

A. Actual adjustment for each associate, yes.

Q. And is the purpose of this to ensure that guidelines are followed for the amount of adjustment?

A. The purpose of this automation process was to ensure that it was done timely.

Q. Under this automated process, when the performance evaluation is keyed in, a recommended salary adjustment comes out based on guidelines?

A. No.

Q. No. There's no information suggesting what a recommended annual increase is?

A. I don't know if there is in this document or not.

Q. Well, I'm looking at the title of the document, which is Automated Annual Appraisal Rating & Increase Recommendation Process. What part of this is increase recommendation?

A. There are two categories, two lines on the document for the district manager to complete. The [Page 74] first is the evaluation rating and the second is the recommendation for increase.

Q. Okay. And does the system provide any information about what that increase should be based on the rating?

A. The system I do not believe provided that information.

Q. So how does a district manager know what to put in?

A. It's in the field pay guidelines.

Q. Okay. Has there been any discussion that you're aware of about the percentage increases being given to assistant managers based on performance appraisals being inconsistent?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

A. Inconsistent with?

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. With the guidelines.

A. I'm not sure if there have been specific discussions, but there certainly are increases given that are inconsistent with guidelines.

MR. SELIGMAN: Let me mark as Exhibit 6 a memo dated January 21st, Bates stamped 650667.

(Exhibit 6 was marked for identification by the reporter).

* * *

[Page 160]

all?

A. None that I know of.

Q. Okay. Do you know what proportion of co-manager positions are filled through MCS?

A. Most co-manager positions are not filled through MCS.

Q. Why is that?

A. We don't make a routine posting of co-manager positions.

Q. And why is that?

A. The only time we post them is if it's an area where we're having a difficult time staffing the position.

Q. Why don't you post it for the same reasons that you post the store manager positions?

A. Number one reason right now is I have more co-managers than I will have stores to place them in in the future.

Q. That's a relatively recent phenomenon, isn't it?

A. Not for me.

Q. Okay. It's been true as long as you've been there?

A. Correct.

Q. And is that the reason you don't post?

[Page 161]

A. Most often we do not need a co-manager, so we would utilize the ones that we have.

Q. The MCS system is not normally used to fill assistant manager positions, is that correct?

A. Not normally.

Q. When would it be used for an assistant manager?

A. It's been used on a few occasions in hard-to-staff areas.

Q. Why isn't it used for the rest of the assistant manager positions?

A. The majority of the assistant manager positions are filled with individuals coming out of the training program, so those positions are pretty much filled or available positions are taken up by people transitioning.

Q. Transitioning from management trainee to assistant manager, is that what you said?

A. Correct.

Q. Who makes the decision about what store a management trainee will go to as an assistant manager?

A. That can be a decision at multiple levels.

Q. Including what?

A. It can be a decision certainly at the [Page 162] district level. It can be a decision at the RPM level or the regional level.

Q. When a person goes into the management trainee position, they're not slotted for a particular assistant managing opening when they go into it, is that correct?

A. Not usually. On occasion they are.

Q. Okay. But for most management trainees, they go into the program not knowing what store they're going to end up going to?

A. I'm not sure what your definition of most is compared to mine.

Q. Majority?

A. That doesn't help me either. Is it 70 percent, 75 percent, or –

Q. You tell me what's your understanding. What percentage of management trainees know what store they're going to go to when they go into the program?

A. I would say 20 percent probably know what their next position is.

Q. Okay. Why don't those management trainees, why aren't they given the opportunity to bid for particular assistant manager openings through your MCS system?

A. At this point the majority of our [Page 163] assistant manager openings for a given district are filled by that district. Most of our districts are small enough in area that – and the need for filling the position quickly so we have right leadership in the store to manage the building, we just have made a decision not to post that, that we feel that we can at this point manage it without a tremendous amount of difficulty.

Q. Have you ever considered, and you being Wal-Mart, to your knowledge considered posting assistant manager positions?

A. Not outside of privileged conversations, no.

Q. The MCS system identifies certain criteria that are supposed to be met for positions. You have that on the exhibit in front of you, starting at the bottom of the page?

A. Yes.

Q. Are these minimum criteria?

A. These are criteria that are used. There are people who could perhaps not meet these criteria but still be selected.

Q. And who would have to approve that?

A. For a store manager position, it would be the regional.

* * *

[Page 180]

A. No, I did not.

Q. Why does Wal-Mart not post management trainee openings?

A. At this point we believe that our associates have numerous avenues to become aware of or voice interest in positions within Wal-Mart, whether that be management trainee positions within the Wal-Mart Division 1, the Supercenters, any of the specialty groups.

It is a discussion that's commonly had with them during their evaluations. And certainly we take those interests very seriously and that's how the majority of the people get into the program.

Q. Well, couldn't you say the same about hourly positions, hourly employees have numerous avenues to voice an interest in other positions and promotion?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

A. I think all associates have an opportunity and availability to show interest in anything.

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Well, why do you post for hourly jobs and for store management jobs but not for management trainee?

[Page 181]

A. I don't know that I know a reason.

Q. Do you know if there's ever been any consideration about posting management trainee?

A. Not that I'm aware of outside of privilege, no.

Q. Has there been some concern expressed in senior management about the lack of information hourly associates might have about how to get into the management training process?

A. I don't know of any that's been voiced.

Q. Have you ever had any conversations with Charlyn Jarrells Porter about the issue of posting management trainee positions?

A. I don't recall.

MR. SELIGMAN: Let me mark as Exhibit 29 a memorandum from Charlyn Jarrells Porter, Bates stamped 649821.

(Exhibit 29 was marked for identification by the reporter).

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Are you familiar with this document?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. And you got it sometime around June 27, 2002?

A. Yes.

* * *

[Page 195]

it can be any number of things that may impact that store completely different than it impacts a store in Florida.

So a lot of the information that they learn will not be uniform because it will be specific to that location that they're actually training in.

Q. There's a company-designed training plan for the management training position, isn't there?

A. Yes, there is.

Q. And that's a training plan that is a training plan that is not different for each store or each region or each district; it's a company-wide training plan?

A. It is a company-wide training plan that associates are placed through.

Q. Now have there been recent decisions about adding other positions into the Management Training Program?

A. There have been decisions about allowing participation of other divisions within the Wal-Mart Stores.

Q. So the specialty divisions?

A. That's correct.

Q. And has a decision been made to have specialty folks go through the Management Training

* * *

[Page 204]

Pipeline looks different. The majority of this information is there. It's not in this form. I was not in the position when this particular document came out. I don't know if I can state whether it still exists in this form anywhere.

Q. But the information on Pipeline is at a level of detail similar to this?

A. It describes the position. It certainly talks about the training expectations while you're in the position and walks through what the criteria are. Again, I can't speak if all of these items are on there. I'm not sure.

Q. There's not a similar document about the Management Training Program, is there, that's available on Pipeline or on the Workbench?

A. There is an outline of what the manager trainee job is and the actual training by week that shows what the person would go through.

Q. There's no document that's out there that says, "Here are the criteria for going into the program and here's the selection process"?

A. Not that I can recall.

Q. Do you know why not?

A. I think that the First In Line program was new; the management trainee program is not. The have gone back and asked what caused that or what caused that to occur to try to see if we can make corrections and improvements going forward.

* * *

[Page 206]

Q. How were they monitoring what the store manager and district managers are doing in the way you describe? Do they get reports? How do they do it?

A. No. No, when I say that their – their monitoring is what is coming to their attention. It is not something that they go out on or have a report of that says the trainees are performing at X level or X success factor of these selections.

Q. Who has the authority to put someone in the Management Training Program?

A. The store manager makes the recommendations generally. District manager and RPM are the ones that approve it.

Q. Is there any – strike that. Anyone above the district manager or RPM have to sign off?

A. No.

Q. Is there a document that the district manager and RPM have to literally sign off on?

A. There is a PCN that we use to put them in the payroll system for the home office that would require someone in the RPM role to administer it. So from that standpoint there is a sign-off, if you would, told that these are the criteria?

* * *

[Page 216]

A. I'm not sure.

Q. Do you know if there's any instruction to store or district managers about any criteria other than these that should be considered for promotion into management – assistant manager trainee?

A. Other criteria that's written?

Q. Other than what's written here.

A. But you're talking about additional criteria in writing? Or are you just talking about criteria that we may discuss at training sessions, district manager orientation?

Q. Well, let me break it up. You've already told me there's no other written criteria that you're aware of, right?

A. Correct.

Q. Okay. Other than that, is there any instruction or training given to store or district level management about what criteria they should consider other than these written criteria in promotion of associates to assistant manager trainees?

A. There is different opportunities for them to be educated on that fact through new store orientation, first time manager school, DM orientation, year beginning meetings, midyear meetings. There's a [Page 217] lot of different ways that this kind of communication could be communicated to them.

Q. And what other factors have they been told they should consider?

A. Certainly people with outside experience, people who are perhaps going to come into the organization that you do not have a place for today but maybe in three months you would. Certainly people who seem to be moving through the organization at a much more fast pace. Those kinds of things would be taken into consideration.

Q. Any other factors that they've been told they should consider?

A. None that I'm aware of.

Q. Anything about leadership qualities?

A. Leadership qualities certainly are discussions through pretty much any decision to move anyone into management and into additional positions.

Q. What about communication skills?

A. I consider that part of leadership.

Q. Okay. Are these selection criteria meant to state a minimum level of criteria somebody must meet in order to be promoted to the specified position?

A. I think it's meant to be things that are to be looked at and considered.

[Page 218]

Q. Do divisions have the authority to set lower levels of criteria than these?

A. Don't know that I would describe it as lower levels. I think they had the autonomy to certainly consider if someone does not meet one of their criteria as a justifiable reason.

Q. But I mean in terms of a guideline. Does a – does a division or a region or even a district have the authority to set a general guideline that would have lower requirements than this?

A. Again, I think that the districts would go off of this criteria and then value any exception.

Q. Are you aware of any divisions setting criteria lower than the criteria that are set in this management selection process?

A. None that I'm aware of.

Q. You're aware some set a higher level for some factors?

A. Yes.

Q. Which ones do you know of who set a higher level?

A. The only one that I'm aware of is Division A.

Q. Division A has its own list of selection factors?

[Page 219]

A. It did at one time.

Q. Do they anymore?

A. No.

Q. When did that stop?

A. When we had a discussion in December of 2001 with the operations divisions talking through some of the guidelines. The decision was made after that meeting that that would be removed.

Q. And why is that?

A. In order to make sure that the opportunity for advancement was the same throughout the organization and it gave a fair opportunity for all across all divisions and was not different but allowed for that same growth opportunity for the folks in Division A that would allow for the other five divisions.

Q. So you were trying to look for some consistency throughout the company?

A. What we were trying to look for is opportunity to allow people to advance, and we did not want anything to hinder that.

Q. You didn't want one division to have special rules that would limit their employees?

A. We didn't want any people in one division to have a different set.

* * *

[Page 246]

So I think as we became more densely populated in certain markets, the need to request that particular status is just simply not as great.

Q. How do you know how many requests are made?

A. I don't.

Q. So how do you know there's fewer requests?

A. I base that purely off the numbers of the people who are in the program.

Q. So there's fewer people in the program, but you don't have any information about how many people asked to be put in the program?

A. There are fewer people in the program of when I was a regional personnel manager in the mid '90s. If it is – I couldn't articulate or don't know if it's fewer than what have requested.

Q. Okay. And your explanation for that that you just gave me, that's your supposition or have you done any analysis about why there's fewer people?

A. I have no written analysis.

Q. Do you have any information other than our own opinion you've just stated that supports your belief about why there's less?

A. No.

* * *

[Page 292]

management level.

Q. How long has that program been part of Wal-Mart as far as you know?

A. It was started prior to me moving into the position. I couldn't tell you exactly when it went in – became – it came into existence.

Q. Okay. Now you track a lot of information as part of your job. What are the programs that you have at Wal-Mart specifically to achieve diversity?

A. We have several programs. We work with Speaking of Women's Health. We have a Women in Leadership program. We have specific expectations as it relates to our college recruiting and our initiatives there. We have diversity, both minority and gender career fairs that we go to across the nation. We participate in events like SIFE.

We have goals that are established for our individual regions so that we can make sure that we are moving in the right direction where we need to. We continue to utilize great examples of diversity to come into our merchandising division and help us with the way that we merchandise our stores based on perhaps an ethnic product or an ethnic line of products. There are numerous programs that we have across the company.

Q. Let me talk about the goal setting in [Page 293] terms of diversity. We've seen some of the goals of some of the documents that are there. There are goals for management for women and minorities that are set?

A. Yes.

Q. And are there goals for specific positions in management as opposed to generic management?

A. We do not set goals by position.

Q. Has that always been true so far as you know?

A. It's always been true. This year we tried our first breakdown, but it was a very high-level breakdown. It was not done by region.

Q. And when you say a high level, you mean is it company wide?

A. I can't speak to company. I can only speak to Division 1 Supercenters.

Q. And what was that breakdown showing?

A. We went through and took a look at trainees, assistant managers, co-managers, store managers.

Q. And did you set goals for them?

A. We did for my area.

Q. Meaning Division 1 and specialty?

A. Meaning me. I did not break it down by [Page 294] people director or by region.

Q. So it's just – it's a company wide – I mean division wide as opposed to a smaller geographical?

A. That's correct. And that did include specialty.

Q. And how did you go about setting goals for those positions?

A. We asked for each of our RPMs to gather the goals by district and roll that into region number and then roll it up to the people directors and ultimately up to myself.

Q. For each of these positions?

A. No. Just in total.

Q. Okay. That's for setting the general goal?

A. That's correct.

(Mr. Putman returns to the deposition room).

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Okay. But in terms of setting the specific goals for trainee, assistant manager, co-manager, and store manager, how are those goals determined?

A. I determined those myself.

* * *

[Page 297]

A. Yes.

Q. So you don't set a goal at the top and it goes down?

A. We certainly review those goals and if we believe that they are less than or too aggressive, we do sit down and have conversations with the people who establish those regionally.

Q. Okay. Let me take the – the first level of goals is district?

A. Yes.

Q. And how long have you been keeping goals by district?

A. We've had them for about two years now.

Q. And who devises those goals?

A. The district manager.

Q. And is the district manager the one who is – is the district manager supposed to consult with anyone else in doing that?

A. He or she certainly can. We don't ask that they consult. We just ask for them to report the information back to the RPM.

Q. And what instructions are given to the district managers about what that goal should be?

A. We don't give out specific instructions except that our goal is to continue to drive minority [Page 298] and gender representation.

Q. They're not given any overall percentage guidelines about what range they should be in or what kind of improvement?

A. No.

Q. So it is left to each district manager to decide what their goal for the following year is going to be?

A. It is left to the district manager and then the RPM and regional to discuss whether or not that's an acceptable number.

Q. So that the district manager then brings that to the regional and the RPM and says, "This is what I propose" and they review and approve or change?

A. Yes.

Q. And what instructions do the regional or the regional personnel manager have in terms of how to review these goals?

A. We've had several discussions in our RPM weekly meetings about our desire to continue to grow our representation. And as a result of that, certainly as they reviewed the numbers those numbers should reflect efforts that are being made in the district's regions, et cetera. And certainly our expectation is to continue to see improvement.

* * *

[Page 302]

would have been the final. I can't say that for sure. I don't know.

Q. Do you know if the criteria for setting goals have changed since you became the – in your position?

A. I don't know the answer to that.

Q. Is there an ultimate goal to have management reach a level equal to the community representation?

A. That presents a certain challenge. The minority representation is a goal that, compared to the community in most markets and most areas, is one that we believe that we can get to.

If you look at the female community numbers, depending on the reports you look at could be anywhere from 50 to 52 percent. If you look at our overall management numbers, we're short of that number.

We are continuing to make improvements. And I believe that we will successfully reach our goals and perhaps even beyond that. Getting to the community will be a chance.

Q. Why?

A. We are full of industries within Wal-Mart that it is historically been are fairly male dominated. And quite honestly, in a lot of those situations we are

* * *

[Page 304]

Q. Have you ever studied that?

A. No.

Q. 78 percent or so of your department managers are women and about 35 or 6 percent are assistant managers. Is that about right?

A. That's pretty close.

Q. Do you have any explanation about why there's that big disparity in female representation?

A. The only thing that I can draw on is my personal experience of being in a position to be able to affect that.

Q. And when was that?

A. All the way from the late '80s through the mid '90s.

Q. And that's when you were in store management?

A. Store manager, district manager, and regional personnel.

Q. Since that time you haven't seen any analysis about why that disparity exists or any explanation?

A. I can't recall any.

Q. Does it concern you or any other senior management at Wal-Mart that that disparity exists?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

* * *

[Page 318]

around that had some thoughts on it.

MR. SELIGMAN: I'll mark as Exhibit 64 a document called Diversity Ideas, Bates stamped 365621.

(Exhibit 64 was marked for identification by the reporter).

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Do you recognize this document?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is this document?

A. This was information I believe that was just shared amongst the RPMs.

Q. Are these ideas from the RPMs?

A. That I couldn't tell you.

Q. And you got given a copy of this by somebody?

A. Yes.

Q. And when approximately was this?

A. It would have been sometime late last year.

Q. Did you follow up on any of the items raised?

A. No.

Q. Why not?

A. Because the majority of the items that are on here we are already doing, have been for some guidelines of relocation?

* * *

[Page 320]

A. There hasn't been any discussion.

Q. Has there been any discussion about diversity in the co-manager ranks?

A. There's been diversity about – or discussions about diversity in all ranks.

Q. Has there been a particular focus this last year about co-managers?

A. Not that I'm aware of differently than the entire management organization.

Q. There's a diversity CBL module, right?

A. Yes.

Q. And who watches that?

A. I believe diversity CBL is all hourly supervisors and above.

MR. SELIGMAN: Mark as Exhibit Number 65 a document called Diversity Awareness.

(Exhibit 65 was marked for identification by the reporter) .

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. This is the diversity awareness module?

A. Yes, I believe it is.

Q. Was there ever a recommendation that this should be shown to all employees as opposed to just the supervisor?

[Page 321]

A. Not that I know of.

MR. SELIGMAN: Let me show you a document we're going to mark as Exhibit Number 66, I believe. It's a two-page document. First page is 559170.

(Exhibit 66 was marked for identification by the reporter).

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. This is from Katie Morris at Computer Based Learning to Dennis Anderson. Who was Dennis Anderson in 1998?

A. 1998 Dennis was our – I do not know if he had been promoted to vice president at the time or not, but he was in charge of training and development.

Q. Okay. This memo says that Andy, Maxie, and Kevin Harper do not want to change the current requirement that only management and hourly supervisors view the module. Does that refresh your recollection about whether you had ever opposed?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection to form and to characterization of prior testimony questioning.

A. My response to this would be is my recommendation would have been based off of the time where I was supporting a group that did not do CBL because it was not available to home office. And that was the division I supported at the time. So I'm quite terms of doing a survey?

* * *

[Page 335]

A. I don't know of one if it's been done.

Q. Do you know if there have been any sessions with district managers about their attitudes towards diversity?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection to form.

A. I'm not sure how – could you restate the question?

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. Have there been any sessions with district or store managers and outside consultants where they were asked about their attitudes concerning diversity?

A. Not that I know.

MR. SELIGMAN: Okay. Let's go off the record. How much time we got left?

MR. HARRISON: Going off the record. Time on the monitor is 5:27.

(Recess taken).

MR. HARRISON: Back on the record. The time is the monitor is 5:34.

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. You've reported to Charlyn Jarrells Porter your views about the progress of diversity at Wal-Mart at various times, is that correct?

[Page 336]

A. Correct.

Q. Have you told her what you think the biggest impediments were for achieving greater diversity in the management levels?

A. I don't recall outlining specific areas where I thought there were barriers, but simply identifying things I thought we could do to continue to improve.

Q. Have you recently expressed to her the concern that there are not enough people in the Pipeline to get promoted to meet female diversity requirements?

A. We have had that conversation.

Q. That was pretty recently, right?

A. I believe it was probably within the last five months.

Q. Okay. Tell me when you had that conversation.

A. I can't remember the exact date.

Q. Approximately?

A. Approximately five months ago.

Q. And tell me who else was there.

A. I believe it was just her and I.

Q. And what did you say?

A. We just simply talked about the diversity [Page 337] goals, where we were to that point, and what we were going to have to do to reach the goal by the end of the year.

Q. And what was that?

A. We were simply going to have to do exactly what the discussion was, which is put more female management in the Pipeline.

Q. And you think this was about five months ago?

A. I don't recall the exact timeline.

Q. Okay. When you say female management, you mean more people into management training or something else?

A. All positions.

Q. Okay. And did you discuss how you were going to do that?

A. We talked about the opportunity of – several opportunities. We talked about opportunities of recruiting through diversity career fairs and women's career fairs. We talked about college recruiting. We talked about promoting more hourly associates into the training program. We talked about hiring from outside the company. I'm not so sure that we didn't talk about most any way that we could improve the representation of the company.

[Page 338]

Q. Have you revisited this issue with her since this conversation five months ago?

A. I don't recall having that specific of a conversation, no.

Q. Have you sent her any memos on the subject?

A. She gets a monthly update of where we are on diversity. We do a quarterly review. So she's certainly received different documents since that would have allowed her to review that information, sure.

MR. SELIGMAN: Let me mark as Exhibit 71 a First Quarter Report dated September 9th, 2002, from you to Charlyn Jarrells Porter, Bates stamped 646265.

(Exhibit 71 was marked for identification by the reporter).

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. This is a document that you sent to Ms. Porter?

A. It would have been.

Q. And it refers to a first quarter report. You do a quarterly report to her?

A. I do.

Q. And it's CC'd to Jim Haworth, who's the head of operations for the stores?

A. That's correct.

[Page 339]

Q. And he usually gets the – or whoever the head of operations is gets your quarterly reports also?

A. All the quarterly reports I send to Charlyn also goes to Jim.

Q. Okay. Let me ask you to take a look at the second page. Under diversity it says, "Female representation is improving. My largest concern is in the Pipeline. We do not have the needed representation at the trainee level at this time. We're trending down to last year. This is a major focus of the team." Had, you had any discussions about that other than what you referred to five months ago?

A. I think Charlyn and I have had an update discussion as we've went through our normal updates where we've talked about diversity representation by position. So certainly trainee position has been discussed.

Q. Has there been any follow-up after this letter on the subject of what to do about this?

A. I don't recall anything that I've sent her as follow-up.

Q. What did you mean by "we are trending down to last year"?

A. As I measure our diversity numbers, I certainly do it by position. And at that particular

* * *

[Page 341]

A. It does.

Q. On the first page – second page it says, "Increase diversity representation." That was an objective for fiscal year 2002, or is?

A. Yes.

Q. It refers to diversity training for district managers?

A. Yes.

Q. Has that been done?

A. We have not done specific diversity training, no.

Q. Has there ever been diversity training for district managers that you know about?

A. I'm not aware of any.

Q. Is there a plan to do it in this fiscal year?

A. I haven't had discussions about that outside of privilege.

Q. Okay. What did you mean here by diversity training?

A. Just simply continuing the – to build on what diversity training we already have available.

Q. Would that involve some meetings with the district managers to talk about their attitudes about diversity or something else?

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES and PATRICIA SURGESON on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,	)
Plaintiffs,	)	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ
v.	)
WAL-MART STORES, INC.,	)
Defendant.	)

VIDEO DEPOSITION OF MS. CELIA SWANSON

Taken on behalf of the Plaintiffs

November 6, 2002

* * *

[Page 61]

Q. And who was in charge of people at that time?

A. It ultimately rolled up to her, but in 1996 I had the VP of people position.

Q. Okay. And people reported to the membership, marketing, and administration VP at that time?

A. Correct. Senior VP at that time.

Q. How long did you stay with the title of senior VP, membership, marketing, and administration?

A. Until 12/2/2000.

Q. And that's when you were made executive vice president?

A. Correct.

Q. What is the difference between an executive vice president and a senior vice president?

A. Scope and breadth of responsibilities as it relates to Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.

Q. In terms of your responsibilities, what differences were there?

A. Serving on the Wal-Mart executive committee, attending Wal-Mart board meetings, attending analyst presentations, actually being a presenter at analyst meetings, playing a more senior executive role within the total Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.

[Page 62]

Q. Had there ever been a female executive vice president at Sam's before you were given the title?

A. I'm sorry, the question again?

Q. Prior to the time that you were made executive vice president, had there ever been a female executive vice president at Sam's?

A. That role had not existed previously to when I was promoted to executive vice president.

Q. There were no executive vice presidents?

A. For Sam's. That was a newly created position at that point.

Q. Was it only one position that was made at that time or –

A. No, there were three.

Q. And why were three executive vice president positions made in December 2000?

A. It was out of recognition of the growth and contribution that the total Sam's Club organization had made to Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.

Q. Had there been executive vice presidents prior to December 2000 for Wal-Mart?

A. Yes.

Q. Had there ever been a female executive vice president?

[Page 63]

A. Not to my knowledge.

Q. Since you were made an executive vice president, have any other women been made executive vice presidents?

A. I don't know what Jean Jackson's title was. Other than that, no.

Q. Was Kevin Turner an executive vice president at any time?

A. Yes.

Q. When was he made executive vice president?

A. Within the last year and a half to two years.

Q. After you were an executive VP?

A. Shortly after I was.

Q. Who were the two other executive vice presidents for Sam's that were given that title at the time that you were?

A. Phil Sutterfield. Jim Haworth.

Q. And then when Kevin Turner was made executive VP, was he replacing Sutterfield or Haworth?

A. No.

Q. Was he – was Mr. Turner an executive VP for Sam's?

A. No.

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ

Friday, January 17, 2003
Washington, D.C.

VIDEO DEPOSITION OF:

THOMAS M. COUGHLIN, III

was called for examination by counsel for Plaintiffs, beginning at approximately 10:18 o'clock a.m., at the law offices of Cohen, Milstein, Hausfeld, & Toll, 1100 New York Avenue, West Tower, Suite 500, Washington, D.C. 20005-3965, before Ronnie C. Palmer, a Notary Public in and for the District of Columbia:

* * *

[Page 12]

Hyde, who's the executive vice president of the corporation for legal. I don't think I missed anyone. I think that's it.

Q. And your area of responsibility is to oversee the operations for Wal-Mart Stores, Division 1, Supercenters, Specialty, and Sam's? Is that right?

MS. ABELL: Objection, ambiguous. You can answer.

THE WITNESS: That would be a large part of it, and the Neighborhood Markets are in there, as well.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Okay.

A. Inclusive with the list of responsibilities. But it's not just the operations. It's a variety of, you know, all that goes into making the areas work together.

Q. You're familiar with a gentleman named Coleman Peterson?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Does he report to you?

A. No, sir. He does not.

Q. To whom does he report?

A. To Lee Scott

* * *

[Page 42]

A. Again, we've got six or eight Sam's opening this week, and I believe that would put them in the 560 range.

Q. Okay. Now, as I understand your description of your career – or let me ask you this.

When you started as director of loss prevention, was that with respect to the entire company as it then existed or was that focused on Sam's or Wal-Mart Stores?

A. There was only the discount stores, 196 discount stores. There were no other, except support divisions of the company for logistics or any other office support that would be there, warehouses. That type thing were the only other part of the company at that time.

Q. All right. Did you find – at one point or another it looks like you had responsibility particularly for the Sam's operation as opposed to Wal-Mart Stores. Is that correct?

A. Totally separate from. Yes.

Q. Did you find that the personnel policies that were in operation in the Sam's facilities were similar to those that were in place in the Wal-Mart Stores?

MS. ABELL: Objection. Ambiguous and [Page 43] compound. You can try to answer.

THE WITNESS: I would have found – I would have to think about what would have been different because it generally would have been the same.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Okay. In your view, does Wal-Mart wherever possible try to fill positions through promotions rather than hiring from outside?

A. I would say that that is a very, very true statement. We always look inside the company to find people that – who understand again somewhat different approach to retail. It's a bigger issue .than somebody outside looking in would think about it.

People in retailing are very promotionally driven. High, low, you know, sales. And coming to understand the value that we gained out of an everyday low price program, when it's well understood by your people is a huge advantage in getting on and being successful in your business, not compromising in doing what many people would consider an easier way to run it.

Q. Thank you. In the job you currently hold, I think you said that Mr. Scott is your

* * *

[Page 95]

the executive committee?

A. You know, I would say no, in the current state of affairs. I can remember times in the past where they had been at different periods, but it was – again, facilities regulate a lot of what we do. We are not big on offices and a lot of places to meet. And when the room would grow to a certain size, something would have to be eliminated. And I can remember times when they had secretaries in taking notes. But it would be less – far less often than there would have been.

Q. Do you know what happens to the – did you get copies of the notes after the meetings, at which they did take notes?

A. I got copies when I was absent for a period of time. But that's been a long time ago.

Q. More than five years ago?

A. Five years would be a comfortable guess for me. It's been a substantial amount of time. I'd be guessing at five years. It would seem like that would be about what it would be.

Q. Has the topic of posting of jobs at Wal-Mart come up at any board meetings at which you've been present?

A. I recall discussions on our posting [Page 96] process as we began it, and as we accelerated what we were doing. I can recall that it has been discussed at some point in time, and I'm not certain it was in the formal board meeting. We have dinners with them. To explain myself, I'm not trying to be vague, we'll sit around dinner and talk about a lot of subjects.

And I suspect it was at a dinner meeting where we discussed it, but I am not certain. But it was with board members.

Q. Were there discussions with the board members, at whatever setting it may have occurred, with respect to job posting, about whether posting of jobs was something that was desirable, or something that was a goal, or would that kind of topic have come up?

A. I think it would have been, the best of my recollection, it would be – or we would bring it up as something we were doing, and then taking it to another level to attempt to do – to make sure that we were identifying all available talent, and hopefully dealing with diversity issues as well.

Q. And just so I understand, you're saying that in these board discussions, posting came up in the context of it being a tool used to help develop all available talent at the company? Is that what general manager and whoever supervises them immediately who would be addressing these things, not the People Division or human resources?

* * *

[Page 122]

A. The store manager and I guess on occasion DMs. Yes.

Q. Are you aware of any studies that have been done at Wal-Mart looking at whether as a group women, either store managers, or assistant managers, or district managers, or some discrete group, are paid differently at different levels than men holding the same jobs?

MS. ABELL: Objection. To the extent that your answer would call upon you to disclose information learned from counsel, I instruct you not to answer. Otherwise you may answer the question if you have information from any other source.

THE WITNESS: I would have no further information beyond anything that we would have discussed.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Let me just be clear. I'm not trying to intrude on what you and cancel discussed, but you have not come across in the regular course of business in your work, any results of any studies of pay – of comparing compensation for men and women? [Page 123] Is that correct?

A. Other than what I would have –

Q. I am not asking you what you learned from counsel.

A. I'm not familiar with any.

Q. Okay. Would you expect that those kinds of analyses, if they were done, conducting those kinds of analyses routinely, not related to anything counsel has told you or any particular litigation, but just as part of the regular business function would be a good idea?

MS. ABELL: Objection, ambiguous, lack of foundation.

THE WITNESS: You'd have to – I'd have to understand more about what you're asking to understand the value of it. Beyond general information that I could look at when I want to, I don't have enough understanding to say that yes, it would be of value.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Let me help you put it – provide some context. Do you think it's generally a good business practice for Wal-Mart to monitor, to look at the aggregate effect of various decisions that its managers make whether it be compensation, or gross process at the store.

* * *

[Page 150]

Q. Now, are you familiar with the term resident assistant manager?

A. Yes.

Q. What is that? What's the nature of that job?

A. Well, I can remember it from again my earliest days with the company, that as we started to spread from a development standpoint into other states, other geographies, that there were many people – I should correct the statement many.

There were people that could not make the moves to new areas or would not because of personal circumstances, who returned a lot of value to the store they worked in and yet weren't able to go and do many of the things that were necessary to run the business and grow the business. And it continues today that there are people in that classification.

Q. And what is it that the resident assistant manager position offers?

A. It offers far less than the other assistant managers provide for us, as far as versatility to run and develop new stores or operations. There have been things that we found about it that had been good. It offers a certain [Page 151] amount of stability. But coupled with that, there have been corresponding problems where people didn't perform well and it dragged down the performance of the stores.

So it came back to just how good was the person. And we learned through the years it had to be a very productive person to be able to leave them in the environment and produce for you. And fair numbers of the people in that position for a given period, you know, good period of time.

Q. Are there things that the resident assistant manager can or can't do that other assistant managers do?

A. Well, yes. There's store setups is part of the development process with assistants. To my knowledge, resident assistant managers don't go out and complete that part of the development process for assistants. So miss the opportunity to understand how you literally create the store from the turnover of the building's keys.

They will typically not go out on remodels or some other projects you would put assistants through to help them develop, again, their base to be able to take on additional challenges. And there is a difference in the – some of the [Page 152] structure of – requirements for them, too. And I am not articulate on them.

Q. Resident assistant managers do not have to relocate? Is that the distinction between them and regular assistant managers?

A. They don't have to relocate their residence. They very well may have to relocate, but not their residence.

Q. So they may have to work at a different store, but within a commuting distance of there existing residence?

A. Correct.

Q. If you seek to enter the regular assistant manager program, not the resident assistant manager program, do you have to be willing to relocate? That is move your residence?

A. No. No. You just have to be willing to relocate the store that you are operating in.

Q. Then I'm not sure I understand the difference between a resident assistant manager and an assistant manager.

A. Well. Again, I'll go back to some of the differences. There is differences in what's required of them. There is less requirement, and I'm not real keen on these, these details, but they have different on a variety of different training exercises like you're put through many training exercises in your day-to-day operation. But going out and resetting stores, going out and resetting stores, going out and initially setting stores, going out and being responsible for hiring for new stores.

* * *

[Page 157]

There's a whole variety of training exercises that assistant managers who hopefully are going to be promotable to new or open operations gain through this process of going out and working on these projects.

Q. And it's not the practice of sending the people who hold the resident assistant manager positions out to perform these training exercises?

A. That would be correct.

Q. So what is it that the resident assistant managers do?

A. They work in a store or stores right in the market that they have limited their lifestyle, living arrangements to, and they work in those stores.

Q. And in your view, do people who hold resident assistant manager positions, are they less likely to get promoted than those people who hold assistant manager positions?

[Page 158]

A. Absolutely. I don't know if I know of any promotions from that position.

Q. From the resident assistant manager position?

A. Right, unless they opened up their availability.

Q. Are they paid the same amounts? That is the people who hold the resident assistant manager and assistant manager positions paid the same amounts?

MS. ABELL: Objection. Lack of foundation.

THE WITNESS: I couldn't answer it anyway. I am not close enough to looking at – you know, there's not a lot of them. I wouldn't know without looking it up.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Okay.

MS. ABELL: Counsel, is this a good time for a break?

MR. SELLERS: Sure.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: Going off the record. The time on the monitor is 3:16.

(Off the record.)

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: Going back on record.

[Page 159]

The time on the monitor is 3:40. Please continue.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Has the position on whether people entering the assistant manager positions where they have to relocate always been the same?

A. I cannot think of a point in time where it would have been any different.

Q. It's your understanding there has never been a requirement that candidates for selection to assistant manager positions have to agree to relocate their residence?

A. Well, let me clarify. Assistant managers need to be able to go to where the opportunity for the advancement and/or where their expertise may be required. What I'm saying is it isn't always – it wasn't every time that they had to move their residence.

They may have had to go to a different store or for that store to utilize their skills. It's very irregular that they do relocate their residence. I answered the question, I thought the way you asked me if they had to always relocate.

Q. I may not have made it clear. What I meant was, did they have to be willing to relocate as a condition of being considered for the assistant [Page 160] manager position?

A. Yes.

Q. Is that still the case?

A. Yes, it is.

Q. So in your view, consistently over the, let's say, the last ten years as just a sample, consistently it's been the policy that if you want to be considered an eligible for selection as an assistant manager you have to be willing to relocate your residence?

A. Yes.

Q. And in your view, the candidate's willingness to relocate his or her residence is a precondition to being considered for assistant manager position hasn't changed over that period?

A. No. We've always – with this huge growth that we've had, we've always had the need for the expertise that was being developed in other new stores, discount stores, Supercenters, or Neighborhood Markets that were being developed. And the people that were in those positions that were moved were in need of advancing to different responsibilities as part of their development, and most often would relocate to different areas where those needs were.

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES , et al Plaintiffs, v. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	))))))))	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ

VIDEO DEPOSITION OF COLEMAN PETERSON

Taken on behalf of the Plaintiffs

December 18, 2002

* * *

[Page 8]

Q And what is the title of your current position?

A My formal title is executive vice-president, people division, which is our, Wal-Mart's nomenclature for human resources.

Q Does your area of responsibility extend throughout the entire Wal-Mart Stores, Inc, that is includes responsibilities in the Sam's division as well as Wal-Mart Stores, Wal-Mart Division 1?

A Yes, sir, it does.

Q It also covers the specialty area?

A Yes, sir, it does.

Q Okay. Would you describe for us the nature of the job duties you have in your present job?

A I really simply define them as having responsibility, overall responsibility for getting, keeping and developing Wal-Mart talent worldwide.

Q All right.

MS. ABELL: Mr. Muzingo's entered the deposition.

MR. SELLERS:

Q How long have you held this position?

A Since the spring of 1994.

Q So you have held this job for more than eight years, is that right?

* * *

[Page 72]

to dig into it to really understand so –.

Q Okay, I understand. Is it fair to say that in the past a majority of the pool from which you have drawn your management have been internal employees rather than external?

A Yes, sir, that is fair to say.

Q Okay.

Q Let me direct your attention to the last page of Exhibit 3. This page is entitled Board Strategy Discussion People. Would that title signify to you that these topics were likely raised with the board compensation and nominating committee?

A It is likely. I don't want to limit this to the compensation and nominating committee because again as I said it's not titled compensation and nominating so it's possible that it might have been literally a broader board discussion.

Q I see. Let me ask you that. Do you have occasion to make presentations to a broader group of board members than just those who comprise the compensation and nominating committee?

A Yes, sir, I do.

Q Under what circumstances?

A On an annual basis we address the entire board as to our individual strategies by specialty of the [Page 73] business.

Q I see, okay. And this may be a list of discussion points for that broader meeting?

A Yes, sir.

Q All right. You make reference in the box on the upper left-hand corner to the use of the term – use of equity formulas. Do you see that under pay programs?

A Yes.

Q What is it that you meant to convey there?

A I don't know what my intent was at that time.

Q Okay. Under the category worklife issues?

A Yes.

Q The first bullet item is introduce alternative work arrangements. What did you mean there?

A This was we were focusing on home office and again retention was our challenge and so we were looking at all aspects of our business in terms of what kinds of things might be done to continue to make Wal-Mart an associate worker friendly place and so some of the initial discussions we had had was maybe we should begin looking at home office and experimenting with alternative work arrangements.

Q And what – give me an example of an alternative work arrangement you were looking at.

* * *

[Page 141]

A I have exposure to the reports. The really detailed attention in terms of the content and so on took place really more with the compensation players on my team and the divisions themselves.

Q Okay. I'm not asking for detailed numerical reports. I'm asking you were – in general terms did you find – were differences found?

A Yes, sir, I believe so.

Q And were the differences found in a respect that men were paid – were in the higher end as opposed to the lower end of the difference in their compensation compared to women?

A I believe there are a number of differences that were found. I don't believe they were just around gender. I think gender was among them but I think that there are also others in terms of, you know, people who had been in jobs same periods of time, you know, equal maybe merit and, you know, and different pay outcomes. So gender was among them but it wasn't exclusively a gender issue.

Q Well I gather – let me make sure I understand. If you simply compare gender did the studies find that women were paid less than men?

A I am not confident to respond to that because I was not as close to the studies as those that did other sources than the management trainee program, is that right?

* * *

[Page 160]

A No, sir.

Q No?

A Everyone that would – the posting process would be for the management trainee position.

Q Oh I see. So they would know which vacancies to bid on when they graduate from their program?

A Yes, sir.

Q I see, okay.

A No, sir. Let me back up. I don't – I still don't think I'm being clear. The posting process for the assistant store manager position was the opportunity to become trainees, was the opportunity to become and move into the training program.

Q Oh I see. So I think we have not communicated clearly.

A Yes.

Q When I asked you about posting for assistant manager vacancies you were really speaking about posting for management trainee vacancies?

A That's correct. In other words how one moves into the assistant store manager ranks. What are the opportunities to move into the assistant store management ranks.

[Page 161]

Q Okay. So you have as yet not had a posting process for the management trainee class vacancies?

A Not one that is as formal as to department manager and to store manager and district manager, no. There are clearly processes in place but they're not as formal as the ones that we have.

Q Well what processes are clearly in place?

A Oh gosh, the – I mean starting at the store manager level you have – and I'm sure you are aware that we have daily and weekly store manager meetings where the store manager just talks about in general what's going on within the store, what the opportunities are within the store and so on. And then on an annual basis you have a performance appraisal for every hourly associate within the store and as a part of the performance discussion you, of course, talk about what is it you want to do, okay. What opportunities are you interested in, how does that work and so managers have an opportunity to respond to questions that associates might have about how they get there. Third can be the personnel managers themselves. Everyone knows that if they have got questions about jobs, pay, promotions, transfers, they go see the personnel manager. Personnel manager explains to them how it works. On an ongoing basis you have the [Page 162] district managers that are in and about the store. We have the Wal-Mart today that really kind of talks about, you know, how stuff works. How we do things around here, things like that.

MR. SELLERS: Okay. I'm told that we need to change the tape.

MS. BLACKWELL: Here marks the end of tape number two in the deposition of Coleman Peterson. The time on the monitor is 12:10 pm.

(Lunch recess).

MS. BLACKWELL: Here begins tape number three in the deposition of Coleman Peterson. The time on the monitor is 1:03 pm. Please begin.

MR. SELLERS:

Q Mr. Peterson, what is the value of job posting? What human resource or personnel objective does it serve?

A Job posting ensures the company that it is able to attract and identify as many talented people as possible for jobs that are needed and for the individuals it provides an opportunity to apply for positions in the company that can allow them to move forward in their careers.

Q And in the absence of job posting what – either from a human resource perspective or your and rationale for each of these, meaning job posting and direct manager selection. Or I'm sorry. District manager selection. They both are heavily tied to turnover costs, litigation avoidance expense, union organizing and commitments made out of the grass roots process.

* * *

[Page 166]

Do you have any reason to doubt that those were rationales, legitimate rationales or rationales that you have cited to support job posting?

A No, sir, I do not.

Q And as of 1996 were there – was there job posting in the retail stores?

A See I don't think we really had begun it. I think we – this is certainly the good news for both Tom Coughlin and Maxine Carpenter, but I think by the time we got into 1997 and '98 we were actually into – we were actually into the posting process in both of these cases.

Q In what respect were you of the view that job posting may be associated with litigation avoidance expense?

A I think just the fairness of how people get picked for jobs.

Q And what about job posting contributes to the fairness of how people are picked for jobs?

[Page 167]

A People understand where the jobs are and they understand what it is you need to do to qualify for the jobs.

Q And in the absence of job posting is it possible that people wouldn't know where the vacancies are or what it takes to get selected for those jobs?

MS. ABELL: Objection, compound and incomplete hypothetical.

MR. SELLERS:

Q I'm merely asking you further about the answer you just gave me.

A I would say that no, that did not necessarily follow but as we've talked about a number of human resource systems, there's always an opportunity to do things better.

Q So in your view back in 1996 the means by which notice was given or employees were informed about vacancies for jobs in the stores was fine, is that right? Was fully satisfactory to you?

A Those are your words, not mine.

Q No. I'm asking you because you said there was no problem; it's just a chance to do things better?

A I didn't say there was no problem.

Q Okay.

A I said there's always an opportunity to do

* * *

[Page 243]

do have it.

Q Right. No, I understand. And you have no view on the subject. Is that what you're telling me?

A I don't think I understand enough to have a specific point of view about how it should work.

Q Now in this memo you set forth the present situation on the first page. You say while each of Wal-Mart's individual decisions have made some progress toward their diversity initiatives, there is no direct accountability for results within the areas. Responsibility now falls to the executive vice-president of people. I assume that's you?

A Yes.

Q In the third person?

A Yes.

Q Okay. What did you mean to convey by saying there's no direct accountability for results within the areas?

A It's not unlike maybe one of the two of the memos that's we've seen before. Clearly part of my responsibility is to get everybody's attention.

Q I understand.

A So I do that in the process of making some pretty strong statements.

Q Well was it a lie? Were you – was it – were [Page 244] you writing something that wasn't true?

A Yes, I was.

Q I see. You were writing a statement here that wasn't true to get their attention?

A Absolutely.

Q I see, okay.

A And of course you have, you know, phrased that in a very inappropriate way but I think we both understand that when you are in these leadership jobs your objective is to get the attention of your business partners. They full understand that – where the accountability lies within their divisions and that people take accountability for these kinds of things. And I understand it as well.

Q Now what you then list are a series of findings and I assume these are findings from the results of benchmark inquires of other companies about their diversity programs and initiatives, is that right, and resources?

A Yes, sir.

Q This is Exhibit 24. Mr. Peterson, you have Exhibit 24. It's entitled Executive Summary Diversity Corporate Affairs Benchmark, June 2002. Was this a memo prepared summarized the results of the benchmarks conducted to compare diversity initiatives at the a few minutes rather than debating broad principals which, you know, isn't very useful.

* * *

[Page 264]

A Well you asked me the question about attending a Hooters to have a meeting –

Q Attending business meetings at a Hooters restaurant.

A And I would have to answer that within the context of – you've heard me say a number of times today that it depends on the situation or it's a store by store issue. Let me give you an example of your example. It is conceivable in some small town that Hooters is kind of like the restaurant du jour, okay, and that it is viewed as one of the most elegant and really one of the best places to meet and eat in contrast to a Chicago or different town where it has a different view. So in order to interpret intent and appropriateness one has to take it within its context, Counselor, and that's why it's difficult to – I realize you are trying to get to the discussion of culture but I think with that kind of an example it's very difficult to articulate better than that.

Q All right. Let me give you another example. See if you have – just give you a few of these and see if you have similar response. Another woman reported -- and these are by the way the subject of testimony in attitudinal survey and tabulating the results or conducting focus groups that are professionally conducted. All of those would be in my view evidence of a study. They may be conducted by outside consultants or done internally so that's what I mean by study. And if you want to change your answer to any of these things then tell me.

*   *   *

[Page 273]

A I would say to you that every spring and fall we have a study, okay, and that study is is we bring together every store manager and fifty percent of the assistant store managers and we talk about the things that are important to driving this business forward. There is always a significant piece on human resources where we talk about upward mobility and promotion and those are the ideal times for the key people directors to really talk about what goes on, what are the things that we need to be doing more effectively. So if in their view location is one of those, then that is an ideal time and has been an ideal time in my understanding where those kinds of things get talked about and brainstorming and problem-solving goes on around those issues.

Q Okay. Other than that, are you aware of any other kinds of studies as I've used the term that have looked at the impact of relocation on women? That's my [Page 274] first question.

A I think probably more actions than studies, okay, because it's out of these understandings of what our challenges may be that we've gone down to Louisiana for example and experimented with new schedules for assistant store managers to see if that can make it friendly. We've resurrected the resident assistant program which does not require a person to relocate in order to move to the assistant store manager level. So I think it's kind of loosening the requirements on relocation for those who are looking at the assistant store manager or store manager type roles. So I think we've been more – I think our energy has been really more around trying to do something about it rather than studying ourselves to death.

Q Have you studied with the term as I've defined it for you whether women employees – the extent to which women employees are interested in moving into management?

A Have I – have we studied?

Q The level – whether the interest levels of women in moving into salary management positions?

MS. ABELL: Just a second. Objection, ambiguous. Which levels?

MR. SELLERS:

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs,	Cause No. C-01-2252 MJJ
vs.
WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.

DEPOSITION OF WITNESS, MELINDA HASS, produced, sworn, and examined on the part of the Plaintiffs used in an action pending in the United States District Court, within and for the Northern District of California, in re: BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC, on April 24, 2002 at the Holiday Inn Express, Bentonville, Arkansas, before JOANNA HARALAMBIDIS, Notary Public within and for the County of St. Louis, State of Missouri.

* * *

[Page 15]

A. I wouldn't say that I've ever had responsibility directly for Sam's Club in a corporate type position. I worked with Sam's Club, but I don't know that I'd ever say I was responsible for them.

Q. Okay. And in your position in the legal department, did you work on both Sam's Club issues or lawsuits as well as Wal-Mart lawsuits?

MS. MARSHALL: I just caution the witness not to get into any privileged material, but within that limitation, go ahead and answer the question.

A. Yes. It was mostly EEOC charges and.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. And can you describe for me your responsibilities in your current position?

A. I'm responsible for updating as well as creating all new and current people policies. I'm also responsible for the updates of all other organizational corporate policies but not the creation of other department's policies. That also would include any corporate form that we use from a people perspective. I also supervise the drug screening department and supervise our ride share program.

Q. Let me make sure that I understand what you said because you just told me a lot. You're responsible for updating and creating new and current people policies. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

[Page 16]

Q. Okay. And those are policies that apply across the company?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And you have similar responsibilities with respect to other corporate policies but not other department policies?

A. The other department policies are also corporate policies, but I don't have responsibility for creating them just updating them as a department. If a department calls me and says as an example a marketing policy on coupon use if they call and say the coupon policy is wrong it needs to be updated, then I ask them to edit the policies send me the updates, and then I'll review it and post it.

Q. I got it. Okay.

A. I'm more or less a gait keeper I guess you would say on the other department's policies not solely responsible for them.

Q. Drug screening that's the O'Ryan drug screen?

A. No.

Q. Oh, okay. What's the drug screening?

A. In Wal-Mart we do pre-employment post accident.

Q. Oh.

A. Reasonable suspicion and promotion drug screening.

Q. Okay.

A. And we have a department in-house that manages

* * *

[Page 33]

Q. Okay. Now, will he have been involved at any point up until the time that it's sent to him after the executives have approved it?

A. No.

Q. Okay. And how do you communicate with him about this?

A. I prepare a memo that covers what changes have been made and then attach final versions to the memo for him to review and approve.

Q. And what comes back to you if anything from Mr. Peterson? How is it Mr. Peterson indicates to you that he's approved it?

A. He generally gives me his copy back with either any changes that he thinks are necessary, or he writes, okay, beside it and then signs it or initials it.

Q. Okay. And generally speaking, does Mr. Peterson approve them?

A. For the most part.

Q. Okay. And I take it that you wouldn't necessarily know if Mr. Peterson went and talked to other people about a draft policy or anything else in terms of his own process of deciding whether to approve something?

A. Not necessarily, no.

Q. Okay. And I think you said that after Mr. Peterson approves it that the next step that it is posted on [Page 34] Pipeline?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. We're going to get to talking about Pipeline probably more this afternoon. So we'll get back to that. Is anything else done with it besides having it posted on Pipeline?

A. I send a memo with the changes as well as attachments of all of the finalized versions of the policies to a revised policy notification distribution list that I have.

Q. Hang on.

A. Okay.

Q. Policy notification. Okay.

A. I send that on e-mail.

Q. Okay.

A. And then I also send it to Division One, Sam's, and logistics for them to send to the field either on workbench or e-mail. Division Seven uses e-mail, and Sam's in Division One use the workbench to notify the facility managers of the changes.

Q. I'm sorry, you said Division Seven uses e-mail. Is that logistics?

A. Yes.

Q. Logistics is the distribution network for Wal-Mart?

A. Right.

* * *

[Page 51]

directives that a Regional Vice President or a Regional Manager could send out, is there any particular process by which those need to be reviewed or approved?

A. That is not something that I would be knowledgeable of.

Q. Okay. Let me ask you the same question about District Managers. Is it also the case that they are not permitted to formulate their own people policies for their districts?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form and again use of the term policy.

A. That is correct.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) And is that for the same reason that you've described with respect to the Regional Vice Presidents?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And let me ask you the same question about Store Mangers. Are Store Managers free to formulate and implement their own people policies?

MS. MARSHALL: Again objection in terms of definition of policy.

A. Again I would say, yes. Not in the context that we have corporate people policies, no, they could not.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. Tell me I want to switch now to how you disseminate information about personnel [Page 52] policies. How are personnel policies or people policies communicated to new employees of Wal-Mart?

A. The first way would be through the associate handbook which is covered in new associate orientation. There have also been some orientation videos which cover some of our policies, and then all associates have access to Pipeline. So the information would be there. There are some policies that are covered in CBL modules that they would be required to complete and pass, and we also have various posters posted throughout the back of the facility break room. In the Wal-Mart Today I believe it's quarterly that there's a policy Q and A section in the Wal-Mart

Today, and then also through their store management.

Q. Okay. Why don't we start with the associate handbook. Did we – is that all the ways in which you can think of at the moment that new employees are given information about people policies?

A. At the moment, yes.

Q. Okay. Tell me first what is the associate handbook?

A. It is our handbook that covers our three basic beliefs and our basically company philosophies that go along with those three basic beliefs. It covers briefly what benefits are available to associates if they're part time or full time. There's information in it regarding the history [Page 53] of the company. There's some brief information about each division within the company, and also there's a brief overview of several of our people policies. There's also FMLA notification in the handbook.

Q. What's that?

A. I'm sorry.

Q. What's that?

A. The FMLA notification?

Q. Yes.

A. Just notifying the associate of what their rights are under the FMLA and how they go about requesting FMLA.

Q. Okay.

(Plaintiff's Exhibit Number Sixty Three marked for identification.)

MS. MARSHALL: Sixty Three?

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) We've marked as Exhibit Sixty Three a document which is entitled Wal-Mart Associate Handbook which is Bate Stamped 1 WMHO 1 through 50. Is this the associate handbook that you were just testifying about?

A. Yes.

Q. And is this the most current version of the associate handbook?

MS. MARSHALL: Take your time to look through it if you need to.

A. It appears to be, yes.

[Page 54]

MS. MARSHALL: Just note for the record on the last page, it says 2001.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. And have there been prior iterations or versions of the associate handbook since you've been at Wal-Mart?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall has there always been one since the time you've been at Wal-Mart?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know approximately how many different versions there've been since 1995?

MS. MARSHALL: I'm going to object just to the extent that this is not necessarily a topic on which she's been designated but if you have personal knowledge.

A. There was a 1993 version, a 1998 version, and this version.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. Do you have any responsibility for the preparation of the associate handbook?

A. I'm involved in it. Yes.

Q. Okay. And in – is it only in your current position that, or in your prior positions, have you also had responsibility for development of the handbook?

A. Both.

Q. Okay. I think you covered this, but is the [Page 55] associate handbook given to every new employee of Wal-Mart?

A. Yes.

Q. And is the same handbook given to the employee irrespective of what division they join?

A. Yes.

Q. And I take it then there are no different handbooks for different regions?

MS. MARSHALL: Same objection. Beyond the scope of her designation.

A. Not an associate handbook there should not be. No.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. And are new employees required to read it?

A. Yes.

Q. And does Wal-Mart have any system of ensuring that new associates read the handbook?

MS. MARSHALL: Same objection.

A. Once the associate's given the handbook, they're asked to read it, and once they complete reading it, then we ask them to sign the acknowledgment page that's at the back. And that goes in their personnel page.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. And you're referring to Page WMHO 49?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And you said that that acknowledgment gets put into their personnel file?

[Page 56]

A. Yes.

Q. And is it put anywhere else?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Why are they required to read it?

A. It contains information about the company from a culture perspective from a history perspective kind of to let the associate know where Wal-Mart started, where we've been, where we're going. It contains our three basic beliefs which we believe are very important for associates to understand. They're the founding principles of our company, and it also like I said gives an overview of several people policies and benefits. So it's basically an introduction to their new company and to kind of help orient them to our organization.

Q. Okay. And are there – is the associate handbook ever distributed to existing employees for any reason?

A. Yes.

Q. And tell me when that occurs.

A. Any time there's an update, it's given to all associates within the company.

Q. And when you say an update, is that different than the versions that you referred to?

A. No. Same thing.

Q. Okay. So in 2001 I'm assuming that this is the 2000 – what we call the 2001 version?

[Page 57]

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Does it have any other name?

A. No.

Q. Okay. The 2001 version when it was published it was distributed to each existing employee?

A. Yes.

Q. And they signed the acknowledgment form of having received it?

A. That's correct.

Q. Received it and read it?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And for existing employees, that acknowledgment was put into their personnel files?

MS. MARSHALL: I'm going to have a continuing objection line of questioning just beyond the scope of the 30(b)(6)e.

MS. LARKIN: You know, I think – I think this is – I'm not trying to argue with you at all. Let me just explain my thinking about this. I asked her how personnel policy disseminated. One of them is the associate handbook. Also as part of the deposition notice is how does Wal-Mart monitor the implementation of the personnel policies. So I think that the acknowledgment fairly falls within the area of monitoring –

MS. MARSHALL: I'm not trying to cut off her [Page 58] answers. I'm just saying –

MS. LARKIN: Right. And I wasn't –

MS. MARSHALL: – that if she has personal knowledge.

MS. LARKIN: And I wasn't trying to argue with you.

MS. MARSHALL: Yeah.

MS. LARKIN: I just was trying to explain to you why in the world I was bothering with it.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. You also mentioned that there is – there are orientation videos to help disseminate information about personnel policies. Is that correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what those videos are?

A. No, I cannot because they're out of the training department.

Q. Okay. Are you familiar with the orientation that new employees get at Wal-Mart?

A. No. In the field, I'm not.

Q. Okay. Do you know whether all employees within Division One get the same orientation?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And what's your familiarity with that?

A. The orientation process for Division One is designed within the training department, and it's a standard videos that do cover those topics?

* * *

[Page 62]

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Let me ask you to look at Exhibit Sixty Six. This document is Bate Stamped WMHO 1192. It's entitled Department Orientation Checklist. Are you familiar with this document?

A. Yes.

Q. Can you tell me what it is?

A. It is a document that they go through with new associates from a risk control perspective about safety of doing their job, dealing with chemicals, evacuation process, that type of thing dealing with risk control.

Q And is Exhibit Sixty Six the current form of this form if you know?

A. I believe there's a more current version.

Q. Okay. And the fact that it's called Department Orientation Checklist what does that mean if you know?

A. I do not know.

Q. Okay. Do you know whether this orientation procedure is done for all new employees?

A. I believe it is, yes.

Q. Okay. And is that limited to the stores or all new employees?

MS. MARSHALL: Continuing line of objection based on not being within the scope of 30(b)(6).

* * *

[Page 67]

corporate people policies?

MS. MARSHALL: Again same objection.

A. There are – I know there are other areas that have things that are that may be characterized as a policy that is not a corporate people policy.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. Can you give me an example? Is there an example of the stores of something that would be a people policy but not a corporate people policy?

A. I would not – I would not say that the example is a people policy. I would say it's something that may have the word policy after it, but it's not a people policy.

Q. Okay.

A. And that would be in the management career selection information on-line.

Q. So that's information about people issues, but it's not necessarily a policy?

A. That's correct.

Q. Okay. Are there – is there any kind of information about people issues that you wouldn't consider to be a policy that are on Pipeline?

MS. MARSHALL: I'm going to object to the extent that it goes beyond the 30(b)(6). If you have personal knowledge, you can go ahead and answer.

A. I'm not thinking of any right now. No.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. You mentioned that there [Page 68] are CBL modules that provide information to new employees about people policies. Do you know what those CBL modules are?

A. There is a CBL module on harassment and inappropriate conduct, and there's also a CBL module on our union philosophy.

Q. I'm sorry, our?

A. Union philosophy.

Q. Okay.

A. And there are other CBL modules that do not necessarily relate to policies but like relate to our three basic beliefs and more cultural type things.

Q. What's the name of the harassment video, I'm sorry, the harassment CBL if you know?

A. There are a couple. I think one is entitled Inappropriate Conduct, and the other is Sexual Harassment. And there's a module for hourly associates and a module for management associates.

Q. On sexual harassment?

A. Yes.

Q. Yeah. And what's the CBL module on your union philosophy called?

A. I think it's called Labor Relations.

Q. Okay. And you indicated that new associates are required to take the CBLs?

[Page 69]

A. Yes.

Q. And does Wal-Mart have a system of ensuring that a new associate has taken a particular CBL?

A. Yes.

Q. And what is that system?

A. The – and this is sort of getting outside of the scope because training they're responsible for CBLs, but I do know that in a store they have – they have a way of systematically checking if an associate has taken a CBL and was it taken timely. Did the associate pass the module. So that all is monitored at store level and also at regional level.

Q. And if – do you know what happens if they discover that someone has not taken a particular CBL?

A. No.

MS. MARSHALL: Again object to the extent it goes beyond the 30(b)(6).

A. Yeah. I don't know.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. And the CBL modules that you identified sexual harassment and inappropriate conduct and the labor relations module are those the same for all Division One employees? It's the same module?

A. Yes.

Q. And do you know whether it's also the same module for the other divisions?

* * *

[Page 80]

group?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now; are there any other management trainings that you know that disseminate information about people polices other than Management Skills 101 which used to be called leadership foundation?

A. The Walton Institute –

Q. Okay.

A. – would, and that is generally for Store Managers and District Managers.

Q. Okay.

A. Where as the other class is available to all field management.

Q. Okay.

A. At our year beginning meetings and our mid year meetings which are again for store management or Store Managers and District Managers, there is generally a people rotation in each of those sessions wherein they discuss people policies or other important people topics.

Q. Okay. You referred to the year beginning and?

A. Holiday.

Q. Holiday.

A. Or I may have said mid year.

Q. Mid year. Okay. Can you explain what the year beginning meeting is?

* * *

[Page 88]

Q. Okay. Is there like a TV set?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And is it in the training room?

A. That's what I was saying it could differ. It might be in the break room. It might be in the training room.

Q. Okay. And that TV only gets Wal-Mart TV and not other stations?

A. I don't know the answer to that.

Q. Okay. I guess it doesn't really matter. Okay. Do you know whether there are broadcasts on Wal-Mart TV that deal with people policy issues?

A. There are broadcasts that we do for Personnel Managers that could include people policies. Beyond that, I'm not involved. So I would not know.

Q. Okay. And that's what's called people matters series?

A. That's what it used to be called. Yes.

Q. Oh, I think it has a new name. What's the new name?

A. Last year it was PMTS Personnel Manager Training Series. It has a new name this year that I don't remember.

Q. People matters seemed fine.

A. Yeah.

Q. Okay. So there's now a new name. Where are those Personnel Manager programs created?

[Page 89]

A. In the training department.

Q. In the Bentonville corporate office?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And do you play any role in developing the content for those broadcasts?

A. On some I do, yes.

Q. Okay. Which ones particularly?

A. Last year there was a broadcast that included information on employment of minors and our attendance policy, and I facilitated those two broadcasts since they were policies. So if there's anything that relates to a policy where they're actually wanting the policy to be covered than they will generally ask me to do that. Beyond that, I might review the content but not necessarily be a facilitator.

Q. Okay. Is the broadcast actually live?

A. Some are. Some are taped.

Q. Okay. And do you have any idea whether – what determines whether something's going to be live or taped?

A. I don't know.

Q. Okay. Are the broadcasts interactive?

A. Some are. Some have the ability for the stores for the Personnel Managers to e-mail questions in.

Q. Okay. And who's the person that has responsibility overall responsibility of being most knowledgeable about the

* * *

[Page 92]

Q. Do you know why Wal-Mart has the store Personnel Managers all watch a particular broadcast simultaneously?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form and lack of foundation.

A. I don't know that I really understand –

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) okay.

A. – what you're asking.

Q. The people matters is a broadcast that's intended for the Personnel Mangers in the stores. Correct?

A. Right.

Q. And when it is broadcast, it is I guess required for Personnel Managers to watch it?

A. Yes.

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form again to the extent it exceeds the 30(b)(6) notice.

Q. (BY MS. LARKINO Do you know why Wal-Mart wants to have all Personnel Managers watch the same broadcast at the same time?

A. I don't know the answer. No.

Q. Okay. Do you know who might know the answer to that?

A. I would think Kevin Harper.

Q. Okay. I've heard the term live video conferencing. Is that something different than the satellite broadcasts?

A. I don't know.

[Page 93]

Q. Okay. Do you know who might know about that?

A. I would probably say Tim Crane.

Q. I've also seen mention of something called Wal-Mart Radio.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Does Wal-Mart Radio exist?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. What is Wal-Mart Radio?

A. It is our radio network.

Q. And what is – what's the purpose of Wal-Mart Radio?

A. Well –

MS. MARSHALL: Again same objection to the extent it's outside the scope of 30(b)(6). She's not a designee if she has personal knowledge that she can share.

A. Yeah. I don't know that I could tell you exactly what the purpose is, but, you know, there's information communicated to store associates. But lots of times they'll, excuse me, cover anniversary dates or something along those lines, but it's generally just a – hang on a second.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Sure.

A. It's generally just a – didn't get any better. You know, it has music on it, and sometimes there are messages. Like at holiday time there are messages sent out [Page 94] to associates in the store from the home office from people who may know certain associates in facilities just to say thanks for what you're doing kind of thing.

Q. Okay.

MS. MARSHALL: Excuse me, do you want to take a break?

A. Fix my voice. Yeah. Okay.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Where is Wal-Mart Radio broadcast from?

A. From here in Bentonville.

Q. In Bentonville. And who has responsibility for programming if you know?

A. I think it falls under the marketing department, but I don't know anybody's name.

Q. And does it include any information about personnel policies?

A. I don't know.

Q. Okay. Your understanding is though that it is broadcast to the stores?

A. Yes.

Q. And that the broadcast that goes out from Bentonville is the same broadcast that goes to every store?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

A. And it's not just for associates. It's what last topic of the 30(b)(6) which is the monitoring of the implementation of personnel policies. What systems or methods are used at Wal-Mart to monitor that personnel policies are being properly implemented?

* * *

[Page 102]

A. I think it would be the responsibility of all of our field management as well as the District Managers or the Regionals or Regional Personnel Managers when they go into a facility and visit with associates and do audits of the personnel area that that's how they would monitored if our policies are being implemented properly.

Q. Do you know what particular audits are done of the personnel area?

A. There is an audit called the week-52 audit, and that is done annually. And there are also STARS that are done, and I don't know if those are monthly or quarterly. It's one or the other.

Q. Why don't you describe what the week-52, I'm sorry, is that the list of audits that you can recall?

A. Uh-huh.

Q. Okay. Can you describe what the week-52 audit is?

A. Week-52 is an audit of personnel files for all associates to ensure that all personnel files are current and up to date and all of the documents that – all of the documents that should be in it are in it, for example, the most recent evaluation.

* * *

[Page 105]

review?

A. It is.

Q. Okay. You mentioned the STAR reports. That's a you said either quarterly or monthly review. That includes monitoring of people policies?

A. It would include monitoring of and I don't know all of the specifics with the STAR review, but one example of a people function that it would audit not necessarily people policy but a people function would be like CBL completion.

Q. Okay. And do you know how they mechanically monitor whether a CBL's been completed?

MS. MARSHALL: I'm going to have the same objection. To the extent you have personal knowledge, you may go ahead and answer.

A. It's systematic but that's all I know.

Q. (BY MS. LARKIN) Okay. Does the company use the grass roots surveys as a means of monitoring whether the personnel policies are being implemented?

A. I would say it could be. Yes.

Q. Okay. Can you describe what the grass roots surveys are?

A. Our grass roots surveys are administered on an annual basis, and they contain a variety of questions regarding work environment, supervision, leadership, how the associate feels about the training that they've received.

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated Plaintiffs, -vs- WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ

Wednesday, July 17, 2002

9:08 a.m.

30(b) (6) videotaped deposition of ULONDA CRAWFORD, held at the Law Offices of Cohen, Milstein, Hausfeld & Toll, 1100 New York Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C., before Judith L. Leitz, a Registered Professional Court Reporter and Notary Public of the District of Columbia.

* * *

[Page 26]

A. Okay. I started as associate auditor –

Q. Okay.

A. – in February of '97.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. And then I was promoted to Staff Auditor I and then Staff Auditor II.

Q. What was your job description as a Staff Auditor I?

A. Same as associate auditor. Just meaning I had completed my training.

Q. Okay. And then Staff Auditor II, when did you get that – was that a promotion?

A. Yes.

Q. And when did that happen?

A. I'm not sure of the actual date.

Q. Okay. What were your job responsibilities at that point?

A. Responsible for inventories and also store compliance audits.

Q. What's entailed in store compliance audits?

A. Well we actually go into the stores and the clubs to verify their compliance to [Page 27] policies and procedures.

Q. What kind of policies and procedures?

A. All policies and procedures that are in effect from personnel to receiving to inventory.

Q. And that was for Wal-Mart stores and for Sam's Club?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you know what kind of personnel policies you were auditing?

A. Evaluations to ensure their timeliness, to ensure documents were – in the associate files that should be, their accuracy.

Q. How were the – which – how is it determined which file to which employees evaluations will be audited?

A. We take – we look at the associate listing and we take a sample of that listing.

Q. And then what did you do when you had your sample? You had, let's say, Joe Smith, what would you do from there?

A. We had guidelines that we had to go

* * *

[Page 69]

A. They are two different departments. We don't handle benefits.

Q. Who does handle it?

A. The benefit department.

Q. Okay. Can you tell me how base pay would be determined for associates starting at a Sam's Club, and let's just use a cashier as an example so that we can have something to focus on?

A. They have – each club has a start rate, but the general manager, the director of operation has the autonomy to hire at a rate that they feel is competitive for their market.

Q. Let me ask you this: Are the jobs slotted into different categories for hourly positions?

A. Yes, they are.

Q. How does that system work?

A. We have four pay classifications.

Q. Is that through – is that true throughout all Sam's Clubs?

A. Except for three markets where we have a different test pilot going in. They have three.

* * *

[Page 72]

A. What do you mean "overlap"?

Q. For example, somebody in pay Classification 1 has been employed at Sam's Club for 15 years and somebody who is in pay Classification 2 has just started, could the person in pay Classification 2 be paid less than the person in pay Classification 1?

MR. GRAY: Objection, form.

A. I can't speak to that just because I don't administer pay in the field. Speaking from being in compensation that is a possibility, yes.

BY MS. GOLDSMITH:

Q. Okay. Generally, are the pay classifications or pay categories set up so that there will be a progression in start rates? If you're a pay Class 1, you'll make X amount and then in pay Class 2 you'll make more than X amount?

A. Their start rates differ, yes. They're higher as you go.

Q. And how are they set?

A. Based on the wage survey.

Q. Okay. After you take a wage survey for pay Classification 1, do you then also [Page 73] look at the wage survey for pay Classification 2 or do you simply step up the salary based on what pay Classification 1 reveals?

A. It could be both. We look at the start rate and see where that is and then we look at it in comparison to the positions that we pulled – that we surveyed in pay Classification 2 what the start rate is coming back and saying and look at it to see if we need to make some adjustments. Based on information we got from two, we may need to adjust one, or based on one, we may need to – we'll adjust two.

Q. And is that so that you can maintain the distinction between the two pay ranges? Yes.

Q. Okay. Who ultimately approves the pay ranges?

A. The executive committee for Sam's along with Fred Disch has input in the beginning of the process.

Q. How frequently are the pay ranges reviewed?

A. Annually.

[Page 74]

Q. Okay.

A. By compensation – let me clarify on that. Compensation, I review them annually, but the clubs that's an ongoing process.

Q. Is this done on a national basis so that every Sam's Club store is within a given pay range?

A. Rephrase that.

Q. When you said that the executive committee approves these pay ranges –

A. Uh-huh.

Q. – do those pay ranges then get submitted to the field for implementation?

A. Yes.

Q. And is the same pay range given to every Sam's Club to implement?

A. No.

Q. What differences can there be?

A. The start rate could be different based on their local area.

Q. So does that mean that pay ranges are identified store by store?

A. Yes.

Q. And when you send the approved pay recommendations out, the store manager then increases – how does the merit increase or merit pay work under the, current system, the nonpilot system?

* * *

[Page 86]

A. The merit increases, the general manager has the discretion to award those to associates who have shown an outstanding performance or exceptional performance and that increase can be up to 50 cents.

Q. Can the general manager do an increase of 75 cents?

A. No.

Q. Even with approval?

A. Even with approval.

Q. Okay. Does the general manager need to get approval of a 50 cent merit increase?

A. No.

Q. So the general manager has the discretion to determine that somebody's performing in an outstanding manner and give them a 50 percent increase?

A. A 50 cent increase, yes.

Q. And is there any frequency with which the merit increases can be awarded?

A. They can be given once per year and they can't be given 90 days before – I increases?

* * *

[Page 121]

A. What about them?

Q. How are performance increases administered for assistant managers?

A. They're given a pool of dollars, an increased budget and the director of – the directors of operations, the general managers distribute that pool of dollars based on evaluations.

Q. How does the evaluation process work?

A. I'm not involved in that process.

Q. After the evaluation happens, can there be a salary increase as a result of the performance evaluation?

A. Yes.

Q. What do you know about that process? A. Based on their eval score they get a percentage, performance increase percent.

Q. Are there guidelines with respect to what percentages are appropriate?

A. Yes.

Q. Are those guidelines the same for all Sam's Clubs?

A. Yes.

[Page 122]

Q. Who determines the percentage?

A. The VP of People, director of field personnel sets the matrix.

Q. Is there any approval – approval required?

A. For the matrix to be set?

Q. Uh-huh. Yes.

A. The executive committee for Sam's.

Q. Does that go up to the Wal-Mart executive committee?

A. No.

Q. You just talked about a matrix. Can you tell me what that matrix is?

A. I don't know the specifics of the matrix. I can't remember it. But it's what – your eval rating determines the percentage that you will get, increased percent that you will get.

Q. And what if a manager wanted to give an associate more than – an assistant manager more than the percentage set forth in the matrix?

A. Then it has to be approved as an exception.

Q. And who approves that?

[Page 123]

A. The EVP of operations, the VP of People.

Q. So a general manager cannot give an evaluation or a performance increase raise unless there's prior approval from the executive vice president of UPS and also of People?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, under the pay progression guidelines, is – what is different in the evaluations for assistant manager – or, I'm sorry, what is different in the compensation for assistant managers?

A. That's only for hourlies.

Q. Okay. You referenced GAP. Can you tell me if that's an acronym for something?

A. Geographic Assistance Program.

Q. And assistant managers are eligible to receive it?

A. Yes.

Q. Area managers do not –

A. No.

Q. – receive it?

Can you describe the program to me?

A. We have a third-party firm that for performance increases.

* * *

[Page 137]

Q. So let me make sure I understand this. A general manager is eligible for base pay, incentive pay, and GAP?

A. Yes.

Q. And a general manager has an annual performance review but because there's no performance increase attached to that performance review it does not affect their salary?

A. Yes.

Q. What's the purpose of doing a performance review for a general manager if it doesn't impact the salary?

MR. GRAY: Same objections.

A. I don't know.

BY MS. GOLDSMITH:

Q. Why are the performance reviews attached to increases for hourly employees?

A. Because they're eligible for performance increases.

Q. Okay. How about stock options, is a general manager eligible for stock options?

A. No.

Q. Have you ever recommended that a compensation set?

* * *

[Page 140]

A. They have a pay that they come in, flat pay.

Q. And is the flat rate the same for every Sam's Club store?

A. They do have – they come in as a manager trainee at 30,000.

Q. And that's the same at every Sam's Club store?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there any performance review or performance increase?

A. No.

Q. Is there a merit increase?

A. No.

Q. Is there an incentive?

A. Yes.

Q. What's the incentive?

A. Same as assistant manager.

Q. I want to make sure I understand this. So the general manager's compensation is essentially base pay plus whatever incentives come from the profitability of the store; is that correct?

A. And GAP.

[Page 141]

Q. And GAP. And based on your understanding of the compensation at Wal-Mart through compensation committee meetings, is that the same as is true for Wal-Mart managers?

A. Yes.

Q. How about with respect to assistant managers, the assistant manager at Sam's Club can have base pay and performance increases, right, and GAP?

A. And merits.

Q. And merits.

And is that the same at Wal-Mart stores?

MR. GRAY: Objection. I mean, clearly that's beyond the scope of your 30(b)(6) deposition. We're only here on behalf of Sam's Club, so she's only –

MS. GOLDSMITH: But she's testified that she sits in committee meetings with Craig Arnold, for example, who does do Wal-Marts.

MR. GRAY: Okay. She can –

BY MS. GOLDSMITH:

Q. So based on your knowledge?

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated Plaintiffs, -vs- WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ

(TRANSCRIPT CONFIDENTIAL PURSUANT TO ORDER)

Tuesday, June 4, 2002

8:55 a.m.

30(b) (6) videotaped deposition of CRAIG ARNOLD, held at the Law Offices of Cohen, Milstein, Hausfeld & Toll, 1100 New York Avenue, N.W., West Tower, Suite 500, Washington, D.C., before Judith L. Leitz, a Registered Professional Court Reporter and Notary Public of the District of Columbia.

* * *

[Page 57]

increases associated with promotions in differing amounts?

A. Based on my history here, yes.

Q. I assume you can speak more authoritatively on that as it relates to the field?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Okay. Now, are there – is there a grid or a matrix for the compensation that sets forth the compensation presumptively for employees in the field?

A. Yes.

Q. And how is it organized?

A. It's organized by position classification.

Q. And position, I assume, you mean job title?

A. Job title, yes.

Q. And what do you mean by classification?

A. Each job title has a classification.

Q. And what are the range of classifications they have?

A. One through five.

Q. With five being the highest or the [Page 58] lowest?

A. The highest.

Q. All right. And jobs in different classifications get paid different amounts?

A. Yes.

Q. Do all jobs in the same classification get paid the same amount?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

A. Please repeat the question.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. I asked you whether within the same classification do all the jobs in that same classification get paid the same amount in the field?

A. I don't have knowledge of that.

Q. You don't know what, in fact, the jobs are paid in the field?

A. No.

MR. SELLERS: This is Exhibit 123.

(Plaintiffs' Deposition Exhibit No. 123 was marked for identification.)

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Mr. Arnold, you have Exhibit 123 in front of you. Have you seen this document before today?

* * *

[Page 66]

would get whatever the store's start rate is, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. If I then after six months moved to be a cashier, what – how would my pay be adjusted?

A. I would need to refer to the compensation guidelines to give you the most accurate answer to that.

Q. All right. This start rate plus 25 cents would not – would not be an adequate predictor of how my pay might change if I move from assembler to cashier; is that correct?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

A. Not always.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Let me ask you a little bit about these factors that you say influence the assignment of a starting pay rate. What do you mean by experience?

A. Experience in that position that you're being hired for.

Q. I see. So if you – if I had been an assembler at some other place before, [Page 67] that might count as relevant experience in adjusting my initial pay rate?

A. That's correct.

Q. Would it have to have been in exactly the same area in which I was going to hold a job at Wal-Mart in order for it to be relevant experience?

A. That determination would be made by the operating unit manager.

Q. And do you mean by that the store manager or –

A. The store manager.

Q. – assistant manager or –

A. The store manager or another hiring manager within the store.

Q. That person would determine whether I had experience that was relevant to warrant an adjustment of my pay rate?

A. That's right, yes.

Q. And what about education might be relevant In adjusting my pay rate, my initial pay rate?

A. There are positions that education is relevant.

Q. So education may or may not be a [Page 68] factor warranting adjustment in my initial pay rate depending on whether it's relevant to the job?

A. Yes.

Q. Of the Class 1 jobs in the Division 01/Supercenter box, are there any jobs there for which education would have been a relevant factor in adjusting upward the starting rate of pay?

A. Based on personal knowledge, yes, I see some positions that education would play a role.

Q. Which positions?

A. Off duty security guard.

Q. Okay. Are there any others?

A. Floral associate. Again, these are my personal knowledge. Lower bay technician. I'm sorry, that goes down below to the next square.

Q. Let's start with – let's confine it for the moment to the Division 01/Supercenters.

A. Okay.

Q. Are there any others beside those two which you would expect ed – to which

* * *

[Page 90]

VIDEO TECHNICIAN: Here begins Videotape 2 in the deposition of Craig Arnold. Going back on the record. The time on the monitor is 11:02. Please continue.

MR. SELLERS: Thank you.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Mr. Arnold, you also mentioned that local market rates enter into the assignment of start rates for hourly associates, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. How does that play a role?

THE WITNESS: Do you need to repeat the question?

MR. SELLERS: No.

A. Each store performs a local wage survey.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. And what is – how does that establish local market rates?

A. Yeah, what they are doing is they are gathering local market rates on the survey. They're gathering the data, what the competitors pay.

Q. And how do they get that

* * *

[Page 109]

A. Please ask the questions again as a –

Q. Sure. Is any review conducted of the adjustments that may be made to the starting rates for hourly associates?

A. In reference to the – the wage survey or individual associates?

Q. I'm talking about individual associates.

A. We have a performance review process.

Q. I'm sorry, what I mean by review is, after store manager X, if I were to decide to hire a cashier at a level above the start rate plus 25.

A. Okay.

Q. Does anybody check to see whether that's a fair rate or is that pretty much the final – am I the final word on this?

A. Per our guidelines there are guidelines that – that talk about hiring an associate – when you hire an associate based on those three components, there are guidelines that stipulate how much they can do. Within those guidelines there's not a [Page 110] review.

Q. Okay. As long as they stay within the guidelines they get to decide, the store managers get to decide?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. And if the store manager wants to go outside those – that range that's permitted in the guidelines for starting rate, what does he or she have to do?

A. Gain approval from their district manager.

Q. And anybody else or is that the level at which it goes?

A. That's the level at where it goes.

Q. Okay.

(Plaintiffs' Deposition Exhibit No. 124 was marked for identification.)

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. You have Exhibit 124 in front of you. Have you seen a document like this before?

A. No, I have not. No.

Q. Take a moment and look at the information. Is it possible that you've seen that kind of information depicted but

* * *

[Page 134]

Q. Okay.

A. It is a report that generates based on exceptions to some of the guidelines, compensation guidelines, in here.

Q. And which – with respect to which guidelines, the exceptions to which guidelines, does it report on?

A. The starting rate, hiring an associate outside of guidelines on the starting – starting rate for an associate.

Q. Okay.

A. And to the best of my knowledge, performance increases out of guidelines.

Q. And this is information supplied by the store managers?

A. This is systemic – this generates systemically based on what's happening in the store to these people, district manager and regional vice president.

Q. All right. But what I'm trying to get at is, the origination of the information comes from the store –

A. Yes.

Q. – or district manager or higher?

A. The original information comes from [Page 135] the store –

Q. Okay.

A. – yeah.

Q. And, then, it's – it's ultimately, as they say, rolled up –

A. Uh-huh.

Q. – to a point where there's a report generated that encompasses a large body of people; is that correct?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

A. This, again, to the best of my knowledge, this report is by – is by store, goes to the district manager responsible for that store, and then to the regional vice president that's responsible for that store.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. What's done with this information?

A. I can't answer that. That's the operating division that receives this information.

Q. What's the purpose of supplying them with this information?

A. To report associates hired and receiving increases out of guidelines.

Q. Does it – is it intended to lead to performance?

* * *

[Page 149]

A. No, it's related to the performance appraisal –

Q. Okay.

A. – yes.

Q. And the performance appraisal is a formal written form that's completed by supervisors and employees, correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay.

All right. Let's go back now to Page 11 to the merit increases. They are separate and apart from the annual performance appraisal increases, correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. All right. How do they work?

A. If an associate – well, the way they work. When a supervisor thinks that it is justified or an associate is doing an exceptional job would recommend them to the store manager for a merit increase.

Q. And this term "exceptional performance", that's a – how is that measured? Is that the same thing as exceeds expectations on the annual performance [Page 150] appraisal?

MS. MARSHALL: Objection as to form.

A. I – no, it does not have anything to do with the performance appraisal. To the best of my knowledge, it's just exceptional performance.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. And it's left to the manager to determine what that means?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, there's something called an associate commendation form that's supposed to be completed in order to get this merit – to award this merit increase, correct?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What's on that – what kind of information is provided on that?

A. To the best of my knowledge, it has associate information, personal info – you know, name, job position, et cetera, and then blanks to note – notate the exceptional performance.

Q. What kind of personal information is listed, name?

* * *

[Page 152]

Q. How is the determination made whether it's 4 or 5 percent increase?

A. I don't know. I don't know from a store manager standpoint. I know that the 4 or 5 written into the guidelines gives them the flexibility to use one or the other.

Q. Uh-huh. Is the adjustment to your pay to reflect a merit increase, noted as a merit increase on the – on the database that's created?

A. Yes.

Q. So it's not – it's distinguishable from a performance increase?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. Okay. And, likewise, is the – the adjustment upward after the first 90 days indicated in a way differently on the database then merit increases or performance increases?

A. Yes.

Q. Now, what's the – what's the policy on shift differential pay?

A. Okay, on Page 11.

Q. Yes.

A. The guideline is for associate to

* * *

[Page 174]

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. Right. But you don't – for instance, do you look to see as a company whether there are any differences between by gender for who receives starting rate upward adjustments?

A. No.

Q. Okay. The same is true, I gather, with merit increases and performance increases, there's no similar kinds of studies done?

A. No.

Q. Okay. Okay. Are you in a position to talk about the holiday bonus?

A. No, I'm not.

Q. Okay. Are there any other forms of compensation for hourly employees that you are in a position to discuss?

A. If we could review your list.

Q. Yes. Base salaries we've already covered?

A. Yes.

Q. Merit increases?

A. Yes.

Q. Performance increases?

* * *

[Page 203]

A. Again, on an annual basis. Typically, it's effective the first part of April or late March depending on the budgetary year.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. A store – an assistant manager is evaluated by the store manager and the district manager and given a corresponding performance increase.

Q. One of three categories?

A. One of three categories. And the associated pay increase. And, then, that's implemented into the system to adjust their pay.

Q. All right. So if you don't get promoted this gives you a chance to get a pay increase corresponding to your performance – annual performance review?

A. Yes.

Q. Is there a grid here that indicates the percentages that are to apply based on different performance levels?

A. Not located in this document.

Q. All right. Well, do you know what those percentages are?

[Page 204]

A. I don't know out of the top of my – I don't know from memory because those are adjusted annually due to budget.

Q. What document would contain that information?

A. I'm trying to give you a good name that we can reference.

Something to the effect of assistant manager or field management performance increase structure.

Q. Okay. Now, these performance increases only apply to the – do not apply to co-managers or store managers, correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Only to salaried positions below that level?

A. Yes.

Q. And how are store managers compensated or are store managers compensated based on performance?

A. Yes.

Q. How?

A. Their performance is indicated by the performance of the store.

Q. Okay. And how does that – and how [Page 205] does the performance the store permit them compensation?

A. The more profit, profitable the store is, the more or higher incentive they would receive.

Q. And that comes from the – this is the incentive plan that we discussed before?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. Now, how does the stakeholder incentive plan work for assistant managers?

A. The plan works exactly the same. It works the same with the exception of –

Q. The same as what? The same as store managers?

A. No, the same as hourly associates.

Q. Oh.

A. Yes, the stakeholder plan is, in fact, just a stakeholder plan. It works the same. Although, assistant managers are eligible to receive a double share or twice the bonus if their performance is a 3.8 or higher.

Q. And if their performance is not a 3.8 or higher then they would receive the same kind of incentive compensation as an

* * *

[Page 212]

A. No, it does not.

Q. Let me go through, as we did with the hourly employees and just make sure we know what categories of compensation salaried employees in the field are entitled to.

A. Okay.

Q. Or may be entitled to.

We've got base salary?

A. Yes.

Q. We've discussed that, right?

A. Yes.

Q. Merit increases, those would be the performance increases, I guess, just for the assistant managers?

A. Two different – two different types of increases.

Q. Okay.

A. You can have – an assistant manager can receive a merit increase.

Q. Is that what we refer to as performance increase?

A. No, it's not. Performance increase is associated with their annual –

Q. Okay.

[Page 213]

A. – evaluation.

Q. All right. Are merit increases addressed in this – discussed in Exhibit 129?

A. I don't believe so.

Q. Okay.

A. No, they're not.

Q. Okay.

A. No.

Q. How do they operate?

A. Similar to the hourly merit increase. Awarded to associates with exceptional performance. And they must have supervisor – I'm sorry, two levels of approval.

Q. And those two levels would be?

A. The store manager, obviously, has to initiate it and gain approval from the district manager –

Q. Okay.

A. – yes.

Q. And this is with respect to – these merit increases are available only to assistant managers?

A. Yes, sir.

[Page 214]

Q. Okay. And the determination of exceptional performance is done in the same fashion with the same judgment of the manager, the store manager, as we described was done for the hourly employees –

A. Yes.

Q. – correct?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And is there a set percentage, again, as there was for the hourly employees of what this merit increase would amount to?

A. I'm not certain to that. I do not know.

Q. Okay. All right. So we have base salaries, merit increases, performance increases. Obviously, we've got promotional increases?

A. Yes.

Q. We have the incentive plan?

A. Yes.

Q. Are there other forms of compensation to which salaried employees at the stores would be eligible?

A. The GAP.

* * *

[Page 229]

Q. I see. Okay.

A. Yes.

Q. Now, there's reference here to something called a wage disparity report?

A. Yes.

Q. Are you familiar with that?

A. Yes, I am.

Q. What is that?

A. That's synonymous with SMARR, S-M-A-R-R, and that's an acronym for store manager associate review report.

Q. Okay. And what is it?

A. What is it. It's a report that the store can generate that lists all associates and their wages and it's for the store to review any inequities in pay by position.

Q. How – how are inequities detected in -pay by position?

A. The report does notate people that are paid 5 percent below the average rate of pay. I'm sorry, 10 percent below the average rate of pay or 5 percent higher than the average rate of pay.

Q. For – the average for all people holding that particular job?

[Page 230]

A. That position, yes.

Q. And, again, I gather that that – these reports don't attempt to analyze or look for patterns based on gender in compensation; is that right?

A. No, they don't. It's by job.

Q. You said the stores may prepare these reports. Are they expected to or is it in their discretion?

A. It's recommended that they do prepare them.

Q. Do most stores do that?

A. Yes.

Q. Okay. And to whom are the reports submitted?

A. The report is submitted – or the report is generated by the system for the store manager and district manager to review.

Q. Does it end up, either the report or a summary of the report, get submitted to your office?

A. No, it does not.

Q. Does it go to anybody else outside above the store manager level?

* * *

U.S. DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES and PATRICIA SURGESON, et al., Plaintiff,	* * * * *	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ
VS.	*
WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	* * * *

****

VIDEOTAPED ORAL DEPOSITION OF JEFFREY B. REEVES
January 14, 2003

****

VIDEOTAPED ORAL DEPOSITION OF JEFFREY B. REEVES, produced as a witness at the instance of the Plaintiffs, and duly sworn, was taken in the above-styled and numbered cause on the 14th day of January, 2003, from 9:15 a.m. to 6:06 p.m., before Mark S. Brandt, CSR in and for the State of Texas, reported by machine shorthand, at the offices of Brown McCarroll, L.L.P., 2001 Ross Avenue, Suite 2000, Dallas, Texas 75201, pursuant to the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure.

* * *

[Page 41]

through 597 inclusive, entitled Sam's Club performance evaluation fiscal year ending 2002.

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. Have you seen this before?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. Did you have any role in creating this document?

A. Not creating. Reviewing and approving.

Q. And were there changes from the fiscal year 2001 performance evaluation for GM's and co-managers?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. Do you recall what those changes were?

A. Yeah, just the weighting changed. It used to be 50 percent on people and 50 percent numbers, and we broke up the demographics of how the 100 percent weighting took place.

Q. On the first page under Section A, three basic beliefs, it indicates this is to have a weighting of 15 percent.

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. And then No.4 under there is diversity.

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. How did diversity figure into the performance evaluation for GM's and co-managers at this form?

A. Well, based on the definition there, I was very [Page 42] subjective, and you would get a rating of one to five there.

Q. Who would perform the rating on GM's and co-managers on the basis of diversity as it's defined on this document?

A. The directors of operations, with probably input from the RPM and the regional vice president.

Q. And what was the source of information on which a diversity rating would be determined?

A. Pretty much basically looking at the definition there, and they would look and see what improvements they made, look at raw numbers and look at what improvements they made over the fiscal year. Most people had a 10 percent goal of aggregate improvement. I always stressed 20 percent. I was a lot more aggressive than most people, and I always met my goal.

Q. Did the GM's generally meet a goal of 20 percent?

A. Heavens no.

Q. Pardon me?

A. Heavens no.

Q. Where did this definition of diversity come from?

A. Corporate definition.

Q. Do you think that it was a helpful definition

* * *

[Page 44]

this first page under three, basic beliefs, together had a weight of 15 percent on the entire evaluation?

A. Together, yes, ma'am. 5 percent each one of the three corporate beliefs for the company.

Q. So diversity was one of four elements that added up to a 5 percent weight?

A. Yes, for general managers and co-managers.

Q. Was there any change in the performance evaluation for general managers and co-managers for fiscal year ending 2003?

A. No. I think we just made a few – yeah, the only tweak that was made was the organization went away from the five point rating to a below, meets, and exceeds.

Q. If you would turn to page 2 of this Exhibit No.4, please.

A. Okay.

Q. This heading is leadership, and this again has a weighting of 15 percent, correct?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. And that's everything on this page would add up to the 15 percent weight?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. And then one of the subcategories is people results. Do you see that part?

* * *

[Page 100]

looking at various ways to – to measure folks and hold people accountable and was part of the initiatives.

Q. And then there is three subbullets with the last one saying identify top 25. What did that refer to?

A. This was part of the plan I was getting ready to put in place. This was identified that this was corporate – strictly corporate club support top 25 bench strength individuals that we were going to put through a training process for future development.

Q. The next heading is retention, and the last bullet point there is build field bench by hiring one female GM co-manager per region. Did you get any feedback from the executive committee on this bullet point in particular?

A. Uh-huh. It was mixed.

Q. And who gave you what feedback on that one?

A. I can't remember in particular who gave me the feedback on which piece. I just know that there was – we were back to the quota issue on the piece I talked about earlier around, you know, are you telling me I have to hire a female, open a spot up, that kind of stuff.

Q. And why were you proposing hiring one female GM co-manager per region?

A. I don't remember my thought process, but I think what I was trying to do was to – that would have [Page 101] given us 70 females versus the – at the time the 30 or 32 that you had. So 70 is better than 32.

Q. And in response to the feedback expressing concern that this was a quota issue, what was your response?

A. I think I've testified to it earlier. It was back to the education piece.

Q. The next page, 11 of 14, has a heading communication.

A. Uh-huh.

Q. And the first bullet point is broader definitions of clear sponsorship from officer level differences, it's more than women and minorities. What did you mean by that bullet point?

A. Let me think about this for a second.

Q. Uh-huh.

A. When I was talking about the commitment to diversity, diversity – so many people are hung up on diversity as being race and gender. It could be style. It could be approach, thought process. It could be a handicap. It's so broad, and I was trying to get people to understand as part of the education that it's not always about men and women or black and white. It's about – you know, you may not like the fact that I'm direct. I'm very direct. Okay. That's not always board members concerning female diversity?

* * *

[Page 118]

A. What do you mean by directives?

Q. Were you told to go out and do something in particular?

A. No, ma'am.

Q. Did you present to the committee members of the board of directors the goals for females in management?

A. No, ma'am.

Q. Were you aware of any shareholder initiatives addressing glass-ceiling issues at Wal-Mart Stores?

A. The nuns got up every year and tried to do that, but they were always – they would get their time, and then they sat down.

Q. Were you ever asked to help in preparing a response to those shareholder initiatives?

A. No, ma'am.

MR. LAWRENCE: Do you want to break for lunch? It's about 12:30.

MR. DINARDO: Whatever the group feels like.

THE WITNESS: I'm okay. That's fine. 30 minutes?

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: Going off the record. The time on the monitor is 12:29 p.m.

(Lunch break taken)

* * *

[Page 144]

A. Let me see. I missed one. I skipped that next one. So it would have been 2002, I think. 2003. 2003, I believe, of January.

Q. That's where we are now.

A. That's right now. '2. '2 .

Q. Okay. And did any women go on that trip?

A. Yeah, Rhonda. It would have been – it had to be 2001, because Rhonda was gone by then. I let her go in October of 2001, I believe. Rhonda, Lisa, Barbara, Celia, Ruth. I think Ruth went. She may have been on maternity during that time, but Ruth McCarthy was an officer. I think that's it. That's all I remember.

Q. What was the purpose of the hunting trip?

A. Bonding. The first one was bonding. Tom was always about business, though. Tom didn't – Tom didn't like play. So Tom – we hunt in the morning, then meet in the afternoon, and then go back hunting again. Nobody liked going with Tom because Tom liked work too much. It's just like – it's just like golfing. A golf outing with the group – hunting was the same thing. You hunt in the morning, come back in and eat, and go back out hunting all afternoon.

Q. Was there any suggestion that rather than having a hunting trip, that the trip be focused on golf or some other activity?

[Page 145]

A. Oh, yeah. That was brought up the first year I went.

Q. And what was the response to that kind of suggestion?

A. Bahumbug. Told Tom to get over it. He was told to –

Q. Tom was proposing that it be something other than hunting?

A. No. Several of us said something about golf because not everybody liked to hunt. I mean, I would go and have fun, but you know, I'm not a hunter, but I do it because the rest of everybody else was doing it. Tom said – and Tom said, I would rather do golf than hunt; and basically it was said that, Hey, this is tradition.

Q. That's something that Sam Walton had started; is that right?

A. I don't know. Mr. Walton was a hunter.

Q. Who was it that was saying it was tradition, bahumbug?

A. I'm not sure where the response came from.

Q. Did you know Dale Green?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. Was he terminated?

A. Yes, ma'am.

Q. And what position did he have at the time he

* * *

[Page 147]

Q. Was he terminated more than once?

A. No.

Q. Okay. When Mr. Green was being terminated, he gave you a call for an open door?

A. He called somewhere during the process. He talked to several people, I think. I don't know.

Q. And what was your involvement in the open door with Mr. Green's termination?

A. Just listen.

Q. Did you take any action?

A. No. I supported the action, supported the decision.

Q. How was it determined that his performance was not adequate?

A. His regional vice president and his director of operations.

Q. And do you know what the specific details were as to what his performance issues were?

A. I don't remember. Yeah, I don't remember.

Q. But it was only on performance?

A. I didn't say that. I said that's all I remember.

Q. How did policies – corporate policies for Sam's get created?

A. Most of our policies were the same as [Page 148] Wal-Mart's. Wal-Mart has a policy committee, and the policies are set through that committee. Decisions are made to change, upgrade, or whatever, delete, based on that policy committee. And then once it's approved, which I was part of that committee, that information would come to Sam's and put into the system. 99 percent of the policies were the same.

Q. What policies were different?

A. The only one I know of was attendance.

Q. And what was the difference on the attendance policies?

A. Ours were more stringent, and ours were formalized. Wal-Mart's was not.

Q. What was the actual policy then at Sam's about hours and attendance?

A. Excuse me?

Q. What were the details on the attendance at Sam's?

A. The biggest issue was tracking. Wal-Mart didn't have a mechanism to track, and we put – ours was – we had a tracking system, because I didn't like paper. So we got away from the manual process and automated it. Days of – the second difference was I think you had three – three exceptions with a doctor's note, and Wal-Mart policy you did not.

* * *

[Page 281]

A. I assume there were. They weren't as aggressive, but I assume there were.

Q. Why weren't they being met?

A. Well, let me – let me take that back. Excuse me. They were not set for the field. They were hypothetically set from a reporting perspective, but they were not being measured based on that.

Q. And so did you make some changes?

A. Well, that's the goals we've gone through and we put in place –

Q. Okay.

A. – to be very clear around what was expected.

Q. Have you had any discussions with anyone at any time concerning Stephanie Ogle – Odle?

A. Stephanie Odle. I don't even know who that is.

Q. Have you had any discussions with anyone at any time concerning Nancy Hamm?

A. I don't know Nancy Hamm.

Q. What do you think Sam's could do to increase female management – female representation in field management?

A. You're asking my opinion?

Q. Yes.

A. One is the area we talked about earlier. I think what you do is to get people's attention you tie [Page 282] expectations and – and the number to people's incentive, whether it's their base or it's their bonus, but I think that's the first and foremost and most important piece. Until you do that, it will continue to be lip service.

MR. DINARDO: Betty, I think we've arrived at slightly over seven hours.

MS. LAWRENCE: Okay. Thank you very much.

THE WITNESS: Thank you.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: Here marks the end of videotape number four in the deposition of Jeff Reeves. The original videotape will be retained by Videolink on behalf of Davis, Cowell & Bowe. Going off the record. The time on the monitor is 6:06 p.m.

(Deposition concluded 6:06 p.m.)

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, et al., Plaintiffs, -vs- WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Cause No. C-01-2252 MJJ

(CONFIDENTIAL ATTORNEYS' EYES ONLY PURSUANT TO STIPULATION)

RHONDA HARPER

TAKEN ON BEHALF OF THE PLAINTIFFS

MARCH 17th, 2003

* * *

[Page 103]

A. I probably went – actually in terms of stores – you know, occasions and stores are two different things. My guess would be that I went to more than 50 stores.

Q. Those weren't just more than 50 separate trips?

A. Correct, because we would go into a market and then go into five or six Sam's Club in a given day or Wal-Marts. And I went on any number of different trips and did the circuit in many different cities and towns. If all blurs after a while.

Q. Have you ever heard – we've obviously talked to a lot of people about this – about this case at Sam's Club.

Have you ever heard female associates in Sam's Club referred to by managers in Sam's Clubs as "girls"?

A. Yes.

Q. Was that a fairly common practice?

A. Yes.

Q. Have you ever heard female associates at Sam's Club referred to as "Jamie Qs" or "Little Jamie Qs"?

A. Janie Qs, yes.

Q. I'm sorry, how? Janie?

[Page 104]

A. Janie Q, yeah.

That was a pet name for consumers as well as associates.

Q. Who are women?

A. Yes.

Q. Do you recall any officers of the company using the term "Janie Q" to refer to female associates at Sam's Club?

A. I remember one officer using the term "Janie Q". I can't recall if he was referring to an associate or a consumer at that point in time.

Q. Who was that, that you remember that officer?

A. Kenny – I'm sorry, I haven't –

Q. Do you recall Kenny's position?

A. Regional vice president of operations.

Q. If you remember the last name feel free to –

A. I will. I'll scream it out probably in the break.

Q. No problem.

Now, let me ask you about another subject. There was some testimony –

A. Excuse me. Kenny Folk.

Q. Kenny Folk.

[Page 105]

A. I believe. I could be wrong there. I apologize.

Q. In addition to Mr. Folk, did you hear that term "Janie Q" used to refer to Sam's Club female associates by store manager at Sam's Club?

A. No.

Q. But by other management personnel you did?

A. Yes, but vaguely. I wouldn't be able – I mean –

Q. You wouldn't be able to pick any names?

A. No.

Q. Okay.

There was some testimony – okay, rather than waste time, I'm going to tell you there was some testimony by somebody, whose name I can't find, but I'll – wait – by Mr. Grimm, about an occasion where Mr. Hayworth sat in a chair with stiletto heels and womens' legs for the legs. Were you present for that incident?

A. Yes.

Q. Could you describe that incident for me?

A. My recollection is that it was a holiday party for Wal-Mart associates. It was – it took place in the Wal-Mart auditorium. There was a stage set, any number of different events occurred on that

* * *

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES and PATRICIA SURGESON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, v. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ

Deposition of MR. KENDALL SCHWINDT, produced, sworn, and examined on Wednesday, September 11, 2002, at 9:00 a.m., pursuant to notice to take deposition at the Holiday Inn Express, 2205 S.E. Walton Boulevard, in the City of Bentonville, County of Benton, and State of Arkansas, before me, Karen S. Rogers, Registered Professional Reporter, Certified lot of the softer skills, the people side of the business, how you treat people.

* * *

[Page 57]

Spent a lot of time in those classes on the three basic beliefs of Wal-Mart, the respect for the individual. The things that Mr. Walton stood for. And then just the company's philosophy on management.

Q. Did you know Mr. Walton yourself?

A. I did.

Q. Did you ever go to his house?

A. I think I was there several times. When he would invite our hourly associates over for the stockholder's meeting, he also would invite us. But other than that, no.

Q. Did you ever go hunting with him?

A. Yes, I did.

Q. How frequently did you do that?

A. Whenever I was invited.

Q. How often was that?

A. Oh, every year just about. If we all did a good job, we got to go hunting out at the camp in Texas.

Q. And who's the we you're referring to?

A. It varied from time to time, but it was the regionals. It was the merchandisers. Females, males. Anybody that had an inclination to go. Nobody [Page 58] was forced to go. If you didn't want to go, you didn't like to hunt, you didn't have to go.

Q. Was it primarily senior management that was invited for hunting?

A. Yeah, primarily. That was his reward for those of us that traveled. In the beginning that was what it was intended for, the operations group that traveled every week and was away from their families. That was how he kind of thanked them for the job.

But he takes – we've taken department managers down there every year. We take our department managers every year down there to do a little hunting if they would like to go. And so it's been spread around. But initially it was for the senior officers.

Q. During the period when Mr. Walton was with the company still, approximately how many people would go down?

A. Gosh, I don't know. It would be from the teens up to maybe – I used to coordinate that, so it would be like from the mid teens in the beginning up to maybe 37 to 40 some people.

Q. Did you say you used to coordinate that?

A. Some of it, mm-hmm.

Q. It was one of your responsibilities coordinating who would go on the hunting trip?

[Page 59]

A. Well, I would just pull it all together.

Q. Did you decide who would go on the trip?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Who made those decisions?

A. Don Sodaquist or whoever the division heads were asked if they had people that were eligible to go. And he – they would run them by him and then he would yea or nay it. We would go from there.

Q. Okay. What proportion of the people that went during the years that you were coordinating it were female?

A. Gosh, I don't know. It got larger as years went on because the number of female officers in the company has increased as years went on. So a lot of them don't like to hunt. There's several that were invited that did not want to go. My last hunt there was probably – I don't know how many was there. But it's increased dramatically over the years.

Q. When was your last hunt?

A. I was in and out this last February. I had back surgery and I had to be down in Dallas for the follow-up visit, so I missed part of the hunt.

Q. But you were at part of it?

A. Yes.

Q. In February of 2002?

[Page 60]

A. Mm-hmm.

Q. And how many people approximately were there then?

A. I'm guessing in the high 30s to 40s. I'm guessing. I'm not sure.

Q. And how many of them were female approximately, what proportion?

A. I don't know.

Q. Were more than five of them female?

A. I would say it was somewhere – three or four.

Q. Three or four?

A. Maybe five.

Q. Do you know who keeps records about who goes on these hunts?

A. (Shakes head). That's not something we retain records of, for Christ's sake. It's just a hunt.

Q. Okay. When was the last year you were responsible for coordinating them?

A. I passed it off last year.

Q. So you were doing it up to 2001?

A. Yes.

Q. The year 2001 you attended the whole hunt?

[Page 61]

A. This past year?

Q. No, the one before this year. You just referred to 2002.

A. I don't believe I made that one either.

Q. Okay. Were you at the year 2000?

A. I missed that – I missed that one. My mother died in 2000, and I think I was having back problems the last two years. I went to part of the last two hunts, but I was not able to stay but one day, I think.

MR. SELIGMAN: Let's go off the record for a second.

MR. HARRISON: Going off the record. The time on the monitor is 9:58.

MR. SELIGMAN: Why don't we take a short break. Why don't we take a five-minute break here. (Recess taken).

MR. HARRISON: Back on the record. The time on the monitor is 10:07.

MR. SELIGMAN:

Q. We were talking before the break about various things that you've done, and I asked you briefly about the Walton Institute. I'm looking at your HPRO, Exhibit 3. It also refers to something called Diversity Phase 1 with a date of 1993. Do you college and hourly, I guess, you're meaning how many of the management training should be the college students and how many should be other? Is that what you meant?

* * *

[Page 134]

A. How many should be hourly promotes and how many should be college, yes.

Q. All right. And who made that balance? Where did that come from? Is that a corporate policy?

A. We had corporate guidelines that we tried to attain.

Q. Did you ever discuss with your managers what kind of employees should be entered into the management training program? And I'm not talking about First In Line, just regular management training?

A. Not specifically, no.

Q. Did you monitor how people were selected or who was selected to go into management training?

A. The how and the specifics of who, no. The total numbers, yes.

Q. Do you know who made the decisions by – not by name, but by level of the company of who goes into management training?

A. Well, the RPMs are instrumental in that. They will go to the college campuses and interview.

They would get recommendations for – from the hourly promotion of store level, and sometimes they would

* * *

[Page 138]

A. They were the Division 1 people, managers at the time.

Q. Okay. And this memo went to divisionals such as yourself?

A. Mm-hmm.

Q. And Don Harris at that point was EVP of ops?

A. I believe so.

Q. And Tom Coughlin was his superior?

A. That's correct.

Q. And it goes to RVP and RPM, which I assume means regional vice presidents and regional personnel managers?

A. I think you're correct.

Q. The second sentence of the promotional guidelines say, "The criteria has been set to help clearly state the expectations that must be fulfilled in order to be promoted." Was that your understanding of this memorandum?

A. These are the minimums, yes.

Q. So that's what – these were the minimum criteria?

A. Right.

Q. And were you bound by these minimum criteria in your division?

[Page 139]

A. No, I wasn't. I took them as a guide and I would try to raise the bar to raise the quality of people, and I added some things. I think you've probably got mine there somewhere, and you can see the differences for yourself.

Q. But in terms of the minimums, were you bound not to go below these?

A. I would never do that.

Q. You would never go below them?

A. Why would I?

Q. My question is, did you consider those minimums binding on you; you could not go below those?

A. Yes, I would have not went below it.

Q. Do you know how these particular guidelines were developed?

A. Gosh. I don't.

Q. Were you involved in the development of these particular guidelines?

A. Could have been at one particular point in time. I don't recall.

Q. Do you know if there were guidelines like this earlier than October of '99?

A. I'm sure there was. I can - when I first became a regional, we had similar guidelines. What they were, I don't know. But I know I had my own am in an area where I am developing a lot of new stores and have a need for people to fuel the growth, I will have less of those people in my other stores because I can't develop my new stores. I've got no place to train the folks.

* * *

[Page 148]

If I'm in an established area, like we are right up here in northwest Arkansas, there's probably several resident assistants in this area. So it varies. It's not going to be the same.

Q. As a company program though, was it more used in the past than presently or vice versa?

A. I think it varied.

Q. Do you recall Sam Walton ever talking about a resident assistant program?

A. Why, sure.

Q. It was his idea, wasn't it?

A. I'm not sure whose idea it was, but I know Sam felt very strongly that we had good hourly associates out there that we needed to utilize. And as long as we could grow our business, we needed to accommodate as many of those folks as we could, that our growth would allow us to accommodate.

Q. Do you recall why he wanted to accommodate such people?

A. I can't – I can't speak for his reasons. [Page 149] I wouldn't even attempt to do that.

Q. Was the resident assistant manager program cut back in the '90s at some point?

A. In the areas where we were having trouble growing the business, yes, and it may have been some of those areas where we were growing. I can only speak to my area.

It got to be a problem if I had too many resident assistants in a particular district that was responsible for growing a new area. And nobody wanted to go to that new area to operate the stores. What do we do? Carry extra?

Q. So was there a particular time that that got to be a problem in your division?

A. I couldn't tell you the dates, but we have different bursts of growth in different geographical areas. You look at that map you got when it started out that you showed me earlier, the line would have stopped in Nebraska. And so maybe in Colorado it was an issue for a while.

Once we got through that growth, we ended up with a lot of assistant managers coming back into those areas and being resident assistants.

I'm not sure what you're asking. It varied depending on the needs of the growth of that business.

* * *

[Page 195]

people, that's certainly a consideration.

Q. Let me ask you to look at the very last page of this document, trainee/intern placement.

A. Okay.

Q. Do you know what the management candidate recommendation is referred to in the first bullet?

A. Let me see. I can't recall, no.

Q. Okay. The second to last bullet says, "Trainee should not be promoted to an assistant in the same store in which they trained." That was a policy in your division?

A. Yes.

Q. Were there any other criteria for being placed in the trainee position in your division other than what's listed here that you recall?

A. Not that I can recall.

Q. There was never anything put out about like a minimum performance evaluation score or what factors you look at or anything like that to get into the training position?

A. I left that up to the judgment of the people that were working with those folks every day. The store managers that knew those folks very closely, the district managers that were working for them and reviewing their training process during the training [Page 196] program and during their program as their time as a department manager or whatever they did prior to getting on the program. And those people were making those decisions.

Q. Now were those people also bound by the minimum company promotion standards?

A. Yeah, I believe so, yes.

Q. Okay. Let me ask you to look back at Exhibit 22 for a second.

A. Okay.

Q. You'll see on Exhibit 22 they do have criteria for associate to assistant manager trainees. It's on the first page of the document. It says, "Associate to assistant manager trainee" with various criteria. Do you see that?

A. Mm-hmm.

Q. That would apply to your division?

A. That would have been the minimum, yes.

Q. Okay. So that was a requirement throughout the company as well as your division to have these factors?

A. It was a requirement in Division 1 –

Q. Right.

A. – of Wal-Mart Stores.

MR. SELIGMAN: Let me ask you to look at a diversity in the stores in your region – excuse me, in your division, is that true?

* * *

[Page 211]

A. I was aware of a more collective number that related to my division and possibly the regions.

Q. Okay. You were aware from your store visits that women held the majority of hourly positions in the stores and that men held the majority of management positions in the stores?

A. Not necessarily from the store visits. I was aware from looking at my mix that, yes, that most of the hourly associates in the store or a good number of them are female, yes.

Q. And that's been true as long as you've been a divisional vice president?

A. And when I was a store manager, yes.

Q. Okay. Particularly in the last ten years, have you ever inquired or explored why women are the majority of hourly but the minority of management?

A. We – yes, we've worked on that pretty hard to try to improve our diversity numbers in that regard.

Q. I'm actually asking a different question. And I'll ask you the second part that you're answering. But my question is, did you ever – were you aware of [Page 212] anyone trying to discover why there was this disparity?

A. We were – as we were trying to improve the process, the numbers, we always were seeking out reasons.

Q. Okay. In your seeking out those reasons, did you ever have any reason to believe women were less qualified for management jobs than men?

A. Absolutely not.

Q. Did you have any reason to believe that women were less interested in management jobs than men?

A. Sometimes that's – that's the case. And that's sometimes part of the issue. You get people make decisions about wanting to take that next step. I think that's part of it.

Q. And what –

A. People make that decision on their own. And some men feel they don't want to take that next step and some women feel that they don't want to take that next step, and both for different reasons that are quite logical and make sense in their own environment.

Q. Do you have any reason to believe that women are less interested in taking that next step than men in general?

A. I can't quote you any reasons. But I don't know that they are or aren't.

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, KAREN WILLIAMSON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendants.	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ

VIDEOTAPED DEPOSITION OF ROSE M. REZA
January 3, 2003
9:51 a.m.
Bean & Associates, Inc.
500 Marquette, Northwest, Suite 280
Albuquerque, New Mexico 87102

PURSUANT TO THE FEDERAL RULES OF CIVIL PROCEDURE, this deposition was:

TAKEN BY: MS. JOCELYN D. LARKIN

Attorney for the Plaintiffs

REPORTED BY: Jan A. Williams, RPR, CCR 14

* * *

[Page 98]

A. I mean, if you had a corporate social event, I was always invited. I really didn't want to hang out with anyone from work because I was with them almost always, you know, so I wanted to be alone on the weekends. But no, I had friends.

Q. Were you aware that male regional vice presidents were engaged in social events that you were not included in?

A. The ones that they were – if they had events like bird hunting and stuff, I was there. But I mean, if you're talking – I don't understand what you're saying. I mean, if they had a personal party and they had friends over, you know, sometimes I would go, if I was invited, and sometimes I wouldn't. I mean it didn't matter to me. I don't know what you're trying to ask.

Q. Did you attend the annual quail hunt?

A. Oh, I always did.

Q. What is it?

A. I shot a bunch of branches. I've never shot a rifle in my life. We just get together, we go – we spend time together, we eat, we watch movies. It's a bonding time. And we shoot quail which I don't really like to kill animals, but I went. But everyone made me walk in front of them.

[Page 99]

Q. Why did you have to walk in front of them?

A. Because I'm not good with a rifle.

Q. Why do they kill animals as part of that corporate event?

A. Well, Sam Walton has a quail ranch. He had I think it's a quail ranch, a hunting ranch. And the Waltons, Jim Walton and them, would always come spend time with us, the family. Mostly Jim and John sometimes, but mostly Jim. And – because, you know, they like to hunt. And it was a tradition really.

Q. Were there any women executives who didn't like to hunt?

A. We all got into it pretty much. They all went. We all went. We had fun.

Q. My question is were there any women who ever expressed to you that they didn't like hunting?

A. No, no. We all had a good time. We all – we all talked about maybe let's do something different. And Tom is open, he was open to that, you know. But some of the guys were too scared to ski, you know, or stuff like that.

Q. You talked to Tom Coughlin about doing something different?

A. We had mentioned it, you know, maybe year after year maybe look at doing something different. [Page 100] But I only went a couple years.

Q. Who was the we who mentioned it to Tom Coughlin doing something different?

A. Oh, I don't remember. You know, I know that – I don't remember. I mean maybe me and – I don't know. I hate to say a name because I don't remember who it was.

Q. You feel it was yourself and at least some other person?

A. Yeah. But it wasn't a big deal. We were just thinking of another – whitewater rafting, you know, other outdoor activities that may be fun and at the same time build teamwork.

Q. Would it have been appropriate for the senior executives to all get together and go to a spa and have facials and massages, would that have fit into the Wal-Mart corporate culture?

A. The guys probably would have liked it. But it was nothing that we ever really – we didn't talk about it. But it's not like – I mean it's just kind of funny. But Tom was willing to do something different.

But it was a tradition that they had done since Sam Walton was alive. It was just something that they all always did. And so, you know, it's [Page 101] like in New Mexico we eat posole for Christmas, we always eat posole. And so it's just a tradition.

Q. And do you know if they're still doing it now?

A. I don't know. I haven't asked. I really don't talk to many people anymore over there.

Q. Who are you in touch with regularly at Wal-Mart, anybody?

A. I have good friends. But I really – I really have lost contact with a lot of them.

Q. And who do you have regular contact with?

A. I talk to – well, she left, Zoe Aponte, she was a friend of mine. But she left Wal-Mart to work for IKIA. Vera Morales is a very good friend of mine. I really don't talk – you know, Marie Hughes is a dear friend of mine, but we haven't spoken in awhile. I mean I have – that was my family for 15 years so I could list a lot of names. But I don't talk to anybody regularly anymore.

Q. Okay. Were you aware of any effort by Wal-Mart to analyze pay differences between men and women in the same jobs?

A. No.

Q. And did you ever receive a complaint from any woman that a man was being paid more for doing

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES and PATRICIA SURGESON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, -vs- WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	No. C-01-2252MJJ

DEPOSITION OF SHARON M. BILGISCHER
OCTOBER 15, 2002
9:00 A.M.

The videotaped deposition of SHARON M. BILGISCHER, taken pursuant to the Rules of Civil Procedure for the United States District Courts pertaining to the taking of depositions, taken before Jerry Satterlee, a Certified Shorthand Reporter within and for the State of Illinois, at Eleven South LaSalle Street, Suite 1150, Chicago, Illinois, on October 15, 2002, at the hour of 9:00 a.m.

* * *

[Page 42]

were associated with it?

A. One that comes to mind would be MaryAnn McDonough who is a regional vice president and then Dana Keane over at Sam's who at the time was also a regional vice president.

Q. Did any male employees attend any of your meetings?

A. They might come in to share information, but they were not regular participants.

Q. Was the Women in Leadership Group open to having males regularly participate?

A. If they desired.

Q. Who assumed the role that you had with respect to the Women in Leadership when you left it?

A. Francesca Spinelli.

Q. Have you attended any of the Women in Leadership programs since you turned over the role to Miss Spinelli?

A. No.

Q. Has the Women in Leadership Group continued in operation since you left your role with it?

A. I am not sure that it continued, no. [Page 43] I am not sure.

Q. Even though you left your association with the Women in Leadership Group, would you have had occasion to see announcements of its events?

A. I would assume – and I don't know this – that the Womenfuture Main Event may be something that that group would have implemented.

I don't know.

Q. I am sorry. I didn't understand your testimony.

Are you saying that the Womenfuture group has replaced in Women in Leadership or –

A. No.

Q. – or it is one of the programs that Women in Leadership may have sponsored?

A. Exactly.

Q. And when was the Womenfuture program offered?

A. In April of this year.

Q. Between the time that you left the Women in Leadership Group in 1996 and April of this year, are you aware of any activities in which the Women in Leadership Group was engaged?

A. No.

MR. SELLERS: Let's have this marked as

* * *

[Page 184]

Q. I thought you just told me maybe that you didn't expect it to be the responsibility of the manager?

A. I don't know that it is or isn't because I don't know what the expectation is in the field.

Q. Well, at whatever level the goals are used to serve as a benchmark against which performance in attaining those goals is measured, are there consequences if managers fail to attain the goals?

A. Again, I don't know what level it goes to, so I wouldn't know if there are consequences or not.

Q. Do you believe it is important that there be consequences associated with failing to attain diversity goals at whatever level that responsibility may be assigned?

MS. DIAS: Objection to the form of the question.

BY THE WITNESS:

A. I can speak for myself. If I have a goal, then I want to achieve it.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. My question was would you have [Page 185] expected that – did you think that it was important that if managers failed to attain diversity goals that there would be consequences associated with that failure?

MS. DIAS: Same objection.

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. I am asking for your view.

A. Obviously, if there are consequences attached to it, it is more likely to be accomplished, but I don't know that they are or not.

Q. I understand. You don't have knowledge about how it is done in the field. I am asking about your view as to how you think that would best operate, not what actually happens.

A. How I believe it would best operate?

Q. Yes.

A. That there is some form of accountability, yes.

Q. Now did you – was there a point at which you were involved in some way in succession planning?

A. In Organizational Development, I would have simply formatted information that was corning from the various divisions.

* * *

[Page 198]

A. Yes, she is.

Q. Do you know what her position is?

A. No.

Q. Were you involved in reviewing the results of the survey?

A. I believe so, yes.

Q. And what was your role?

A. I believe Carla and I looked at those possibly with Andy Wilson or Maxie Carpenter to determine if it was something that we wanted to pursue.

Q. I am sorry. When you say something you wanted to pursue, this was after the survey had already been administered; is that right?

A. Yes.

Q. What was it you were trying to decide what to pursue?

A. If we felt there was anything that Chuck Shelton could do for Wal-Mart in regard to diversity as a consultant.

Q. I am sorry. Did you finish your answer? Did you finish your answer?

A. Yes, sir.

Q. What did you conclude?

A. The best of my recollection – and [Page 199] that has been awhile – many of the things that he suggested were things that were already underway and it didn't appear that he had anything new or different to offer.

Q. And as a result, you recommended that this – that Wal-Mart not continue working with him to follow up on that survey?

A. I don't know that I recommended it. It was – The best of my recollection, it was Carla and whomever she was working with's decision.

Q. What was the decision?

A. We did not continue working with him.

MR. SELLERS: This is Exhibit 25.

(The document was thereupon marked for identification as S. Bilgischer Deposition Exhibit No. 25, as of 10/9/02.)

BY MR. SELLERS:

Q. This is a memo from Mr. Shelton to a group of people including you entitled, "Recommendations for Wal-Mart's Diversity Strategy/1999-2001."

Have you seen that before today?

A. Yes, I have.

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES,
PATRICIA SURGESON,
on behalf of themselves
and all others similarly situated,

Plaintiffs, No. C-01-2252-MJJ

vs.

WAL-MART STORES,
INC.,

Defendant.

The videotaped deposition of MARK O. BOSLER, taken in the above-entitled case, before Karyn Chalem, CSR, RPR, on the 15th day of May, 2002, commencing at 9:00 a.m. at the offices of 122 South Michigan Avenue, Suite 1850, Chicago, Illinois, pursuant to agreement of counsel.

Reported by: Karyn H. Chalem
License No.: 084-004167

* * *

[Page 40]

A Two divisions.

Q Looking at Exhibit 105 under your education, it refers to Walton Institute 2?

A Yes.

Q Was that management training or what kind of training was that?

A To the best of my knowledge, it was seven years ago, but it encompassed everything to do with being an effective manager.

Q Is that a – were your classmates – strike that.

Did you have classmates when you did that program?

A Yes.

Q Approximately how many people?

A I don't recall, but approximately 40 maybe.

Q Okay. Were they all Sam's Club or were they also regular Wal-Mart?

A No, there was a variety across the company.

Q So Sam's and Wal-Mart?

A Yes.

Q Do you know if there were people

* * *

[Page 85]

Q Less than half?

A It's less than half.

Q Less than a quarter?

A Probably a quarter or a little more.

Q Are you aware of any goals for promotion of women into management trainee programs?

A I'm not aware of goals.

Q Are you aware of any goals for promotion of women into any position at Sam's?

A I've not seen any goals for Sam's, percent of women in management, no.

Q Okay.

MR. CATLETT: Let's take a short break.

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going off the record. The time on the monitor is 10:24.

(A recess was taken.)

THE VIDEOGRAPHER: We're going back on the record. The time on the monitor is 10:34.

BY MR. SELIGMAN:

Q Earlier, when we were talking about the selection process to become a bakery or meat

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES and PATRICIA SURGESON, et al. Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendants.	Case No.: C-01-2252-MJJ

DEPOSITION of BRENDA J. DENO, held pursuant to Notice and Subpoena on October 21, 2002, at Accurate Court Reporting, 1618 Genesee Street, Utica, New York, commencing at 9:15 a.m., before Joseph A. Adamkiewicz, Shorthand Reporter and Notary Public in and for the State of New York.

* * *

[Page 166]

women who were disciplined for taking long breaks or leaving the area, is that correct?

A. That's correct.

Q. Is other problems you had with Vinnie that you believe were discriminatory against you in some way other than Vinnie's being allowed to leave the store for long periods?

A. Yes. Do you want to get into that now?

Q. I want to get a list of any other problems, and then we'll break. Any other concerns you had about discriminatory treatment from Vinnie?

A. Yes. When I talked to Don Defeo at the time and told him that I wanted to work the – have the opportunity to work, you know, some overtime, if it's being offered. And, you know, his comment was, "Well, what is good for the goose isn't good for the gander."

I wasn't happy with that, so I [Page 167] called the home office, and the next day at work I was called into the personnel department and, you know, was basically told by John Emory was there, Tony Rotundo, Vinnie Piccola, and a girl was pulled off the floor, and John Emory wanted to know what my problem was.

Q. Okay. So there were what you thought was – did you think the meeting was discriminatory?

A. Yes, very much so.

Q. Any other problems you had with Vinnie that you thought were discriminatory based on your sex?

A. There could have been. I'm not sure right now.

Q. Do you recall any others right now?

A. It was an ongoing thing with him. He was pretty aggressive with every woman that worked in the deli.

Q. Do you recall any other specific problems you had with Vinnie or treatment by

* * *

[Page 234]

to you?

A. Okay. There was one incident when Tony Burkett had to go out of town to one of our stores that we're opening. I'm not sure exactly which store. It was down closer to the New York area. And a woman manager store manager had gotten that job, Tony Burkett was one of if not several people in the area that had to go and prepare the store for opening.

And his conversation that I heard with I believe it was Tony Rotundo and Vinnie Piccola was the company had to meet their quota one more time by hiring a female manager that is dumb as a bag of rocks and knows nothing, and women should be home barefoot and pregnant, and I was not very happy with that at all, and I was standing right there waiting to speak to Tony at the time, and that's how I heard all that.

That is my reason to believe that he has no respect for women that are in or want [Page 235] management positions with Wal-Mart.

Q. So you said you were waiting to speak to Tony. Tony Rotundo or Tony Burkett?

A. Tony Rotundo. And there was also a produce manager there, too.

Q. Do you know who that was?

A. Mike Sabino.

Q. So, you were – were they in an office?

A. No, they were right outside the meat door and like a little casual circle.

Q. And you overheard Tony Burkett make these remarks?

A. Oh, yes.

Q. Did you talk to anyone about the remarks that Tony made?

A. I made a comment myself.

Q. What did you say?

A. I says, what makes you feel that all women who get management positions in Wal-Mart aren't actually qualified.

[Page 236]

Q. Was there any response when you made that comment?

A. Mike Sabino commented that it's a known fact that men have one extra rib. What that means is beyond me. I have no idea.

Q. Anyone say anything else?

A. No. Everybody kind of broke up after that, and that was the end of that.

Q. Any other reason you believe Tony Burkett did not have respect for women or was not interested in talking to you about promotions because you're a woman?

A. I don't think I need any more reasons, no.

Q. Did you ever complain to anyone about Tony's comments that you considered inappropriate?

A. I don't remember. It was obviously a losing battle. Actually, yes, I did speak to my physician about it.

Q. Did you speak to anyone in Wal-Mart

* * *

2001 Company Accountability Goals

Category	Goals
	Division 01	Supercenter
Comparative Sales Increase	5.8%	7.5%
Gross Profit on Sales	24.1%	23.2%
Markdowns	5.5%	4.0%
Shrink	.59%	.59%
Expense Reduction	.1%	.1%
Pre-tax Profit	5.7%	5.2%
Turns	7.5%	10.0%
Turnover Reduction	15%	15%
Accident Reduction	25%	25%
Focus 560 Accident Reduction	35%	35%

STAR

Overview

The Store Total Activity Review (STAR) is a quarterly operational checklist to be completed by the District Manager. This is the sixth year STAR has been conducted. We must continue to keep it simple but ensure we include all divisions of our Company. To ensure our focus is on the entire store, additions and changes are made to the 2001 STAR. The 2001 STAR is divided into these nineteen sections that require all aspects of the business to be reviewed:

Operational Controls

- Management
- Department Manager
- Merchandising
- Operations/Controls
- Front-end

Legal/Shrink Controls

- Loss Prevention
- Risk Control
- Quality Assurance
- Firearms

Specialty Groups

- Photo Center
- Jewelry/Shoes
- TLE
- Pharmacy
- Vision Center

People/Office Controls

- People
- Accounting
- Back Office
- Backroom
- Claims

Objectives and Benefits

The objective of STAR is to ensure stores are following proper policies and procedures. These are the benefits of conducting a quarterly STAR:

- Sets expectations for all Associates.
- Ensures proper controls are in place.
- Gives a complete overview of the store's operation.
- Ensures consistent store standards exist within a District.
- Provides good training by involving Assistant Managers and Co-Managers in the process.
- Reduces shrinkage, cuts accident costs, and increases profit for the store and the Company.

Additions

- These are new sections added to the 2001 STAR:
    - Backroom
    - Department Manager
    - Firearms
    - Pharmacy
    - Vision Center
- The system now answers 31 questions automatically. (Refer to the Automated Questions Benchmark/Judgment Criteria.)

STAR Guidelines

These are the guidelines to conduct a quarterly STAR.

Preparing for STAR

- The District Manager must balance the Accounting Office prior to each quarterly STAR.
- Due to the change of the week 52 review report, the District Manager must print a Personnel File 52 – Week Review form from this link, to complete the week 52 review question in the People section of STAR.
- The District Manager conducts s STAR for each store in their district during the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd quarters.
- Each STAR must be finalized by the 25th of the last month of the quarter (e.g. April 25, July 25, and October 25). STAR can not be submitted after these dates.

- Only one review can be entered into the system for each quarter in the first three quarters.
- In the 4th quarter, the District Manager conducts a follow-up STAR (on a printed STAR only) focusing on the exceptions of the 3rd quarter STAR and emphasizing holiday priorities. (Do not enter the 4th quarter STAR into the system.)

NOTE: To ensure the most current version is completed, print a blank STAR at the beginning of each quarter. (Updates are entered at the end of each quarter.)

- The Division 01 District Manager coordinates STAR dates with the Jewelry/Shoes and Vision Center District Managers and the District Loss Prevention Supervisor. (A minimum of two-week notice is required before a STAR is conducted.)
- The Division 01 District Manager conducts the Pharmacy, Photo Center and TLE sections.
- The Division 01 District Manager, and District Loss Prevention Supervisor are both responsible for the completion of the Firearms section.

Entering the STAR

- Stores must have a 95% overall score to receive a satisfactory score.
- Most questions contain individual sub-questions. To complete a question, answer each sub-question YES or NO.
- If all sub-questions are answered yes, the entire question is automatically answered yes.
- If any sub-question is answered no, the entire question is automatically answered no.

- Before finalizing, the District Manager can change the main answer from YES to NO by selecting the answer box. (This option is available for manually entered questions only.)
- Questions can not be changed from NO to YES.
- Any question that is not applicable must be answered YES.
- All questions requiring interpretation are based on District Manager expectations.
- Automated questions can not be changed. Use these questions as a preliminary STAR score.
- The Monthly Store Manager Review (MSMR) is a subunit of STAR, which the Store Manager must complete by the 25th of each month.

After completing the STAR

- The District Manager and all affected Associates must hold a wrap-up session at the end of the review.
- One copy of the STAR is retained at the store. Another copy is retained in the District Office.
- The Store Manager must complete a detailed plan of action to correct opportunities noted on the STAR. Send a copy of the plan of action to the Regional Vice President and the District Manager within ten working days.
- The District Manager completes a follow-up review using the plan of action when necessary.

STAR – New Stores

Follow these guidelines to conduct a STAR in a new store.

- The District Manager conducts a STAR within the first 30 days after Grand Opening.
- The District Manager completes a follow-up review on the exceptions set during the second month.
- The District Manager conducts another STAR during the third month.
- The District Manager must continue this process for the first six months of operation. After the first six months, the District Manager conducts a STAR based on Company guidelines.
- Only one review can be entered into the system for each quarter in the first three quarters.
- In the 4th quarter, the District Manager completes a follow-up STAR (on a printed STAR only) focusing on the exceptions of the 3rd quarter STAR and emphasizing holiday priorities. (Do not enter the 4th quarter STAR into the system.)

NOTE: To ensure the most current version is completed, print a blank STAR at the beginning of each quarter. (Updates are entered at the end of each quarter.)

STAR – High Shrink Scores

Follow these guidelines to conduct a STAR in high shrink scores.

- The District Manager conducts a STAR every other month, beginning in February or from the time the store is designated as high shrink, for the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd quarters.
- The months a STAR is not conducted, the District Manager must complete a follow-up review on the exceptions from the previous month's STAR.
- The District Manager continues this process until the store is no longer designated a high shrink store.

- Only one review can be entered into the system for each quarter in the first three quarters.
- In the 4th quarter, the District Manager completes a follow-up STAR (on a printed STAR only).
- In the 4th quarter, the District Manager completes a follow-up STAR (on a printed STAR only) focusing on the exceptions of the 3rd quarter STAR and emphasizing holiday priorities. (Do not enter the 4th quarter STAR into the system.)

NOTE: To ensure the most current version is completed, print a blank STAR at the beginning of each quarter, (Updates are entered at the end of each quarter.)

MSMR

The Monthly Store Manager Review (MSMR) is a review to be completed by Store Management. It is divided into fifteen sections and requires all aspects of the business and all areas of the store to be reviewed:

Operational Controls	Legal/Shrink Controls	Specialty Groups
· Management	· Loss Prevention	· Photo Center
· Department Manager	· Risk Control	· Jewelry/ Shoes
· Merchandising	· Quality Assurance	· TLE
· Operations/ Controls	· Firearms	· Pharmacy
· Front-end		· Vision Center

People/Office Controls

- People
- Accounting
- Back Office
- Backroom
- Claims

MSMR Key Points

These are the key points to the MSMR.

- The 2001 MSMR is a total store MSMR.
- The Store Manager must balance the Accounting Office prior to each MSMR. (A question referring to this procedure will be added to the 2nd quarter STAR.)
- The Store Manager obtains STAR information from DD101 STAR/MSMR 2001 the store Manager's Merchant Workbench.
- Scores are entered into the STAR screen on the Store Manager's Merchant Workbench. (Refer to DD101 STAR/MSMR 2001.).
- The system automatically scores 30 MSMR questions when accessed. This can be used as a preliminary MSMR score. (Refer to the Automated Questions Benchmark / Judgement Criteria.)
- Special emphasis has been placed on Department 05 and 46. These two departments account for 43% of our total Company shrink.

MSMR Guidelines

These are the guidelines to conduct the MSMR.

- Stores must have a 95% overall score to receive a satisfactory score.
- Most questions contain individual sub-questions. To complete a question, answer each sub-question YES or NO.
- If any part of a checkpoint is not 100% correct, it must be answered NO.
- Before finalizing, the Store Manager can change the main answer from YES to NO by selecting the answer box but not from NO to YES. (This option is available for manually entered questions only.)
- Any question that is not applicable must be answered YES.

Store Manager

- The Store Manager is responsible to ensure salaried management completes an audit in the Accounting Office prior to each quarterly STAR.
- Print the Monthly Store Manager Review from the Store Manager's Merchant Workbench.
- Conduct a Monthly Store Manager Review.
- Each exception must have an action plan on the "Monthly Store Manager Review Recap."
- Enter MSMR information into the Store Manager's Merchant Workbench by the 25th of each month.
- Mail a completed copy of the store's Monthly Store Manager Review to the District Manager by the 25th of each month.

- Retain each completed review in a binder for follow-up.

District Manager

- Follow-up on the exceptions of the monthly reviews completed by Store Management.
- Follow-up on stores that did not complete the Monthly Store Manager Review.

Note: It is recommended that affected Associates perform a monthly self-audit for their own benefit.

Store Within A Store (SWAS)

SWAS Background

Sam Walton developed the SWAS (Store Within A Store) program in 1986. From that time to the present, the purpose of the SWAS program has remained unchanged:

> To develop better merchants by focusing on the importance of merchandise planning and the understanding of departmental performance figures.

SWAS continues to be a tool for our supervisors to improve their:

- Merchandising Skills
- Operational Skills
- People Skills

SWAS focuses on the combination of people, merchandising, and numbers.

District Manager's Role in SWAS

Following is a list of the District Manager's responsibilities regarding SWAS. (For additional information on the SWAS Program, refer to Pipeline, Wal-Mart Stores, Store Resources, Training Resources, SWAS/VPI.)

- Tour with the Department Managers and Assistant Managers on the salesfloor with a hand-held terminal.
- Meet with Assistant Managers and Department Managers once quarterly to review the 30-60-90-day plans.
- Review the correction of errors for the previous and current year.
- Review all seasonal events for the upcoming quarter.
- Review and teach about seasonal build-ups.
- Review operational and special promotional plans.
- Review past numerical performance.
- Review Department Managers' VPIs.
- Review and reinforce key points from Display Guide and District Manager Checklist.
- Ensure store is using the Item Performance screens.

Store Manager's Role in SWAS

Following is a list of the Store Manager's responsibilities regarding SWAS. (For additional information on the SWAS Program, refer to Pipeline, Wal-Mart Stores, Store Resources, Training Resources, SWAS/VPI.)

- Review Store Manager Recap Report daily.
- Meet with Assistant Managers and Department Managers monthly.
- Review and approve all 30-60-90 day plans developed by Assistant Managers and Department Managers.
- Review and approve Assistant Managers operational plans.
- Check Correction of Errors from the previous year to make corrections for the current season.
- Cover numerical performance of each Department and Assistant Manager's area with entire group.
- Ensure all Assistant Managers are holding monthly SWAS meetings.
- Ensure all Department Managers are involved in the VPI program.

Assistant Manager's Role in SWAS

Following is a list of the Assistant Manager's responsibilities regarding SWAS. (For additional information on the SWAS Program, refer to Pipeline, Wal-Mart Stores, Store Resources, Training Resources, SWAS/VPI.)

- Review Assistant Manager SWAS Report.
- Meet with Department Managers by the 15th of each month.
- Review performance numbers for the past month.
- Cover Home Office bought merchandise from Department Manager SWAS Recap Report.

- Review Display Guide and District Manager's Checklist.
- Plan special local store events.
- Plan seasonal layouts and merchandise needs above and beyond Home Office bought merchandise.
- Plan seasonal operations (e.g. staffing implementation, execution of Company plan, etc.).
- Plan VPI items with Department Managers.
- Review tab item selection, quantities, and item location during tab.
- Work as a team to create 30-60-90 day plans.
- Develop Correction of Errors.
- Tour with Department Managers on the salesfloor.

Department Manager Role as SWAS

The following should be achieved in the monthly SWAS meeting. (For additional information on the SWAS Program, refer to Pipeline, Wal-Mart Stores, Store Resources, Training Resources, SWAS/VPI.)

- Purchase Recap Report and Departmental Sales Recap Report reviewed in detail for the previous month.
- Departmental profit and inventory turns recorded.
- P&L reviewed and plans made to correct opportunities.
- Weekly sales plans reviewed.
- Merchandise plans made for 30-60-90 days out with future orders placed.

- Utilize the Item Performance screen.
- Special events planned (e.g. Company and store promotions, community events, etc.).
- Review Merchandise Display Guide.
- Review Home Office bought merchandise.
- Review the POS Top Items per Department (formally the Top 50) and Top 15 reports from last year.
- Competition discussed and action plans developed.
- VPI items reviewed and planned.

SWAS Tools

Utilize these tools when completing SWAS plans.

Reports

Home Office Bought Merchandise

The Home Office Bought Merchandise Report shows all merchandise the Buyers have bought for the stores by department. This is forecast for current week plus five weeks. It also includes new items, seasonal build up, new modular, and return sheet merchandise. By reviewing this report weekly with the Department Managers, plans can be made for features and also staging of the merchandise. Assistant Managers can use this report as a tool for 30-60-90 day planning. This information is also printed on the SWAS Department Manager Recap Report. They can reference back to it at any time. This report does not print automatically but can be printed from the message system.

Top 300 Report

These are the key points of this report:

- Check sales and quantities sold during peak weekend business hours.
- Shows previous weeks sales and quantities sold for the items listed.
- Provides an analysis of which items should be ordered to maximize sales.
- Can tell you when you run out of items and suggest stocking times.
- Helps the store plan features for weekend business.

Future Orders Extract Report

The Future Orders Extract Report prints into these two reports:

1. A report prints for all assembly items appearing that week in the "New Order" column of the order review sheets.
2. A report prints for all warehouse items appearing that week in order batches.

- The arrival date is an estimated calculation for assembly items and is based on the order review date plus the lead time. For warehouse items, it is based on the order date plus four days.
- Review these reports each Saturday to plan all ordered features.

Future Orders Review Report

The Future Orders Review Report lists merchandise that is ordered. These are the key points of this report.

- List future orders.
    - Future orders are in addition to any POS replenishment orders.
    - The week in which the future order appears is when the order is placed not when the order arrives.
- Lists ordered features. (Use this when touring with Department or Assistant Managers to discuss where coming features are to be placed.)
- Must be printed manually.
- Lists all outstanding orders for up to 12 weeks.
- Shows the week ordered, estimated arrival date, order type, and markup percent.

Terminal Screens

Use these screens to manage inventory.

Sales History Screen

The Sales History screen provides additional information concerning item movement and maintenance. The following is a list of key points about the Sales History screen to help in planning for future sales. (Refer to the Perpetual Inventory Guide, Be A Merchant Section, page 25.)

- Displays sales and profit information for the previous ten weeks for a specified item.

- Ability to view last year's sales and profit for the item.
- Utilize the information to analyze sales trends to help plan features

Max Sales Screen

The Max Sales screen shows the following: (Refer to the Perpetual Inventory Guide, Be A Merchant section, page 27.)

- Top ten selling items from previous week for a specific department.
- Information for a particular week for last year for the department.
- Useful tool for feature planning and item build up.

Item Performance Screen

The Store Manager is responsible to train Assistant Managers to use the Item Performance screen that is located on the Merchant Workbench. These are key points of this screen.

- To develop SWAS plans with Department Managers.
- To analyze sales performance by department, modular category, or item for the last 52 weeks.
- To evaluate peak selling periods by modular category to more effectively plan future orders and choose VPIs.

Item Locator

The Item Locator option searches stores for specific item information. After scanning or entering the UPC number of item, the system searches for the closest stores, district stores, or a specific store number.

- In Stock - identifies stores currently in-stock with the item needed in your store.
- Out of Stock - identifies stores needing merchandise that is currently overstocked in your store.
- Best Sales - identifies stores selling an item well. Use this function to eliminate an overstocked item at your store.

Keep it Stocked Screen

The Keep it Stocked screen helps Associates get merchandise back in-stock. The Keep it Stocked screen suggests orders for merchandise based on the current on-hand and last 5-week sales history. The suggested order amount for assembly orders is what the system calculates to keep the merchandise in-stock to establish a rate of sale on the item. Once the rate of sale is established and the on-hand is correct, the POS system begins to properly replenish the item.

Perpetual Inventory

The Perpetual Inventory system is a "view only" screen that tracts the on-hands of each item as it comes in and goes out of the store. The PI system uses Point of Sale (POS) to update on-hands as items are sold through registers. POS replenishment is a very important part of managing inventory in our stores. This system provides many benefits to our Company. The continual monitoring of on-hand counts through perpetual inventory ensures the POS replenishment system is working properly, and merchandise is replenished in proper quantities.

Piece Count

The Piece Count function provides a quick and efficient method of counting items using the handheld terminal. The system counts the number of scans for each item scanned. This count then replaces the current on-hand for the item. Use the Piece Count function to count areas where many items are mixed together.

- Use only one handheld terminal to perform a piece count in a department.
- As an item is scanned, the system automatically separates the counts and places them with the correct item number.
- Do not use the Piece Count function on departments with a large number of items.

List Count

The List Count function is used to correct on-hands for all items in a department or category. Following is some of the benefits of using the List Count function to correct on-hands.

- Multiple handheld terminals can be used to enter counts for the same item from different locations in the store.

- Manual calculations are not necessary.
- Multiple departments can be counted at the same time, and the counts are accumulated and suspended in the same list.

Receiving/Stockroom

Follow these guidelines, and Backroom Conversion Guide on the Store Manager's Workbench to maintain a successful backroom.

7/14/30 Day Rule

- All merchandise brought to the backroom must be labeled with the date.
- Use color-coded event tags to identify promos, freatures, new modulars, and seasonal merchandise.
- Use inventory prep labels on all basic backstock/
- All basic warehouse merchandise must be out of the backroom within 7 days from its arrival.
- All basic assembly merchandise must be out of the backroom within 14 days from its arrival.
- All promotional, future modular, and tab merchandise must be out of the backroom within 30 days of its arrival.

Picklist

Department Managers must create picklists daily to itentify merchandise to take to the salesfloor. (Refer to the Merchandise Systems Guide section MSG 1112.)

Reports

Utilize these reports to develop a plan-of-action to maintain an effective backroom program.

Backroom Receiving Report	Prints monthly after the P&L Report and recaps the following for the backroom Associate's job codes only: • Preferred and actual hours • Inventory turns • Associate turn over • Associate accidents • Associate productivity vs. actual hours • On-hand changes A portion of this report prints weekly on the Store Manager's Recap Report.
Pre-Notification Report	This report is divided into two sections that lists truck totals on each event received and a description of each item received. It allows management to develop a more effective plan-of-action for stocking the merchandise received. To enable this report to print automatically, refer to the Invoice Receiving Guide section IRG 301

Overnight Staffing Report	This report improves productivity while stocking departments overnight. The schedule assigns overnight stockers to departments based on the amount of freight received each night. This allows the management to develop an efficient plan-of-action for the unloading and stocking process.
Stocking Schedule Report	This report prints daily at 6:00 a.m. and lists case productivity information for each department, and a Stocking Schedule that assigns departments to scheduled Associates. To manually print the "Overnight Stocking Schedule", refer to the Payroll Scheduling Guide section PSG 616.
In Transit Out of Stock Report	This report prints when trucks are expected and lists items in transit that are showing a zero on-hand in the P.I. screen. Utilize this report to research the items with zero on-hands to correct P.I. issues. These are some reasons for zero on-hands on in transit merchandise: • Initial shipment for new modulars. • Non replenishable special orders from H.O. • Seasonal merchandise. • Merchandise ordered from negative on-hands.

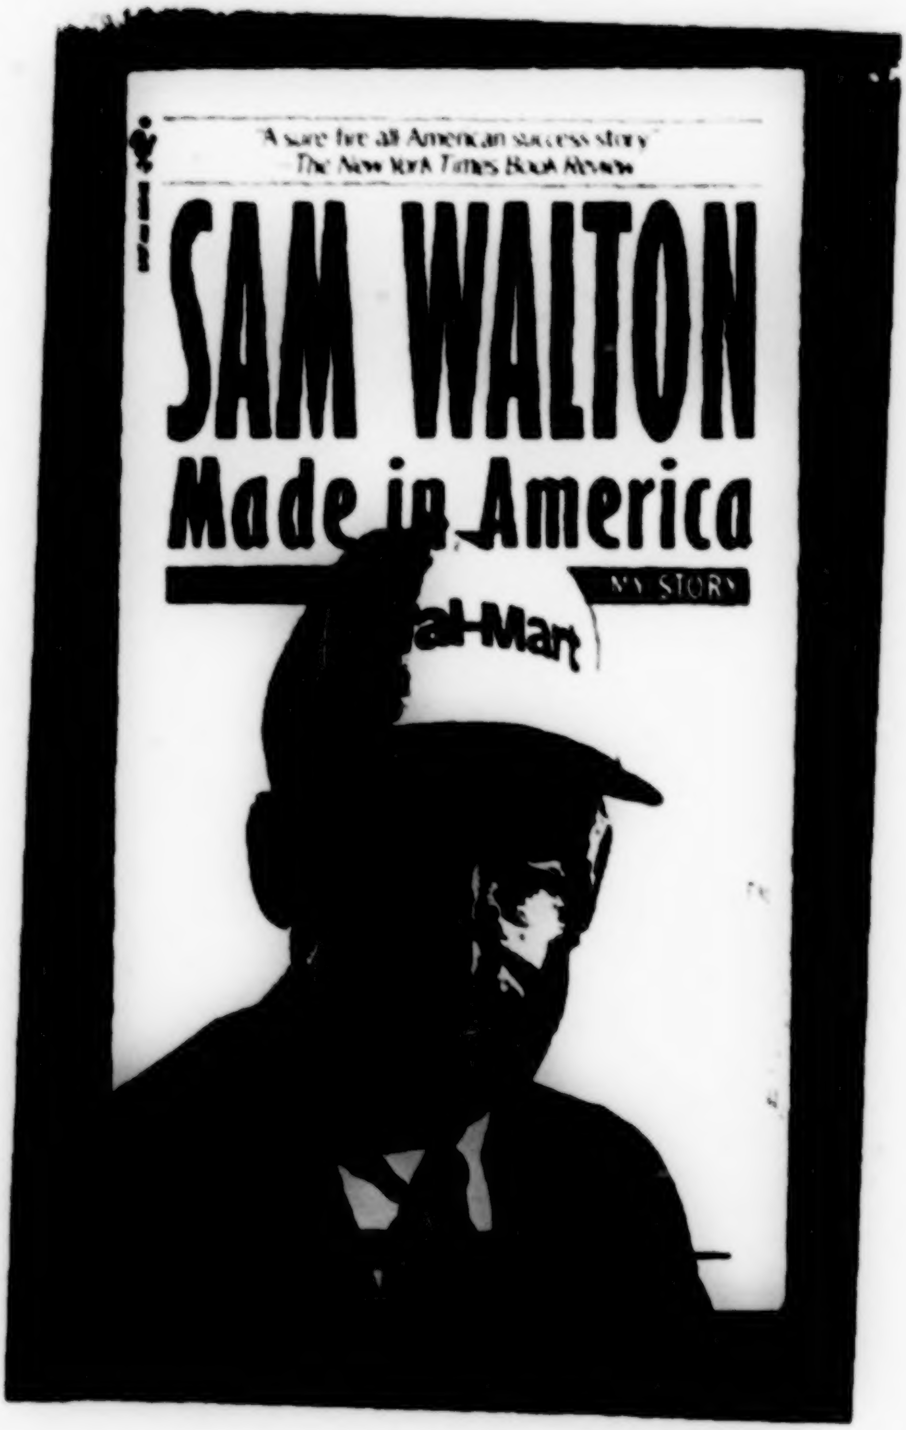
P.I. Supplemental Report	This report prints Monday through Friday and lists manually ordered Assembly merchandise. This report shows the following: • The current on hand. • The previous four weeks sales history. • The amount ordered. Review and utilize this report to: • Correct issues with slow moving merchandise. • Correct over stock issues. • To develop a "plan of action" for incoming seasonal merchandise or special orders from H.O. • To execute the currently developed "plan of action".
On-hand Change Report	This report prints daily. Utilize this report to verify: • On-band changes by department. • On hand changes by Associate. • The amount of the adjustment.

	Refer to the Perpetual Inventory Guide section PI Reports.
Supplemental Order Report	This report prints daily and is used to verify manually placed orders from the previous day are finalized. (Refer to the Perpetual Inventory Guide section PI Reports.)
Future Order Review Report	This report is printed manually and lists up to 12 weeks of outstanding assembly and warehouse orders. (Refer to the Perpetual Inventory Guide section PI Reports.) • Assembly and warehouse orders may be requested separately.



"A sure fire all American success story"
—The New York Times Book Review

SAM WALTON
Made in America
MY STORY

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments vii

Foreword xi

1 Learning to Value a Dollar 1

2 Starting on a Dime 14

3 Bouncing Back 40

4 Swimming Upstream 60

5 Raising a Family 86

6 Recruiting the Team 100

7 Taking the Company Public 118

8 Rolling Out the Formula 139

9 Building the Partnership 161

10 Stepping Back 183

11 Creating a Culture 199

12 Making the Customer Number One 220

13 Meeting the Competition 241

14 Expanding the Circles 262

* * *

[Page 201]

tor by taking on challengers in a no-holds-barred persimmon-seed-spitting contest using Robert Rhoads, our company general counsel, as the official target. Most companies also don't have a gospel group called the Singing Truck Drivers, or a management singing group called Jimmy Walker and the Accountants.

My feeling is that just because we work so hard, we don't have to go around with long faces all the time, taking ourselves seriously, pretending we're lost in thought over weighty problems. At Wal-Mart, if you have some important business problem on your mind, you should be bringing it out in the open at a Friday morning session called the merchandising meeting or at the Saturday morning meeting, so we can all try to solve it together. But while we're doing all this work, we like to have a good time. It's sort of a "whistle while you work" philosophy, and we not only have a heck of a good time with it, we work better because of it. We build spirit and excitement. We capture the attention of our folks and keep them interested, simply because they never know what's coming next. We break down barriers, which helps us communicate better with one another. And we make our people feel part of a family in which no one is too important or too puffed up to lead a cheer or be the butt of a joke—or the target in a persimmon-seed-spitting contest.

We don't pretend to have invented the idea of a strong corporate culture, and we've been aware of a lot of the others that have come before us. In the early days of IBM, some of the things Tom Watson did with his slogans and group activities weren't all that different from the things we do. And, as I've said, we've certainly borrowed every good idea we've come across. Helen and I picked up several ideas on a trip we took [Page 202] to Korea and Japan in 1975. A lot of the things they do over there are very easy to apply to doing business over here. Culturally, things seem so different—like sitting on the floor eating eels and snails—but people are people, and what motivates one group generally will motivate another.

> HELEN WALTON:
>
> "Sam took me out to see this tennis ball factory, somewhere east of Seoul. The company sold balls to Wal-Mart, I guess, and they treated us very well. It was the dirtiest place I ever saw in my life, but Sam was very impressed. It was the first place he ever saw a group of workers have a company cheer. And he liked the idea of everybody doing calisthenics together at the beginning of the day. He couldn't wait to get home and try those ideas out in the stores and at the Saturday morning meeting."

Back in 1984, people outside the company began to realize just how different we folks at Wal-Mart are. That was the year I lost a bet to David Glass and had to pay up by wearing a grass skirt and doing the hula on Wall Street. I thought I would slip down there and dance, and David would videotape it so he could prove to everyone back at the Saturday morning meeting that I really did it, but when we got there, it turned out David had hired a truckload of real hula dancers and ukulele players—and he had alerted the newspapers and TV networks. We had all kinds of trouble with the police about permits, and the dancers' union wouldn't let them dance without heaters because it was so cold, and we finally had to get permission from the head of doing things, and really believe it's the best way, they develop a tendency to think that's exactly the way things should always be done. So I've made it my own personal mission to ensure that constant change is a vital part of the Wal-Mart culture itself. I've forced change—sometimes for change's sake alone—at every turn in our company's development. In fact, I think one of the greatest strengths of Wal-Mart's ingrained culture is its ability to drop everything and turn on a dime.

* * *

[Page 216]

We're great at that kind of change when it comes to operating challenges, but sometimes not so great on matters that have more to do with the culture of the company. In the early days, for example, all our old variety store managers had a tremendous prejudice against us hiring college boys because they didn't think they would work hard enough. Three of the first ones we hired—Bill Fields, Dean Sanders, and Colon Washburn—are still with us and, in fact, are among our brightest stars. But they had a heck of a time fitting in at first and could probably tell some real horror stories.

> BILL FIELDS, EXECUTIVE VICE PRESIDENT — MERCHANDISING AND SALES, WAL-MART:
>
> "I had been with the company about five days, and we were opening a store in Idabel, Oklahoma. We had thirteen days to open it, which is still a record. They worked me about 125 hours or more the first week. The second week it was getting worse. Then Sam—who knew who I was because I was a local Bentonville boy—comes walking up to me and says, 'Who hired you?' I told him that Ferold Arend had, and he said, 'Well, do you think you'll ever be a merchant?' Just the way he said it [Page 217] made me mad enough to want to quit. Then Don Whitaker > came walking up to me and looked at me almost like he smelled something bad, and said, 'Who in the hell hired you?' At the time, it didn't seem like going to college was much of an advantage in this company. We really had to prove ourselves to those old guys."

Obviously if we were going to grow, we had to bring in college-educated folks. But at first, the culture tried to reject them. And now that we have even more complicated needs—in technology, finance, marketing, legal, whatever—our demand for a more sophisticated work force is growing all the time. All this requires some basic changes in the way we think about ourselves, about who's a good Wal-Mart hire for tomorrow and about what we can do for the folks already on board. That's one reason Helen and I started the Walton Institute down at the University of Arkansas in Fort Smith. It's a place where our managers can go and get exposure to some of the educational opportunities they may not have had earlier on. Also, we as a company need to do whatever we can to encourage and help our associates earn their college degrees. We need these folks to get the best training they possibly can. It opens up their career opportunities, and it benefits us.

Traditionally, we've had this attitude that if you wanted to be a manager at Wal-Mart, you basically had to be willing to move on a moment's notice. You get a call that says you're going to open a new store 500 miles away, you don't ask questions. You just pack and go, then sometime later you worry about selling your house and moving your family. Maybe that was necessary back in the old days, and maybe it was more rigid [Page 218] than it needed to be.

Now, though, it's not really appropriate anymore for several reasons. First, as the company grows bigger, we need to find more ways to stay in touch with the communities where we operate, and one of the best ways to do that is by hiring locally, developing managers locally, and letting them have a career in their home community—if they perform. Second, the old way really put good, smart women at a disadvantage in our company because at that time they weren't as free to pick up and move as many men were. Now I've seen the light on the opportunities we missed out on with women. (I have to admit that Helen and my daughter Alice have helped me come around to this way of thinking.)

In the old days, retailers felt the same way about women that they did about college boys, only more so. In addition to thinking women weren't free to move, they didn't think women could handle anything but the clerk jobs because the managers usually did so much physical labor—unloading trucks and hauling merchandise out of the stockroom on a two-wheeler, mopping the floors and cleaning the windows if necessary. Nowadays, the industry has waked up to the fact that women make great retailers. So we at Wal-Mart, along with everybody else, have to do everything we possibly can to recruit and attract women.

One other aspect of the Wal-Mart culture which has attracted some attention is simply a matter of lifestyle, but it is one that has bothered me ever since we began to be really successful. The fact is, a lot of folks in our company have made an awful lot of money. We've had lots and lots of millionaires in our ranks. And it just drives me crazy when they flaunt it. Maybe it's none of my business, but I've done everything I can

* * *

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, et al., Plaintiffs, v. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Case No. C-01-2252-MJJ DEFENDANT'S SUPPLEMENTAL OBJECTIONS AND ANSWERS TO PLAINTIFFS' FIRST AND SECOND SETS OF INTERROGATORIES

* * *

INTERROGATORY NO. 11:

Does Wal-Mart contend that its female hourly employees are generally less qualified for management positions in the retail stores than its male hourly employees?

ANSWER:

Wal-Mart objects to this Interrogatory on the grounds that the terms "generally less qualified" and "management positions" are ambiguous generally and as they relate to Wal-Mart specifically. Wal-Mart further objects to this Interrogatory on the grounds that it is overly broad and seeks to impose burdens greater than that required by the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure in that it asks Wal-Mart to summarize the specific job skills and qualifications of Wal-Mart's large and diverse employee population and to draw conclusions regarding each associate's relative qualifications for the numerous "management positions" – many of which have different qualifications – throughout the different geographical and organizational levels of Wal-Mart. Moreover, as written, the Interrogatory oversimplifies the variety of factors that can impact the selection of a candidate for a particular job. Subject to and without waiving these specific objections and Wal-Mart's General Objections, Wal-Mart states that females are not less qualified for "management positions" than males.

* * *

INTERROGATORY NO. 17:

Does Wal-Mart contend that its female hourly employees are more frequently disciplined or coached than its male hourly employees in the retail stores?

ANSWER:

Wal-Mart objects to this Interrogatory on the grounds that the term "frequently disciplined or coached" is ambiguous generally and as it relates to Wal-Mart specifically. Subject to and without waiving these specific objections and Wal-Mart's General Objections, Wal-Mart states that an associate's gender has no bearing on whether he or she is subject to discipline or coaching in the retail divisions.

* * *

INTERROGATORY NO. 22:

What are the minimum qualifications required for an employee to be eligible for promotion to entry level management positions?

ANSWER:

Wal-Mart objects to this Interrogatory on the grounds that the phrases "minimum qualifications," "eligible for promotion" and "entry level management positions" are vague and ambiguous in general and as they relate to Wal-Mart specifically. Wal-Mart further objects to this Interrogatory on the grounds that it is overly broad and unduly burdensome, as it is impossible to investigate the "minimum qualifications" that have been formulated by thousands of relevant decision makers to fit the particular needs of hundreds of thousands of entry level management positions at Wal-Mart.

Subject to and without waiving these specific objections and Wal-Mart's General Objections, Wal-Mart states that there is no uniform set of "minimum qualifications" for entry level management positions that applies across all of its Retail Divisions and their respective subdivisions. The set of requirements for each position is dictated by the unique business considerations applicable to that specific location at that time and is determined on a case-by-case basis. Promotional guidelines in various Retail Divisions and at all levels of their respective subdivisions have varied over time and can vary by position. Members of management have autonomy to adapt these guidelines to meet the needs of the dynamic business environments in which they operate and may supplement higher-level guidelines by instituting additional requirements for the selection of individuals for promotion.

While it is impossible to describe promotional requirements for all positions throughout the company due to the vast number of promotional decisions and the decentralized way in which they are made, Wal-

Mart refers Plaintiffs to the 30(b)(6) witnesses who have testified or will be testifying on this topic, as well as all other depositions in which promotion to entry level management positions has been discussed. In addition, Wal-Mart provides the following as non-exhaustive examples of the guidance offered to relevant decision makers, as well as examples of some of the additional criteria for selection of entry level managers that pertain to certain organizational and geographic subdivisions of the Retail Divisions:

Wal-Mart Division 1 Stores And SuperCenters:

Hourly Managers. Pursuant to the Job Announcements Policy (document Bates labeled WMHO 217434), applicants for hourly manager positions such as Support Manager, Department Manager, Customer Service Manager and ICS Team Leader must first apply on the Computer Based Learning (CBL) terminal, successfully complete the applicable Job Selection questionnaire that is maintained on the Job Announcements system, and answer "No" to the following questions: (1) Have you been in your current position less than six months? (2) Have you had any documented coachings in the last 12 months? and (3) Was your last evaluation below standard? The Regional Personnel Manager may waive the 6-month-in-position requirement for long-term associates when there is no other qualified applicant. Applicants who have met the above criteria or obtained an appropriate waiver are then recommended for, and must successfully complete, an interview. Under some circumstances, the applicable decision-maker may consider applicants who are not "recommended"; for example an applicant with a coaching may be considered depending on the nature of the offense, how long ago it occurred, and whether the applicant's performance has improved significantly. Successful candidates must be able to work the hours required for the position and must generally meet the job requirements outlined in the applicable Job Description.

In addition, the Divisional, Regional and/or District offices are authorized to set guidelines for selection of positions at Stores within their areas. At one time, for example, Division A required Support Manager candidates to come from an hourly supervisor role with a minimum of one year existing service. The District Manager was authorized to make exceptions to fill the position in new stores. (See, e.g., document Bates labeled WMHO 389556 – WMHO 389557, 7/17/98 Div. 1A RPM Memo to Andy Wilson and Maxie Carpenter re: Div 1A Support Manager Program.) Additional requirements for promotion into hourly manager positions are determined at Store level to ensure that the qualifications sought are dictated by the needs for the particular position at that Store at that time. If a Department is particularly large, for example, the Manager(s) in charge of the Department may require that the Department Manager have a certain amount of experience working in that or a similar Department. (See, e.g., the May 9, 2002 30(b)(6) deposition of Kimberly Weaver for a discussion of some of the criteria, such as good attendance and leadership skills, that she has utilized in promotional decisions pertaining to hourly manager positions at her Store.)

First In Line Trainees. Some of the general guidelines that relate to becoming a First In Line trainee include: (1) an expressed interest in the First In Line Program, (2) status as a junior or senior in college with at least a 2.5 Grade Point Average,

(3) status as a full-time student (12 hours/semester), (4) having a minimum of 90 days as a Wal-Mart associate, (5) willingness to work a minimum of 16 hours per week, and (6) willingness to relocate after graduation from college. First In Line Trainees must also meet any additional requirements in place for promotion to the Management Training Program established by the Divisions, Regions and Districts that feature the First in Line Program. (See information regarding Management Trainee position, below.) To remain in the program, First In Line trainees must pass a drug test and make reasonable progress toward graduation. (See, e.g., document Bates labeled WMHO 352256-60; WMHO 369965-66.)

Management Trainee. Default promotional guidelines for Division 01 Store and SuperCenter Management Trainees suggest the following criteria for promotion to the Management Training Program: (1) an evaluation rating of 3.5 or higher, (2) one year in present hourly supervisor position, (3) department not classified as High Shrink, although exceptions are approved by the Regional Vice President, (4) 100 percent current on CBL's, and (5) willingness to relocate. (See, e.g., documents Bates labeled WMHO 217236-37.) Associates also generally must be on the Rising Star list (See, e.g., Rising Star Candidate form and Candidate Assessment form for Rising Star selection criteria, which has changed over time), able to work the hours required for the position, and, after receiving an offer to become a Trainee, must pass a drug test to continue in the program.

In addition, Divisions, Regions and Districts are permitted to establish their own promotional guidelines and/or requirements applicable to promotion to Management Trainee positions in their areas. These guidelines may require higher evaluation scores than the broader guidelines discussed above, may otherwise alter the time in current position or relocation guidelines, and may add guidelines regarding, for example, receiving the recommendation of one's Store Manager or having worked in certain areas of the Store. Divisional, Regional and District Guidelines relating to willingness to relocate differ depending on factors such as the business climate, nature of the market, and the Company's growth and management turnover in the applicable areas. Certain Regions or Districts have at various times required that candidates be "100% relocatable," although the scope of "relocatable" differs Region by Region and District by District. For example, Management Trainees in some areas must be willing to relocate to another Store in their District, in others candidates should be willing to work at any store within the Region, while still other Regions or Districts set out a particular geographic area or ask for a number of states to which the Trainee could relocate. (See, e.g., document Bates labeled WMHO 200512, District 42 form to Trainees from Danny Carter, and document Bates labeled WMHO 151902-03, form letter to Trainees from Vince Martinez, RPM Region 16.)

Increasingly specific guidelines and processes for promotion to Management Trainee may be implemented at the District level. For example, District 200 Manager Debbie Kintzele has established an Assessment Center in which Store Managers submit candidates to the District office for approval and conduct opinion surveys on the approved candidates. Each candidate must complete a personal survey, write an essay, and successfully complete two 30 minute interviews in which two teams of managers score answers to each question. (See, e.g., documents Bates labeled WMHO 714944 - 714958.) In other Districts, the District Manager may accept resumes from Management Trainee candidates and/or require them to fill out an application (see, e.g., the September 24,2002 deposition of Disclosed Class Member Katheryn Johnson; see also the May 8, 2002 30(b)(6) deposition of Lisa Heilman and the May 9,2002 30(b)(6) deposition of Kimberly Weaver for a discussion of some additional practices that relate to promotion to Management Trainee.)

Salaried Management. Other positions at Division 01 Wal-Mart Stores and SuperCenters that might be considered entry level include, for example, Assistant Manager, Fresh Manager (SuperCenters only) and, where applicable, Resident Assistant Manager. In addition to requiring mastery of the components set forth in the applicable training guide for Management or First In Line Trainees (see documents Bates labeled WMHO 214651-215071 and WMHO 217245-49), various Divisions, Regions and Districts may set specific guidelines and/or requirements for promotion to Assistant Manager. For example, in Region 16, the Regional Vice President and Regional Personnel Manager provided Store Managers with a list to help determine when Management Trainees were ready for promotion to Assistant Manager. (See, e.g., document Bates labeled WMHO 371294 - 95, Memo from Jon Sims, Marcus Ludwig and Parrish Graumann re: Trainee Promotion Knowledge Checklist.) Some Regions or Districts have at various times required Assistant Managers to be fully "relocatable," a term that may have different meanings in different Divisions, Regions or Districts, as described above under Management Trainee. (See, e.g., document Bates labeled WMHO 151902-03, form letter from Vince Martinez, RPM Region 16; see also the May 8,2002 30(b)(6) deposition of Lisa Heilman for a discussion of some of the practices that relate to promotion to salaried management-level positions.) Trainees must accept an assignment at a Wal-Mart or SuperCenter with an opening for Assistant Manager; First In Line participants must also graduate from college before being promoted.

In addition to fulfilling any Divisional, Regional and/or District requirements for Fresh Manager, an associate must successfully complete the Fresh Manager Training Program (see documents Bates labeled WMHO 214109-214390) or, in some areas, have food-related training or experience, to be promoted to SuperCenter Fresh Manager. In those areas featuring the Resident Assistant Manager program, an associate must meet any applicable Divisional, Regional or District requirements, be willing to work in a Store with an available Resident Assistant Manager position, complete the Management Training Program, and have and maintain a 3.5 or better performance evaluation rating in order to be promoted to Resident Assistant Manager. (See document Bates labeled WMHO 215699 for a description of the Resident Assistant Manager Program.)

Specialty Divisions (Division 1 Stores And SuperCenters):

Tire & Lube Express:

Hourly Managers. Applicants for TLE Support Manager, TLE Service Manager, and TLE Department Manager must be able to work the hours required for the position and must generally meet job requirements outlined in the applicable job description, as well as fulfilling additional requirements established by the TLE Manager. The Job Announcements criteria apply, although the TLE Manager has authority to waive certain requirements. Wal-Mart directs Plaintiffs to the July 31, 2002 30(b)(6) deposition of Kirk Guthrie and the August 30, 2002 deposition of Disclosed Class Member Dedra Farmer for examples of some of the guidelines for promotion to hourly TLE Manager positions, such as leadership abilities, enthusiasm, ability to "stay busy," previous supervisory experience, experience as a Service Technician, and having experience with inventory management.

TLE Management Trainee. TLE Management Trainees are selected by TLE District Managers with TLE Manager and Store Manager recommendation. The required interview process has varied over time. At one point, TLE had a program in which several District Managers in each region were chosen to interview candidates interested in entering the Management Training Program. (See, for example, the documents Bates labeled WMHO 551957-59 setting forth the interview and selection process for this program.) TLE District Managers, and others participating in this particular promotion decision, may consider one or more, or any variation, of the following factors when deciding who to promote to TLE Management Trainee: (1) experience in training people, (2) leadership abilities, (3) communication skills, (4) listening skills, (5) prior evaluations, (6) dependability, (7) geographic preference, (8) scores on certification tests, (9) lack of coachings, (10) the ability to relocate, (11) the ability to handle significant responsibility, (12) desire, (13) the ability to grow, and (14) the capacity to take on more responsibility. Individuals who want to be promoted to the TLE Management Training Program should fill out a TLE Geographic Availability Form. (See document Bates-labeled WMHO 384404.) However, the importance of relocatability depends on the business climate in the geographic region that an individual is willing to work in.

TLE Managers. TLE District Managers interview candidates finishing up the TLE Management Training program to determine whether promotion is appropriate given the needs of the business in the Store, District, and Region. In addition to the requirements that correspond to the specific position, some of general guidelines for promotion to TLE Manager include, but are not limited to: being willing to work in a Store with a TLE Department, successful completion of the TLE Management Training Program, and accepting a Store within the agreed upon area of restriction in accordance with the TLE Geographic Availability Sheet.

Shoes and Jewelry:

Hourly Managers. Promotions for Shoe Department Manager and Jewelry Department Manager are conducted through the Job Announcements system, with exceptions to the general criteria when specific business needs arise. The relevant decision makers may determine specific criteria for Shoe Department Manager positions, and may consider the ability to handle heavy merchandise at a high volume and an individual's adaptability to change (e.g., the ability to merchandise galoshes when it happens to be raining). In addition to location-specific requirements, applicants for Jewelry Department Manager may in some situations need the ability to work with high security merchandise.

Assistant Managers. For some of the general guidelines to be promoted to Assistant Manager over the Shoes & Jewelry Departments, see the discussion supra relating to promotion to Salaried Management for Wal-Mart Division 1 Stores and SuperCenters.

District Manager Trainees. Candidates for Shoes and Jewelry District Manager Trainee must successfully complete interviews at the Home Office (see the documents Bates-labeled WMHO 552843-50 for examples of the types of questions that are asked during this interview process). In addition to meeting District and Regional requirements, applicants must be a Rising Star Department Manager (see document Bates labeled WMHO 552810-15 for criteria relating to the Shoes & Jewelry Rising Star Department Manager Program).

District Manager. Candidates must be able to work the hours required for the position and must generally meet the job requirements outlined in the applicable Job Description as well as any additional requirements listed for that particular position by the Manager(s) in charge of that District. Additionally, the candidate must generally have successfully completed the Shoes & Jewelry District Manager Training Program. (See, e.g., documents Bates labeled 552827-42 for a discussion of the selection and training process for Shoes & Jewelry District Managers.) Additionally, the Shoes & Jewelry Division has a special program in which one Shoes or Jewelry Department Manager per division per year will be chosen to go through the regular District Manager Training Program and spend about a year as an Assistant Manager in Division 1 before being promoted to Shoes & Jewelry District Manager.

Pharmacy

OTC Manager. In addition to the Job Announcements criteria, ability to work the hours required for the position, ability to meet job requirements outlined in the job description, and any additional requirements set by the Region, District or Store, candidates must pass a stringent drug test if they have never worked in Pharmacy. Additional factors such as experience or, depending on the State, having a license or certification as a Pharmacy technician, may be considered. (See, e.g., the July 30, 2002 30(b)(6) deposition of David Perkins for a discussion of situational factors that go into determining requirements for OTC Manager positions.)

Staff Pharmacist. In addition to requirements established at Store, District and Regional levels and the requirements set out in the applicable job description, an individual must graduate from an accredited Pharmacy School and comply with the applicable State licensing and certification requirements in order to be promoted from Intern to Staff Pharmacist.

Assistant Pharmacy Manager. In Stores that have an Assistant Pharmacy Manager, candidates must be able to work the hours required and meet the requirements described in the job description, as well as any requirements established by the Pharmacy Manager, District Manager, or Regional Manager. A successful candidate must be willing and interested in becoming a Pharmacy Manager. Depending on the situation within the Store or District, other criteria could include the ability to take on additional responsibility, leadership skills, willingness to assume the Pharmacy Manager role within a reasonable area (although not required to "relocate," this reasonable area could mean different things to different District Managers), and the ability to handle stress. A successful candidate must have graduated from an accredited Pharmacy School and have complied with the applicable State licensing and certification requirements.

Pharmacy Manager. Depending on the business environment of the Store and District, criteria can include leadership skills, organizational skills, people skills, and accuracy skills. A successful candidate must have graduated from an accredited Pharmacy School and have complied with the applicable State licensing and certification requirements. The process for promotion to Pharmacy Manager differs from District to District. (See, e.g., the July 30, 2002 30(b)(6) deposition of David Perkins for a discussion of the process he uses, in which he allows, in certain circumstances, Rising Star Pharmacy Managers to conduct interviews of candidates.)

Optical:

Hourly Managers. There are no hourly manager positions in the Optical Division.

Vision Center Manager. In some circumstances, applicants must use a posting process to apply for Vision Center Manager. The criteria for selection varies. (See, e.g., the July 30, 2002 deposition of Sue Pozar for a discussion of some of these criteria and variances, such as knowledge of markdown procedures, lab procedures and the basic systems in place in the Vision Center, a sense of urgency in taking care of the customer, attendance, punctuality, previous management experience and ABO and NCLE certifications. In some instances, the Vision Center Manager may be required to be a licensed and/or certified Optician.

In Optical Regions 1 and 10, Vision Center Manager candidates must have completed the Optical Management Training Program. The following are some of the criteria for promotion to the Optical Management Training Program in these regions: (1) ability to relocate, (2) ABO/NCLE certified, licensed, or have a degree or previous management experience in management or retail, (3) above standard performance (3.5 evaluation), (4) successful interviews with three District Managers, (5) approval by Regional Manager/ Regional Personnel Manager, and (6) passing a drug test. (See, e.g., document Bates-labeled WMHO 504349 and WMHO 504350-51, discussing the process for promotion to the Optical Management Training Program in Optical Regions 1 and 10.)

Photo

Hourly Manager. In certain areas of the country, the Photo Division has added an additional Department-the Wireless Department. In those Stores with both Photo and Wireless Departments, there are two hourly manager positions: the Photo Department Manager and the Wireless Department Manager. Candidates for both positions should meet Job Announcements criteria, the job description requirements, be able to work the hours required for the position, and meet any additional criteria based on the needs of the Store, District or Region.

Photo Center Manager. In April 2002, the Photo Division implemented a Photo Division Management Training Program, which candidates for Photo Center Manager must complete. Before April 2002, completion of the Picture-Your-Future program was, under some circumstances, required for promotion to Photo Center Manager. Candidates must have completed the Photo Technician and Photo Specialist training. (See, e.g., document Bates labeled WMHO 552108-14, the Photo Center Training Program Guide.) In addition, candidates must be able to work the hours required for the position, must, in some circumstances, meet some relocation requirements, obtain the recommendation of the Photo Center Manager, score at least a meets expectations on his or her last evaluation, have no coachings in the last 12 months, and have been in his or her position for at least six months.

Sam's Club

Hourly Managers. Promotional requirements for positions such as Team Leader, Check-Out Supervisor and Audit Lead are set at Club level to meet the needs of each open position. Sam's Club Job Announcement guidelines suggest that candidates for these and other positions have: (1) at least six months in their current position, (2) no written Coaching for Improvements in the last 12 months, and (3) a Meets Expectations (standard) rating or above on the latest performance evaluation. (See document Bates labeled WMHO 384141 - 45, 8/17/98 Memo re: Sam's Club Job Announcements Program.) Individuals first generally must express interest in the position by signing up for an interview. In addition to the ability to meet the job requirements outlined in the applicable Job Description, which have changed over time, and work the hours required for the position, candidates must meet all additional criteria established for the position by the relevant decision maker. Programs such as Calling All Management Potential (CAMP) are also used to identify and develop associates, helping them gain skills that will increase their chances for promotion (See, e.g., document Bates labeled WMHO 716097 and WMHO 716108-13 for discussion of selection procedures and suggested criteria.)

Area Managers. Promotional requirements for the salaried positions of Front End Area Manager and Receiving Area Manager vary from Division to Division and from Region to Region, and may include such factors as: (1) expressed interest in the position, (2) ability to work the hours required for the job, (3) standard or above performance, especially in a Team Leader position, (4) no performance coachings in the past 12 months, (5) receiving General Manager's recommendation, (6) successful completion of an interview or interviews, and (7) any other requirements established by the Division or Region. In some areas, relevant Receiving or Front End work experience is required. Finally, associates generally must successfully complete either the New Receiving Area Coach Development Program or the New Front End Area Coach Development Program.

First in Line Trainees. In addition to meeting Divisional and Regional requirements for Manager in Training (see below), candidates for First in Line should possess the following qualifications: (1) Junior or senior in college, (2) minimum 90 days as a Sam's Club Associate, (3) full time student (9 hours per semester) with minimum 2.5 grade point average, (4) working minimum 16 hours/ week, (5) business-related or complimentary degree program, (6) demonstrated management/leadership behaviors, (7) able to relocate after college graduation, (8) ability to move up two levels, and (8) satisfactorily complete interview with General Manager. (See, e.g., documents Bates labeled WMHO 716096 and WMHO 716101-07; see also document Bates labeled WMHO 499851 - 52.)

Manager In Training. The selection process and criteria for choosing Sam's Club Management Trainees varies from Division to Division and from Region to Region. Some require team leader experience, rotation through specific or all Club areas, or a set minimum amount of time in a position. Regions may require candidates to sign up in the Club, receive a General Manager's recommendation, and/or complete a Candidate Survey. Some may require the ability to relocate, though the scope of "relocation" differs depending on the needs of the Region and/or Division. Directors of Operations and General Managers may use the CAMP program (see, e.g., information under Hourly Managers above) or the Rising Star program to identify talented associates and provide them with opportunities to develop skills relevant to Management Training positions. (See, e.g., documents Bates labeled WMHO 716095 and WMHO 716100 for discussion of programs and suggested criteria.) In some areas, experience as an Area Manager is preferred to be selected as a Management Trainee. Directors of Operations and General Managers can use criteria cited in Sam's Club Succession Development Planning to identify and develop Area Managers with: (1)no active coachings, (2) leadership qualities and capacity, (3) current evaluation of 3.0 or better, (4) minimum two years of service with company, (5) promotable minimum of two levels initially, (6) survey minimum of 70% or higher, and (7) specific targeted skills that apply across business: visionary, communication, leadership, and organization skills. Additional criteria for promotion to Manager in Training includes willingness to work the hours required for the job.

Assistant And Fresh Managers. Requirements for promotion to Sam's Club Assistant Manager or Fresh Manager are developed to meet the needs of individual Divisions, Regions and Clubs. Aside from satisfying requirements of relevant Divisions and Regions, candidates must demonstrate competency in all modules of the appropriate training program. (See documents Bates labeled WMHO 215787-216114 for Sam's Club New Assistant Coach Development Program and New Fresh Coach Development Program.) The number and content of modules, as well as the requirement to complete a written exam, for each module, has varied over time. Alternatively, individuals can be promoted to Assistant Manager/Fresh Manager after successful completion of the Sam's Club First In Line training program, which has featured demonstration of proficiency in each unit, completion of a competency exam, a New Coach Development assessment, an evaluation and approval by the Director of Operations, shared responsibility of an area of management for four months, completion of management New Coach Development class, and graduation from college. (See document labeled WMHO 499853-499856.) Promotion to Fresh Manager can also require prior Fresh Team Leader experience. (See document Bates labeled WMHO 716109.)

Certain other Company Divisions not specifically enumerated here have different structures than those discussed above as well as different procedures and criteria for promotion. (See, e.g., document Bates labeled WMHO 365688-365692 for guidelines applicable to Neighborhood Markets). Due to the organizational and geographic variances in guidelines for promotion to entry level management positions as set forth above, Wal-Mart continues to investigate this Interrogatory and will supplement its Answer as appropriate.

* * *

Promotional Guidelines

The following outlines the Management Selection Process for promotion. The criteria has been set to help clearly state the expectations that must be fulfilled in order to be promoted. All members of management must be on the current Rising Star List to be considered for any promotion.

Associate to Assistant Manager

- Evaluation of 3.5 or higher
- 1 year in present hourly supervisor position
- 1 Year total experience
- Department not classified as High Shrink
- Be 100% current on CBL's
- Willing to relocate

Assistant to Co-Manager

- Evaluation of 3.5 or above.
- 1 yr. in current store
- 2 yrs total experience
- Total store not classified as High Shrink
- 100% up to date on CBL's
- Willing to relocate
    - Completed rotation in store of all areas: Hardlines, Softlines, Homelines, Receiving, Offices/Front End, and Food*
    - Be 100% current on Training Matrix: Both Distance Learning and Assistant Videos.

Assistant to Small Store Manager (65,000sqft. and less)

- Evaluation of 3.5 or above
- 1 yr. in current store
- 2 years of total experience

- Total store not classified as High Shrink
- 100% up to date on CBL's
- Willing to relocate
- Completed rotation in store of all areas: Hardlines Softlines Homelines, Receiving, Offices/Front End and Food*
- Be 100% current on Training Matrix: Both Distance Learning and Assistant Videos

Co-Manager To Store Manager

- Evaluation of 3.5 or above
- 1 yr./ 18months in position*
- A six-month exception will be made with Co-Managers who have previous Store Manager experience.
- Total store not classified as High Shrink
- 100% up to date on CBL"s
- Willing to relocate
- Completed rotation in store of all areas: General Merchandise and Food*
- A survey will be administered with a positive outcome expected.

Small Store Manager (65,000sqft. and less) to Co-Manager

- Evaluations of 3.5 or above
- 2 years in Current Store
- Total store not classified as High Shrink
- Store not recognized as high UPI
- 100% up to date on CBL's
- Willing to relocate

Small Store Manager (65,000sqft. and less) to Larger Store

- Evaluation of 3.5 or above

- 2 years in Current Store
- Total store not classified as High Shrink
- Store not recognized as high UPI
- 100% on CBL's
- Willing to relocate

*SuperCenter only.

This provides performance incentive to candidates to be below high-shrink guidelines, exceptions to this are approved by Senior VP.

 Each store allows for one "resident assistant" as described by corporate guidelines. Any exception must be approved by Senior VP.

Last Updated: March 19, 2001

WAL★MART

WAL-MART
STORES, INC.
CORPORATE OFFICES
702 S.W. 8TH STREET
BENTONVILLE, AR
72716

To: RVPs/RPMs
From: Andy Wilson
Date: November 20, 2000
Subject: Management Selection Process

cc. Tom Coughlin
Don Harris
Charlyn Jerrells
Porter
Divisionals
People Directors
District Managers

Promotional Guidelines

The following outlines the Management Selection Process for promotion. The criteria has been set to help clearly state the expectations that must be fulfilled in order to be promoted. All members of management must be on the current Rising Star List to be considered for any promotion.

Associate to Assistant Manager Trainee

Evaluation of 3.5 or above
1 year in present hourly supervisor position
1 year total experience in company
Department not classified as High Shrink
Be 100% current on CBLs
Willing to relocate

First In Line Associate to Assistant Manager

Evaluation of 3.5 or above
1 year total experience in company
Completion of all FIL training
Be 100% current on CBLs
Willing to relocate

Assistant Manager to Co-Manager

Evaluation of 3.5 or above
Must be on Rising Star List
1 year in current store
2 years total experience
Total store not classified as High Shrink
Be 100% current on CBLs
Willing to relocate
Completed rotation in all areas of store: Hardlines, Softlines, Homelines, Receiving, Offices/Front End, and Food*
Be 100% current on Training

Assistant Manager to Small Store Manager (60,000 sq. ft. and less)

Evaluation of 3.5 or above
Must be on Rising Star List
1 year in current store
2 years of total experience
Total store not classified as High Shrink
Be 100% current on CBLs
Willing to relocate
Completed rotation in all areas of store: Hardlines, Softlines, Homelines, Receiving, Offices/Front End, and Food*
Be 100% current on Training
A survey will be administered with a positive outcome expected.

Co-Manager to Store Manager

Evaluation of 3.5 or above
Must be on Rising Star List
1 year in position - Wal-Mart Stores
18 months in position – SuperCenter

> A six-month exception will be made with Co-Managers who have previous Store Manager experience.

Total store not classified as High Shrink
Be 100% current on CBLs
Willing to relocate
Completed rotation in store of all areas: General Merchandise and Food*
A survey will be administered with a positive outcome expected.

Small Store Manager (60,000 sq. ft. and less) to Co-Manager

Evaluation of 3.5 or above
Must be on Rising Star List
2 years in current store
Total store not classified as High Shrink
Total store not classified as High UPI
Be 100% current on CBLs
Willing to relocate

Small Store Manager (60,000 sq. ft. and less) to Larger Store

Evaluation of 3.5 or above
Must be on Rising Star List
2 years in current store
Total store not classified as High Shrink
Total store not classified as High UPI
Be 100% current on CBLs
Willing to relocate

Store Manager to District Manager

Evaluation of 3.5 or above
Must be on Rising Star List
2 years in current store as a Store Manager
Total store not classified as High Shrink
Total store not classified as High UPI
Interviewed in Bentonville, Arkansas (Home Office) and approved
Be 100% current on CBLs

Have attended Walton Food Institute

* SuperCenter only

 This provides performance incentive to candidates to be below high shrink guidelines, exceptions to this are approved by Senior VP.

 Each store allows for one "resident assistant" as described by corporate guidelines. Any exception must be approved by Senior VP.

RETAIL BENCHMARKS ON DIVERSITY

March 1999 June 2000

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

- Wal-Mart's representation of women and minorities has steadily improved over the last five years:
  - Women represented in management has increased from 27.1% to 32.4%, a 19.5% increase.
  - Minority management increased to 14.8% from 11.1% in this same period, a 33.6% increase.
- While we have continued to improve, we are behind other selected retailers and industry averages.

(Note: these numbers are based on EEO-1 reports for 1993 and 1998.)

BENCHMARKING

- We requested a data exchange with 15 companies of which 5 have responded

- Companies reporting are:
  - Comp USA – Will know Monday
  - Dayton Hudson – will Know Monday
  - Home Depot – Received new 5/12
  - May Department Stores – Will Know Monday
  - Toys-R-Us – will Know Monday

- Those declining or not responding are:
  - ~~Circuit City~~ ✓ – Not interested
  - ~~Costco~~ Unable to release
  - ~~Dollar General~~ – No Interest last year
  - ~~Dollar Tree~~ – Unable to release
  - ~~K-Mart~~ No Interest last year
  - ~~Office Depot~~ – NO INTEREST LAST YEAR.
  - Sears – Will Know Monday
  - ~~Service Merchandise~~ – No Answer
  - ~~Shopko~~ – NO INTEREST last year
  - Montgomery Ward – Will Know Monday
  - – BJ's → Will Know Monday

- We also utilized the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission report entitled "Job Patterns for Minorities and Women in Private Industry – 1997" to compare U.S. and retail industry workforces

FINDINGS: TOTAL EMPLOYMENT (Pg. 4)

62.6%

- Of those companies reporting, Wal-Mart is among the highest in women as a per cent of the total company workforce ([redacted]).

8

- Retail and the U.S. workforce only report women at 55.7% and 47.[illegible]% respectively.

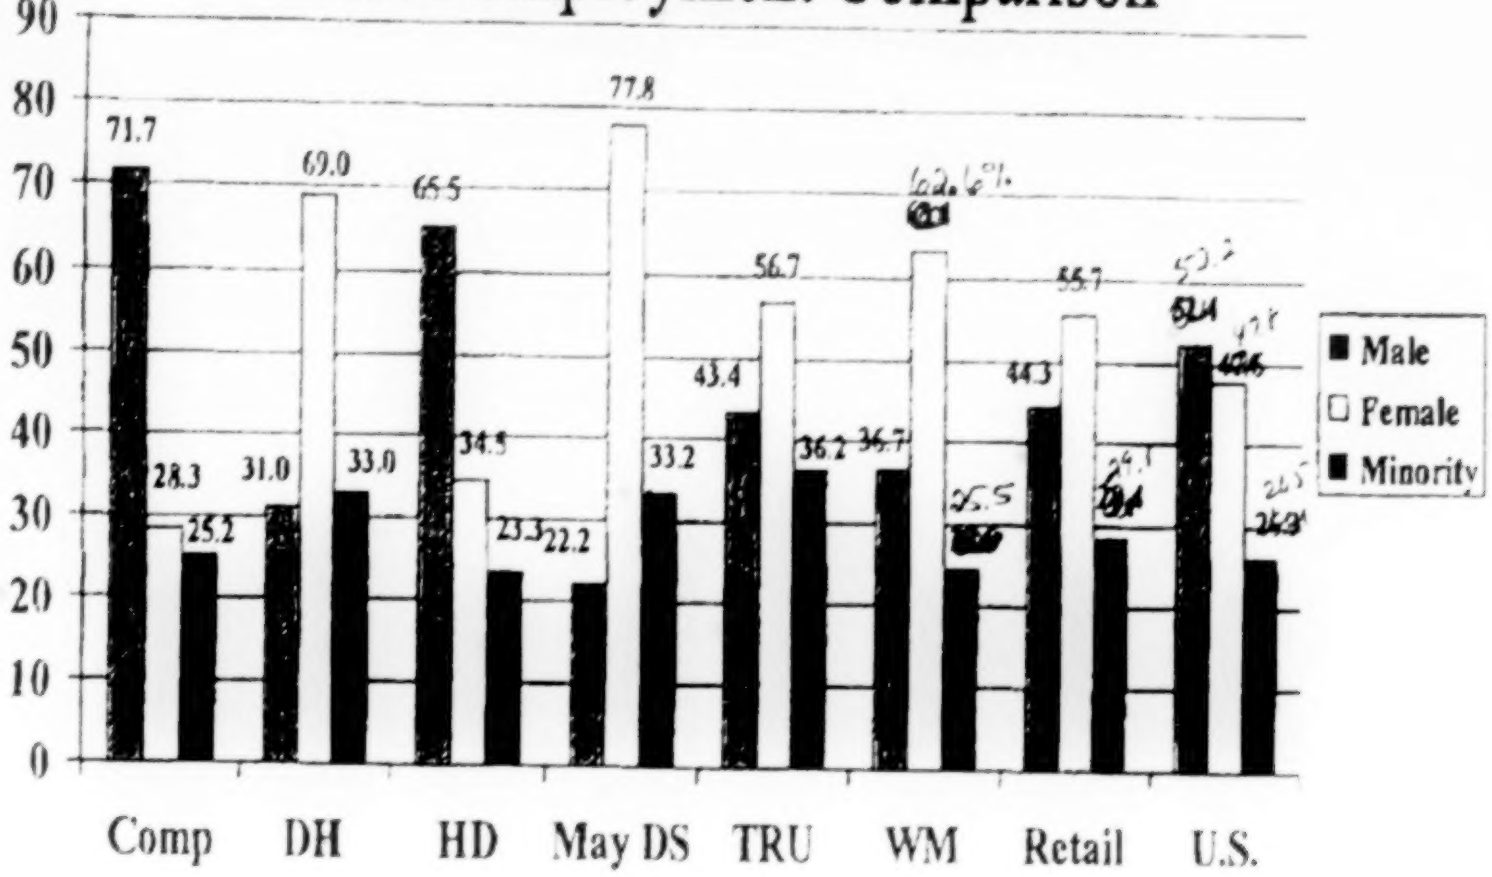
28.1 26.5

- Retail and the U.S. workforce report minorities at [illegible]% and 2[illegible]% respectively.

25.5%

- Wal-Mart is behind the retail industry and U.S. workforce at [redacted] minority in the company workforce

Total Employment Comparison



FINDINGS: OFFICIALS & MANAGERS (Pg. 6)

- Wal-Mart's women in management per cent (32.4%) is significantly behind several of the other retailers reporting (43.2% to 65.3%). Home Depot and Comp USA are lower at 18.7% and 26.2%.
- It should be noted, however, that department stores traditionally include the department manager category as officials and managers (i.e., Dayton Hudson and May Department Stores).
- Our Wal-Mart per cent of women trails both the retail industry and workforce averages (32.4% versus 38.6% and 33.9%).
- Our minority management representation (14.8%) is better than the U.S. workforce average (12.9%). We trail, however, both the retail average and the other reporting companies.

Officials and Managers Comparison

As of 1/31/99	Dept Mgrs	Mgmt w/o Dept Mgrs	Mgmt w/Dept Mgrs
Male	22.50%	65.21%	40.58%
Female	77.50%	34.79%	59.42%
Minority	17.99%	14.02%	16.31%

Retail Diversity Comparison

	Year	Employee Total						Officials and Managers
		Male		Female		Minority		Male		Female		Black		Hispanic		Other		Minority Total
		#	%	#	%	#	%	#	%	#	%	#	%	#	%	#	%	#	%
Comp USA	1998	12,287	71.66%	4,860	28.34%	4,312	25.15%	1,704	73.80%	605	26.20%	156	6.76%	134	5.80%	85	3.68%	375	16.24%
Dayton Hudson	1997	71,300	31.00%	158,700	69.00%	75,900	33.00%		47.00%		53.00%								18.00%
Home Depot	1998	73,015	65.48%	38,488	34.52%	25,998	23.32%	4,872	81.27%	1,123	18.73%	582	9.71%	356	5.94%	90	1.50%	1,028	17.15%
May Department Stores Company	1997	26,502	22.20%	92,875	77.80%	39,633	33.20%	3,688	34.70%	6,940	65.30%	829	7.80%	478	2.50%	287	2.70%	1,584	14.90%
Toys "R" Us	1996	18,795	43.35%	24,560	56.65%	15,686	36.18%	3,035	56.79%	2,309	43.21%	525	9.82%	317	5.93%	184	3.44%	1,026	19.20%
Wal-Mart	1997	294,959	36.69%	508,864	63.31%	197,448	24.56%	23,692	67.57%	11,373	32.43%	2,748	7.83%	1,887	5.38%	568	1.62%	5,202	14.84%
Retail Industry	1997	3,060,598	44.33%	3,844,014	55.67%	1,957,877	28.36%	373,026	61.39%	234,603	38.61%	43,823	7.21%	33,303	5.48%	14,263	2.35%	91,389	15.04%
U.S. Workforce	1997	25,261,487	52.31%	23,033,522	47.69%	12,728,160	26.35%	2,525,599	66.10%	1,301,438	33.90%	317,824	8.30%	211,497	5.52%	153,982	4.02%	683,303	17.85%

Coleman Peterson
Senior Vice President, People Group

I was in a store recently and ran into a seven-year associate. She informed me that she was leaving Wal-Mart to go to work for a university. When I asked her why she was leaving the company, her response was that she wanted a job with more of a sense of purpose, and with less stress.

She had to make a decision.

One of the best People talents in the industry is an Hispanic gentleman who is currently in Chicago. He won't come to Northwest Arkansas because he "can't see himself" here. There is another great talent who is an African American who lives in Wisconsin who "can't see himself" here. We have a challenge in getting good talent to believe that they can find balance and success in the Home Office.

For the last three years, we've exceeded our own diversity goals, but are still 200 basis points behind the industry. We're behind the rest of the world.

The Diversity reporting will change to reflect a comparison to the "real world", not just to what our own goals were.

MINUTES OF MEETING OF THE COMPENSATION AND NOMINATING COMMITTEE OF THE BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF WAL-MART STORES, INC.

March 4, 1999

A meeting of the Compensation and Nominating Committee (the "Committee") of the Board of Directors of Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.(the "Company") was held on March 4, 1999, beginning at 8:00 a.m. CST in the Training Room at Distribution Center #6059 located in Olney, Illinois.

Committee members present:	Frederick S. Humphries Jose Villarreal John Walton
Committee members present by telephone:	John Cooper, Jr.
Others present:	Ann Curry Cato Fred Disch Coleman Peterson Rob Walton *

* Present for a portion of the meeting only.

The meeting was called to order by John Walton, acting Chairman of the Committee. Ann Curry Cato acted as Secretary for the meeting. Upon motion duly made and seconded, the Committee unanimously approved the minutes of the Committee meetings held on November 12, 1998, and January 14, 1999.

* * *

[REDACTED]

* * *

Diversity Report

Coleman Peterson led the discussion on diversity. Comparing fourth quarter Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1999 and fourth quarter Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1998, we exceeded total Company goals in women and minority representation by 0.37% and 1.96% respectively. Female representation increased from 33.84% in Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1998 to 34.79% in Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1999. Minority representation increased from 13.51% in Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1998 to 14.02% Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1999. The breakdown of minority areas is as follows: Black 6.61% to 6.77%, Hispanic 5.03% to 5.17%, Asian 1.45% to 1.60%, Indian 0.41% to 0.48%. These numbers are still reflect the Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1998 year-end reclassification of management pharmacy associates in the specialty division to hourly status, of which a large number were women. Results for fourth quarter Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1999, show increases in female representation and flat performance in minority representation when compared to third quarter year to date Fiscal Year Ending January 31, 1999. Female representation increased from 34.48% to 34.79%. Minority representation changed from 14.04% to 14.02%.

Wal-Mart's representation of women and minorities has steadily improved over the last five years. Women represented in management has increased from 27.1% to 32.4% over the last five years, a 19.5 % increase. Minority management increased to 14.8% from 11.1% in this same period, a 33.6% increase. While Wal-Mart has continued to improve, we are behind other selected retailers and industry averages. We requested a data exchange with fifteen companies of which five have responded, Comp USA, Dayton Hudson, Home Depot, May Department Stores, and Toys-R-Us. We also utilized the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission report entitled "Job Patterns for Minorities and Women in Private Industry – 1997" to compare U.S. and retail industry workforces. Of those companies reporting, Wal-Mart is among the highest in women as a percent of the total company workforce at 63.4%. Retail and the U.S. workforce only report women at 55.7% and 47.6% respectively. Retail and U.S. workforce report minorities at 28.4% and 26.3% respectively. Wal-Mart is behind the retail industry and U.S. workforce at 24.6% minority in the company workforce.

Wal-Mart's women in management percent of 32.4% is significantly behind several of the other retailers reporting between 43.2% and 65.3%. Home Depot and Comp USA are lower at 18.7% and 26.2% respectively. Department stores traditionally include the department manager category as officials and managers (i.e., Dayton Hudson and May Department Stores). The Wal-Mart percent of women (32.4%) trails both the retail industry of 38.6% and workforce averages of 33.9%. Wal-Mart's minority management representation of 14.8% is better than the U.S. workforce average of 12.9%. Wal-Mart trails both the retail average and the other reporting companies.

There being no further business to come before the meeting, it was adjourned at 1 1:00 a.m.

Dated this Fourth Day of March, 1999.

Ann Curry Cato
Acting Secretary
Compensation and Nominating Committee

APPROVED:

John Walton, Acting Committee Chairperson

WAL-MART STORES
BENTONVILLE, AR

MEMORANDUM

CONFIDENTIAL

TO:	Executive Committee Division Heads	CC: People Directors
FROM:	Cole Peterson
DATE:	February 13, 2001
REF:	2000 Catalyst Census of Women Corporate Officers and Top Earners

Attached is the Catalyst Census of Women Corporate Officers and Top Earners. This report, first published in 1996, determines and distributes facts about women in top positions within the Fortune 500 Companies. The information provided in the report is based on information through March 31, 2000.

The report allows Wal-Mart to take a look at our progress in promoting high talent female associates to Officer level. Although Wal-Mart has made improvements over the last five years in this endeavor, we are still behind both the Fortune 500 and General Merchandisers in the development of women into Corporate Officers.

As you begin to prepare your Spring People Asset Review, this report should be a reminder that we should be identifying, developing and promoting high potential females in all areas of our business. With our continued efforts, Wal-Mart will be able to attract and retain the talent necessary to meet our strategic objectives.

Executive Summary of the 2000 Catalyst Census of Women Corporate Officers and Top Earners

The Catalyst Census of Women Corporate Officers and Top Earners was first published in 1996 to determine and distribute facts about women in top positions within Fortune 500 Companies. The goal of Catalyst was to publish the comparative number of women corporate officers and top earners among the Fortune 500, "because in business, what gets measures gets done." The information provided is based on information through March 31, 2000.

Women Corporate Officers

- The average percent of women corporate officers of the Fortune 500 was 12.5%, up from 8.7% in 1995. The number is expected to grow to 16.50% in 2005 and 20.10% in 2010.
- The average percent of women corporate officers in the reporting "General Merchandisers and "Wholesalers" was 15.4% and 10.4% respectively
- Ninety companies have no women corporate officers 18%
- Fifty companies, including Target, Gap, JC Penney's and the Limited, have at least 25% women corporate officers.
- Sixteen companies, including BJ's Wholesale Club and Southwest Airlines, have at least 33.3% women corporate officers.
- Wal-Mart has 10% women corporate officers.

Women of Color

- Women of color make up 1.3% of all officers and 10.3% of all women corporate officers within the Fortune 500
- At Wal-Mart, women of color make up 1.4% of all officers and 13.6% of all women officers.

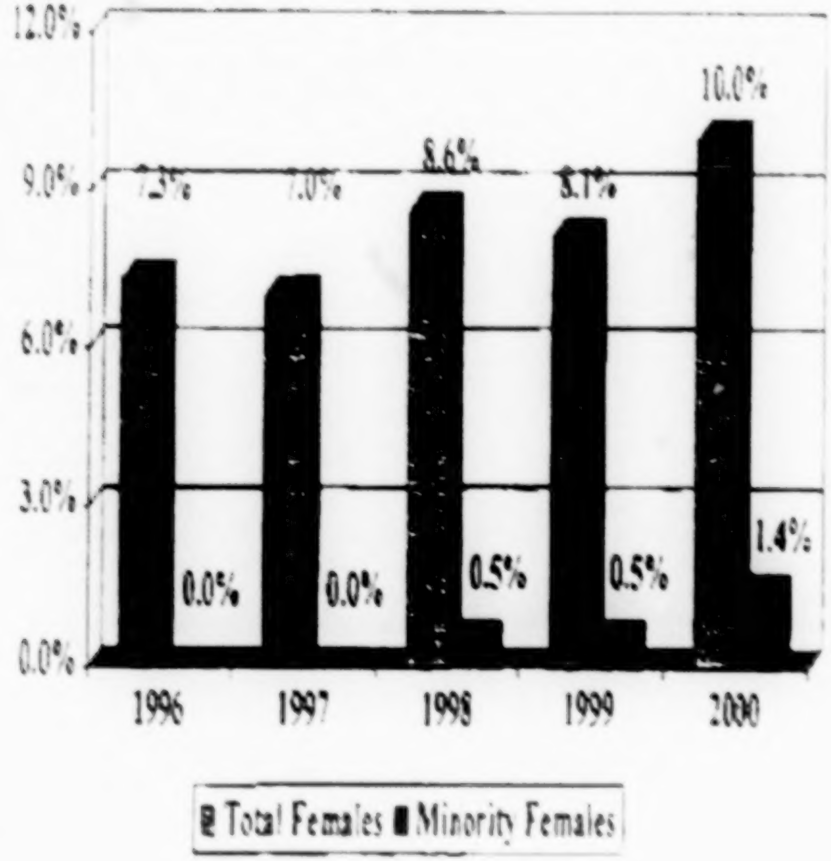
Positions and Titles

- Only 7.3% of the women corporate officers were in line positions (those with P&L or direct client responsibilities). This number has increased from 5.3% in 1995.
- 59% of Wal-Mart's women corporate officers hold line positions.
- Only 6.2% of the women corporate officers held "clout titles" such as CEO, Chairman, Vice Chairman, President, COO, Senior Executive Vice President and Executive Vice President.
- Ninety-three women, or 4.1%, were among the most highly compensated officers, up from 1.2% in 1995.
- Wal-Mart reported no women in the "clout title" or "most highly compensated officers" categories.

Summary

Wal-Mart is behind both the Fortune 500 and General Merchandisers in the development of women into Corporate Officers. Over the past five years, the number of female officers has increased from 7.3% to 10.00%. This coming year, Wal-Mart will show improvement in the "clout title" category with the promotion of Celia Swanson to Executive Vice President. However, there needs to be continued focus on the identification and development of our female associates in order to continue to attract and retain the talent necessary to meet our strategic objectives.

History of Wal-Mart's Female Corporate Officers*



*Reporting is through March 31st of each year

FROM: susan smith DATE: Mon May 13 14:35:40 1996 SUB: Women in Leadershi

---

The regular meeting of Women in Leadership on May 2 was well attended. Thanks to all who took time out of their schedule to be there. Congratulation to Sharon Garmon on her move to RPM in Warehouse Adm.

Charlyn Jarrells and Debbie Davis Campbell reported on the Division 07 project. The turnover survey results were received from Paragon.

There were no gender-related issues identified. The results were given to Mike Duke and John Bell. Charlyn mentioned that there was an impression that career advancement was dependent on relocation and this impression discouraged many women. It was agreed this impression is a general one and anything that can be done to dispel it in the divisions where it does not apply would be good.

On the subject of special speakers, it has been pointed out that there is a perception of these events as a "woman thing". It was agreed that members of the group need to discuss the events in their departmental meetings and explain that all associates are welcome. A special effort should be made to invite all Division Heads. The suggestion was made that perhaps it would be better to leave the "sponsored by Women in Leadership" off the marketing for these events.

A discussion on the subject of mentoring was sparked by Brenda Hester's report. A summary of the results of the benchmarking trip to J C Penney was given. The mentoring program there is quite formalized. It is for management in the home office only. The program our mentoring team has developed would eventually be available to all associates. Their goal is to have it ready for formal proposal by July 1. It would be rolled out in 4 stages. Stage 1 would be a test in Logistics International.

Kim Richardson pointed out that there is a sponsorship program in place in the stores that is intended to accomplish many of the objectives of the proposed mentoring program. It was suggested that the success of the existing program could be measured by looking at turnover rates, exit interviews and 90-day evaluations in stores using the sponsorship program versus stores that are not using it.

Debbie Davis Campbell remarked that executives would probably be more interested in the development of long term associates and reduction of turnover after 2 years.

Brenda asked that anyone who is genuinely interested in helping with this project please get in contact with her.

Sharon Garmon discussed briefly the articles which had been sent out. Members were encouraged to share this kind of information with associates in their department.

In attendance were: Chelle Moore (for Celia Swanson), Maureen Walters, Lisa Allen, Renee Bell, Jan Hudgins, Debbie Kocks, Brenda Hester, Lisa Cowden, Kim Richardson, Jill Wesbecher, Linda Tipton, Sharon Garmon, Charlyn Jarrells, Debbie Davis Campbell, Sharon Stewart

Diversity Ideas

- Review People P&L: need to ensure we have the right mix of ethnicity as well as gender when opening a new store. We have access to People P&L prior to store opening to look at local community demographics. Semm to have a right mix of associates but not in management.
- Take existing minority management and place them on the recruiting team.
- College internships (12 weeks program) look for diversity in this program so that when a person graduates from school he or she will have a concept of how Wal-Mart works and have less of a chance of failing on the Management Training program.
- Diversity in the Co-Manager ranks needs to be a DM focus point for 2002.
- Have existing DM's and Store Managers of diverse backgrounds brainstorm on what they did to get into their position (perhaps Gwen Cannon.)
- Find someone to mentor different than yourself!
- It was a wonderful idea to have DM's and Regionals be mentors for women. What are we actually doing to mentor them? Is there a plan laid out for the future with real expectations that are realistic where they know and feel the changes taking place? We say quite freely that we have a mentor or we are mentoring someone, but what tools can I get from that?

- Set realistic goals and guidelines for every district, and FOLLOW THEM! This should be completed and given to the DM's in Kansas City.
- The importance of this has to be stressed to the DM's when surfacing candidates. This should be a key area in their evaluations.
- College recruiting needs to know what we are looking for so we meet our goals.
- Attend college recruiting at institutes that have a high minority base.
- Look for institutions in our areas that have a high minority base and personally recruit from those areas.
- We could attract more female management if we could reduce the guidelines on relocation.
- Look at the Assistant Managers schedule and have them close once a week instead of two (of course this would apply to all management.)
- Female associates lack the self-confidence in their ability to do more with our company. They need more mentoring and they do need more time developing their strengths.
- Need training on how to communicate with people that are different than them and how to actively recruit diverse candidates.
- Educate them on where we were in the past as a company and where we need to go and what our goals are.
- Involvement in recruiting at all female colleges.
- Better utilize the Resident Assistant Program.

- In addition to hiring diversity, we also need to work at retention. This goes hand in hand.
- Ask DM's that are struggling with Diversity numbers to develop a plan of action for FYE 03.
- Discuss recruiting/retention of diversity at the Regional Meeting.
- Increase female diversity by utilizing Resident Assistant Program.

WAL★MART

WAL★MART STORES, INC.
CORPORATE OFFICES
702 S.W. 8TH STREET
BENTONVILLE, AR 72716
PHONE (501) 273-4000

DANNY CARTER
DISTRICT
MANAGER,
DISTRICT #42
(707) 586-2683

CHERYL WILLS
DISTRICT ASSISTANT
4625 REDWOOD DRIVE
ROHNERT PARK,CA 94928

Upon entering the Management Training Program for Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., I hereby understand that I must be willing to transfer to any location within the Wal-Mart trading area, within the United States. I also understand that at the completion of my training program I will be asked to transfer to any Wal-Mart location where there is an opening for an Assistant Manager.

I, ______________________ fully understand and agree with the above statement concerning management transfers as it relates to the Wal-Mart Management Program.

Signature: ______________________

Date: ______________________

Witness Signature: ______________________

Witness Name Printed: ______________________

Date: ______________________

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF MARK BENDICK, JR., Ph.D. IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

Note: This Declaration is identical to my report titled "The Representation of Women in Store Management at Wal-Mart Stores, Inc." (January 6, 2003), (Exhibit 2 to my deposition of March 5, 2003), except that it has been placed in declaration form, and 10 corrections have been made. These 10 corrections are those listed in my memorandum to Joseph Sellers, Esq., dated February 22, 2003 (exhibit 3 to my deposition of March 5, 2003).

Table of Contents

I. Introduction 2

II. Basic Facts About Wal-Mart Employment 5

III. Benchmarking Wal-Mart Against Comparator Companies................................ 6

IV. Wal-Mart's Shortfall of Women in Store Management in 1999........................ 15

V. Is this Shortfall Attributable to Differences in Reporting?......................... 17

VI. Consistency of Shortfall Nationwide..... 21

VII. Similar Shortfalls in Wal-Mart's Non-Store Establishments 23

VIII. Persistence of Shortfall, 1975-2002 25

IX. A Estimate of Shortfall Based on Internal Workforce 27

X. Wal-Mart's Management Centralization...29

XI. Summary of Findings and Conclusions 30

Attachments A–M..34

I. Introduction

1. I am a principal in Bendick and Egan Economic Consultants, Inc., located at 4411 Westover Place, NW, Washington, D.C. 20016. I earned a Ph.D. in economics from the University of Wisconsin in 1975 and have engaged in the full-time practice of economics, specializing in employment and related issues, for approximately 30 years. I am the author, co-author, or editor of more than 100 pieces of scholarly research, including books, monographs, articles in refereed journals, and Congressional testimony. My resume is provided as Attachment A to this report.

2. Since 1980, my professional activities have included litigation on employment discrimination, including analysis of the availability of job-seekers in different demographic groups; processes for recruiting, hiring, training, assigning, evaluating, compensating, promoting, and discharging employees; voluntary and involuntary initiatives to manage demographically-diverse workforces; and monetary damages associated with denial or diminution of employment opportunities. Attachment B to this report lists the approximately 114 cases in which I have participated, representing both employers and employees. That list indicates that my expert testimony has been accepted in 14 federal courts and 7 state courts or administrative tribunals.

3. In the case of Dukes et al. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc., I was requested by plaintiffs' counsel to analyze the employment of women among employees, especially in-store management employees, at Wal-Mart, Inc.[1]

4. In preparing the analyses presented in this report, I have utilized modes of analysis, computational procedures, information sources, and standards of care identical to or comparable to those I use throughout my scholarly research, and I apply theories, models, concepts, reasoning, and assumptions that command general acceptance among my professional peers. I hold the opinions I present in this report to a reasonable degree of scientific certainty.

---

[1] Unless otherwise noted, throughout this report, the phrase "Wal-Mart" refers to the entire firm Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. rather than the subset of the firm's retail establishments that operate under the Wal-Mart brand.

5. For my work in this case, I am being compensated at the rate of $225 per hour, plus out-of-pocket expenses.

6. In part, the present report represents an updated, refined version of my earlier report entitled The Representation of Women among Managers at Wal-Mart: A Preliminary Analysis Based on EEO-1 Data (June 2001). As in that previous report, in preparing the present report, I have relied on information available as of the date of this report. If at a future date this information is refined, corrected, or supplemented, I would like the opportunity to modify this report to reflect this additional information.

7. In preparing my analysis, I have reviewed the information sources listed in Attachment C to this report.

8. The core of the analysis presented in this report involves "EEO-1" data collected by the federal Equal Employment Opportunity Commission annually from large private employers. This mandatory survey covers all private sector establishments with 100 or more employees and documents the employment representation of different demographic groups, such as women, among 43 million employees in nearly 200,000 workplaces nationwide. As essentially a census of workers employed by the nation's largest firms, it is a widely used, authoritative source of information on employment patterns from which results are published annually by the EEOC.[2] EEO-

---

[2] For general background on EEO-1 data, see the instructions, reporting form, and latest published data from this reporting system at www.eeoc.gov. See also Marc Bendick, Jr., Using EEO-1 Data to Analyze Allegations of Employment Discrimination, A Presentation to the Section on Labor and Em-

1 data are widely used by the EEOC and other EEO enforcement agencies to analyze employers' compliance with anti-discrimination laws, by researchers and public policy analysts to measure demographic patterns in the U.S. labor market, and by employers reviewing their employment practices and developing affirmative action or workforce diversity management initiatives.

9. At the time this report was prepared, the latest EEO-1 data released by the EEOC for use outside the Agency is for the year 2000, and only partial data has been released for that year.[3] Therefore, my primary focus for detailed analysis is the most recent year for which apparently complete data has been released, 1999.

II. Basic Facts about Wal-Mart Employment

10. Attachment D presents some basic facts about the Wal-Mart work force based on EEO-1 data for 2000.[4] As is well known, Wal-Mart is a very large firm – in fact, the largest private employer in ployment Law, American Bar Association Annual Meeting, New York, July 10, 2000, at www.bendickegan.com.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[3] In releasing EEO-1 data for 2000, it appears that the EEOC deleted more data than it had deleted in releasing comparable data for 1999 and earlier years. In particular, a record for Wal-Mart's headquarters establishment was included in 1999 but not in 2000. Similarly, in 1999, separate records were provided for 3,026 Wal-Mart establishments but in 2000, for only 764 establishments.

[4] This attachment is based on data from the firm's company-wide "consolidated record," which appears to be complete for 2000, even if records for individual establishments are not.

the nation. According to the first table in Attachment D, in its EEO-1 data for 2000, the company reported 967,247 employees, and that figure was growing at an annual rate of 8.3 per cent. Not surprisingly for a retail firm, Wal-Mart's largest category of workers is Sales Workers accounting for 58.0 percent of all employees in 2000.

11. The firm's 43,489 managers in 2000 represented 4.5 percent of all its employees. EEO-1 data do not subdivide this category, so it is not possible to distinguish, for example, between senior executives and middle managers or, within stores, between store managers and assistant store managers. Hence, the present analysis examines only the representation of women among managers as a group, as Wal-Mart as defined them in filing its EEO-1 reports. It is my understanding that in store employees reported as in-store managers in Wal-Mart's EEO-1 data consist of salaried employees typically bearing the job titles of store manager, co-manager, or assistant manager.[5]

12. Attachment D also reveals that, in 2000, Wal-Mart employed 600,569 women company-wide, constituting 62.1 percent of its total work force. Within this total, women accounted for 63.4 percent of the firm's non-managerial employees and 33.6 percent of its managers.

---

[5] Unless otherwise noted, throughout this document, phrases such as "store managers" and "store management" refer to all in-store employees holding any of these titles, not just the one person within each store holding the title "store manager."

Wal-Mart's inclusion of assistant managers in the EEO-1 manager category and exclusion of support managers from that category is confirmed by the company in Defendant's Answers and Objections to Plaintiffs' Second Set of Interrogatories, September 13, 2002, Interrogatories 36 and 37.

III. Benchmarking Wal-Mart Against Comparator Companies

13. The analysis in this report involves "benchmarking" – that is, comparing – employment patterns in Wal-Mart to those of comparable large retail firms. The practice of benchmarking a company's performance against those of similar firms is a standard management technique used throughout the private sector, not only with respect to employment matters but also with respect to a variety of financial and operational concerns.[6] Applying this procedure to human resource management, companies very commonly participate in multi-firm salary information pools, read industry-wide surveys on fringe benefits, and study and adopt "best practices" in human resource management based on practices successfully implemented by other firms. Comparing

---

[6] In one example of retail benchmarking selected almost at random, the website www.bizstatsw.com/realworld.htm reports three common measures of retail operations – average sales per square foot, gross profit margins, and inventory turnover – for Wal-Mart and other large retail chains such as Costco, Home Depot, and Nordstrom.

In another example also encountered almost at random, The Wall Street Journal (February 19, 2002), page A-2, reported findings from a nationwide study of consumer satisfaction conducted by the University of Michigan and the American Society for Quality. The article compared Wal-Mart's Stores scores in this study to Target discount stores, Target department stores, Nordstrom, Sears, Dillard's, JC Penney, May Department Stores, AAFES (Army and Air Force post exchanges), Kmart, and Federated Department Stores. It compared Sam's Club to Costco, Lowe's, and Home Depot.

the representation of different demographic groups in their own workforce to that in the workforces of comparator firms is a very common way for firms to estimate the expected representation of that group among its own employees, for example in preparing affirmative action plans or developing workforce diversity management initiatives.

14. Like virtually all large American corporations, Wal-Mart commonly engages benchmarking its human resource management practices and outcomes. In a deposition taken for this case, Mr. Coleman Peterson, Wal-Mart's Executive Vice President-People Division, described Wal-Mart's activities as follows:[7]

> Best practices, in my definition, . . . means to make efforts to really understand what practices, be they in finance or information systems or logistics or human resources, understanding what is it that people are doing in their businesses that seem to be successful processes of programs . . . We haven't done a benchmark at one of these companies and immediately run back and say hey, that's something we'll want to go and do. I do think what is helpful is to kind of reaffirm the areas of focus that they are working on, the challenges they are facing, things of that nature, are things that kind of reinforce. Are we on the right track? Are we looking at the right things? Are we working on the right > things? . . . It's kind of like running a race, okay. You look to the left or the right and just kind of have a feel for, you know, where other people are. It kind of encourages you to run faster . . . [Benchmarking] can be used interchangeably with the term best practices.

---

[7] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 49 09:07 24 – p. 50 09:07 4; p. 52 09:10 12-20; p. 104 10:38 6-9, p.54 09:12 3-4; italics added.

15. Continuing the description just quoted, Mr. Peterson identified large, nationwide retail chains as key comparators for Wal-Mart benchmarking, specifically mentioning Target, JC Penney, Home Depot, and Kmart as companies with which Wal-Mart has had discussions concerning employment best practices.[8] Mr. Peterson also discussed a presentation he had made to Wal-Mart's Board of Directors on August 15-16, 2001 that included an analysis of profit per employee in which Wal-Mart compared itself against 11 other large retail chains: Home Depot, Costco, Lowe's, Gap, Dollar General, Target, Sears Roebuck, Nordstrom, Dillard's, Kmart, and JC Penny.[9] Mr. Peterson also described an effort by Wal-Mart in 2000 to initiate an exchange of information on the demographic characteristics of their workforces among 15 of the largest retailers in the nation: Comp USA, Dayton Hudson, Home Depot, May Department Stores, Toys-R-Us, Circuit City, Costco, Dollar General, Dollar Tree, Kmart, Office Depot, Sears, Service Merchandise, Shopko, and Montgomery Ward.[10] In reporting to the Compensa-

---

[8] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 51, 09:09 8-20.

[9] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 76, 09:53 1 – 09:57 9; Exhibit 4 to that deposition, p. 9.

[10] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 104 10:38 10-p. 105 10:39 13; Exhibit 6 to that deposition, tion and Nominating Committee of the Wal-Mart Board on March 4, 1999, Mr. Coleman compared the demographic characteristic of the Wal-Mart workforce to that of all workers in the U.S. labor force and all workers in the retail industry as reported in EEO-1 data.[11]

16. In examining issues such as the demographic characteristics of a firm's workforce, benchmarking using comparator firms addresses the important issue of "labor supply" – the availability of persons in the demographic group being examined (here, women) who are interested in and qualified to hold the positions in question (here, Wal-Mart in-store management). The logic in benchmarking is that, if retail chains comparable to Wal-Mart are successfully employing women at some rate, then women are presumably available, interested, and qualified to hold comparable positions at Wal-Mart at a similar rate. Therefore, if the representation of women among store managers at Wal-Mart is substantially lower than at the comparator large retail chains, the cause of the "shortfall" is to be found in how Wal-Mart hires, trains, selects, assigns, treats, promotes, or retains women employees rather than lack of available, interested, qualified women job candidates.

[Footnote continued from previous page]

Bates WMHO 502704; WMH0510433 (also marked WMH051043); deposition of Rebecca Carter, a Wal-Mart Corporate Human Resources Analyst, taken June 13, 2002, WMH0160229.

[11] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, Exhibit 6, WMHO 502704.

17. Wal-Mart itself has benchmarked the level of representation of women among its management employees. For example, through a memorandum to all division heads dated March 29, 1999,[12] the company compared itself to five large retail chains – Comp USA, Dayton Hudson, Home Depot, May Department Stores, and Toys-R-Us – and concluded that ". . . Wal-Mart's women in management percent (32.4%) is significantly behind several of the other retailers reporting (43.2% to 65.3%)." Using nationwide average EEO-1 data for 1997, this same report also concluded, ". . . Our Wal-Mart percent of women trails both the retail industry and workforce averages. . ."

18. Such benchmarking of Wal-Mart's representation of women among managers using five retail chains and simple nationwide averages represent a relatively crude benchmarking analysis. In this report, I refine Wal-Mart's procedures in three important ways:

- First, Wal-Mart's analysis was limited to data readily available to Wal-Mart: national averages published by the EEOC and data provided by five firms that had agreed to share workforce demographic information. My analysis begins by defining appropriate comparator firms as those large, multi-state retail chains that are widely recognized by Wal-Mart itself and by standard sources of business and financial information as comparable to Wal-Mart in such terms as products, services, market niche, size, scope, operational style, and expected financial and operational results. I then systematically search EEO-1 data to identify firms matching this definition. The approximately 20 comparator firms identified through this process represent a more comprehensive, more conceptual set of comparators than Wal-Mart itself sought out.

---

[12] WMHO510430-WMHO510438.

o Second, Wal-Mart's analysis simply examined the representation of women among managers wherever they work within the company. My analysis separates Wal-Mart's retail stores from its other establishments, such as corporate headquarters and distribution centers, and I do the same for the 20 comparator firms. This separation allows more precise comparison of the representation of women in in-store managerial positions, which I understand to be the current focus of this case.

o Third, Wal-Mart's analysis simply examined the average representation of women among managers nation-wide. My analysis separately examines 375 local labor markets, thereby removing from the comparison differences between Wal-Mart stores and their comparators attributable to local labor markets where the participation of women in paid employment is higher or lower than the national average.[13]

All three of these refinements are designed to ensure that this benchmarking analysis presents an "apples to apples" comparison. In such a comparison, differences in the representation of women in management between Wal-Mart and its comparators can appropriately be attributed to differences in Wal-Mart's employment policies and practices, not flaws in the comparisons.

---

[13] For example, in 2000, women accounted for 48.5 percent of the civilian labor force in Vermont but 43.4 percent in Utah (U.S. Bureau of the Census, Statistical Abstract of the United States, Table 572, at www.census.gov/statab).

19. To accomplish the first of these three refinements, I need to identify those firms that are appropriate comparators to Wal-Mart. As noted in paragraph 15 above, Mr. Peterson identified large retail chains as Wal-Mart's key comparators, and he repeatedly relied on data from such chains in his own work. Echoing this corporate positioning, Wal-Mart's 10K/A Annual Report to the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) for the fiscal year ended January 31, 2001, filed April 17, 2001, pages 4 and 6, states:

> Wal-Mart discount stores compete with other discount, department, drug, variety, and specialty stores, many of which are national chains. Wal-Mart Supercenters compete with other super-center type stores, discount stores, supermarkets, and specialty stores, many of which are national or regional chains. . . .the Wal-Mart Stores segment ranked first among all retail department store chains and among all discount department store chains. . . .[The SAM'S Club segment] competes with other warehouse clubs, as well as with discount retailers, wholesale grocers and general merchandise wholesalers and distributors.

20. Consistent with this description, in its 1999 EEO-1 report to the EEOC, Wal-Mart places itself in Standard Industrial Code (SIC) 53, General Merchandise Stores. This category encompasses department stores, variety stores, and miscellaneous general merchandise stores. Some EEO-1 reports filed for individual Wal-Mart's retail establishments place the establishment in SIC 531 (Department Stores), others in SIC 533 (Variety Stores), and still others in SIC 539 (Miscellaneous General Merchandise Stores).

21. Taking my lead from Wal-Mart's own description, I compare Wal-Mart to a set of large, multi-state chains of general merchandise stores identified by applying the following criteria to EEO-1 data for each year I examine: (1) The firm was not Wal-Mart; (2) the EEO-1 "parent company" record placed the firm in a retail industry other than eating and drinking places: Standard Industrial Codes (SIC) 52, 53, 54, 55, 56, 57, or 59; and (3) the parent company had at least 100 separately-reporting establishments in the General Merchandise Stores industry (SIC 53).

22. In 1999, 20 firms met these criteria and are used as comparators.[14] Selected characteristics of these 20 firms, as of 1999, are reported in the following table:

---

[14] In earlier years, the number of comparator large retail chains varies somewhat: 21 in 1998, 22 in 1997, 23 in 1996, 18 in 1995, 15 in 1990, 19 in 1985, 18 in 1980, and 14 in 1975

Firm	SIC for the Parent Company	Industry for the Parent Company	Total Employees	Establishments Nationwide
A	531	Department Stores	279,255	1,168
B	531	Department Stores	271,171	2,111
C	531	Department Stores	264,581	1,254
D	569	Misc. Apparel & Accessories Stores	190,063	1,030
E	531	Department Stores	150,942	415
F	531	Department Stores	133,906	434
G	531	Department Stores	85,421	356
H	531	Department Stores	63,285	340

I	565	Family Clothing Stores	58,228	214
J	539	Misc. General Merchandise Stores	54,845	247
K	539	Misc. General Merchandise Stores	54,171	336
L	531	Department Stores	37,152	244
M	531	Department Stores	37,039	297
N	531	Department Stores	34,600	391
0	531	Department Stores	18,837	167
P	531	Department Stores	15,895	198
Q	539	Misc. General Merchandise Stores	15,693	187
R	531	Department Stores	14,512	109
S	539	Misc. General Merchandise Stores	12,943	102

T	531	Department Stores	10,547	105
Wal Mart	533[15]	Variety Stores	887,383	3,027

23. Because the EEO-1 data publicly released by the EEOC do not include firms' names, I do not individually identify firms A through T by name. However, standard analyses of Wal-Mart repeatedly mention a limited number of large firms as Wal-Mart's direct counterparts. In its 2001 "Fortune 1000" list of the nation's largest firms, Fortune magazine places Wal-Mart in the category of "General Merchandise Stores" with 15 other companies: Sears Roebuck, Kmart, Target, JC Penny, Federated Department Stores, May Department Stores, Dillard's, Saks, Kohl's, Nordstrom, Dollar General, Ames Department Stores, Family Dollar Stores, Belk, and Value City. The online investment guide Forbes.com places Wal-Mart in the "retail/stores/discount" group and compares it to: Ames Department Stores, Big Lot, Bradlees, Dollar General, Dollar Tree, Duckwall-Alco Stores, Family Dollar Stores, Freds, Kmart, Liquidation World, Mazel Stores, 99 Cents Only Stores, Shopko Stores,

---

[15] Individual Wal-Mart retail establishments that variously report themselves in SIC 531 (Department Stores), 533 (Variety Stores), or 539 (Miscellaneous General Merchandise Stores) do not appear to be distinct from each other in obvious ways. For example, in 1999, total employees per store averaged 294 for those in SIC 531, 272 in SIC 533, and 284 in SIC 539, all within a few percentage points of each other. Moreover, between 1996 and 1999, more than 700 Wal-Mart establishments changed their SIC one or more times.

Denninghouse, Target, TJX Companies, Toys-R-Us, and Value City. The on-line business information system Hoovers.com lists Wal-Mart's top three competitors as Costco, Kmart, and Target. Many of these same firms appear in Mr. Peterson's description of Wal-Mart's own benchmarking, discussed in paragraphs 15 and 17 above. I am confident that the comparator firms in my EEO-1 analyses substantially overlap these lists.

24. The second refinement listed in paragraph 18 is to subdivide the 3,027 establishments for which Wal-Mart's provided separate EEO-1 reports in 1999 into six mutually- exclusive groups, so that they can be benchmarked separately:

o Corporate headquarters (1 Wal-Mart establishment), identified as the firm's headquarters in the company's EEO-1 report.

- Stores (2,909 Wal-Mart establishments), in which more than 50% of each establishment's staff are Sales or Service Workers.[16] [17]

---

[16] 2,837 of the Wal-Mart establishments that I categorize as stores are reported by Wal-Mart in some category within SIC 53, the General Merchandise Stores industry. 71 other Wal-Mart establishments that I categorize as stores are reported by Wal-Mart in SIC 421, Trucking and Courier Services. My justification for counting such establishments as retail stores is that their staffing reported in 1999 EEO-1 data are very similar to other Wal-Mart stores and entirely unlike other establishments in Trucking and Couriers Services industry, as the italicized rows in the following table show:

Job Group	Other Wal-Mart "Stores"	Wal-Mart "Stores" Establishments in SIC 421	SIC 421 Not Wal-Mart
Managers	3.6%	3.5%	6.5%
Professional	1.0%	0.9%	1.9%
Technical	0.0%	0.0%	0.6%
Sales	64.1%	64.0%	1.8%
Clerical	4.3%	3.8%	7.4%
Craft	8.5%	9.6%	5.0%
Operatives	0.6%	0.0%	46.0%
Laborers	15.8%	17.1%	30.3%
Service	2.2%	1.0%	0.6%
TOTAL	100.0%	100.0%	100.0%

The 72nd Wal-Mart establishment from outside SIC 53 that I call a "store" was reported in SIC 549, Miscellaneous Food Stores.

[17] In describing its retail operations, Wal-Mart often distinguishes its Wal-Mart operating segment from its SAM's Clubs o Non-Store Establishments—Managerial / Professional (4 Wal-Mart establishments), in which more than 50% of employees are Officials and Managers or Professionals.

o Non-Store Establishments—Blue Collar (72 Wal-Mart establishments), in which more than 50% of employees are Craft Workers, Operatives, or Laborers.

o Non-Store Establishments—Other (41 Wal-Mart establishments), which fall into none of the previous four categories.

o Employees not Locationally-Identified These employees appear in the firm's count of all employees but not in any of the establishments for which a separated EEO-1 report has been filed.

25. The third refinement listed in Paragraph 18 is to replace Wal-Mart's comparisons of national averages with more precise comparisons between Wal-Mart and its comparators in local labor markets across the nation.

26. The diagram in Attachment E illustrates my procedure for analyzing each local labor market, using 1999 EEO-1 data for the Bakersfield, California Metropolitan Area as an example. The diagram segment or refers to other categories of retail establishments such as Supercenters or Neighborhood Markets. I have not subdivided Wal-Mart "stores" into such categories for two reasons. First, I could not readily assign Wal-Mart stores for which I had a separate EEO-1 reports to segments based on information in their EEO-1 reports (such as employees per store; see footnote 15). Second, I could not readily assign the individual establishments of comparator chains to comparable categories.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

reports that, in the Bakersfield area in 1999, Wal-Mart operated four stores (represented by shaded bars), while its comparator chains operated 18 stores (represented by white bars). At the Wal-Mart stores, the proportion of women among managers ranged from 0.0 percent to 25.0 percent, while at the comparators, it ranged from 0.0 percent to 83.3 percent. If Wal-Mart had utilized women as managers in its four stores at the same rate as the average of those 18 comparators stores which was 54.7 percent, then Wal-Mart would have employed 14.6 more women managers in the Bakersfield area in 1999 than it actually did. More conservatively, if Wal-Mart had utilized women among managers at the same rate as they were utilized in the total "large chain general merchandise industry" in the Bakersfield area – the 18 comparator stores plus the four Wal-Mart stores – then Wal-Mart would have had 12.0 more women managers in the Bakersfield area than it actually did. Throughout this report, I present figures such as this latter one as my conservative estimate of Wal-Mart's shortfall in women managers.[18]

---

[18] Inclusion of Wal-Mart establishments in the standard of availability against which Wal-Mart's employment is compared implicitly corresponds to the conservative assumption that the only persons available to enhance Wal-Mart's number of female managers are women who have demonstrated their interest and ability to perform as Wal-Mart store managers by already being employed in comparable positions at Wal-Mart's comparator firms. The alternative way of calculating shortfall, in which Wal-Mart is compared against the level of utilization at its comparators excluding itself corresponds to an assumption that the sources from which Wal-Mart could expand its number of female store managers are broader, so that Wal-Mart shortfall could be reduced without reducing the number of women managers at the comparator firms. These more diverse sources

27. To develop my estimate of Wal-Mart's shortfall nationwide, I first compute the shortfall in each local labor market in which Wal-Mart and at least one comparator operate retail stores. In analyzing EEO-1 data for 1999, I made such comparisons for 375 separate locations, including 327 Metropolitan Statistical Areas as defined by the U.S. Census Bureau (for example, the Bakersfield, California Metropolitan Area) and 48 "balance of states" (the areas within each state outside all Metropolitan Statistical Areas).

IV. Wal-Mart's Shortfall of Women in Store Management in 1999

28. Attachment F presents, in its column (m), the estimate of Wal-Mart's shortfall in female managers in 1999 that emerges when the procedure illustrated for Bakersfield is applied company-wide. Row (2) of this table focuses specifically on managers employed within the 2,909 Wal-Mart establishments I have identified as retail stores.[19] According to this table, in 1999, Wal-Mart had a shortfall of 4,004 female in-store managers, compared to the expected number based on the representation of women among in-store managers in the large chain retail might include hiring new women Wal-Mart managers from outside the large chain retail industry. Most prominently, however, it includes promoting women to Wal-Mart management from among non-managerial Wal-Mart employees. According to the Wal-Mart annual report 2002, page 6, "More than 60 percent of our store managers were 'grown' through the Wal-Mart organization, starting as store Associates."

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[19] See paragraph 24 above.

industry consisting of Wal-Mart itself and 20 comparator large retail chains.

29. Column (q) of the table presents a second, alternate estimate of Wal-Mart's shortfall in female in-store mangers, based on a benchmark that includes the 20 large comparator chains but not Wal-Mart itself. As in the Bakersfield example, this alternative estimate is larger than the estimate based on a benchmark including Wal-Mart itself. Row (2) of the table reports a total shortfall in column (q) of 6,445 female managers, 61.0 percent more than the shortfall of 4,004 reported in column (m).

30. The first, more conservative of these two estimates, – 4,004 female in-store managers – can be restated several different ways. First, while Wal-Mart actually employed about seven women out of every 20 in-store managers, it would be expected to have employed ten. Second, for every seven women managers Wal-Mart actually employed, three additional women managers were "missing."

31. One reason that this estimated shortfall is so large is that Wal-Mart is such a large employer that even a modest percentage difference in female representation would generate a large shortfall; as row (2) of column (d) of the table in Attachment F reports, in 1999, Wal-Mart employed 29,462 in-store managers.[20] However, Wal-Mart's size is not the only source of this large shortfall. Columns (i)

---

[20] As previously noted in footnote 5, the term "in-store managers" here refers not to the one individual per store bearing the title store manager but all salaried Wal-Mart in-store managerial personnel, including store managers, co-managers and assistant managers.

through (k) of the table report that the percentage difference between the representation of women among managers at Wal-Mart and its comparators is itself very large: across all Wal-Mart retail stores in 1999, the difference is 22.0 percent of all Wal-Mart in-store managers – the gap between Wal-Mart's in-store managerial workforce with 34.5 percent women and its comparators' corresponding 56.5 percent.

32. Could a shortfall as large as 4,004 have arisen by chance alone? In many research contexts as well as legal proceedings, a figure such as this shortfall is considered "statistically significant," and therefore not attributable to chance, if the figure corresponds to a number larger than two to three when translated into statisticians' units called "standard deviations." In the present case, column (o) of row (8) of Attachment Three reports that a shortfall of 4,004 corresponds to 47.0 standard deviations, much larger than two to three. Indeed, this figure is so large that the probability that this result could be due to chance alone would be written with several hundred zeros after the decimal point, reflecting a probability very many times less than one chance in many billions. A shortfall as large as 4,004 definitely did not arise by chance alone.

V. Is this Shortfall Attributable to Differences in Reporting?

33. When Wal-Mart conducted its own benchmarking, it also observed a shortfall in its female managers. However, the company discounted the meaningfulness of its own comparisons. As the company's most senior human resources executive, Mr. Peterson, stated in his deposition, ". . . [T]he reason it's so difficult to compare apples to oranges is that a number of the comparators we are looking at put department managers in their management category when they are talking about performance. And had we [Wal-Mart] put department managers in these numbers we would be almost without exception better than every last one of the retailers that is reflected here."[21]

34. Mr. Peterson bases his statements about the comparator firms' reporting practices on his long experience in the retail industry, including 16 years as a senior human resource executive at the May Company;[22] May Company operates department stores, where, according to Mr. Peterson, including department managers in the EEO-1 category of managers is common practice.[23] In addition, Mr. Peterson had held discussions with various comparators firms over the years, including Target, Kmart, and Home Depot.[24]

35. Apparently, Mr. Peterson believes that even large differences in the representation of women among in-store managers can be explained by differ-

---

[21] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 107 10:41 6 – 10:42 12.

[22] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 125 11:16 9 – 11:17 15.

[23] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 128, 11:20 9 – 11:20 16.

[24] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 111 10:46 2 — 10:47 24. These discussions appear to have focused on whether department managers in the retail industry should be classified as hourly or salaried employees for purposes of the wages and hours laws, rather than specifically on their classification in EEO-1 reports. The two issues are potentially related but not identical.

ences in firms' reporting practices. For example, in his deposition, he was asked to comment on a comparison, which he had presented to the Wal-Mart Executive Committee, in which the Target Corporation was estimated to have 52 percent women among its managers, compared to 33 percent for Wal-Mart.[25] Mr. Peterson replied that, although the Target discount stores owned by the Target Corporation were similar to Wal-Mart in terms of their product lines and store size,[26] the figure for Target Corporation was high because it included data from department stores operated by the Target Corporation, not just Target discount stores, [27] and such department stores tended to report department managers as managers, while Wal-Mart does not. Because of such differences in reporting, Mr. Peterson felt that such a comparison, ". . . absolutely positively . . ." does not fairly reflect what should be conveyed about the relative performance of Wal-Mart and its comparators.[28]

36. To test whether Mr. Peterson's rejection of these comparisons make sense, I calculated the av-

---

[25] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 124 11:15 11-22. This comparison appears in a memorandum tiled "Equal Opportunity at Target," dated December 20, 2000 from Cole Peterson to the Wal-Mart Executive Committee (WMH0512710).

[26] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 126 11 18 17-11 18 23.

[27] According to www.hoovers.com, among Target Corporation's 1,475 retail stores, about 75 percent are discount stores (Target and related brands), while 25 percent are department stores (Mervyn's and Marshall Fields).

[28] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 106 10:40 8-17.

erage number of managers per store reported in EEO-1 data for 1999 by Wal-Mart and each of the 20 comparator chains. Among the 20 comparators, this figure averaged 10.2 managers per store, almost identical to Wal-Mart's 10.1 managers per store. Wal-Mart appeared "right in the middle of the pack," reporting a larger number of managers per store than 11 of the chains and a smaller number than 9 of them. Some comparators reported as few as 3.7 managers per store, strongly suggesting they were not reporting as Mr. Peterson claimed. However, one comparator reported 23.6 managers per store, suggesting that it might be doing what Mr. Peterson described.

37. To take account of this consideration, I performed the benchmarking comparisons documented in Attachment G. In section A of Attachment G, I divided the 20 comparators into groups with a similar number of managers per store and total employees per store. In section B, I divided the 20 comparators into groups with a similar number of managers per 100 non-managerial employees and total employees per store. I then benchmarked Wal-Mart against only those comparator chains that closely matched Wal-Mart on these measures, ignoring comparators that appeared possibly to be defining in-store management more broadly or more narrowly than Wal-Mart. In both section A and section B of the attachment, the same two comparator chains turned out to be the most direct matches to Wal-Mart.[29]

---

[29] In terms of managers per store, one chain's 9.1 and other's 12.3 put them in the same category as Wal-Mart's 10.1. In term of total employees per store, one chain's 195 employees and the other's 232 put them in the same category as Wal-Mart's 279.

38. The representation of women among in-store managers at these two closely matched comparator chains averaged 57.4 percent, a figure 22.9 percentage points higher than Wal-Mart's 34.5 percent. Thus, closely matching comparators to Wal-Mart in terms of apparent EEO-1 practices did not eliminate Wal-Mart's very large shortfall of women in-store managers, as Mr. Peterson implied it would.

39. In fact, it did the opposite. The 57.4 percent benchmark based on the two closely matching chains is 1.1 percentage points higher than the benchmark representation of females among in-store managers based on all 20 comparator chains, which was 56.3 percent. Increasing the benchmark to 57.4 percent benchmark increases the estimated shortfall of women in-store managers in 1999 to 4,328.[30]

40. In his deposition, Mr. Peterson stated, "[H]ad we [Wal-Mart] put department managers in these [in-store manager] numbers we would be almost without exception better than every last one of the retailers that is reflected here."[31] This statement

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

In terms of managers per 100 employees, one chain's 4.9 and other's 5.6 put them in the same category as Wal-Mart's 3.8.

One reason Wal-Mart has fewer in-store managers per store than both these comparators is that Wal-Mart's managerial system assigns a much higher proportion of the firm's managers to its headquarters in Bentonville, Arkansas than their comparators place at their headquarters; see Section X, below.

[30] 1.1 percent of 29,462 in-store managers is 324 persons. 4,004 + 324 = 4,328.

[31] Deposition of Coleman Peterson taken December 18, 2002, p. 107 10:41:6 – 10:42:12.

is equivalent to a frank concession by Mr. Peterson that Wal-Mart's employment exhibits a very strong "glass ceiling" for women at the department manager level. A glass ceiling is signaled by a sharp decrease in the representation of women from one level in a hierarchy to the next one up. The only way that inclusion of department managers could raise a Wal-Mart 34.5 percent representation of women managers to the comparators' 56.3 percent is if the representation of women among Wal-Mart's department managers is well above 56.3 percent and therefore far above Wal-Mart's 34.5 percent representation among assistant managers/co-managers/store managers.

41. In any case, for Wal-Mart to add its department managers to its other in-store managers and then compare the results to in-store manager figures reported by other retailers is clearly inappropriate benchmarking, mixing apples and oranges. Such a procedure would make sense only if the practice of including department managers was widely or universally practiced by the comparators. Mr. Peterson himself asserted only that "some" of the comparators follow the practices, and our data analysis suggests that their number is probably not large. For example, in 1999, only four of the 20 comparator chains reported 15 or more managers per store. The chain that reported 23.6 managers per store appears to be more of an isolated instance rather than typical of the industry as a whole.

VI. Consistency of Shortfall Nationwide

42. The 2,909 retail stores that Wal-Mart reported on in its 1999 EEO-1 data were located in hundreds of locations in all 50 states.[32] Is the firm's shortfall in female managers limited to only some of these locations, or is it universal across the nation? This question is addressed in Attachment H.

43. One piece of information relevant to this question is provided in column (h) of that attachment. There, I report that in 1999, a shortfall in female managers was present in 79.5 percent of all Wal-Mart stores, some 2,314 stores.[33] With shortfall present in four out of five stores, it is virtually impossible for the pattern to be geographically localized.

44. A more refined way to examine this question is to tabulate shortfall separately for each of the 50 states. This is done in column (g) of Attachment H, which reports state-by-state shortfall for 1999. The column reports shortfall in 49 of the 50 states.[34] The largest shortfalls are found in Texas (473 "miss-

---

[32] Wal-Mart had no stores in the District of Columbia.

[33] If the difference in female managers between Wal-Mart and its comparators were due to chance alone, we would expect that 50 percent of Wal-Mart stores would have a shortfall and 50 percent would not. What is the probability that, in a sample of 2,909 stores, we would observe a number as high as 79.5 percent if the true probability of a shortfall was 50 percent? That probability is so small that it would be written with 236 zeros after the decimal point, corresponding to 32.9 standard deviations. Thus, this difference is clearly not due to chance alone.

[34] In the only exception, Vermont, Wal-Mart operated four stores, the smallest number in any state in the nation. Shortfall of women in management arose in two of the four stores, and the statewide representation of women among managers exceeds the expected number by a fraction of one person.

ing" female in-store managers), Florida (322), and California (276).

45. Column (h) of Attachment H also reports that the proportion of stores with a shortfall in women managers is at least 50 percent in every one of the 50 states. The proportion ranges from 100 percent (in Rhode Island and North Dakota) to 50.0 percent (in Vermont). Attachment I tabulates Wal-Mart stores' shortfall in female managers in 1999 by a different geographical dimension – whether stores are located inside or outside of Metropolitan Areas defined by the U.S. Census Bureau. I examine this question separately in each of the four large regions into which the Census Bureau divides the United States: Northeast, Midwest, South and West. According to column (g) of the attachment, substantial shortfall is found both inside and outside Metropolitan Areas in all four of these Census regions. Furthermore, according to column (h) of the attachment, the proportion of stores with shortfall is well above 50 percent both inside and outside Metropolitan Areas in every region.

46. As noted in paragraph 27 of this report, overall counts of shortfall, such as are presented in Attachments H and I, total the results of comparisons between Wal-Mart stores and comparators conducted separately for 375 local labor markets located across the country. Attachment E presented one example of a local comparison, for Bakersfield, California. To illustrate the point that under-representation of women among Wal-Mart in-store managers is not limited geographically, Attachment J provides four additional examples of local-area comparison demonstrating Wal-Mart under-representation, each drawn from a different major region among the four into which the Census Bureau divides the nation. An example from Portland, Maine, is provided to represent the Northeast. It is joined by Eau Claire, Wisconsin (Midwest), Fayetteville-Springdale-Rogers, Arkansas (South),[35] and Pueblo, Colorado (West).

47. In all four graphs, the shaded bars representing Wal-Mart stores are closer to the left axis of the graph than all, or nearly all, of the white bars representing comparators. The closer to the left axis a bar is located, the smaller the proportion of managers in that store who are women.[36] The four graphs in Attachment J demonstrate that examples of clear Wal-Mart–comparator differences in the rep-

---

[35] Wal-Mart's headquarters in Bentonville, Arkansas is located within the Fayetteville-Springdale-Rogers Metropolitan Area. However, because the only establishments included in the graphs in Attachment J are retail stores; data from headquarters are not included.

[36] The four graphs correspond to the following numbers:

Census	Illustrative	Wal-Mart	Comparator	Female % of Managers		Conservative
Region	Local Area	Stores	Stores	Wal-Mart	Comparators	Shortfall
Northeast	Portland, ME	3	7	17%-40%	33%-78%	5.9
Midwest	Eau Claire, WI	2	9	38%-45%	50%-88%	4.3
South	Fayetteville, AR	13	6	0%-40%	20%-91%	19.8
West	Pueblo, CO	3	8	11%-30%	40%-83%	7.6

resentation of women among managers can be found in widely-separated locations in the nation.

VII. Similar Shortfalls in Wal-Mart's Non-Store Establishments

48. It is my understanding that the focus of this case is the representation of women among managers in Wal-Mart's retail stores, not its headquarters or other non-retail establishments such as distribution centers. Nevertheless, Attachment F includes a benchmarking analysis for Wal-Mart's non-retail establishments parallel to that reported in paragraphs 28 and 29 for its retail establishments. I do so because patterns of employment of women throughout an organization can suggest whether a shortfall in female employment observed in part of the organization – such as retail stores – reflects attitudes and practices pervasive throughout the company and deeply embedded in the organization's corporate culture,[37] or isolated or transitory happenstance.

49. Attachment F presents an estimate of Wal-Mart shortfall in 1999 of females among managers for each of the six categories of establishments defined in paragraph 24 of this report: corporate headquarters (row 1); retail stores (row 2); 4 managerial/professional non-store establishments (row 3); 72 "blue collar" non-store establishments (row 4); 41

---

[37] An organization's corporate culture is defined as the interdependent system of beliefs, values, and ways of behaving that are common to a workplace. Less formally, it is simply, "the way things are done around here." See Marc Bendick, Jr., and Mary Lou Egan, Changing Workplace Cultures to Reduce Employment Discrimination, A Presentation to the Conference on Low Wage Workers in the New Economy, Washington DC, May 2000, at www.bendickegan.com.

other non-store establishments (row 5); and the set of Wal-Mart employees reported in corporate total employment but not allocated to a specific establishments (row 6). According to column (m) of the table, in 1999, Wal-Mart had a shortfall of women among managers in all six categories, including a shortfall of 466 women managers at corporate headquarters, 144 at managerial/professional non-store establishments, 144 in "blue collar" non-store establishments, 107 in other non-store establishments, and 97 among employees outside separately-reporting establishments. According to column (o), each of these shortfalls is "statistically significant," at a level between 6.7 and 15.9 standard deviations.

50. These findings are clearly inconsistent with an interpretation of Wal-Mart's shortfall in women managers as isolated to any particular part of the corporation. Instead, they suggest that Wal-Mart's shortfall of women among in-store managers reflect the firm's company-wide corporate culture and attitudes, perceptions, policies and practices that embody that culture.

VIII. Persistence of Shortfall, 1975-2002

51. A second indicator that under-representation of women in management is deeply rooted in an organization's corporate culture is that the pattern has persisted over time. Attachment K repeats the benchmarking analysis for Wal-Mart in-store managers for every year from 1998 through 1995 and every fifth year from 1995 to 1975.

52. According to column (g) of the table in Attachment K, Wal-Mart had a shortfall of female managers in its retail stores in every year examined, ranging from 4,004 in 1999 (when Wal-Mart was a nationwide retailing giant with 2,909 stores) to a shortfall of 168 in 1975 (when Wal-Mart was a relatively modest chain with 106 stores). Dividing these shortfalls by the number of stores operated by Wal-Mart in each year demonstrates that the shortfall per store has remained quite stable for nearly a quarter century – 1.6 per store in 1975, 1.4 per store 24 years later.

53. Underlying these persistent shortfalls is the persistent gap between the representation of women among managers at Wal-Mart and its comparators, expressed in percentage terms. The graph in Attachment K makes clear that, although Wal-Mart's representation of women among in-store managers has increased over time, the representation at its comparators has also increased over the same period, and Wal-Mart has never caught up. In the graph, a large and persistent gap is clearly visible between the comparators' line (marked by c's) and Walmart's line (marked by w's). Most dramatically, the w representing Wal-Mart in 1999 stands at 34.5 percent and thus is lower than the c representing the comparators in 1975, 38.4 percent. That is, in 1999, Wal-Mart had not yet achieved the level of representation of women among managers in its stores that was common to its comparators a quarter of a century earlier.

54. Such long-term persistence is further evidence that the shortfall in female employment observed in 1999 reflects attitudes and practices deeply embedded in the organization's corporate culture.

55. If Wal-Mart's employment of women managers continues to converge to that of its comparators at the same rate it has over the past quarter century, 1999's gap in in-store managers between Wal-Mart and its comparators will require about 29.5 years to disappear.[38] Thus, assuming past historical tends continue in the future, the Wal-Mart and comparator lines in the graph would converge sometime in 2028.

56. However, this estimate is almost certainly far too optimistic. The .75 rate of closure of the gap between Wal-Mart and its comparators is based on all years from 1975 through 1999. In the more recent years within that period, the rate of closure has slowed dramatically. Between 1990 and 1999, it fell to .6 percentage points per year, and between 1995 to 1999, to .25 percentage points per year. At that final rate, convergence between Wal-Mart and its comparators would take about 88 years.

57. If the EEOC follows its historic schedule for releasing EEO-1 data, information for 2002 will not be available from the EEOC until late 2003. However, I can conservatively estimate Wal Mart's shortfall of female in-store managers in 2002 by combining several pieces of information. First, according to the more conservative estimate presented in Attachment F, Wal-Mart's shortfall of female in-store managers in 1999 was 4,004. Second, according to Wal-Mart's annual report for 2002, the company's total employment in 2002 was 1,383,000, or 152.0 percent of the company's employment of 910,000 in 1999. Third, assuming the optimistic .75 percentage points per year rate of closure in the gap in female in-store management representation between Wal-

---

[38] The percentage gap between Wal-Mart and its comparators took 24 years to reduce by the17.9 percentage points between 39.9 percent and 22.0 percent. To eliminate the remaining 22.0 percentage points at this closure rate of .75 percentage points a year would require about 29.5 years.

Mart and its comparators continued through 2002, the percentage gap would decline by about 2.24 percentage points between 1999 and 2002, leaving it at 89.8 percent of its 1999 level.[39] Multiplying 4,004 by 1.52 and then by .898 yields a conservatively- estimated shortfall in 2002 of 5,465 female in-store managers.

IX. An Estimate of Shortfall Based on Internal Workforce

58. One striking characteristic of Wal-Mart's in-store work force is the difference between the representation of women among the company's managers and its non-managerial employees (sales workers, craft workers, operatives, service workers, and others). As Attachment D reported, at Wal-Mart in 2000, women accounted for 33.6 percent of the company's managers and 63.4 percent of its non-managerial employees.[40] The ratio of these two proportions – 33.6/63.4 – is 53.0. I call this ratio the female manager-to-non-manager ratio, and it means that, across Wal-Mart, females are found in managerial positions at a little more than half the rate they are found among non-managers. Looking at the other side of the same coin, in 2000, men accounted for 66.4 percent of Wal-Mart managers and 36.6 percent of its non-managers, for a male manager-to-non-manager ratio of 181.4. The difference between 53.0 and 181.4 clearly signals major differences in the employment of women and men at Wal-Mart.

---

[39] (22.0-2.24)/22.0 = 89.8

[40] Attachment D is based on Wal-Mart employees company-wide, not just in retail stores.

59. In Attachment L, I compute the female manager-to-non-manager ratio for multiple years, both for Wal-Mart and its comparator firms, restricting this computation to staff employed within retail stores. According to columns (d) and (g) of the attachment, at Wal-Mart in 1999, the female manager to non-manager ratio was 51.7, while at comparator stores, it was 76.7. If Wal-Mart had achieved the same female manager-to-non-manager ratio as its comparator firms, it would have had 4,911 more in-store female managers than it actually employed that year. The figure, an alternative estimate of Wal-Mart's shortfall in 1999 of women in in-store management, falls between the two estimates of in-store shortfall presented in Attachment F (4,004 female in-store managers under a benchmark which includes Wal-Mart and 6,445 under a benchmark which excludes Wal-Mart).

60. Under-representation of women among in-store managers at Wal-Mart cannot be explained by an absence of women among non-managerial Wal-Mart store employees from whom employees might be promoted. Wal-Mart's in-stores non-managerial staff is almost as female as its comparators (in 1999, 66.7 percent at Wal-Mart versus 73.7 percent at the 20 comparators). Instead, the estimate in paragraph 59 suggests that Wal-Mart's shortfall reflects Wal-Mart's lesser success than its comparators in hiring, identifying, developing, and promoting managerial talent among its non-managerial female employees. As noted in footnote 18 of this report, according to the Wal-Mart annual report 2002, more than 60 percent of Wal-Mart store managers had first joined the firm as non-managerial employees. It appears that Wal-Mart is far less likely to provide such upward mobility for its female employees, and far more likely to provide it for its male employees, than the benchmark experience of 20 large retail comparator chains lead us to expect.

61. The estimated Wal-Mart shortfall of 4,911 in-store female managers in 1999 appears in the first row of column (g) of Attachment L, followed by parallel estimates for earlier years.

62. The graph presented in Attachment L traces the gap in female manger-to-non-manager ratios between Wal-Mart and its comparators over the past quarter century. In this graph, a large and persistent gap is clearly visible between the comparators' line (market by c's) and Walmart's line (marked by w's). Most dramatically, the w representing 1999 stands at 51.7 and thus is lower than the c for 1975, which was 54.0. Thus, in 1999, Wal-Mart had not yet achieved the female manager-to-non-manager ratio that was typical of its comparators 24 years earlier.[41]

X. Wal-Mart's Management Centralization

63. Various findings in this report document striking consistency in Wal-Mart's employment patterns across locations, types of establishments, and over time. As noted in paragraphs 50 and 54 above, this consistency suggests a strong "corporate culture" that is both perpetuated by and reflected in employment policies and practices that are common company-wide. Attachment M uses EEO-1 data to test for the presence of centralized managerial control

---

[41] Assuming the gap between Wal Mart and its comparator continues to close at the same rate as between 1975 and 1999 the remaining gap will require about 22 years to eliminate.

more directly, by comparing the extent to which Wal-Mart and its comparator large retail chains centralize their managerial staff at their respective corporate headquarters.

64. The attachment presents a table reporting "management centralization ratios," which are simply the proportion of all managers in a firm's company-wide EEO-1 report who are located at the company's headquarters. According to columns (d) and (g) of the table, for Wal-Mart in 1999, that figure was 15.4 percent, while at Wal-Mart's comparator firms in the same year, the ratio averaged 8.1 percent, about half as large.

65. Wal-Mart's practice of locating an unusually large fraction of its managers at its corporate headquarters is not restricted to 1999. Columns (d) and (g) of the table in Attachment M report that Wal-Mart's managerial centralization ratio has remained between two and three times that of its comparators in every year examined since 1975. This difference is illustrated in the graph that follows the table, which shows a large and persistent gap between the comparators' line (market by c's) and Wal-mart's line (marked by w's). The persistence of this pattern is particularly striking in that it occurred over a period in which Wal-Mart grew from a modest-sized chain of 106 stores in 1975 to its present scale of nearly 3,000 stores.

XI. Summary and Conclusions

66. In his description of benchmarking quoted in paragraph 14 of this report, Wal-Mart's Executive Vice President-People Division Coleman Peterson stated that benchmarking helps a company determine, "Are we on the right track?" When Wal-Mart benchmarked the representation of women among its in-store managerial employees, evidence of substantial under-representation warned that the firm was not on the right track. After carefully refining, expanding, and updating that benchmarking in the ways discussed in report, I conclude that warning was correct.

67. Specifically, based on the analyses presented in paragraphs 10 through 66 of this report, I reach thirteen conclusions supporting this general finding:

o Conclusion One: The representation of women among in-store managers in Wal-Mart is substantially smaller than would be expected based on the availability of qualified, interested women in the local labor markets in which Wal-Mart operates store, as measured by the utilization of women in in-store management in those labor markets by large retail chains widely recognized as comparable to Wal-Mart.

o Conclusion Two: In 1999 – the year for which I have the most recent complete data – a conservative estimate of the extent of this shortfall is 4,004 female in-store managers.

o Conclusion Three: Reasonable alternative estimates of this shortfall in 1999 include: 6,445 female in-store managers (based on the same method as the conservative estimate but excluding Wal-Mart itself in setting the benchmark), 4,911 female in-store managers (based on benchmarking Wal-Mart's managerial/non-managerial employee ratios), and 4,328 (based on comparing Wal-Mart to the two comparator chains most closely matching it in terms of managers per store).[42]

- o Conclusion Four: When conservatively updated to 2002, the conservatively estimated shortfall of 4,004 women in-store managers increases to 5,465.

- o Conclusion Five: Because the rate at which comparator firms employ women in-store managers takes account of the rate at which women are available, interested, and qualified to hold in-store management positions comparable to those at Wal-Mart, the causes of Wal-Mart's shortfall are likely to be found in how Wal-Mart hires, trains, selects, assigns, treats, promotes, or retains women employees, not lack of interested, qualified women candidates.

- o Conclusion Six: Wal-Mart's shortfalls are not simply artifacts of differences between Wal-Mart and its comparators in how they classify and report in-store managerial employees. To the extent these differences exist, they are not sufficiently widespread to invalidate the benchmarking I have performed or to justify an alternative benchmarking procedure in which Wal-Mart would broaden its counts of in-store managers.

- o Conclusion Seven: The estimated shortfalls are "statistically significant" and cannot reasonably be attributed to chance alone. The conservative estimated shortfall of 4,004 corresponds to 47.0

---

[42] These alternative estimates – especially those taking account of internal promotional paths to in-store management – may be particularly relevant in calculating economic damages.

standard deviations, representing a probability that a figure this large could have been estimated by chance of less than one chance in many billions.

- Conclusion Eight: Shortfalls of women among Wal-Mart's in-store managers are pervasive among Wal-Mart retail establishments, appearing in approximately four out of five of the firm's stores.
- Conclusion Nine: Shortfalls of women in Wal-Mart's in-store management occur nationwide. They are found in virtually every state in the nation, in every region, and in both urban and non-urban areas.
- Conclusion Ten: Women are also substantially under-represented among managers throughout Wal-Mart's non-retail establishments, including corporate headquarters, "white collar" facilities, and "blue collar" facilities such as distribution centers.
- Conclusion Eleven: Substantial shortfalls of women among Wal-Mart's in-store managers were present in every year between 1975 and 1999, and they are likely to have persisted from 1999 through 2002.
- Conclusion Twelve: Throughout its history, Wal-Mart has maintained a degree of centralization of it managerial staff at corporate headquarters that is strikingly higher than its comparator firms.
- Conclusion Thirteen: The scale, pervasiveness, persistence, and consistency of under-representation of women among Wal-Mart's managers suggests that such under> representation is deeply rooted in the organization's corporate culture and the company-wide employment attitudes, policies and practices that reflect and maintain that culture.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and of the District of Columbia, that the foregoing is true and correct This Declaration was signed by me on April 21, 2003, in Washington, DC.

/s/ Marc Bendick, Jr., Ph.D.
Marc Bendick, Jr., Ph.D.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF RICHARD DROGIN, Ph.D. IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

A. INTRODUCTION

I, RICHARD DROGIN, declare:

1. I hold a Ph.D. in statistics from the University of California at Berkeley, earned in 1970. I am currently an Emeritus Professor in the Department of Statistics at California State University, Hayward, where I have taught graduate and undergraduate courses in data analysis, non-parametric methods, regression analysis, sample surveys, probability theory, queuing theory, simulation methods, and design of statistical software. I have been employed at California State University, Hayward, since 1973, and became an Emeritus Professor in 1996.

2. I am a partner in the statistical consulting firm of Drogin, Kakigi & Associates. This firm provides consulting services and computerized database management. We have experience in designing sample surveys, supplying census demographic data, organizing and managing large database systems, stochastic modeling, and performing advanced statistical analysis. Our firm has served as statistical consultants to both governmental agencies and the private sector for over twenty years. I have testified as an expert witness (statistical analysis, computer processing) in numerous state, and federal courts. A copy of my curriculum vitae is attached as Appendix 1.

3. I have been retained by Plaintiffs' counsel to analyze statistical questions raised in the Dukes v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. litigation. The purpose of my study was to obtain descriptive summaries of computer data, and prepare various statistical analyses relevant to the issues in the case. I examined statistics pertaining to workforce summaries, advancement patterns, and compensation levels.

4. In order to conduct my study, I was provided with computer-readable personnel and compensation data received through discovery as well as documentation and clarification regarding this data, contained in letters, emails between counsel, depositions, and telephonic conferences with Wal-Mart personnel familiar with their personnel and payroll systems. The first data files turned over by defendants were received in March, 2002.

5. This report will describe the data provided to me, how it was processed, the statistical methodology, and the results of my analysis. The analyses described here are restricted to retail store employees[1] working in Wal-Mart Discount Stores, Supercenters, Sam's Clubs, and Neighborhood Markers in the United States[2], during 1996 through the first quarter of 2002.

Data Sources

6. In March, 2002 Wal-Mart turned over an electronic copy of its personnel database including data for all U.S. employees who were employed between January, 1996 and March, 2002. There were 3,945,151 persons included in this database. A Complete job history for each of these persons was provided, including job history information prior to 1996, if any. This database is called the PeopleSoft data. For each person, the database includes basic identification information such as employee ID, social security number, name, address, phone number, gender, and race, as well as extensive information on the person's job history at Wal-Mart. The job history gives a chronological account of the jobs held, stores where the person worked, salary changes, personnel actions such as promotion or transfers, status changes indicating whether the person was active or on leave or terminated, whether the person was full-time or part-time, whether the person was salaried or hourly.

7. In late April, 2002 Wal-Mart turned over 250 computer tapes which included detailed biweekly payroll information for Wal-Mart U.S. employees. For the most part, this data included the

---

[1] Retail store employees are defined in Appendix 2.

[2] In December and January 2003 some data regarding Puerto Rico employees was provided. This data was not used for any analysis in this report.

same persons as those included in the PeopleSoft personnel data. Subsequently, in early July, 2002, Wal-Mart provided year-end summaries of payroll data for each person, for the years 1996-2001. This year-end payroll information was processed, merged into the PeopleSoft data, and is the basis for all earnings studies presented in this report.

8. When Wal-Mart turned over their PeopleSoft data in March, 2002, they also provided two databases known as the MCS data, and Job Posting data. These are databases that give limited information about employees who bid for job vacancies. The MCS data includes information about employees applying for salary job vacancies and the Job Posting data includes information about employees applying for hourly job vacancies. As described in more detail later in this report, the MCS and Job Posting data do not contain information useful for analyzing promotions into higher store management positions and upper level hourly supervisory jobs.

9. In early January, 2003 Wal-Mart turned over part of its Associate database, which includes information on recent performance review ratings for hourly employees. This data was processed and used in the analyses described below.

10. Salaried PeopleSoft data was received in mid-December, 2002. Performance Review information is included in this data. However, this data was incomplete. Additional salary PeopleSoft data was provided at the end of January 2003, a few days prior to the completion of this report. This data has not been used for any studies presented in this report.

11. Payroll data covering 2nd, 3rd, and 4th quarters 2002 was turned over in late January 2003. This data has not been used for any studies presented in this report.

12. In late January 2003, a few days prior to completing this report, Wal-Mart turned over additional PeopleSoft data for the 2nd and 3rd of 2002, replacing data provided earlier in January 2003 that was unreadable. This data has not been used for any studies presented in this report.

13. During the period from March 2002 to the present, there were numerous conference calls with defendant and its computer database specialists, as well as emails, and other correspondence with defendant regarding data questions. Several supplementary files were provided by Wal-Mart in response to questions from plaintiffs.

14. The PeopleSoft and payroll data constitute the primary data sources used for the analyses described in this report. From these sources, three main working files were created: A history file, a year-end file, and a file of job moves. The history file includes all the job history records found in the PeopleSoft data, but with only the fields of information relevant for the analyses, and with some additional information merged from other data sources. There are 14,915,700 records in the history file. The year-end file was created from the history file to include one record for each year in which a person worked, for all the people who were included in the data. In addition, yearly payroll information, and hourly performance ratings (if any) were appended to each record. There are 9,082,732 records in the year-end file, covering the years 1996 through 2002.[3] The moves file was constructed from the history file for use in the promotion analyses. It includes one record for each pair of consecutive history records when there was a change in job or there was an action code indicating a promotion took place.

B. DESCRIPTION OF WORKFORCE

Size and Growth

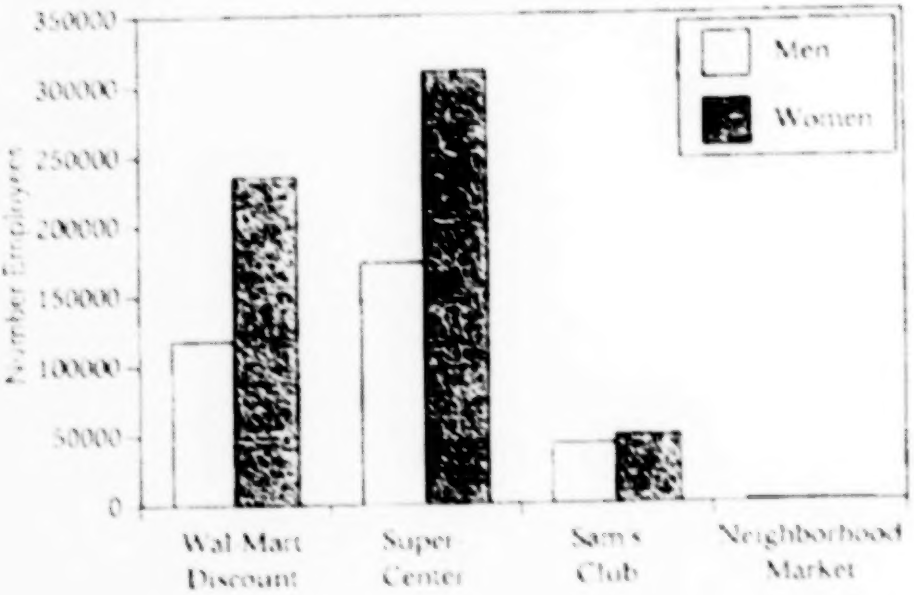
15. Wal-Mart is big and has been steadily growing. During the time period 1996 through 2001 the number of year-end active employees in retail positions increased about 50%, from about 600,000 to about 930,000. The percentage of women decreased slightly from 67% to 64% during this same period. At year-end 2001, approximately 38% of Wal-Mart employees worked in Wal-Mart Discount stores, 52% worked in Supercenters, nearly 10% worked in Sam's Club stores, and less than 1% worked in Neighborhood Markets. Table 1 below shows the number of men and women working at year end 2001 in each of the four Wal-Mart store types.

---

[3] The 2002 data gives employee status only up to end of the first quarter of 2002.

Table 1

Number of Employees by Store Type, 2001



16. Retail store employees include the hourly workforce, the store management, and higher-level level managers such as District Managers and Regional Vice Presidents. The store management positions include Store Manager, Co-Managers, Assistant Managers, and Management trainees. The Management Trainee position is the entry-level position into management and leads directly into the Assistant Manager positions, after a 4-5 month training program. All of the store management positions are salaried jobs, except for the Management Trainee position. A complete list of the retail jobs studied for this report, and how they are classified, is given in Appendix 2.

17. Tables 2a and 2b below show the hierarchical structure of these jobs at Wal-Mart stores (excluding Sam's), and Sam's stores, respectively. This hierarchy was derived from Wal-Mart documents, and analysis of salaries and job movement patterns.

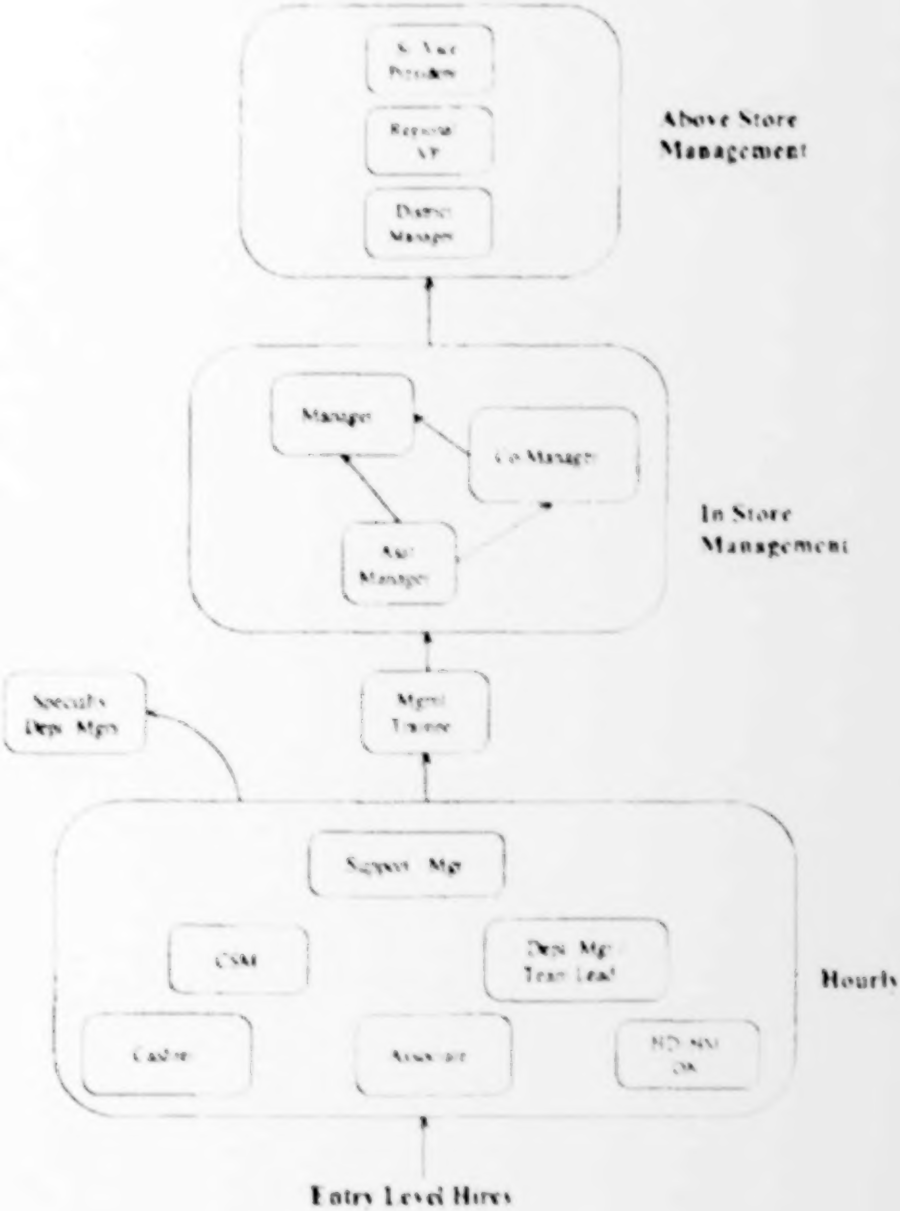
Table 2a

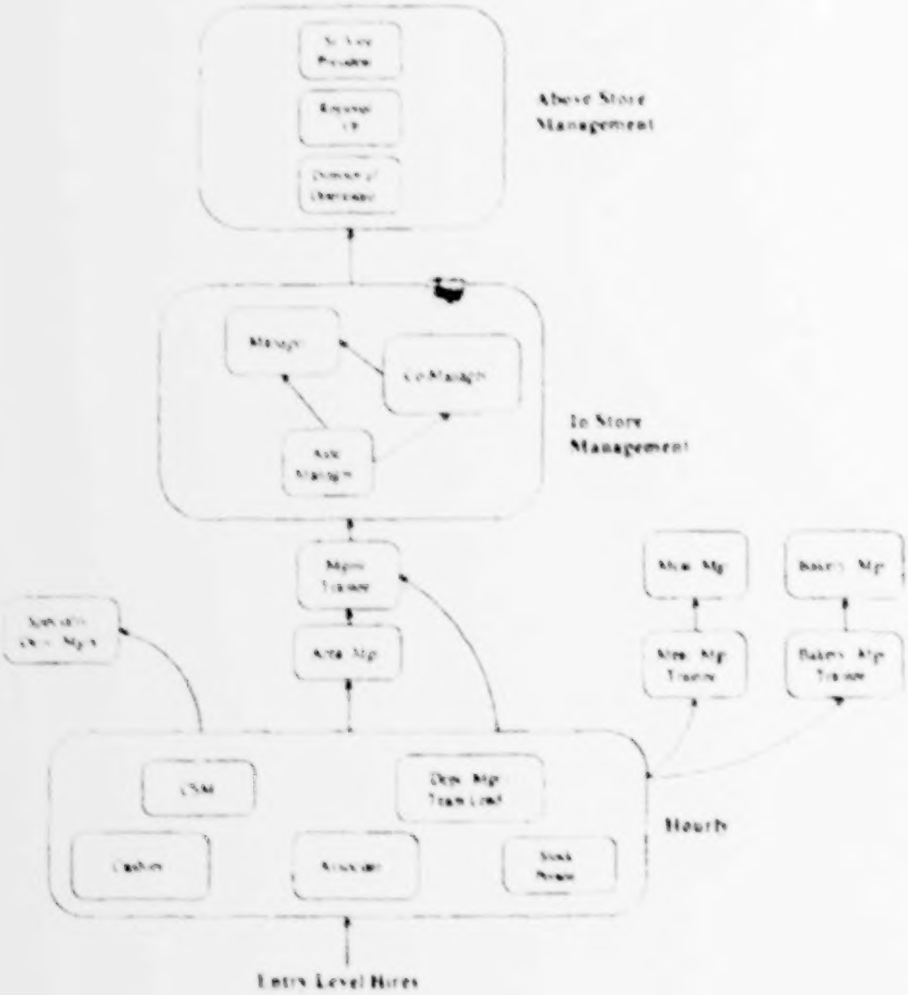
Job Hierarchy at Wal-Mart



Sr. Vice President
Regional VP
District Manager
Above Store Management
Manager
Co-Manager
Asst Manager
In Store Management
Specialty Dept. Mgrs
Mgmt Trainee
Support Mgr
CSM
Dept. Mgr Team Lead
Cashier
Associate
Hourly
Entry Level Hires

Table 2b

Job Hierarchy at Sam's Club



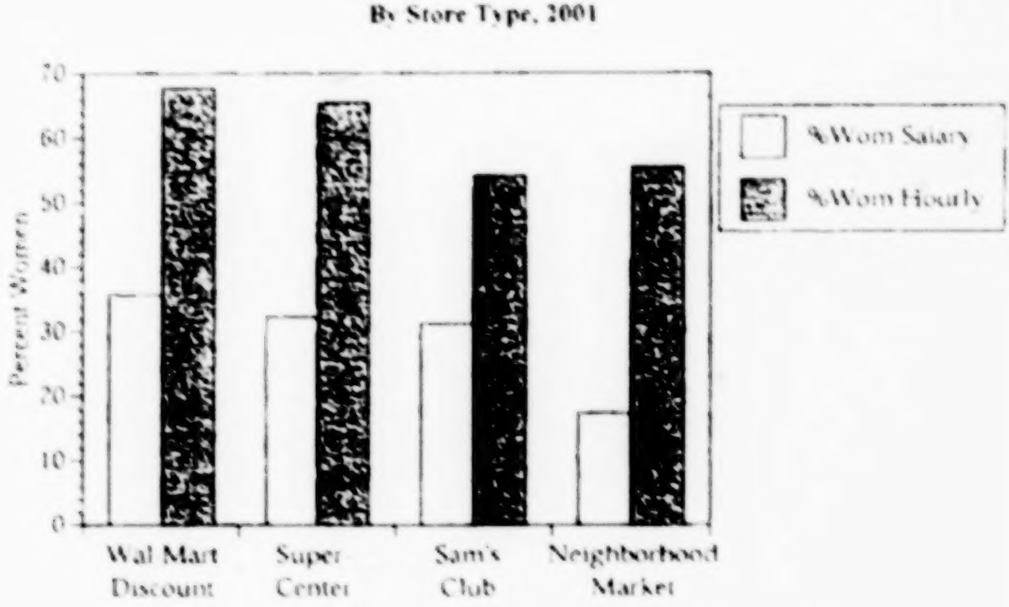
Sr. Vice President
Regional VP
Director of Operations
Above Store Management
Manager
Co-Manager
Asst. Manager
In Store Management
Mgmt Trainee
Area Mgr
Specialty Dept. Mgrs
Meat Mgr
Bakery Mgr
Meat Mgr Trainee
Bakery Mgr Trainee
CSM
Dept. Mgr Team Lead
Cashier
Associate
Stock
Hourly
Entry Level Hires

Gender Hierarchy – Management vs. Hourly

18. Women earn less money than men at Wal-Mart. This fact is due to women working disportionately in the lower paying hourly jobs, and earning less money than men holding the same jobs. Table 3 compares the percentage of women in hourly and salary jobs, in each of the four Wal-Mart store types.

Table 3

Percent Women in Hourly and Salary Jobs By Store Type, 2001



19. Management employees earn much larger salaries than the hourly employees. For example, in 2001, management employees earned about $50,000 on average, compared to the approximately $18,000 earned by hourly employees.[4] Women are disproportionately working in the hourly jobs: about 65% of hourly employees are women while about 33% of management employees are women.

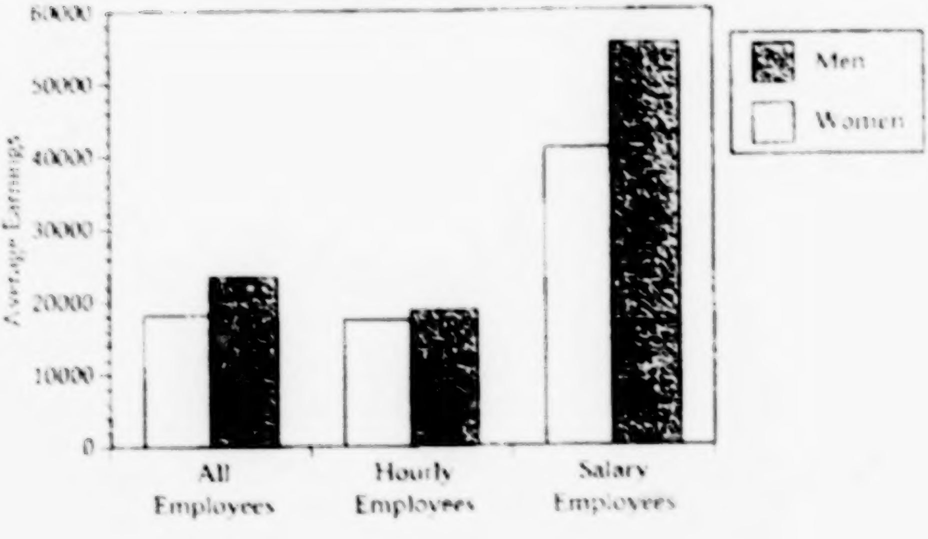
20. Not only are women disproportionately working in the lower paid hourly jobs, but they also earn less than men holding the same job, for nearly all jobs, in each year. Overall, women earned about $5,200 less than men, on the average, in 2001. Within the hourly workforce, women earned about $1,100 less than men, and about $14,500 less among management employees, in 2001.

Table 4

Average Earnings of Men and Women Hourly vs. Salary, 2001



---

[4] Average earnings are restricted to year-end active employees with full-time status who worked over 45 weeks in the year. Approximately 85% of Wal-Mart workforce is full-time.

Average Earnings, 2001
Full-Time Employees at Least 45 Weeks

Group	Total	%Fem	Ave$ M	Ave$ F
Total	508724	67.9	23403.	18184.
Hourly	476813	70.2	18609.	17459.
Salary	31911	33.5	55443.	40905.

Consistency of Gender Hierarchy Across Regions

21. Wal-Mart is administratively broken up into 41 regions[5], each including about 80 stores and headed by a Regional Vice President. The gender hierarchy at Wal-Mart nationwide is repeated across all 41 geographic regions in the country. As of year-end 2001, the percent women in hourly jobs ranged between 52% and 73%, while the percent women in salary jobs ranged between 26% and 42% across regions. In every region, the percent women among hourly employees was higher than the percent women among salaried employees. The following chart illustrates the distribution of percent women among hourly employees compared to the percent women among salaried employees, for each of the 41 regions.

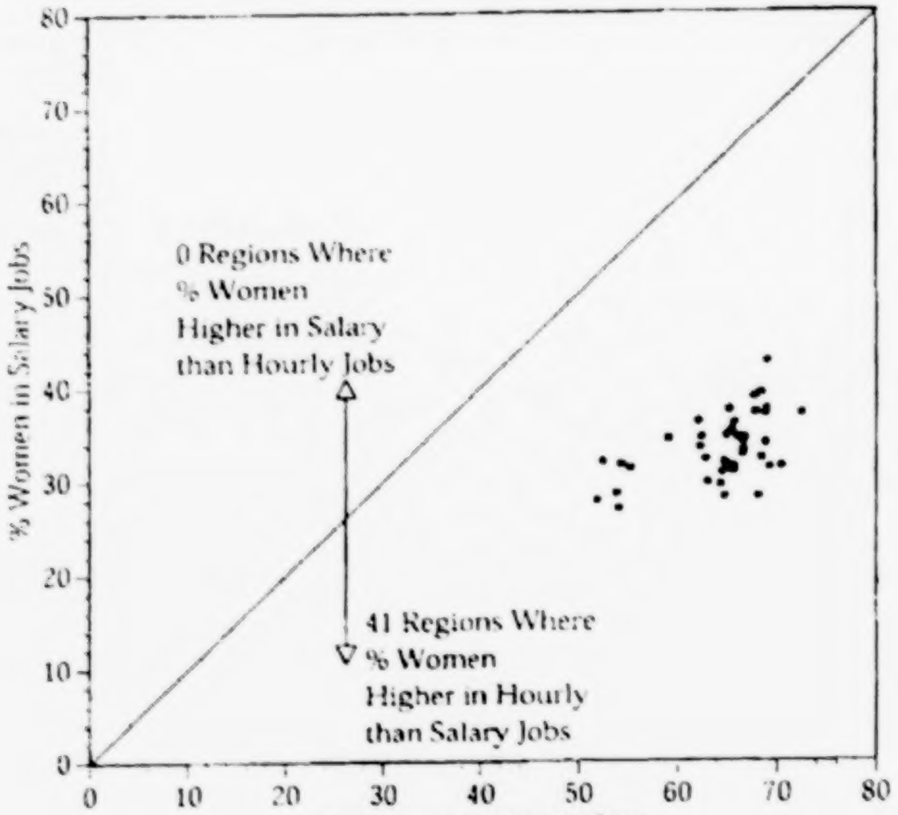
---

[5] There are 6 Sam's regions, and 35 Wal-Mart only regions.

Table 5

Percent Women among Hourly and Salary Employees, 2001

Each Region Represented by a Point on Graph

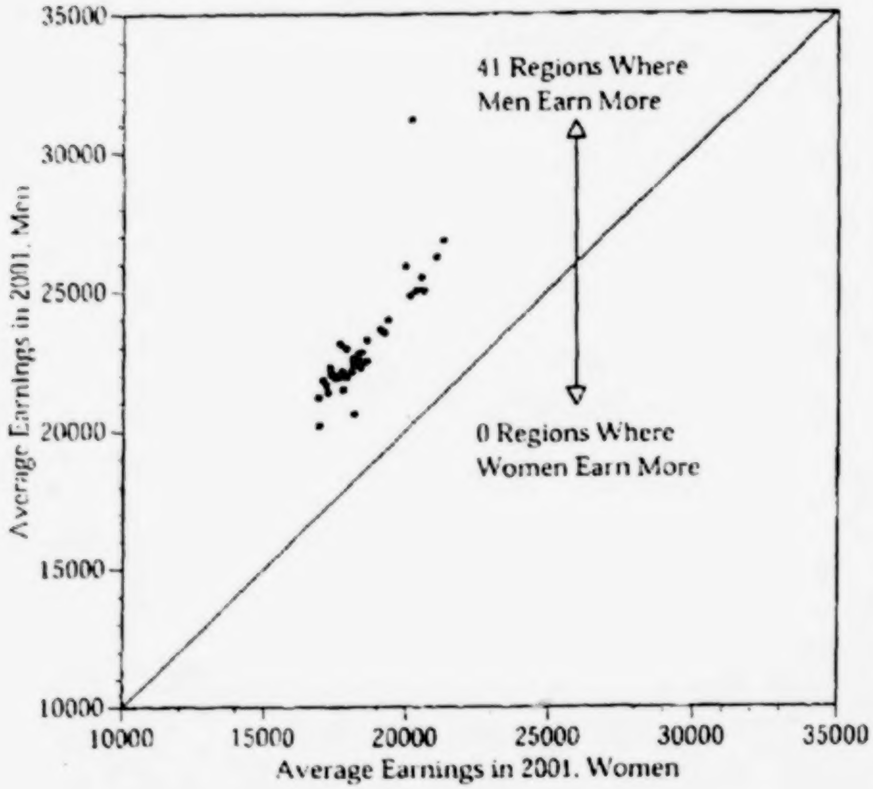


22. The gender hierarchy illustrated in Table 5 leads to lower earnings for women in every region across the country. The following chart shows the distribution of male and female total earnings in 2001, for Full-Time employees active at year-end who worked at least 45 weeks during the year.

Table 6

Average Total Earnings for Men and Women, 2001

Each Region Represented by a Point on Graph

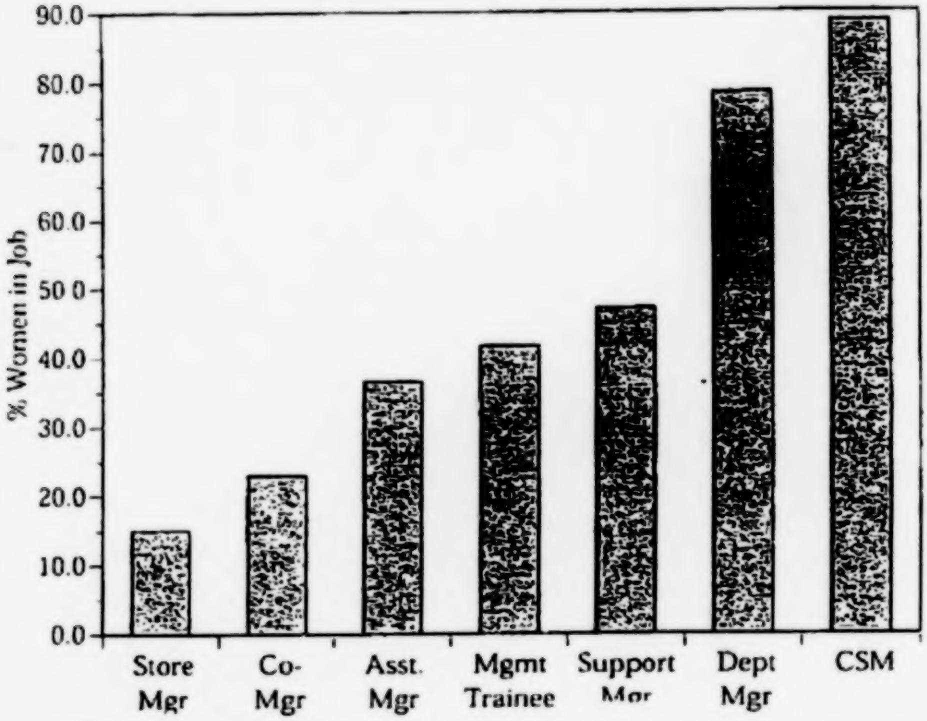


Gender Hierarchy within Management and Hourly Supervisors

23. The pattern of gender hierarchy between management and hourly jobs is further reflected within the management and hourly supervisor positions, as shown in the following table. The Support Manager, Department Manager, and CSM (Customer Service Manager, which is a supervisor of Cashiers) are the main supervisory hourly jobs.

Table 7

Percent Women in Store Management and Hourly Supervisors, 2001



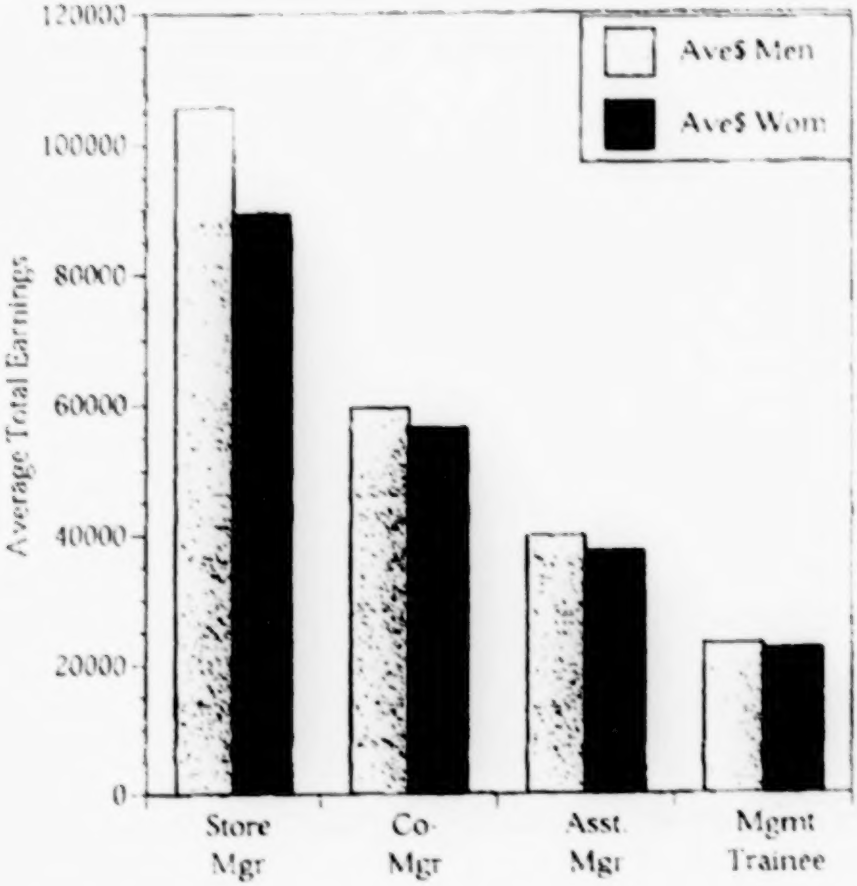
24. Within each of the store management jobs, women earn less than men, on the average, for each year 1999-2001. The following table shows these earnings differences within the store management jobs, for 2001.[6]

---

[6] Restricted to year-end actives employees with full-time status who worked over 45 weeks in the year. See Appendix 7.

Table 8

Average Earnings of Men and Women in Store Management Jobs, 2001



25. The following table shows the average total earnings for men and women holding store management jobs and above store management jobs.

Table 9
Average Earnings Higher-Level Jobs[7]

Job	Totel EES	% Women	Average Earnings Men	Average Earnings Women
Regional VP	39	10.3	419435.	279772.
District Mgr.	508	9.8	239519.	177149.
Manager	3241	14.3	105682.	89280.
Co-Mgr	2336	23.0	59535.	56317.
Asst Mgr	18731	35.7	37390.	37322.
Mgmt Trainee	1203	41.3	23175.	22371.

Earnings Gap – Within Hourly Jobs

26. Table 10 compares average total earnings, and Table 11 compares the average hourly rates for men and women in the four largest hourly jobs. The chart illustrates the shortfall in female earnings and hourly rates compared to men in the same job. A complete list for all jobs, and for part-time and full-time workers, and for the years 1999-2001 is given in Appendices 6a-d and 8a-d.

---

[7] The District Managers included here do not include the Specialty Division District Managers in Tire and Lube, Photo, Shoes and Jewelry, Optical, and Pharmacy. These Specialty Division Managers have a higher percentage of women, but they earn much less money, on the average than the regular District Managers. The Sam's Director of Operations position is included in the District Manager row of this table. A complete summary is given in Appendix 7a.

Table 10

Average Earnings

4 Largest Hourly Jobs, 2001[8]

Job	Totel EES	% Written	Average Earnings Men	Average Earnings Women
000101 Dept Head	63747	78.3	23518.	21709.
000201 Sales Assoc	100003	67.8	16526.	15067.
000469 HD/HM O/N	29333	57.4	19121.	17870.
000501 Cashier	50987	92.5	14525.	13831.
Total All Hourly	476813	70.2	18609.	17459.

---

[8] Restricted to employees active at year-end with full-time status, and who worked at least 45 weeks during the year. The 'HD/HM O/N' job refers to 'Hardlines/Home Area Overnight Associates'.

Table 11

Average Earnings Rates
4 Largest Hourly Jobs, 2001[9]

Job	Totel EES	% Written	Average Earnings Men	Average Earnings Women
000101 Dept Head	63010	78.5	11.13	10.62
000201 Sales Assoc	96539	68.1	8.73	8.27
000469 HD/HM O/N	28408	57.8	9.56	9.29
000501 Cashier	49261	92.6	8.33	8.05
Total All Hourly	463526	70.6	9.55	9.26

27. In hourly jobs overall, and in the largest hourly jobs at Wal-Mart, women earned less total compensation and had lower hourly rates than men. This earnings gap persists, even though women have greater average seniority and higher performance ratings, as described below.

Years With Wal-Mart

28. Women stay in the workforce longer than men at Wal-Mart. This is shown by the fact that the average number of years since date of hire is greater for women than men in the workforce. Among full-time women active at year-end 2001, the average number of years since date of hire was 4.47 years, while the corresponding average for men was only 3.13 years. The average time since hire was greater for women overall, and in salary and hourly jobs separately, for both full-time and part-time employees in 2001. Women had greater time since hire in 97% of the job codes with at least 1000 full time employees active at year-end 2001. The following table shows the average years since hire for full-time employees active at year-end 2001 for the four largest hourly positions. A complete summary for all jobs is given in Appendix 12.

---

[9] Restricted to employees active at year-end with full-time status, and at least 1 year since date of hire.

Table 12

Average Years Since Date of Hire
Full-Time Active Employees at Year-End 2001

Job	Men	Women
Total	3.13 Yrs	4.47 Yrs
All Hourly	2.76	4.39
All Salary	6.69	7.39
Sales Associates	2.53	3.41
Dept Mgr	5.29	7.49
Cashier	1.86	2.53
HD/HM O/N	2.28	3.16

Years to Reach Manager and Asst Manager

29. Not only do women generally have more time with Wal-Mart, and hence have lower turnover rates, it takes women longer to work their way up to an Assistant Manager or Manager position, among those who are eventually promoted into these positions. In particular, the average time since date of hire until first being promoted in an Assistant Manager job was 4.38 years for women, but only 2.86 years for men. The same pattern is true for men and women who eventually became Store Managers: It took women 10.12 years on the average to reach Store Manager, but it took men only 8.64 years.

Performance Ratings — Hourly Employees

30. Wal-Mart uses a database known as the Associate Database to track hourly employee performance review ratings.[10] Historical review ratings are incomplete, prior to 2001. I have analyzed the performance review data for 2001 and have summarized my computations for hourly jobs in Appendix 9. Ratings for hourly employees are given according to a scale of 1, 3, 5, and 7, where 7 is the highest rating. In 2001, among those with ratings, over 95% received ratings of either 3 or 5. Among hourly employees working in 2001 with ratings, women have a higher average rating than men overall, and in 75% of the jobs with over 1000 employees. The following table shows the average ratings for hourly employees in 2001, and for the four largest hourly positions.

Table 13

Average Performance Rating
Hourly Employees, 2001

Job	Men	Women
All Hourly	3.84	3.91
Sales Associates	3.68	3.75
Dept Mgr	4.28	4.38
Cashier	3.58	3.49
HD/HM O/N	3.81	3.96

---

[10] Performance rating data for salaried employees was incomplete until a few days prior to the completion of this report, and therefore has not been utilized for this report.

Gender Distribution by Department

31. Men and women are unevenly distributed in departments. The following table shows the employees and percent women in each of the departments that had at least 5000 employees at year-end 2001. The list is sorted by percent women in the department.

Table 14

Gender Composition By Department, 2001 Departments with At Least 5000 Employees

Department	Total	% Women
34 LADIES SPORTSWEAR	10399	99.2
27 HOSIERY	14061	99.1
19 PIECE GOODS	12931	99.1
46 HEALTH AND BEAUTY AIDS	7901	98.7
26 INFANTS/TODDLERS	8838	98.6
32 JEWELRY	18493	97.3
910 BACK OFFICE	27659	94.2
988 DEMOS	7480	93.0
23 MENS WEAR	9040	92.5
20 DOMESTIC GOODS	7565	92.4
38 DIV 10 D38	10218	91.4
940 DIV 10, D38 & D40	6424	90.8
40 PHARMACY	8347	88.8
25 SHOES	15710	88.0
3 STATIONARY AND BOOKS	6771	87.5
916 MERCH DEPTS: 16,18,56	6078	86.7
98 BAKERY	11621	86.5
80 SERVICE DELI	10804	81.4

49 OPTICAL PROFESSIONAL	7233	79.5
14 HOUSEWARES	7136	79.2
903 OVERNIGHT ASSOCIATES	16853	78.6
990 FRONT END	244251	78.2
2 HEALTH AND BEAUTY AIDS	11398	77.7
85 PHOTO LAB	16047	75.4
Total All Departments	930770	64.0
1 CANDY, TOBACCO, COOKIES	5881	61.0
994 RECEIVING	5178	59.2
7 TOYS	13837	55.9
931 NIGHT RECEIVING	59764	53.6
5 ELECTRONICS	21966	46.7
10 AUTOMOTIVE	10210	42.0
92 GROCERY DRY GOODS	5647	40.3
930 DAY RECEIVING	58245	39.8
16 HORTICULTURE AND ACCESS	23792	39.3
8 PETS AND SUPPLIES	6289	37.6
284 DIV 28 RECEIVING	19057	30.7
9 SPORTING GOODS	15105	30.2
4 PAPER GOODS	9753	19.5
11 HARDWARE	9943	27.7
90 DAIRY PRODUCTS	6525	25.9
93 MEAT	5611	21.9
995 MAINTENANCE	23283	19.6
94 PRODUCE	7780	19.4
996 SECURITY	7748	11.8
37 TBO SERVICE	14706	6.7

Salary Rate Progress after Hire

32. I examined whether the pay rate difference between men and women changed over time, for employees hired in hourly positions in the same year. I examined this for all hourly hires during 1996[11], and followed their progress in salary rate through 2001, and separately for hourly hires into the same job position. I repeated this for 1998 hires. The following chart shows the initial difference in starting hourly rate for men and women hourly hires in 1996, and how this pay gap increased over time during the period 1996 through 2001, for employees remaining in the Wal-Mart workforce. The chart shows the results for all employees hired into hourly jobs in 1996, and for those hired as Sales Associates and Cashiers separately, the jobs with the greatest number of hires. About 65% of new hires start in one of these two positions. The complete summary of this analysis is given in Appendix 11.

33. As shown on the chart below, 1996 women hired in hourly jobs in 1996 were paid $0.35 per hour less than men hired in hourly jobs that year. For those 1996 hourly hires who stayed at Wal-Mart through 2001, the gender gap between men and women increased to $1.16 per hour, on the average. For 1996 hires into the Sales Associate, the largest job, the shortfall in average hourly rate for women when hired was $0.20 per hour. Among employees hired into Sales Associate jobs in 1996 who were still active employees at year-end 2001, men were being paid $1.17 more than women. I also examined the progress of 1998 hires, and found a similar pattern of increasing salary rate gap over time between men and women hired in same year and job.

---

[11] 1996 is the first year for which complete data on hires is available, and 2001 is the latest full year with data.

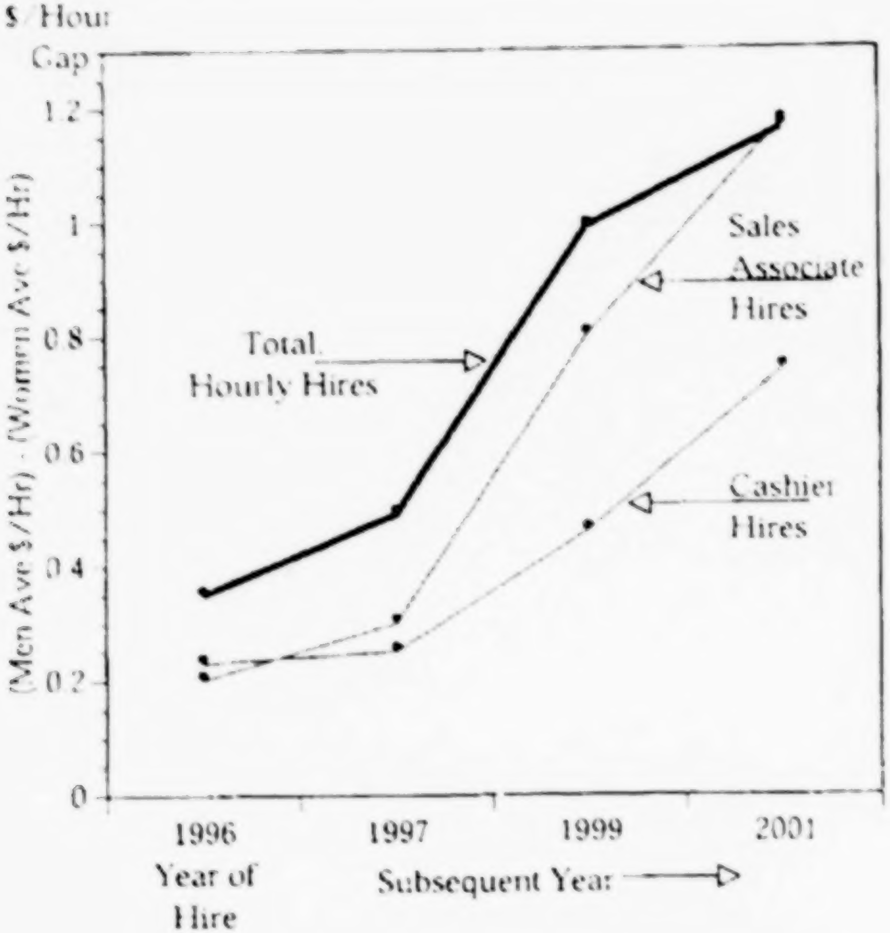
Table 15

Gender Gap in Hourly Rate Over Time for 1996 Hires Into Hourly Jobs



Changes in Stores, Districts and Regions

34. Most employees stay in the same store when moving up through hourly positions. Moves into the position of Management Trainee, and higher level positions usually involve a change in store, or even a change in district and region. The following table shows the percent of times when an employee changed store, district, or region when being promoted into the target jobs listed in the table.

Table 16

Percent of Promotions[12] Where Employee Changed Store, District, or region, 1996 and later

Target Job	Change Store	Change District	Change Region
Store Manager	91.2%	69.4%	35.6%
Co-Manager	81.3	57.0	32.6
Assistant Manager	63.3	40.2	22.0
Management Trainee	62.2	32.5	17.0
Area Manager, Sam's	17.4	5.4	2.8
Support Manager	4.8	7.6	6.0

35. I also examined the number of times store management employees changed store, district, or region after first entering those positions. This is summarized in the following table.

---

[12] These include moves during 1996 or later, and also lateral moves classified as promotions in PeopleSoft.

Table 17

Number of Changes in Store, District and Region After Entering Store Management Jobs

	Changed Store		Changed District		Change Region
Target Job	≥ Once	Ave	≥ Once	Ave	>1 Once	Ave
Store Manager	97.8%	3.60	88.7%	2.77	67.1%	1.72
Co-Manager	95.8	2.96	83.0	2.22	61.5	1.31
Assistant Manager	85.4	2.80	68.9	1.98	49.6	1.17
Management Trainee	86.2	3.04	68.7	2.04	47.8	1.16
Area Manager	48.5	1.15	31.6	0.64	26.5	0.50
Support Manager	36.3	0.82	34.0	0.64	24.4	0.41

C. INFERENTIAL STATISTICS

Statistical Methodology

36. In statistics a distinction is made between descriptive and inferential statistics. Descriptive statistics simply report or summarize counts, percentages, or averages, based upon some given data set. Descriptive statistics speak for themselves, they make no assumptions about the underlying population or how the data was selected; there is no probability model assumed. Inferential statistics attempt to measure whether certain disparities, calculated from descriptive statistics, are within the range of what might be expected if variation were due simply to random fluctuation.

37. Inferential statistics ask the question, "Is the observed disparity consistent with what would be expected from random fluctuation?" To answer this question requires some definition of random fluctuation. Random fluctuation is usually represented by a random selection process, where all individuals in a certain pool are assumed to have the same chance of selection. The probability model determines which results are expected and which results are unlikely.

38. The likelihood that a disparity as big as the one actually observed will occur by random fluctuation is called the significance probability. If this probability is very low then doubt is raised as to whether the disparity is the result of random fluctuation expected from the model.

39. The significance probability of an observed result can be expressed in terms of a Z-value, which gives the size of the disparity in terms of standard deviations. Significance probabilities and Z-values are equivalent. That is, one can be determined from the other. A Z-value of 1.96 indicates that a disparity has 1 chance in 20 of occurring by random fluctuation. A Z-value of 2.58 (+ or -) indicates that a disparity has 1 chance in 100 of occurring by random fluctuation. The following table summarizes the appropriate correspondence between Z-values and significance probabilities:

Table 18

Z-Values and Probability of Occurrence

Z-Value	Probability of Occurrence
1.96	1 chance in 20 (.05)
2.58	1 chance in 100 (.01)
3.08	1 chance in 500 (.002)

3.3	1 chance in 1,000 (.001)
3.9	1 chance in 10,000 (.0001)
5.0	1 chance in 1,000,000 (.000001)
6.0	1 chance in 100,000,000 (.00000001)
20.0	Less than 1 chance in 10 to 88th power

D. ANALYSIS OF PROMOTIONS

Methodology

40. As described above, women are under-represented in management positions compared to their representation in the hourly workforce. Wal-Mart has a strong "promote from within" policy, as shown by its statement that "72% of all Salaried Management started as hourly Associates"[13]. Moreover, most hourly Associates start in the entry level positions of Sales Associate or Cashier. Employees reach Salaried Management positions by first becoming a Management Trainee, which leads directly into the Assistant Manager position. Higher level store management positions of Manager and Co-Manager are filled almost entirely by employees who have been Assistant Managers. The large disparity between the percentage of women in store management positions, and in the hourly workforce is a result of Wal-Mart's failing to promote women at the same rate it promotes similarly situated men. The following sections will describe my analysis of this pattern for promotion into several positions above the entry level hourly workforce.

---

[13] Wal-Mart Stores career opportunities document, Bates WMHO 714869.

41. The promotion analysis of moves into a particular target job compares the percentage of women among those promoted into that job, to the percentage of women in the availability pool for that promotion. To perform this analysis, it is first necessary to specify the target job, and identify the promotions into that job. The definition of the target jobs, and promotion into these jobs, is detailed in Appendix 2. Basically, a person is counted as being promoted into a target job if his or her previous job is a lower position, and his or her job history data shows a change code of 'PRO', indicating that he or she was promoted.[14] Secondly, it is necessary to identify the percentage of women in the availability pool for the promotion.

Determining the Availability Pool for Promotions

42. There are two methods that are often used for determining the availability pool for a promotion. One method is to use applicant flow data, and a second method is to determine the availability pool from the incumbents in historical feeder jobs for the promotion. Using applicant flow data to determine availability is useful when all job vacancies are posted, complete data is maintained on applicants and selections, and the fairness of the job posting system is not contested. If these criteria are not met, then it may be impossible to use applicant flow data, or using applicant flow data to determine availability pools will not give meaningful results.

---

[14] Promotions into Support Manager (1050) are defined as any move from a lower job, since Wal-Mart does not use the 'PRO' code for promotions into Support Manager.

43. Wal-Mart has two systems used to collect some applicant data. Their Job Posting System is used for some hourly job vacancies, and their Management Career Selection System referred to as MCS) is used for some Management job vacancies. These two systems provide no useful data for analyzing promotions into the upper level hourly supervisory, and store management positions considered in this report. The following sections describe the inadequacies of these two databases.

Job Posting Data

44. The job posting data identifies applicants for some hourly jobs, and those who were selected for openings.[15] Support Manager is the only target job analyzed in this report that is included in the job posting data. However, the data included in the job posting system for Support Manager contains only a fraction of the vacancies that were actually filled, as determined from the PeopleSoft personnel database. The job posting data shows only 4504 promotions into Support Manager for the period 1997-2002. However, the PeopleSoft data shows there were 22,388 promotions into Support Manager for the same period[16]. The number of job posting acceptances into Support Manager represents only 20% of the PeopleSoft promotions into Support Manager.

---

[15] See February 12, 2002, Steve Catlett letter. The applicant table was named "intvwrq" and identified as Interview_request" table, and the selectees were identified as those with nonblank "offer made date."

[16] Data for 2002 goes through the 1st quarter only.

The following table provides a breakdown of the applicants and acceptances for Support Manager vacancies found in the job posting data, compared to the actual number of promotions found in the PeopleSoft data.

Table 19

Job Posting Data For Promotions into Support Manager Compared to PeopleSoft Data

		Job Posting		PeopleSoft
Job Title	Year	Bids	Accepts	Moves
Support Mgr	1997	1029	173	4316
Support Mgr	1998	7426	729	4559
Support Mgr	1999	9209	823	3939
Support Mgr	2000	12952	1218	4630
Support Mgr	2001	13385	1315	4153
Support Mgr	2002	1155	246	791
Support Mgr	Total	45146	4504	22388

MCS Data

45. The MCS system was intended to allow "Assistant, Store and District Management the opportunity to view and apply for field management openings throughout"[17] the company. Thus, the system was not intended to collecting applicant information for Management Trainee, Assistant Manager and Co-Manager vacancies[18]. MCS data contains no data for any management positions in Sam's stores[19]. The MCS allows for the collection of information on applicants for vacancies and acceptances.[20] The table below shows the number of MCS applicants and selections compared to the actual number of moves in the PeopleSoft data.

---

[17] See Management Career Selection Guide, Bates WMHO 217238.

[18] See deposition of Debra Kintzele, October 2, 2002, page 41-42.

Table 20

MCS Applicants by Job Code[21] 1997-2002

Number of Applicants	MCS Accepts	PeopleSoft Moves	Target Job
41000	3707	4821	Store Manager[22]
0	0	4124	Co-Manager
641	113	24604	Assistant Manager
0	0	15043	Management Trainee

---

[19] See deposition of Jeffrey Reeves, January 14, 2003, page 159, lines 22-23.

[20] From MCS tables job appnew, app offernew, job_slotnew, job openingnew and app acceptnew. These were used to link job_opening id to job_slot id to MCS jobcode. Promotion occurs if Accept indicator is "Y".

[21] The MCS system uses different codes to identify jobs than are used in the PeopleSoft data. Defendant provided a mapping of PeopleSoft to MCS job codes included in a June 24, 2002 email from defendant's counsel. That mapping was used for MCS summaries by job appearing in this report.

[22] PeopleSoft Store Manager moves in Tables 20 and 21 include lateral moves where employee prior job was store manager, but there was a change in store or a promotion was indicated in the job history data. Moves into Store Manager at Sam's are excluded.

46. The MCS system contains no information about how vacancies in Management Trainee and Co-Manager positions were filled. The information on Assistant Manager vacancies is negligible. For Store Manager, the total number of acceptances was 3,687 during 1998-2002. There were a total of 3,980 moves to Store Manager in the Wal-Mart data in PeopleSoft. Table 21 below provides a breakdown of MCS applicants for Store Manager by year.

Table 21

MCS Applicants For Store Manager and Assistant Manager by Year

		MCS		PeopleSoft
Job Title	Year	Bids	Accepts	Moves
Manager	1998	8807	755	803
Manager	1999	10121	910	993
Manager	2000	9088	933	1035
Manager	2001	10585	979	1054
Manager	2002	1832	110	95
Manager	Total	40433	3687	3980

47. The MCS system does not give a true measure of applicant flow for the positions of store Manager and above. To get a true measure of applicant flow, it would be necessary to have an open bidding system where employees would determine whether they wanted to come forward and bid for a vacancy, and the vacancy would be filled from these applicants. This is not the case with the MCS system, since "positions may be filled outside of the Management Career Selection process",[23] and individual exceptions may be made to stated eligibility criteria.[24] Moreover, the system requires pre-screening of applicants before they can be considered for promotion.[25]

---

[23] See Management Career Selection Guide, Bates WMHO 217239, bottom of page 2.

48. Due to the limitations of the Job Posting and MCS system described in the previous paragraphs, availability pools in the promotion analysis are determined from the incumbents in historical feeder jobs for the promotion.

49. The availability pool for a particular promotion is constructed to represent the group of employees who are similarly situated to the person promoted. In my analysis, I have specified employees as similarly situated if they worked in the same job and geographic area as the person promoted, as of the year-end prior to the promotion. Geographic area is taken to be district or store, depending on the target job. In order to determine the appropriate geographic area to be used in restricting the availability pool for a particular promotion, I relied on the historic pattern of changes in store, districts and regions for employees being promoted into each of the target jobs, which is described in a previous paragraph. This is a conservative approach that may mask some discrimination due to differential assignment of men and women to stores or jobs with greater earnings or promotion potential.

50. Wal-Mart policy is that all hourly employees are eligible for a Management Trainee position.

---

[24] See Management Career Selection Guide, Bates WMHO 217238, middle of page 1. See also

[25] See deposition of Debra Kintzele, October 2, 2002, page 157 through top of page 159.

If this pool were used, instead of controlling for job, a much higher female availability percentage would result, and consequently the shortfall in female promotions discussed below would be greater. This also would be true if the availability pool were defined to include hourly supervisors such as Department Head, Customer Service Manager, and Support Manager, instead of controlling for historic feeder jobs.

51. By using prior job held by person promoted in determining the feeder pool for that promotion, any discrimination by Wal-Mart in selecting the job positions from which promotions are made would not be reflected in the promotion analysis. To illustrate this point, consider a hypothetical example where there were two jobs, one with all men and one with all women. Assume that employees in each of these jobs were equally qualified for promotion. If Wal-Mart always selected from the job with all men, then the availability pool would be 100% male, and there would be no disparities observed in the promotion analysis controlling for job.

52. The promotion analyses described in the following paragraphs give results for Wal-Mart and Sam's combined. The results for Sam's alone are discussed in a separate section below. Appendix 13e-h includes Sam's promotion summaries. All of the promotion analyses include promotions during 1997 through first quarter 2002. Promotions during 1996 are not included, because determining the availability pool would require knowing incumbents in 1995, and 1996 is the earliest year of complete data.

Promotions into Support Manager

53. Support Manager is the highest level hourly supervisory position below Management Trainee, and many Support Managers are eventually promoted into Management Trainee and higher positions. Sales Associates and Department Managers are the largest feeder jobs into the Support Manager job. Women comprise about 70% of the Sales Associates and Department Managers, but only about 45% of the Support Managers. About 95% of employees promoted into Support Manager positions stay in the same store when promoted. Accordingly, in the analysis of promotion into Support Manager, I have used store as a geographic control, thus considering employees in the same job, and same store to be similarly situated for promotion.

54. The analysis of promotions into Support Manager shows that women received 2891 promotions fewer than would be expected from their representation in the availability pool, controlling for feeder job, store, and year of move. This disparity has a Z-value of -54.38 indicating a high degree of statistical significance, which is practically impossible to occur by random fluctuation.

Table 22

Analysis of Promotions Into Support Manager, Wal-Mart

	Promotions			%
Year	Tot	Women		Women In Pool	Loss	Z-Value
1997	4316	2094	48.5	62.6	-608.2	-25.61
1998	4559	2161	47.4	61.4	-637.5	-26.59
1999	3939	1695	43.0	56.6	-535.6	-24.20
2000	4630	1941	41.9	54.2	-569.7	-23.59
2001	4153	1664	40.1	50.8	-446.1	-19.84
2002	791	294	37.2	49.1	-94.2	-9.02
Total	22388	9849	44.0	56.9	-2891.4	-54.38

Promotions into Management Trainee

55. The Management Trainee position is a transitional job leading directly into an Assistant Manager assignment, after the employee has completed a 4-5 month training program. Employees who were promoted into Management Trainee positions changed stores 62% of the time when being promoted. Thus, when Wal-Mart promotes an hourly employee into a Management Trainee position in a particular store, the company usually looks outside that store to select an employee to fill the vacancy, and sometimes it goes out of the district.

56. I have performed a promotion analysis comparing the percentage of women among those promoted into Management Trainee positions with the percentage of women in the available pool of hourly workers. The available pool of hourly workers for a particular promotion into a Management Trainee job consists of those employees who held the same job as the person promoted, and who worked in the same district, at the end of the year prior to the promotion. For example, if an employee was promoted into a Management Trainee position in 1998, had previously held a Sales Associate position (201) and was working in District 26, then the availability pool for that promotion would be the group of employees in the Associate position in District 26 at year-end 1997. In statistical terms, this definition of an availability pool for the promotions is referred to as "controlling for feeder job, district[26], and year of move". Thus, employees in the same availability pool for a promotion are similarly situated in that they held the same job, in the same district, at the end of year prior to the promotion.

---

[26] In the promotion analyses that include a control for district, districts are defined separately for Sam's and non-Sam's. For example, Sam's employees with district=1 are considered to be in a separate district from non-Sam's employees with district=1.

57. The next table below summarizes the results of the analysis of promotions into Management Trainee jobs. Women received 2952 promotions fewer than expected according to their representation in the availability pools, during 1997-2002. The Z-value corresponding to this disparity is —60.81, indicating a statistically significant shortfall that is virtually impossible to occur by chance, if promotions were selected at random from the availability pool.

Table 23

Analysis of Promotions Into Management Trainee, Wal-Mart

		Promotions		% Women
Year	Tot	Women		in Pool	Loss	Z-Value
1997	1569	640	40.8	60.0	-302.0	-20.11
1998	2390	958	40.1	59.3	-460.3	-23.67
1999	2946	1142	38.8	59.4	-607.7	-28.34
2000	4003	1593	39.8	59.2	-777.6	-31.27
2001	3463	1407	40.6	59.9	-668.5	-28.25
2002	672	273	40.6	60.9	-136.3	-12.69
Total	15043	6013	40.0	59.6	-2952.5	-60.81

Promotions into Co-Manager

58. Larger stores have a Co-Manager position, which is above the Assistant Manager but below Manager within the store. Nearly all Co-Manager vacancies are filled by promotion of an Assistant Manager, and involve a change in store over 80% of the time. The analysis of promotions into Co-

Manager controls for district, job, and year of promotion.

59. Women received 346 promotions fewer than expected according to their representation in the availability pools, during 1997-2002.[27] The Z-value corresponding to this disparity is -13.81, indicating a statistically significant shortfall that is virtually impossible to occur by chance, if promotions were selected at random from the availability pool.

Table 24

Analysis of Promotions Into Co-Manager, Wal-Mart

	Promotions			% Women
Year	Tot	Women		in Pool	Loss	Z-Value
1997	533	94	17.6	28.1	-55.8	-5.84
1998	652	118	18.1	29.5	-74.2	-6.96
1999	899	205	22.8	31.3	-76.4	-5.90
2000	1017	237	23.3	31.2	-80.4	-6.15
2001	868	209	24.1	30.2	-52.8	-4.46
2002	155	38	24.5	28.9	-6.8	-1.35
Total	4124	901	21.8	30.2	-364.4	-13.01

Promotions into Store Manager

60. Each store has a Store Manager who is the person most responsible for running the store. About 60% of Manager vacancies are filled by promotion of a Co-Manager, and the remainder mostly are filled by Assistant Managers. The promotion involves a change in store over 90% of the time. The analysis of promotions into Manager controls for district, job, and year of promotion.

---

[27] Data for 2002 includes only the 1st quarter.

61. Women received 155 promotions fewer than expected according to their representation in the availability pools, during 1997-2002. The Z-value corresponding to this disparity is -7.72, indicating a statistically significant shortfall.

Table 25

Analysis of Promotions Into Store Manager

		Promotions		% Women
Year	Tot	Women		in Pool	Loss	Z-Value
1997	607	126	20.8	24.3	-21.4	-2.53
1998	624	100	16.0	20.4	-27.3	-3.56
1999	706	103	14.6	19.9	-37.6	-4.74
2000	758	142	18.7	23.1	-32.9	-3.35
2001	809	153	18.9	23.2	-35.0	-3.38
2002	63	14	22.2	24.4	-1.4	-0.45
Total	3567	638	17.9	22.3	-155.7	-7.72

Promotions at Sam's

62. The above analysis looked at total Wal-Mart, including Sam's. I have also analyzed promotions into higher level hourly and store management positions at Sam's alone. The analyses include promotions into Store Manager. Co-Manager, Management Trainee, and Area Managers[28], in Sam's stores. There are statistically significant shortfalls for promotions into Area Manager, Management Trainee, and Store Manager at Sam's, but not for promotions

---

[28] The position of Area Manager is only used in Sam's, and is similar to a Support Manager at non-Sam's stores, in that they are both the highest position below Management Trainee. The job codes for Sam's Area Managers are 043350, 043360, and 043550. The job code 043500, with title 'Area Mgr' is actually an Assistant Manager position at Wal-Mart.

into Co-Manager. However, the position of Co-Manager is much less frequently used at Sam's than at regular Wal-Mart stores. For example, the ratio of the number of Co-Managers to Store Managers at regular Wal-Mart stores is about 4:5, while at Sam's this ratio is less than 1:5. Moreover, there are relatively few promotions into Co-Manager at Sam's, compared to the number at Wal-Mart stores. The results of the analysis for Sam's alone are given in Appendices 13e-h.

Consistency of Promotion Disparities Across Regions

63. The pattern of under-promotion of women into Support Managers, Management Trainee, Co-Manager and Manager jobs is consistent in nearly every geographic region at Wal-Mart. The following table summarizes the number of regions that have a shortfall, or excess, of promotions of women.

Table 26

Count of Promotion Disparities Across Regions
Minus column gives number of regions where women received fewer promotions than expected

	All Regions			Regions Where Disparity Statistically Significant
Target Position	Total	Plus	Minus	Total	Plus	Minus
Support Manager	40	2	38	35	0	35
Management Trainee	41	0	41	40	0	40
Co-Manager	40	3	37	22	0	22
Store Manager	40	6	34	13	0	13

For promotions into Support Manager, women received fewer promotions than expected in 95% of regions across the country. For promotions into Management Trainee, women received fewer promotions than expected in 100% of regions across the country, and in 40 out of 41 regions the female shortfall was statistically significant. For each target job, there was no region that showed a statistically significant excess of promotions of women.

E. ANALYSIS OF TOTAL EARNINGS AND HOURLY RATES

Methodology

64. Descriptive statistics of the Wal-Mart workforce indicate that women are paid less than men even within the same job[29]. These earnings differences could be due to extraneous factors such as how much seniority a person has, whether a person is a part time or full time employee, which store a person works in or how many weeks during the year the person worked. For example, if women generally have less seniority than men, this could explain why they earn less than men, or women might earn less because more of them are part time than men.

65. Total annual earnings[30] were analyzed to determine if women are paid less than men even after taking into account extraneous factors, using a statistical technique known as regression analysis. Regression analysis is widely used by statisticians to

---

[29] See Appendix 6.

[30] Total annual earnings includes three types of earnings found in the yearend payroll data: regular, overtime and other earnings.

make comparisons between male and female earnings, while accounting for the effects of any extraneous factors. In a regression model, total earnings are assumed to be a function of the independent variables plus a random error.

The basic steps in this procedure are outlined as follows:

a. Use all the data to estimate the function of the independent variables, including gender.

b. Determine the 'gender coefficient' of the resulting regression function.

c. Determine if the gender coefficient is statistically significant.

66. A negative gender coefficient indicates that women are compensated less than similarly situated men. Negative coefficients may be expressed as a percentage difference. For example, if the coefficient as a percentage were 10%, this means that, all other factors being equal, a woman earns 10% less than a man. Statistical significance is determined by a t-value which measures the size of the gender coefficient in standard deviation units. For large sample sizes, t-values larger than 2.00 are considered statistically significant. If the gender coefficient is statistically significant, the disparity cannot be explained by chance variation and the coefficient measures a real difference between male and female earnings.

Total Annual Earnings Comparisons

67. The initial regression[31] of total annual earnings included variables which account for how long an employee has worked for the company, how many weeks the employee worked during the year, whether the employee was hired or terminated during the year, whether the employee was full time or part time, which store the employee worked in, whether the employee was ever hired into an retail store management position, and whether the employee is a woman. Regressions were run for each year, 1996-2001, and were restricted to non-probationary employees in a retail store job who worked and had earnings[32]. The results of the initial regressions show that women are paid at least 9.3% less than similarly situated men in every year. These results are highly significant with t-values more extreme than -120.5 in every year. The initial regression shows that the earnings difference between men and women is significant even after taking into account factors such as seniority, weeks worked, part time status and store location.

---

[31] Referred to as model 1 in Appendix 15.

68. The initial regression was also run separately for hourly and salaried employees[33]. The results for hourly employees show that women are paid at least 6.7% less than comparable men and are highly significant with t-values more extreme than -89.3 in every year. The results for salaried employees show that women are paid at least 12.6% less than similarly situated men in every year. These results are highly significant with t-values more extreme than -24.6 in every year. These models show that the [32] Technical descriptions of regression models are given in Appendix 14.

---

[33] Referred to model 1h for hourly and model 1s for salaried in Appendix 15.

earnings difference between men and women are more pronounced among salaried than hourly employees.

69. A second regression model was run, with job position added as a control factor in addition to those included in the initial model. This second model[34] measures differences in earnings within the same job position. As noted earlier in this report, women are under-represented in management jobs and have significant shortfalls in management promotions. Therefore, job positions held by women may be the result of discrimination and would be a tainted variable. Accordingly, regressions including job as a control factor will not reflect any discrimination due to failure to promote women. Nevertheless, the job that a person held was added as a variable to the initial model in order to explore whether earnings differences persist within jobs, notwithstanding the possible discrimination in job positions. The results show that women are paid at least 4.5% less than comparable men in every year, and are highly significant with t-values more extreme than -54.9 in every year. Thus, women still earn less than similarly situated men even after taking into account the job they held.[35]

70. The second model was also run separately for hourly and salaried employees[36]. The results for hourly employees show that women are still paid at

---

[34] Referred to as model 2 in Appendix 15.

[35] The variable of "Store" may also be a tainted, because female managers may be assigned to stores with less earnings potential.

[36] Referred to as models 1h and 1s in Appendix 15.

least 4.5% less than similarly situated men in each year, and are highly significant with t-values more extreme than -53.84 in every year. The results for salaried employees show that women are paid least 5.8% less than similarly situated men, and are highly significant with t-values more extreme than -12.1 in every year. Thus, among hourly and salaried employees, women earn less than similarly situated men even after taking into account the job they held.

71. Job review ratings for hourly employees take on values 1, 3, 5, and 7, with 7 being the best rating. As mentioned earlier in this report, ratings of 3 and 5 comprise over 95% of the ratings given. To assess the effect of job review ratings on annual earnings, variables for the four rating values were added to the second model.[37] This third model[38] was run only for year 2001 when ratings data was most complete and excluded about 25% of hourly employees because they did not have a valid rating. The third model shows that women are paid 6.1% less than comparable men in 2001 with a highly significant t-value of -77.35. The 6.1% figure is higher than disparities when ratings were not taken into account, which is consistent with the earlier finding that women tend to have higher ratings than men.

---

[37] Performance review data for management employees was not used in any regressions, because the data provided was incomplete until a few days prior to the completion of this report, and because performance ratings are not used for determining pay for Managers and Co-Managers.

[38] Referred to as model 3.

72. Table 27 below summarizes all regressions on total earnings. Details by year are attached as Appendix 15.

Table 27

Summary of Annual Earnings Regressions

Initial model controls for seniority, weeks worked, store, PT/FT status, whether hired or terminated during year, whether a management hire. All models exclude probationary employees and employees who did not work or had zero earnings.

Employees Included	Model	Range of Yearly Results, 1996-2001 Percent Difference	t-value
Hourly & Salary	1 Initial	9.37% to 10.52%	-120.59 to -147.87
Hourly only	1h Initial	6.75% to 8.14%	-89.36 to -115.64
Salary only	1s Initial	12.63% to 14.72%	-24.62 to -37.04
Hourly & Salary	2 Adds job	4.54% to 5.60%	-54.96 to -71.37
Hourly only	2h Adds job	4.54% to 5.58%	-53.84 to -69.56
Salary only	2s Adds job	5.46% to 7.07%	-12.17 to -20.05
Hourly only	3h Adds job and ratings	6.14%	-77.35*

* Year 2001 only, restricted to hourly employees with valid review rating.

Hourly Pay Rate Comparisons

73. In the preceding regressions for hourly employees, total annual earnings were significantly less for women than for men. Total earnings for hourly employees are affected by regular and overtime hours worked and by hourly pay rates. To investigate differences in pay rates, regressions on dollar per hour rates were run for non-probationary hourly retail store employees who were active at year-end. These first regressions on hourly rates[39] control for how long an employee has worked for the company, whether the employee was hired during the year, whether the employee was full time or part time, which store the employee worked in, whether the employee was ever hired into a retail store management position, what job the employee held, and whether the employee is a woman[40]. Gender coefficients for these regressions are expressed in dollars and represent the dollar difference in hourly rates between women and men. For example, if the gender coefficient is -0.30, then this means that hourly women earn $0.30 per hour less than similarly situated men.

74. The hourly rate regressions show that women are paid at least $0.18 per hour less than similarly situated men, and results are highly significant with t-values more extreme than -62.3 in every year[41]. Also, the disparities get steadily worse from 1997 to 2001 when women were paid $0.18 per

---

[39] Referred to as model 4h.

[40] Details of the regression models are given in Appendix 14.

[41] Details of these regressions are given in Appendix 15.

hour less than men in 1997 to $0.34 less per hour in 2001. These regressions show that the hourly pay rate difference between men and women cannot be explained by factors such as seniority, part time status, store location and job held.

75. Job review ratings were added to the hourly rate regressions to investigate whether ratings could explain differences in hourly pay rates. This second model on hourly rates[42] was run only for year 2001 when ratings were most complete. The results show that women are paid $0.37 per hour less than comparable men in 2001, and are highly significant with a t-value of -102.65. Thus, women are paid at a lower hourly rate than similarly situated men even after taking into account both the job they held and their job review ratings, as well as the basic factors in the model. The $0.37 disparity is higher than the disparity when ratings are not taken into account, which is again consistent with the earlier finding that women tend to have higher ratings than men. Table 28 below summarizes the regressions on hourly pay rates, and details by year are given in Appendix 15.

---

[42] Referred to as model 5h.

Table 28

Summary of Pay Rate Regressions on Hourly Employees

All models control for seniority, store, PT/FT status, whether hired during year, whether a management hire, job held. All models exclude probationary employees, those not active at year end, and those without a pay rate.

		Range of Yearly Results, 1996-2001
Employees Included	Model	$/hour Difference	t-value
Hourly only	4h Has job	$0.18 to $0.34	-62.30 to -101.18
Hourly only	5h Has job and rating	$0.37	-102.65*

* Year 2001 only, restricted to hourly employees with valid review rating.

Consistency in Regressions Across Regions

76. In all regressions on total annual earnings and hourly pay rates, the gender coefficients are statistically highly significant because actual earnings and pay rates for women tend to be lower than what would be predicted for similarly situated men. To determine if women are paid less or at a lower rate consistently across regions, the average female difference between actual and predicted values was computed for every region in year 2001. For every regression model in this report, these averages were negative in 100% of all regions (41 out of 41), indicating that women are earning less and are paid at a lower hourly rate than similarly situated men in every region. Details by region are given in Appendix 16.

F. CONCLUSION

77. Based on my analyses of Wal-Mart personnel and payroll data, and documents I have reviewed, I reach the following conclusions:

a) Women are disproportionately employed in lower paying hourly jobs. In each of the 41 regions at Wal-Mart, the percentage of women among hourly employees was approximately twice their percentage among salaried employees, at year-end 2001.

b) The total earnings paid to men is about $5000 more than earnings paid to women, among full-time employees working at least 45 weeks, on the average, in 2001. In each of the 41 regions across the country men earned at least $2200 more than women, and in 35 out of 41 regions men earned at least $4000 more than women, among full-time employees working at least 45 weeks, during 2001.

c) Women have lower hourly rates than men in hourly jobs, on the average. Women have lower hourly rates than men working in the same job in 2001, in 76% of the jobs with over 1000 employees, for employees who were employed for at least 1 year since date of hire.

d) Women have more years employed at Wal-Mart than men overall, in salary jobs, and in hourly jobs. Women have been working at Wal-Mart longer than men in the same job, for 97% of jobs with at least 1000 employees in 2001.

e) Women have higher performance ratings in hourly jobs than men, on the average in 2001. The average performance rating is higher for women than men in the same job, for 75% of hourly jobs with at least 1000 employees with ratings in 2001.

f) The hourly pay rate for men is $1.16 more than for women, on the average, at year-end 2001, among men and women hired in hourly positions in 1996, and Still employed in 2001. Among men and women hired into the same hourly job in 1996, and still employed in 2001, the average hourly pay rate for men is higher than the rate for women in 80% of the hourly jobs with over 1000 hires in 1996.

g) Over 95% of Store Managers and Co-Managers change stores at least once when entering those positions or later, and over 80% change district, and over 60% change region. Store Managers change stores 3.6 times on the average, when entering that position and subsequently.

h) Over 80% of Assistant Managers and Management Trainees change stores at least once when entering those positions or later, and over 60% change district at least once.

i) 80% of the promotions into Support Manager positions do not appear in the job posting data.

j) The Management Career Selection system (MCS) was not used for selecting promotions into Management Trainee or Co-Manager jobs.

k) The MCS system includes information on less than 1% of the promotions into Assistant Manager positions.

l) Women received 2891 fewer promotions into Support Manager than would be expected from their representation in the feeder pools.

m) Women received 2952 fewer promotions into Management Trainee than would be expected from their representation in the feeder pools.

n) Women received 346 fewer promotions into Co-Manager than would be expected from their representation in the feeder pools.

o) Women received 155 fewer promotions into Store Manager than would be expected from their representation in the feeder pools.

p) Total earnings paid to women ranged between 5% and 15% less than total earnings paid to similarly situated men in each year 1996-2001, even when accounting for factors such as seniority, status, and store.

q) In 2001 when performance ratings were available, the shortfall in earnings for female hourly employees was greater when including performance ratings as a possible explanatory factor for earnings differences than when it was not included.

r) Among hourly employees, women were paid between 18 and 34 cents per hour less than similarly situated men during 1996-2001, even when accounting for factors such as seniority, status, and store. The shortfall in female hourly pay rates became steadily worse from 1997 to 2001.

s) In 2001 when performance ratings were available, the shortfall in hourly rate paid to female hourly employees was greater when including performance ratings as a possible explanatory factor for earnings differences than when it was not included.

t) Women had lower total earnings, and lower hourly rates, than would be predicted for similarly situated men in every one of the 41 regions across the country.

78. Women employees at Wal-Mart are concentrated in the lower paying jobs, are paid less than men in the same job, and are less likely to advance to management positions than men. These gender patterns persist even though women have more seniority, have lower turnover rates, and have higher performance ratings in most jobs. The shortfall in female earnings, pay rates, and promotion rates have a high degree of statistical significance.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 23, 2003, at Berkeley, California.

/s/ Richard Drogin
Richard Drogin, Ph.D.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF WILLIAM T. BIELBY, Ph.D. IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, William T. Bielby, declare that:

1. I have been retained by Brad Seligman and Jocelyn Larkin of the Impact Fund and by the law firm of Cohen, Milstein, Hausfeld & Toll, counsel for plaintiffs in Betty Dukes, et al. v. Wal-Mart Stores, Inc. ("Wal-Mart"). I have been asked to review materials pertaining to personnel policies and practices of Wal-Mart and to address three issues. The first is whether key elements of the personnel system at Wal-Mart are uniform across the U.S. retail divisions. Second, I have been asked to determine whether uniform features of the Wal-Mart personnel system create barriers to women's career advancement in the company, especially with respect to promotion into management and compensation. The third issue I have been asked to address is the adequacy of Wal-Mart's policies and practices in the areas of affirmative action, equal employment opportunity, and diversity for identifying, monitoring, and eliminating potential discriminatory barriers faced by women employed by the company.

2. I have testified as an expert witness in both California Superior Court and Federal Court on cases involving workplace discrimination. I have served as an expert in several other cases involving issues of gender discrimination in large, multi-establishment national and regional retail firms, including class action cases involving Lucky Stores, Publix, Sherwin-Williams, and Home Depot. A list of cases in which I have been identified as an expert or have given expert testimony since 1998 is attached as Exhibit A.

3. I have received a Ph.D. in Sociology from the University of Wisconsin–Madison in 1976. I also have a B.S. in Electrical Engineering and a M.A. in Social Sciences from the University of Illinois. I am currently Professor of Sociology at the University of California, Santa Barbara, where I chaired my department from 1992 to 1998. I am also affiliated with UCSB's Department of Statistics and Applied Probability. Among my former positions are Visiting Professor of Management at UCLA and Fellow at the Center for Advanced Study in the Behavioral Sciences at Stanford. I teach graduate and undergraduate courses on organizational behavior, research methods for the social sciences, labor markets, quantitative methods, and social inequality. I also specialize in research in each of these areas. Over the past twenty years, much of my research has focused on issues of workplace discrimination, and on organizational policies and practices more generally. My research on these topics has been supported by four grants from the National Science Foundation, and it has been published in leading peer-reviewed social science research journals. My Curriculum Vitae is attached as Exhibit B.

4. I have received national awards from three different professional associations for my research on gender, labor markets, social psychological aspects of work, and organizational personnel practices. I have served on numerous panels, advisory committees, and professional workshops on topics relating to workplace discrimination, organizational personnel policies and practices, and research methodology. I have served as an advisor, consultant, or reviewer for the following organizations and agencies: the U.S. Bureau of the Census, the U.S. Department of Justice, the U.S. Department of Labor, the National Science Foundation, the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Academy of Sciences, the University of Michigan's Institute for Social Research, Stanford University, and the Writers' Guild of America, West. I have also served on the editorial boards of leading social science journals, and I regularly review manuscripts for scientific journals on topics relating to organizational behavior, employment discrimination, gender and work, and research methodology. I have been elected to several offices in the American Sociological Association. I served for three years on the ASA Council, the organization's governing body, and I am currently President of the Association.

5. My consulting rate is $275 per hour, plus expenses. My rate for time spent in depositions $550 per hour, with a four-hour minimum per day.

6. I have reviewed the deposition testimony of Wal-Mart managers responsible for creating and implementing the company's personnel policies, as well as the testimony of managers who made decisions about compensation, hiring, promotion, job assignment, and related personnel matters. I have also reviewed the documents used as exhibits in the depositions of these individuals. Among others, in the human resources and diversity areas I have reviewed the testimony of Kevin Harper, Vice President of the People Division Wal-Mart Stores and Specialty Group; Coleman Peterson, Executive Vice President, People Division; Charlene Jarrells Porter, Senior Vice President, People Division; Jeffrey Reeves, former Sam's Club Vice President of People; and several People Directors and Regional Personnel Managers. At the senior executive and operations levels, I have reviewed the deposition testimony of Thomas Coughlin, President and Chief Executive Officer of Wal-Mart Stores Division; Don Harris, Executive Vice President of Merchandising and former Executive Vice President of Operations of Wal-Mart Stores; Jim Haworth, Executive Vice President of Operations and Chief Operating Officer of Wal-Mart Stores; and I have also reviewed the testimony of current and former Divisional Vice Presidents, Regional Vice Presidents, District Managers, and Store Managers. A complete list of the depositions I reviewed appears in Exhibit C.

7. The documents I reviewed included: organizational charts; correspondence, memos, reports, and presentations relating to personnel policy and practice, diversity, and equal employment opportunity issues, and documents describing the culture and history of the company. In addition to documents that are deposition exhibits, I was also provided with the expert report of Dr. Marc Bendick and tables from the report of Dr. Richard Drogin.

8. In addition to the materials described above, I have also relied upon a large body of social research on organizational policy and practice and on workplace bias. Social research conducted across many decades has generated considerable knowledge about what generates and sustains workplace inequalities. That same research, either directly or by implication, points to the kinds of workplace policies and practices that are likely to minimize bias. The relevant research has applied multiple methodologies in a variety of contexts, including experiments in controlled laboratory settings; ethnographies and case studies in "real world" organizations both large and small, public and private, and in a range of industries; surveys done with representative samples of workers and employers; and historical studies based on archival materials from the United States and abroad. Thus, the scientific evidence about gender bias, stereotypes, and the structure and dynamics of gender inequality in organizations that I rely upon has substantial external validity and provides a sound basis for analyzing the policies and practices of Wal-Mart. My method is to look at distinctive features of the firm's policies and practices and to evaluate them against what social science research shows to be factors that create and sustain bias and those that minimize bias. In litigation contexts, this method of analysis is known as "social framework analysis."[1]

---

[1] See J. Monahan and L. Walker, Social Science in law: Cases and Materials, Fourth Edition, Foundation Press, 1998, Chapter Five, "Social Science Used to Provide Context."

9. Below, I first summarize my overall conclusions about gender bias and the effectiveness of anti-discrimination policies and practices at Wal-Mart. Next, I address the issue of uniformity in personnel policy and practice at Wal-Mart. After that, I describe the firm-wide policies and practices at Wal-Mart that create and sustain barriers to women's career success and the effectiveness of the firm's efforts to identify and eliminate those barriers and guarantee equal employment opportunity.

10. Centralized coordination, reinforced by a strong organizational culture, creates and sustains uniformity in personnel policy and practice throughout the organizational units of Wal-Mart. Subjective and discretionary features of the company's personnel policy and practice make decisions about compensation and promotion vulnerable to gender bias. Finally, I have concluded that there are significant deficiencies in the company's policies and practices for identifying and eliminating barriers to equal employment opportunity at Wal-Mart. The basis for my conclusions is explained below.

11. Wal-Mart's People Division is responsible for corporate-wide human resource policy. Policies emanating from the Home Office in Bentonville are overseen by the Executive Vice President ("EVP") of the People Division, who described his duties as "overall responsibility for getting, keeping, and developing Wal-Mart talent worldwide."[2] The EVP reports to the company's President and Chief Executive Officer and sits on the corporate Executive Committee.[3] The senior human resources executives in each of the company's divisions report to the divisional top executives, with a "dotted line" reporting relationship to the EVP of the People Division. For example, in Wal-Mart Stores Division 1, the Senior Vice President of People reports directly to the division's President and CEO, and reports indirectly to the EVP of the People Division, and a similar reporting relationship exists in the Sam's Club division.[4] These senior human resources executives meet weekly with the EVP of the People Division, where people activities in the divisions would be discussed.[5]

---

[2] The Executive Vice President's responsibilities cover Wal-Mart Division 1, the Specialty Divisions, and Sam's Club and the rest of the company's human resources operations worldwide (Peterson depo., p.8).

12. A Primary Policy Committee with representatives from each of the company's operating divisions as well as the Home Office formulates and approves all new human resources policies. A Secondary Policy Committee that includes representatives from the People Divisions of each of the operating divisions and the home office also reviews the policies, and ultimately all policies are approved by Wal-Mart's Executive Committee and Executive Vice President of People before being disseminated throughout the company.[6]

---

[3] Peterson depo., p. 11-12.

[4] Harper 30(b)(6) depo., p. 235-237; Jarrells Porter depo. 30-32; Peterson depo., p. 26-29.

[5] Peterson depo., p. 27-28.

[6] Hass depo., p. 24-30; Jarrells Porter depo., p. 28, 33-34; Reeves depo., p. 147-149.

13. The human resources function is organized hierarchically within divisions. For example, in Division 1, the company's approximately 2800 stores are organized by six divisional areas, with five or six regions within each area, and 80 to 85 stores within each region.[7] Each store has an hourly employee with the title of personnel manager who coordinates hourly recruiting and "CBL" and performs payroll functions.[8] Overseeing store-level human resources activities, including staffing and compliance with government regulations and company policies, are the Regional Personnel Managers ("RPM"), and most of them work out of the corporate Bentonville Home Office. RPMs are responsible for the management staffing of stores (e.g., participating in the recruitment and selection of Store Managers and Co-Managers), overseeing the Management Career Selection process, and evaluating store management teams. Each of the thirty-five Regional Personnel Managers in Div 1 reports to one of the three People Directors at the Home Office, who in turn report to the Vice President of the Wal-Mart Stores People Division.[9] People Directors meet weekly with RPMs,

---

[7] Harper 30(b)6 depo., p. 188-190.

[8] Harper 30(b)6 depo., p. 117-120.

[9] Harper 30(b)6 depo., p. 188-192; Harper depo., p. 18-21; Ellison depo., p. 75-78, 81; Ruiz depo., p. 150-152; "RPM Responsibilities" (WMHO369676). The human resources function has a similar hierarchical organization in the Specialty Divisions. Each Specialty Division has Regional Personnel Managers for One-Hour Photo, Tire Lube Express, and Shoes and Jewelry report to the heads of their respective divisional operating units. People Directors that report to the Vice President of the Wal-Mart Stores People Division also have responsibilities for Specialty Divisions (Harper depo., p. 20-27).

provide them with training, direction, and support, and oversee training and orientation.[10] Mr. Harper, Vice President of the Wal-Mart Stores People Division, testified that among the responsibilities of his office are reviewing salary levels for district and regional managers, setting start rates for Assistant Manager, Co-Manager, and Store Manager positions, and the rate of salary adjustments for hourly employees.[11]

14. Sam's Club has a similar hierarchical organization to its human resources function, with Regional Personnel Managers reporting to a Vice President of People.[12] Former Vice President of People at Sam's Club Jeffrey Reeves testified that 99% of the human resources policies of Wal-Mart Stores and Sam's Club were identical.[13] Wal-Mart Stores CEO Thomas Coughlin also testified that the policies of two operating divisions were generally the same.[14]

15. Wal-Mart's computerized information system is a key element of the company's uniform personnel policies. The uniform policies and guidelines are available throughout the company via the Pipeline intranet on-line database, and information relied

---

[10] Ruiz depo., p. 141-142; 151-152; "People Director Responsibilities" (WMHO369677).

[11] Harper depo., p. 41-47.

[12] Reeves 30(b)6 depo., p. 14-15.

[13] Reeves depo., p. 148. The only difference that Mr. Reeves could think of was in the attendance policy; also see Hottinger depo., p. 32-35.

[14] Coughlin depo., p. 42-43.

upon by managers is distributed centrally via the Manager's Workbench.[15]

16. Wal-Mart is well known for its innovations in using sophisticated information systems to maintain centralized decision-making and control in its business operations. Writing in the Sloan Management Review, Thomas W. Malone, one of the leading experts on this topic, described Wal-Mart's centralized system as follows:

> By centralizing pricing, buying, and promotional decisions on a national level, Wal-Mart was able to deliver better-quality products for lower prices than most of its competitors - with the result that small towns across the United States are now filled with the empty hulls of local retail stores, driven out of business by a Wal-Mart down the street. Other factors played a role, too, but a key factor that enabled Wal-Mart to centralize its decision-making was IT. With its famous state-of-the-art electronic ordering and inventory control systems, for instance, Wal-Mart introduced a new level of connected, centralized decision making into small-town retailing (emphasis added).[16]

---

[15] Hass depo., p. 23-34, 43-44, 52, 65-67, 95; Teng depo., p. 86-87; Harper 30(b)6 depo., p. 44-45, 58-59, 69-72, 126, 131-132, 149-150; Harper depo., p. 102, 113-114, 191-192; Mireles depo., p. 108-109, 183-184.

[16] T. W. Malone, "Is Empowerment Just Fad? Control, Decision Making, and IT," Sloan Management Review, Vol. 38 (Winter), 1997, p. 23-35.

Deposition testimony is consistent with this account of centralized control in operations, and it demonstrates that the same system of control extends to the human resources area. For example, each store manager receives a computerized daily recap for the store that includes detailed information on both operational and merchandising factors such as sales by department, price changes, inventories, and invoices, and personnel factors like computer-based learning ("CBL") completions, payroll, attendance, full-time and part-time hours, and evaluations. District managers get a similar recap for each store in their district, and Regional Vice Presidents get a recap twice weekly aggregated to the regional level.[17] District managers rely on these reports to intervene with store managers to address any exceptions that are not in compliance with company policy and guidelines.[18] Each month, a "People P & L" report is generated by the Home Office for each store, reporting information on separations, turnover, and workforce demographics. Aggregated reports are produced at the level of district, region, and division.[19] [17] D. Carter depo., p. 138-139; Ellison depo., p. 225-228; Raps depo., p. 183-186; Butler depo., p. 112-113.

---

[18] See, for example, Raps depo., p. 186-187; D. Carter depo., p. 139-147; Ellison depo., p. 228; Butler depo., p. 111-112. District Manager Vincent Martinez testified that his primary job duties were to ensure "that all the company policies and culture and beliefs are communicated, taught, and enforced" (Martinez depo., p. 224-5.

[19] Harper 30(b)6 depo., p. 179-180, 242-246; R. Carter depo., p. 31; Harper depo., p. 274-275; Butler depo., p. 192.

17. In addition to acting upon information generated by reports rolled up from the store, district, regional, and divisional level, uniformity in human resources policy and practice is monitored via frequent store visits by District Managers and Regional Personnel Managers. District Managers are expected to visit each store in their District once every two weeks and submit reports about those visits to the Regional Vice President.[20] Each Regional Personnel Manager also travels weekly to visit stores in their region, and reports from those visits are submitted to the People Director responsible for the Region.[21]

18. An organizational culture is a shared set of values and beliefs about how things are done in the organization.[22] A strong and widely shared organizational culture promotes uniformity of practices throughout an organization. Wal-Mart is widely recognized by social scientists and management scholars as an organization with a strong culture, with practices and policies typical of such firms. These include the emphasis on the company's founder and its history, a mission statement defined by core values, frequent communication about the culture to employees, orientation and training about the culture for employees at all levels of the organization, pro-

---

[20] Harper 30(b)6 depo., p. 166; D. Carter depo., p. 134-5; Ellison depo., p. 219-221.

[21] Ludwig depo., p. 128-137; Martinez depo., p. 170, 174.

[22] See T. E. Deal and A. A. Kennedy, Corporate Cultures. Addison-Wesley, 1982; E. H. Schein, Organizational Culture and Leadership, Second Edition, Jossey-Bass, 1992; and J. Kerr and J. W. Slocum, "Managing Corporate Culture Through Reward Systems," Academy of Management Executive, Vol. 1, 1987, p. 99-108.

moting managers from the ranks of hourly employees, and rotating managers among locations.[23]

19. Wal-Mart materials make frequent mention of Sam Walton's personal biography, the history of his founding of the company, and how his personal values (and those of others in his family) became core beliefs and values for the company.[24] Personal encounters with Sam are recounted as significant events in employees' lives, and stories about them are an important part of company lore.[25] The company's "Three Basic Beliefs" and other core elements of its mission and culture appear consistently in

---

[23] Deal and Kennedy, op cit.; Schein, op cit., W. Ouchi, "Markets, Bureaucracies, and Clans," Administrative Science Quarterly, Vol. 25, 1980, p. 129-141; C. D. Hansen and W. M. Kahnweiler, "Storytelling: An Instrument for Understanding the Dynamics of Corporate Relationships," Human Relations, Vol. 46, 1993, pp. 1391-1409; J. Martin, M. S. Feldman, M. J. Hatch, and S. B. Sitkin, "The Uniqueness Paradox in Organizational Stories," Administrative Science Quarterly, Vol. 28, 1983, pp. 438-453; T. Peters, "Symbols, Patterns, and Settings," Organizational Dynamics, Vol. 7, 1978, pp. 3-23; J. Pfeffer, "Management as Symbolic Action: The Creation and Maintenance of Organizational Paradigms," pp. 1-52 in Research in Organizational Behavior, Vol. 3, edited by L. L. Cummings and B. M. Staw, Jai Press, 1982; M .E. Boyce, "Organizational Story and Storytelling: A Critical Review," Journal of Organizational Change Management, Vol. 9 (No. 5), p. 5-26; W. Swap, D. Leonard, M. Shields, and L. Abrams, "Using Mentoring and Storytelling to Transfer Knowledge in the Workplace", Journal of Management Information Systems, Vol. 18 (Summer), 2001, p. 95-114.

[24] Muzingo dep., p. 97-106.

[25] Muzingo depo., p. 107-108; Scantlin depo., p. 55-57; Seaman depo., p. 71-72; D. Carter depo., p. 35-40; Sherman depo., p. 98-101; Oshier depo., p. 106-108; Wesbecher depo., p. 19-23.

written, on-line, and video training and orientation materials.[26] Corporate culture is also a topic covered frequently in Wal-Mart World, the company newsletter distributed to all employees of Wal-Mart Stores and Sam's Club.[27] Corporate culture is an important element of company-wide meetings, including the annual shareholders meeting and events for managers and associates held at the beginning and end of the year.[28]

20. New employees learn the Wal-Mart culture by viewing videos about the company's history, completing CBL modules about elements of the culture, and reading the Associate Handbook.[29] Employees in Wal-Mart stores attend a daily meeting held at shift changes, where managers discuss the company culture and employees do the Wal-Mart cheer.[30] Additional instruction and orientation on the Wal-Mart culture is included as part of the training given to new managers and ongoing training given to manag-

---

[26] Muzingo depo., p. 114, 117-122, 125-128, 130-135.

[27] Muzingo depo., p. 133-134.

[28] Muzingo depo., p. 86-87; 147-148. Also see M. J. Schneider, "The Wall-Mart Annual Meeting: From Small-Town America to a Global Corporate Culture," Human Organization, Vol. 57, 1998, p. 292-299.

[29] Muzingo depo., p. 114-115; Seaman depo., p. 70-71.

[30] Muzingo depo., p. 86-87, 125; Hottinger depo. p. 83-84 and Oshier depo., p. 106-107 (on Sam's Club meetings and the Sam's Club cheer). The "Culture Topic Index" provided to store management states: "It is important for our Associates to understand how important culture is to their company. We have provided you with a culture topic for mandatory weekly discussions with all store Associates on each shift during store meetings." (BATES WMHO598668)

ers at all levels of the company.[31] Wal-Mart and Sam's Club managers at the Home Office attend weekly Saturday morning meetings, and the first meeting of the month is devoted to a culture topic.[32] According to Ms. Muzingo, the company's 30(b)6 deponent on corporate culture, the meetings are a deliberate effort to sustain the culture as the company grows:

> I think as a company we recognize, as we get larger that we are going to have to work hard to make sure that the culture stays intact. And so we look for lots of ways to do that. And one of them is that you have this large group of people that comes together on a weekly basis and so it's a good opportunity
>
> And certainly that audience of people are largely comprised of individuals that travel out to the stores on a weekly basis, and so that's a good way to make sure that they're being trained and exposed to the culture in the hopes that when they go to the stores they also will be training and developing people on the culture.[33]

---

[31] Muzingo depo., p. 142-147.

[32] Muzingo depo., p. 135-142; Butler depo., p. 77-78; Ludwig depo., p. 112-113; Martinez depo., p. 166-168. Also see "Saturday Morning Fever: Wal-Mart's Weekly Meeting," The Economist, December 8, 2001.

[33] Muzingo depo., p. 141. Ms. Muzingo went on to explain that one reason experienced managers are included in the meeting is to teach the culture to those who are new to management (Muzingo depo., p. 142).

21. In sum, consistent with the organizational research on this topic, Wal-Mart's distinctive corporate culture is sustained by focused efforts of the firm through on-going training and socialization, communication specifically designed to reinforce its distinctive elements, promotion from within and relocating managers from store to store, and shared experiences among employees that build commitment to shared beliefs and values. As a result of these efforts, employees achieve a common understanding of the company's ways of conducting business.[34] This can be seen in the way various operational and personnel practices that might otherwise be coordinated solely by written rules enforced from above become part of the company's culture. Examples of these, which are fully understood by nearly all employees, are concepts such as SWAS ("store within a store"), CBWA ("coaching by walking around"), "Grass Roots," "Open Door," "Store of the Community," "Every Day Low Prices," "Ten Foot Rule," "Sun-Down Rule," and "Servant/Leadership."[35]

22. At Wal-Mart in 2001, women outnumbered men by nearly two to one in the hourly ranks (65.2% female for Wal-Mart and Sam's combined, Drogin Appendix Table 5a) and men outnumbered women by almost two to one in salaried management positions (33.2% female). At Wal-Mart Stores (Wal-Mart/Supercenter/Neighborhood Markets) in 2001,

---

[34] Deal and Kennedy, op cit.; Ouchi, op cit.

[35] Muzingo depo., p. 84-92, 115, 131; Harper depo., p. 291-292; Jarrells-Porter depo., p. 115-116; Kintzele depo., p. 192-193; Dolan depo., p. 132-133; Goodwin depo., p. 48, 214; Wigger depo., p. 129-130, 138; D. Carter depo., p. 222; R. Carter, p. 155-156.

women's representation among hourly supervisors (78.5% of Team Leaders, job code 101) exceeded their representation among hourly salespersons (64.4% of Sales Associates, job code 501; see Exhibit D). Sales Associate is the largest job classification in the company, employing over 200,000 individuals, and there is substantial segregation within that job category. For example, in 2001 women comprised over 90% of those employed as Sales Associates in men's wear, infant/toddlers, health and beauty aids, domestic goods, and ladies sportswear, and less than 25% of those employed as Sales Associates in hardware and in Supercenter food departments such as dairy products, meat, frozen food, and produce (Exhibit D). Few men work in the front-end position of Cashier (job code 501, the second largest job category, with over 150,000 employees), which was 89.5% female in 2001. Not every department is sex segregated; for example, the gender mix is relatively balanced among Sales Associates in automotive (43.6% female), electronics (47.2% female), and candy, tobacco, and cookies (55.4% female).

23. In store level supervisory and salaried management positions, women's representation drops with each step up the job hierarchy. Although women outnumber men by nearly four to one among hourly supervisors, in 2001 they comprised only 45.1% of the Support Managers (job code 1050, "team lead"), the highest-level hourly supervisory position (Exhibit D). Moving into salaried management, in 2001 they comprised only 37.6% of Assistant Managers (job code 43000), 21.9% of Co-Managers (job code 41000), and 15.5% of Store Managers (job code 40000).

24. A similar pattern holds at Sam's Club, but at a somewhat lower level of segregation. In 2001, women comprised 54.1% of hourly employees but only 31.2% of salaried managers (Drogin Appendix Table 5b). Among the hourly ranks, in 2001 women were 71.8% of Cashiers (job code 501, the largest job category, employing over 16,000 individuals). Four of the six largest job categories are highly segregated, either done mostly by women (job code 320, "demo ptnr," 92.7% female in 2001) or mostly by men (job code 300, "shoe mngt," 19.1% female; job code 816, "tire tech," 1.1% female; and job code 530, "cart ptnr," 2.3% female).

25. The hourly supervisory position at Sam's Club is team lead (job code 910, 39.4% female in 2001). At Sam's Club, an Area Manager is a salaried position below the level of Assistant Manager.[36] The largest Area Manager positions are Front End (job code 43350, 64.8% female in 2001), Bakery (job code 49900, 58.2% female in 2001), Receiving (job code 43360, 34.0% female), and Meat (job code 49950, 8.5% female). Assistant Manager-level positions are Merchandising Manager 1 (job code 43370, 17.3% female in 2001), Merchandising Manager 2 (job code 43380, 16.0% female), and Business Manager (job code 43390, 36.6% female). Men outnumber women by almost four to one among Sam's Club Co-Managers (job code 41200, 22.0% female) and by about 10 to 1 among General Managers (job code 40000, 9.2% female).

26. Dr. Bendick's benchmarking analysis shows that there is a significant shortfall in women's representation in management at Wal-Mart relative to other companies in the large-chain retail industry. He also shows that the shortfall is consistent over time and across regions of the United States (Bendick Report, p. 16-30). Dr. Drogin's analysis demonstrates that contributing to the shortfall is a consistent gender disparity in rates of promotion into the Support Manager and Area Manager positions, into salaried management from the hourly ranks, and into the Co-Manager and Store Manager positions (Drogin Appendix Tables 14a to 14h). Dr. Drogin also shows significant compensation disparities by gender among similarly situated men and women (Drogin Appendix Tables 16). Below, I identify some of the personnel policies and practices that contribute to those disparities.

---

[36] Reeves 30(b)6 depo., p. 73-80, 83.

27. In this section of my section of my report I summarize the scientific literature upon which my opinions are based. In footnotes, I provide citations to sources in peer refereed journals, in important books and edited volumes in relevant fields of social science research, and, whenever possible, to review articles by leading experts who summarize the findings of social science research on gender bias in organizations, stereotypes, and related topics.

28. Depending on the job, organizational setting, and work environment, there are many reasons why men and women can have different career trajectories. For example, jobs may have job-related skill and experience requirements that differ, on average, between men and women. Gender disparities arising from such factors would not be considered discriminatory, so long as the employer is not responsible for differences in men's and women's qualifications (e.g., by not providing equal access to training). Conversely, employers create gender barriers when they make decisions about individuals' suitability for jobs, training, and support or their compensation based on beliefs about a person's gender rather than on his or her actual qualifications. Employers also create gender barriers when they ignore (or encourage) an organizational climate that is hostile towards women and inhibits them from performing to their full potential. Sometimes, practices that appear to be gender-neutral have the effect of denying to women the same opportunities that are available to men. For example, using employee referrals as a recruitment mechanism is likely to reinforce a workforce's existing gender composition.[37]

29. One way gender bias affects career outcomes is when stereotypes are allowed to affect personnel decisions. Gender stereotypes are beliefs about traits and behaviors that differ between men and women.[38] For example, men are believed to be com-

---

[37] For a review of relevant research, see P. V. Marsden and E. Gorman, "Social Networks, Job Changes, and Recruitment," p. 467-502 in Sourcebook on Labor Markets: Evolving Structures and Processes, edited by I. Berg and A. L. Kalleberg, Plenum Publishing, 2001.

[38] K. Deaux and L. Lewis, "Components of Gender Stereotypes," Psychological Documents, Vol. 13, 1983, p. 25-34; K. Deaux and L. Lewis, "The Structure of Gender Stereotypes: Interrelationships Among Components and Gender Label," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 46, 1984, p. 991-1004; J. E. Williams and D. L. Best, "Sex Stereotypes and Intergroup Relations," p. 244-259 in Psychology of Intergroup Relations, edited by S. Worchel and W. G. Austin, Nelson Hall, 1986; S. T. Fiske, "Stereotyping, Prejudice, and Discrimination," p. 357-411 in The Handbook of Social Psychology, Vol. 2 (Fourth Edition), edited by D. T. Gilbert, S. T. Fiske, and G. Landzey, McGraw-Hill, 1998.

petitive, aggressive, assertive, strong, and independent, while women are thought to be nurturing, cooperative, supportive, and understanding. Men are assumed to place a high priority on their careers, while women are assumed to be more strongly oriented towards family, even though research demonstrate that the commitments of men and women with similar job opportunities and family situations are virtually identical.[39]

30. These kinds of stereotypes are relevant to how men and women advance in careers with Wal-Mart. For example, if women are believed to be committed to and constrained by family circumstances, and men are not, women will not be given the same consideration as men for management positions that are believed to interfere with family obligations, especially if there is no reliable and systematic way to assess employees' interests in management positions.

31. When women perform successfully in male-dominated contexts, their accomplishments are more likely to be attributed to luck, help from others, or special circumstances rather than to their ability, whereas comparable performance by men is more likely to be attributed to their superior skills.[40]

---

[39] For a review see D. D. Bielby, "Commitment to Work and Family," Annual Review of Sociology, Vol. 18, 1992, p. 281-302. Also see P. V. Marsden, A. L. Kalleberg, and C. R. Cook, "Gender Differences in Organizational Commitment: Influences of Work Positions and Family Roles," Work and Occupations, Vol. 20, 1993, p. 367-390.

[40] For a review of relevant research, see J. K. Swim and L. J. Sanna, "He's Skilled, She's Lucky: A Meta-Analysis of Observers' Attributes for Women's and Men's Successes and Failures,"

Moreover, stereotypical behaviors that are believed to be typical of men are often viewed as inappropriate for women. For example, it is less acceptable for a married woman with young children to place a high priority on her career than it is for a married man. Similarly, a woman who behaves in a competitive, assertive, and independent manner often elicits disapproval from those around her.[41]

[Footnote continued from previous page]

Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin, Vol. 22, 1996, p. 507-519. For studies of attribution bias in employment contexts, see J. H. Greenhaus and S. Parasuraman, "Job Performance Attributions and Career Advancement Prospects: An Examination of Gender and Race Effects," Organizational Behavior and Human Decision Processes, Vol. 55, 1991, p. 273-297; M. Igbaria and J. Baroudi, "The Impact of Job Performance Evaluations on Career Advancement Prospects: An Examination of Gender Differences in the IS Workplace, Management Information Systems Quarterly, Vol. 19, 1995, p. 107-123. Greenhaus and Parasuraman studied managers in three companies in the communications, banking and electronics industries, while Igbaria and Baroudi studied professionals in the field of information systems and data processing. For reviews of social psychological research on attribution biases, see Fiske and S. E. Taylor, Social Cognition, Second Edition, McGraw-Hill 1991, Chapter 3; M. Hewstone, "The 'Ultimate Attribution Error'? A Review of the Literature on Intergroup Causal Attribution," European Journal of Social Psychology, Vol. 20, 1990, p. 311-335.

[41] T. W. Smith, "Working Wives and Women's Rights: The Connection Between the Employment Status of Wives and the Feminist Attitudes of Husbands," Sex Roles, Vol. 12, 1985, p. 501-508; J. S. Bridges and A. M. Orza, "The Effects o Employment Role and Motive for Employment on the Perceptions of Mothers," Sex Roles, Vol. 27, 1992, p. 331-343; A. H. Eagly, M. G. Makhijani, and B. G. Klonsky, "Gender and the Evaluation of Leaders: A Meta-Analysis," Psychological Bulletin, Vol. 111, 1992, p. 3-22; M. J. Martinkio and W. L. Gardner, "A Methodo-

32. Because of gender stereotypes, individuals tend to ascribe "masculine" traits to men and "feminine" traits to women, and individuals tend to assume that the prevalence of "masculine" traits among women and "feminine" traits among men is rare. A large body of research demonstrates that the tendency to invoke gender stereotypes in making judgments about people is spontaneous and automatic.[42] As a result, people are often unaware of how stereotypes affect their perceptions and behavior, and individuals whose personal beliefs are relatively free of prejudice or bias are susceptible to stereotypes logical Review of Sex Related Access Discrimination Problems," Sex Roles, Vol. 9, 1983, p. 825-839; C. L. Copeland, J. E. Driskell, and E. Salas, "Gender and Reactions to Dominance," Journal of Social Behavior and Personality, Vol. 10, No. 6, 1995, p. 53-68; A. M. Konrad and K. Cannings, "The Effects of Gender Role Congruence and Statistical Discrimination on Managerial Advancement," Human Relations, Vol. 50, 1997, p. 1305-1328; A. H. Eagly, and S. J. Karau, "Role Congruity Theory of Prejudice Toward Female Leaders," Psychological Review, Vol. 109, 2002, p. 573-598.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[42] See, for example, M. A. Zarate and Eliot R. Smith, "Person Categorization and Stereotyping," Social Cognition, Vol. 8, 1990, p. 161-185; M. R. Banaji, C. D. Hardin, and A. J. Rothman, "Implicit Stereotyping in Person Judgment," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 65, 1993, p. 272-281; M. A. Zarate and P. Sandoval, "The Effects of Contextual Cues on Making Occupational and Gender Categorizations," British Journal of Social Psychology, Vol. 34, 1995, p. 353-362; M. R. Banaji and C. D. Hardin, "Automatic Stereotyping," Psychological Science, Vol. 7, 1996, p. 136-141. For a review, see J. A. Bargh and T. L. Chartrand, "The Unbearable Automaticity of Being," American Psychologist, Vol. 54, 1999, p. 462-479.

in the same ways as people who hold a personal animosity towards a social group.[43]

33. In the employment context, career barriers resulting from gender stereotypes and gender bias are likely to be consequential for women working in a traditionally male domains, such as the middle to upper managerial and professional ranks of large corporations, engineering division of firms, in the military, and in historically male-dominated industries such as skilled crafts and construction trades.[44]

---

[43] S. T. Fiske and S. E. Taylor, op cit., p. 271-294; R. Brown, Prejudice, Blackwell, 1995; G. V. Bodenhausen and C. N. Macrae, "The Self-Regulation of Intergroup Perception: Mechanisms and Consequences of Stereotype Suppression," p. 227-253 in Stereotypes and Stereotyping, edited by C. N. Macrae, C. Stangor, and M. Hewstone, Guilford Press, 1996; S. T. Fiske, "Stereotyping, Prejudice and Discrimination," p. 357-411 in Handbook of Social Psychology, edited by D. T. Gilbert, S.T. Fiske, and G. Lindzey, McGraw-Hill, 1998; G. V. Bodenhausen, C. N. Macrae, and J. Garst, "Stereotypes in Thought and Deed: Social Cognitive Origins of Intergroup Discrimination," p. 311-335 in Intergroup Cognition and Intergroup Behaviors, edited by C. Sedikides, J. Schopler, and C. A. Insko, Erlbaum, 1998.

[44] W. T. Bielby and J. N. Baron, "Men and Women at Work: Sex Segregation and Statistical Discrimination," American Journal of Sociology Vol. 91, 1986, p. 759-99; K. Deaux and J. C. Ullman, Women of Steel: Female Blue Collar Workers in the Basic Steel Industry, Praeger, 1983; R. M. Kanter, Men and Women of the Corporation, Basic Books, 1977; Eagly et al., op cit.; M. J. Martinkio and W. L. Gardner, "A Methodological Review of Sex-Related Acces Discrimination Problems," Sex Roles, Vol. 9, 1983, p. 825-839; C. M. Jagacinski, "Engineering Careers: Women in a Male-Dominated Field," Psychology of Women Quarterly, Vol. 11, 1987, p. 97-110; P. Glick, C. Zion, and C. Nelson, "What Mediates Sex Discrimination in Hiring Decisions?" Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 55, 1988, p. 178-186; I. Padavic, "The Re-Creation of Gender in

At Wal-Mart, women comprise a majority of employees overall and about two-thirds of those in hourly positions, but they comprise only about a third of a Male Workplace," Symbolic Interaction, Vol. 14, 1991, p. 279-294; J. S. McIlwee and J. Gregg Robinson, Women in Engineering: Gender, Power, and Workplace Culture, State University of New York Press, 1992; J. Mettrick and G. Cowan, "Gender Stereotypes and Predictions of Performance: Women in Air Combat," Journal of Social Behavior and Personality, Vol. 11, 1996, p. 105-120; J. H. Stiehm, Arms and the Enlisted Woman, Temple University Press, 1989; R. Hertz, "Guarding Against Women? Responses of Military Men and Their Wives to Gender Integration," Journal of Contemporary Ethnography, Vol. 25, 1996, p. 251-284. A job category is considered male-dominated when men comprise at least eighty to eighty-five percent of the incumbents. For additional research on the bias women face in such settings, conducted in a variety of contexts, see: E. Spangler, M. A. Gordon, and R. Pipkin, "Token Women: An Empirical Test of the Kanter Hypothesis," American Journal of Sociology, vol. 84, 1978, p. 160-170; M. E. Heilman, "The Impact of Situational Factors on Personnel Decisions Concerning Women: Varying the Sex Composition of the Applicant Pool," Organizational Behavior and Human Performance, Vol. 26, 1980, p. 386-395; J. Crocker and K. M. McGraw, "What's Good for the Goose is not Good for the Gander: Solo Status as an Obstacle to Occupational Achievement for Males and Females," American Behavioral Scientist, Vol. 27, 1982, p. 357-369; P. R. Sackett, C. L. DuBois, and A. W. Noe, "Tokenism in Performance Evaluations: The Effects of Work Group Representation on Male-Female and Black-White Differences in Performance Evaluations," Journal of Applied Psychology, Vol. 76, 1991, p. 263-267; J. Rosenberg, H. Perlstadt, and W. R. Phillips, "Now That We Are Here: Discrimination, Disparagement, and Harassment at Work and the Experiences of Women Lawyers," Gender & Society, Vol. 7, 1993, p. 415-433; and J. D. Yoder, "Looking Beyond Numbers: The Effects of Gender Status, Job Prestige, and Occupational Gender-Typing on Tokenism Processes," Social Psychology Quarterly, Vol. 57, 1994, p. 150-159.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

those in salaried management positions, and most higher level management positions have a low representation of women.

34. A large body of social science research demonstrates that stereotypes are especially likely to influence personnel decisions when they are based on informal, arbitrary, and subjective factors.[45] In such settings, stereotypes can bias assessments of a woman's qualifications, contributions, and advancement potential, because perceptions are shaped by stereotypical beliefs about women generally, not by the actual skills and accomplishments of the person as an individual.[46] In decision-making contexts

---

[45] For a review, see American Psychological Association, "In the Supreme Court of the United States: Price Waterhouse v. Ann B. Hopkins: Amicus Curiae Brief for The American Psychological Association," American Psychologist, Vol. 46, 1991, p. 1061-1070. Also see V. F. Nieva and B. A. Gutek, "Sex Effects on Evaluation," Academy of Management Review, Vol. 5, 1980, p. 267-275 (especially pages 270-274); D. N. Bersoff, "In the Supreme Court of the United States: Clara Watson v. Fort Worth Bank & Trust, Amicus Curiae Brief for the American Psychological Association" (reprinted in American Psychologist, Vol. 43, 1988, p. 1019-1028); Messick and Mackie, "Intergroup Relations," Annual Review of Psychology, Vol. 40, 1989, p. 49-50, Fiske and Taylor, op cit. (especially Chapter 9, "Social Inference"); L. H. Krieger, "The Contents of our Categories: A Cognitive Bias Approach to Discrimination and Equal Employment Opportunity," Stanford Law Review, Vol. 47, 1995, p. 1161-248, B. F. Reskin, The Realities of Affirmative Action in Employment, American Sociological Association, 1998; W. T. Bielby, "Minimizing Workplace Gender and Racial Bias," Contemporary Sociology, Vol. 29, 2000, p. 120-129.

[46] For review articles on gender bias in evaluation, see Nieva and Gutek, op cit. and R. Kalin and D. C. Hodgins, "Sex Bias and Occupational Suitability," Canadian Journal of Behavioral Science, Vol. 16, 1984, p. 311-325. Examples of studies of gender characterized by arbitrary and subjective criteria and substantial decision-maker discretion, individuals tend to seek out and retain stereotyping-confirming information and ignore or minimize information that defies stereotypes.[47]

[Footnote continued from previous page]

bias in assessments of qualifications, performance and promotion potential include: G. L. Gerber, "The More Positive Evaluation of Men Than Women on the Gender-Stereotyped Traits," Psychological Reports, Vol. 65, 1989, p. 275-286; G. H. Dobbins, R. L. Cardy, and D. M. Truxillo, "The Effects of Purpose of Appraisal and Individual Difference's in Stereotypes of Women on Sex Differences in Performance Ratings: A Laboratory and Field Study," Journal of Applied Psychology, Vol. 71, 1988, p. 551-558; T. H. Shore, "Subtle Gender Bias in the Assessment of Managerial Potential," Sex Roles, Vol. 27, 1992, p. 499-515; M. Foschi, L. Lai, and K. Sigerson, "Gender and Double Standards in the Assessment of Job Applicants," Social Psychology Quarterly, Vol. 57, 1994, 326-339; J. Landau, "The Relationship of Race and Gender to Managers' Ratings of Promotion Potential," Journal of Organizational Behavior, Vol. 16, 1995, p. 391-400.

[47] This kind of biased information-processing has been examined and replicated in numerous experimental studies. See, for example, Banaji, Hardin, and Rothman, op cit.; Banaji and Hardin, op cit.; J. Crocker, D. B. Hannah, and R. Weber, "Person Memory and Causal Attributions," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 44, 1983, p. 55-66, S. M. Belmore, "Determinants of Attention During Impression Formation," Journal of Experimental Psychology: Learning, Memory, and Cognition, Vol. 13, 1987, p. 480-489; M. Schaller, "Social Categorization and the Formation of Group Stereotypes: Further Evidence for Biased Information Processing in the Perception of Group-Behavior Correlations," European Journal of Social Psychology, Vol. 21, 1991, p. 25-35; T. E. Ford and C. Stangor, "The Role of Diagnosticity in Stereotype Formation: Perceiving Group means and Variances," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 63, 1992, p. 356-367; C. N. Macrae, A. B. Milne, and G. V. Bodenhausen, "Stereotypes as Energy-Saving De-

35. Social research establishes clearly that the historical representation of women in a job has a substantial impact on compensation and other job rewards, mobility prospects, and workplace culture.[48] In retailing, management has historically been viewed as "men's work" while women were viewed as appropriate for cashier and clerk positions. Wal-Mart's founder, Sam Walton, described the traditional view of men's and women's roles in the industry as follows:

> In the old days, retailers felt the same way about women that they did about college boys, only more so. In addition to thinking women weren't free to move, they didn't think women could handle anything but the clerk jobs because the managers usually did so much of the physical labor – unloading vices: A Peek Inside the Cognitive Toolbox," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 66, 1994, p. 921-935; C. N. Macrae, C. Stangor, and A. B. Milne, "Activating Social Stereotypes: A Functional Analysis," Journal of Experimental Social Psychology, Vol. 23, 1994, p. 370-389; L. C. Johnston and C. N. Macrae, "Changing Social Stereotypes: The Case of the Information Seeker," European Journal of Social Psychology, Vol. 24, 1994, p. 356-367; M. Zuckerman, C. R. Knee, K. Miyake, and H. S. Hodgins, "Hypothesis Confirmation: The Joint Effect of Positive Test Strategy and Acquiescence Response Set," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 68, 1995, p. 52-60. For reviews, see Brown, op cit. and Fiske, op cit.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[48] P. England, Comparable Worth: Theories and Evidence, Aldine de Gruyter, 1992; B. F. Reskin, D. B. McBrier, and J. A. Kmec, "The Determinants and Consequences of Workplace Race and Sex Composition," Annual Review of Sociology, Vol. 25, 1999, p. 335-361.

> trucks and hauling merchandise out of the stockroom on a two-wheeler, mopping the floors and cleaning the windows if necessary.[49]

Experimental studies on stereotyping show that male and female job applicants with identical personal traits are matched according to their gender to jobs that are considered predominantly-male and predominantly-female.[50] And studies done in both experimental and natural settings demonstrate the impact of "sex role spillover," whereby gender-linked traits associated with male-dominated occupations can profoundly affect the working climate for women.[51]

36. A large body of research in industrial sociology, dating back to the 1950s, shows that individuals who find their opportunities for advancement

---

[49] S. Walton with J. Huey, Sam Walton: Made in America, My Story, Bantam Books, 1992, p. 218. Mr. Walton continued: "Nowadays, the industry has waked up to the fact that women make great retailers. So we at Wal-Mart, along with everybody else, have to do everything we possibly can to recruit and attract women." As I show below, one of the innovations supported by Mr. Walton to recruit women into management, the Resident Assistant Manager program, has been largely ignored in the years since his death.

[50] Glick et al., op cit.

[51] Gutek and B. Morasch, "Sex Ratios, Sex-Role Spillover, and Sexual Harassment of Women at Work," Journal of Social Issues, Vol. 38, 1982, p. 55-74; B. Gutek, Sex and the Workplace, Jossey-Bass, 1985; D. Burgess and E. Borgida, "Sexual Harassment: An Experimental Test of Sex-Role Spillover Theory," Personality and Social Psychology Bulletin, Vol. 23, 1997, p. 63-75.

blocked respond by lowering their goals and aspirations, and by lowering their commitment to their work compared to others with more promising career prospects.[52]

---

[52] R. Guest, "Work Careers and Aspiration of Automobile Workers," American Sociological Review, Vol. 19, 1954, p. 155-63; E. Chinoy, Automobile Workers and The American Dream, Doubleday 1955; T. V. Purcell, Blue Collar Man: Patterns of Dual Allegiance in Industry, Harvard University Press, 1960; R. Blauner, Alienation and Freedom, University of Chicago Press, 1964; O. Grusky, "Career Mobility and Organizational Commitment," Administrative Science Quarterly, Vol. 10, 1966, p. 489-502; Kanter, op cit.; J. A. Jacobs, Revolving Doors: Sex Segregation and Women's Careers, Stanford University Press, 1989; and K. Loscocco, "Reactions to Blue-Collar Work: A Comparison of Men and Women," Work and Occupations, Vol. 17, 1990, p. 152-177; L. M. Shore and S. J. Wayne, "Commitment and Employee Behavior: Comparison of Affective Commitment and Continuance Commitment with Perceived Organizational Support," Journal of Applied Psychology, Vol. 78, 1993, p. 774-780; J. E. Wallace, "Organizational and Professional Commitment in Professional and Nonprofessional Organizations," Administrative Science Quarterly, Vol. 40, 1995, p. 228-255; R. P. Settoon, N. Bennett, and R. C. Liden, "Social Exchange in Organizations: Perceived Organizational Support, Leader-Member Exchange, and Employee Reciprocity," Journal of Applied Psychology, Vol. 81, 1996, p. 219-227. For reviews, see W. T. Markham, S. L. Harlan, and E. J. Hackett, "Promotion Opportunity in organizations: Causes and Consequences," Research in Personnel and Human Resource Management, Vol. 5, 1987, p. 223-87 and D. D. Bielby, "Commitment to Work and Family," Annual Review of Sociology, Vol. 18, 1992, p. 281-302.

Discretionary and Subjective Procedures for Making Decisions that Affect Promotion and Compensation Managers Have Substantial Discretion on Criteria Used to Make Promotion and Compensation Decisions

37. Written guidelines for promotion are not absent in the Wal-Mart Personnel System. However, the materials I have reviewed indicate that: (1) written guidelines provide only minimum criteria for advancement, and managers can and do add additional criteria at their own discretion; (2) managers are able to modify or disregard written guidelines at their own discretion; and (3) there is little monitoring or oversight regarding how managers exercise their discretion in making promotion decisions.

38. Deponents ranging from store managers to top operations executives testified that there are no written criteria for selecting hourly associates for promotion into management or for promotions into Co-Manager or Store Manager positions, beyond the minimum requirements. They also testified that managers who make those selections have discretion to devise their own criteria, with no monitoring or oversight over how those criteria are devised or applied.[53]

---

[53] See, for example the testimony of the following Division 1 managers: Harris (former Executive Vice President, Operations) depo., p. 82-84, 213, 223-233; Haworth (Executive Vice President, Operations), p. 90-92; Pharr (Divisional Sr. Vice President) depo., p. 174-175; Schwindt (Divisional Sr. Vice President) depo., p. 132-139, 195-196, Maines (Regional Vice President) depo., p. 206-208; Williams (Regional Vice President) depo., p. 168-172; Ludwig (District Manager) depo., p. 149-151; Kintzele (District Manager) depo., p. 46-47, Raps (Store Man-

39. Wal-Mart managers gave similar testimony about promotion to hourly supervisory positions such as Support Manager. Company guidelines specify minimum criteria based on discipline, tenure, and performance evaluations, however there is no other written policy or guideline specifying the criteria to be used to select among candidates who meet the minimum criteria. Store managers are allowed to consider other factors and apply other criteria, and it is left to their discretion to devise and apply them.[54] For example, Store Manager Arturo Mireles testified that he was aware of no written criteria to be used in making decisions about promotion to Department Manager or Support Manager. His practice was to rely on a range of unwritten criteria, including subjective factors such as teamwork, ethics, integrity, ability to get along with others, and willingness to volunteer to come in to assist in the store or at another store outside of regular work hours.[55] While factors like these might have common sense appeal and some might in fact be appropriate to consider in ager) depo., p. 125-128; Harper depo., p. 212-214. Store Manager Jesse James Brown testified that during his years in management at Wal-Mart, he has never been overruled by anyone in higher level management for any personnel decision (Brown depo., p. 299). Mr. Harper testified that there is no written policy governing exceptions to the guidelines, that there is no system in place or analysis conducted to assess whether the guidelines are followed, and that no exception report is generated for promotion decisions regarding selection into management trainee and high level management positions (Harper depo., p. 212-215, 224-225).

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

[54] Harper depo., p. 142-145; Harris depo., p. 210-213.

[55] Mireles depo., p. 155-159, 180-182.

making promotion decisions, assessments will be biased unless they are assessed in a systematic and valid manner, with clear criteria and careful attention to the integrity of the decision-making process.[56]

40. The same kind of discretion is allowed in decisions about compensation for hourly employees. For example, in Division 1, each job is categorized into one of five job classifications, each with its own hourly starting rate. However, according to company policy the Store Manager can pay up to two dollars an hour above the stated rate, based on his or her assessment of factors such as previous pay and experience. There is no company guideline and no training on when and how to adjust pay upwards, and while overall payroll is monitored, there is no monitoring of these individual adjustments.[57] In fact, at the Store Manager's discretion, a new employee can be paid more than two dollars above the specified start rate, and in such instances no exception report is generated.[58]

41. Annual pay increases in Division One are tied to performance evaluation ratings, with a percentage increase guideline specified by the Home Office. A Store Manager can give a raise larger than the specified amount at his or her own discretion. In

---

[56] R. D. Gatewood and H. S. Field, Human Resource Selection, Third Edition, Dryden Press, 1994; and H. G. Heneman, III, R. L. Heneman, and T. A. Judge Staffing Organizations, Second Edition, Mendota House and Richard D. Irwin, 1997.

[57] Shatz depo., p. 66-72; Harper depo., p. 15-19. FYE 2003 Field Non-Exempt Associate Pay Guidelines, p. 5 (BATES WMHO366905).

[58] Shatz depo., p. 66-67.

addition, employees can be given merit increases for "exceptional performance." The company guideline is that a merit increase of four or five percent can be given no more than once per year, and it cannot be granted within 90 days of an annual performance increase or raise due to a promotion.[59] However, there is no guideline for assessing "exceptional performance" and no monitoring of the number of people who receive increases and how frequently they are given to any specific employee.[60] Managers can and do give merit raises more than once per year.[61]

Availability and Interest in Advancement is Not Assessed Systematically for Promotion into Management

42. Consistent and systematic job posting is an effective way to determine who is interested in and available for promotion to higher-level positions. An

---

[59] Harper depo., p. 51; FYE 2003 Field Non-Exempt Associate Pay Guidelines, p. 10 (BATES WMHO366910); Scanlin depo., p. 91.

[60] Arnold depo., p. 149-150; Harper depo., p. 51-55; Seaman depo., p. 253; Shatz depo., p. 82, 86-89. Company guidelines also specify a shift differential of fifty cents, with District Manager approval required for any differential over that amount (Pay Guidelines, p. 9). However, Mr. Shatz, who pays a one dollar differential in his store, testified that he did so without District Manager Approval and that he has never sought approval from a District Manager for any pay adjustment he has given (Shatz depo., p. 84-85).

[61] Shatz depo., p. 105-106; Ellison depo., p. 266-267; Raps depo., p. 256-250. District Manager Bernard Seaman was not aware of any guidelines about how to make decisions about merit raises or when merit raises should be given (Seaman depo., p. 253, 258-259).

effective system also communicates clear and accurate information to employees about the training and experience required to become eligible for a job, about job conditions, and about how the job fits into a career path in the organization.[62] Wal-Mart People Division Vice President Harper agreed that the company benefits from posting, by allowing people to show interest in a position. He added: "I think anytime you get the right candidate into the right job, the success of that person would certainly reflect in the performance of their area of responsibility." He agreed that posting benefits employees by giving them "an opportunity for promotion or an opportunity for diversifying their career by being able to work in different parts of the store."[63] Coleman Peterson, the Executive Vice President of the company's People Division, gave similar testimony: "Job posting ensures the company that it is able to attract and identify as many talented people as possible for jobs that are needed and for the individuals it provides an opportunity to apply for positions in the company that can allow them to move forward in their careers."[64] Mr. Peterson, who has been an advocate for the adoption of posting policies at the company, has also testified about their impact on workplace fairness. He testified that posting reduces litigation expenses because it affects "the fairness of how people get picked for jobs." According to Mr. Coleman: "People understand where the jobs are and they understand what it is you need to do to qualify for the jobs."[65] The testimony of these two executives from the company's People Division is consistent with the professional literature on human resources policy. Unfortunately, Wal-Mart's posting systems do not meet the criteria of effective and fair policy and practice. Wal-Mart has separate posting systems for hourly and management positions, and each has identifiable deficiencies that make them vulnerable to bias.

---

[62] Heneman, Heneman, and Judge op cit.; L. S. Kleiman and K. J. Clark, "An Effective Job Posting System," Personnel Journal, Vol. 63 (February), 1984, p. 20-25; J. Z. Levine, "Job Posting Practices," Personnel, Vol. 61 (November/December), 1994, p. 48-52; W. Markham, S. Harlan, and E. Hackett, "Promotional Opportunity in Organizations: Causes and Consequences," p. 223-287 in Research in Personnel and Human Resources Management, edited by K. Rowland and G. Ferris, Jai Press, 1987; J.P. Rudin and J. W. Boudreau, "Information Acquisition in Promotion Decisions," Human Relations, Vol. 49, 1996, p. 313-325.

[63] Harper depo., p. 116-117. Also see Harper depo., p. 153-154. Similarly, former People Division Vice President Andrew Wilson testified that posting of hourly positions was done so that employees in stores that might have as many as six hundred employees could become aware of which positions were available. He testified that it was the company's view that "it would encourage our associates to be able to know the jobs that were open and be able to apply for those jobs" (Wilson depo., p. 133-134).

43. Current company policy specifies that openings for hourly supervisory positions are to be posted within the store where the opening occurs. Online, computerized posting began in the late 1990s; prior

---

[64] Peterson depo. p. 162.

[65] Peterson depo., p. 166-167. Similarly, People Director Bob Monfils testified that posting of open District Manager and Store Manager positions helps ensure that the most qualified individuals apply for and are selected for these positions and allows all employees to feel they have a fair chance to apply (Monfils depo., p. 141-142).

to that there was paper posting of some positions.[66] However, under current policy, Store Managers have the authority to choose not to post a position. There are no written guidelines regarding when to depart from the posting policy, and there is no monitoring or review of exceptions to posting of hourly positions.[67] Store managers also have authority to waive minimum requirements regarding time in current position and coachings, and there are no guidelines specifying when this is appropriate.[68] In addition, there is no requirement to post openings that are filled by lateral moves, so, for example, a manager can choose not to post an open supervisory position and instead informally approach an existing supervisor and ask that person if he or she would like the position.[69]

---

[66] Wilson depo., p. 133-134, Peterson depo., p. 157-158, Weaver depo., p. 52-55 (paper posting of department manager lead and office supervisor positions in stores where she worked). Posting of hourly positions at Sam's Club began in approximately 1999 (Haworth depo., p. 50-51). Prior to the posting policy, one way openings were filled was for a manager to approach an employee considered to be a good performer and ask that person if he or she wanted the position (Weaver depo., p. 56-57).

[67] Harper depo., p. 118-119, Haworth depo., p. 88, Hams depo., p. 174-175. Mr. Harper was not aware of any analysis by the company on the frequency with which Store Managers depart form the posting policy. He testified that he was aware that complaints about lack of posting is one of the allegations in this litigation, and to his knowledge no effort has been made to find out if it is true (Harper depo., p. 119-120).

[68] Harper depo., p. 122-124.

[69] Weaver depo, p. 91-92. Under the policy, the position vacated by that supervisor would be posted (Weaver depo., p. 112).

44. Prior to 1998, management positions in Division 1 were not posted. Since then, posting of Store Manager, District Manager, and some other positions has been done via the computerized Management Career Selection ("MCS") system, although an employee needs the approval of his or her District Manager before applying via the MCS system.[70] Co-Manager, Assistant Store Manager, and Management Trainee positions are generally not posted.[71] As with hourly promotions, the Regional Personnel Managers have discretion to depart from the policy on posting management positions, although there is no written policy on when that is appropriate.[72] An exception report shows whether or not a position was posted and how long it took to fill a position, but no record is made of reasons for exceptions to the posting policy, and no statistical summary is complied

---

[70] Kintzele depo., p. 40; Peterson depo., p. 157-158; Management Career Selection Guide (BATES WMHO2 17238-217240). A limited test posting program for management trainees was tried for one week in January 2003 (Haworth depo., p. 49-50).

[71] Harper depo., p. 160-163; Kintzele depo., p. 41-42; Peterson depo., p. 160-161; Monfils depo., p. 145-146; Mitchell depo., p. 161-163, 169-170; Butler depo., p. 171; Martinez depo., p. 157-158; Scantlin depo., p. 141, 145; Seaman depo., p. 148. According to the July 2000 version of the MCS Training Manual, Co-Manager and Assistant Manager positions in Division 1 "may be posted on an exception only basis" with prior approval from the RPM's People Director (BATES WMHO349584; Monfils depo., p. 150-152). Mr. Harper testified that he did not know why Store Manager and hourly promotions were posted, but management trainee positions were not. He was not aware of any discussions in the company about why this is the case, outside of discussions with attorneys (Harper depo., p. 180-181).

[72] Harper depo., p. 151-153, 155-157.

regarding exceptions with the posting policy.[73] At Sam's Club, management positions are not posted, and on line posting of management trainee positions began just recently, in early January of 2003.[74]

45. The company's practice of requiring relocation across stores in order to move into salaried management positions makes the promotion process especially vulnerable to gender stereotyping. While it may indeed be the case that, on average, more women than men face family constraints that limit their ability to relocate for a management position, stereotypes lead people to act on an assumptions that overstate the extent to which that is true. The absence of a systematic mechanism for determining which employees are available for and interested in promotion from the hourly ranks into management is especially problematic in this context. In the absence of systematic, reliable, and timely information on the interests and availability of individual men and women, stereotypes about women's and men's family commitments and constraints will lead decision-makers to overlook or discount the availability of qualified women who want to advance into the salaried ranks. Similarly, District Managers who must give there approval before a salaried employee responds to a posting under the MCS system are likely to be influenced by stereotypes in the same way.

46. Lack of clarity in the relocation requirements associated with promotion to salaried management positions is likely to discourage some women from seeking promotions. Managers consistently testify that hourly employees usually move to a different store when they become management trainees and are promoted to Assistant Store Manager positions, and promotion to Co-Manager and Store Manager almost always involves relocation as well.[75] Less consistent is testimony about whether an employee must be able and willing to relocate their place of residence in order to be considered for a management position. For example, in District Manager Daniel Carter's district in Northern California, employees applying for the Management Training program have been asked to certify in writing that they are willing to transfer "to any location within the Wal-Mart trading area" to receive training and again at the completion of training.[76] Former Regional Vice President John Butler required Co-Managers to be willing to relocate "whenever and wherever we need them."[77] Similarly, Store Manager Bernard Seaman emphasizes the relocation requirements of the Management Training program when speaking to hourly employees who express interest:

---

[73] Harper depo., . 157-160, Mitchell depo., p. 153-159.

[74] Grimm depo., p. 232-233, Haworth depo., p. 56-57; Reeves depo., p. 159-160, Spragg depo., p. 182-183.

> Q. What do you tell that employee about the scope of that relocation requirement?
>
> A. I say, you realize you could be relocated, and it could mean from - in my case now, Seattle, I always use the example you could be in Texas, you could go to Maine, or, in my

---

[75] Mains depo., p. 196-197; Reeves depo., p. 156-157; Drogin Report, Table 16

[76] D. Carter depo., p. 260-264.

[77] Butler depo., p. 155-156.

> case, you get a call one day from Los Angeles and three weeks later you're in Seattle. So I kind of use my own experience. I throw that at them (Seaman depo., p. 349-350)

In contrast, other managers testify that ability and willingness to relocate one's place of residence is not an absolute requirement for promotion, although moving from one store to another usually is required.[78] As recently as June 2002, People Division Vice President Harper determined that it was important to remind Regional Personnel Managers that ability to relocate was not a mandatory requirement for promotion.[79] It is likely that hourly department heads considering a career in salaried management or Assistant Managers considering higher-level salaried positions may well be receiving mixed messages about whether they are required to indicate a willingness to relocate to any area of Wal-Mart's operations in order to be given serious consideration for a promotion. An individual who is not able to make that commitment is likely to be discouraged by the apparent emphasis on relocation, even when a move to a new store within a district or region would be possible.

47. Wal-Mart's founder, Sam Walton, recognized that the emphasis on relocation could work to the disadvantage of talented women who are qualified for management positions and that the business case for the emphasis on relocation might be overstated. In his autobiography, he discussed the original management philosophy, that one had to be ready to relocate on a moment's notice to move into management, and his views of the shortcomings of that approach:

---

[78] Harris depo., p. 233-236; Harper depo., p. 233-234, 238-242.

[79] Harper depo., p. 247-249.

48. Maybe that was necessary back in the old days, and maybe it was more rigid than it needed to be. Now, though, it's not really appropriate anymore for several reasons. First, as the company grows bigger, we need to find more ways to stay in touch with the communities where we operate, and one of the best ways to do that is by hiring locally, developing managers locally, and letting them have a career in their home community–if they perform. Second, the old way really put good, smart women at a disadvantage in our company because at the time they weren't as free to pick up and move as many men were. Now I've seen the light on the opportunities we missed out on with women.[80]

To open more opportunities for women in management, Mr. Walton was a strong supporter of the Resident Assistant Manager program. In the late 1980s, Wal-Mart implemented and later formalized a policy creating the position of Resident Assistant Manager for individuals who were eligible to be Assistant Managers but not able to relocate.[81] Resident Assistant Managers were eligible to move into a Co-Manager position without relocating.[82] According to Executive Vice President of Operations Jim Haworth, the program was phased out, although some Assistant Managers have been "grandfathered" into the program, and it is being "tested" in some areas currently. Mr. Harper testified that the program still exists, but with little participation and only on an "as requested" basis.[83] Former Regional Vice President John Butler said that he was "vaguely" aware of the program, Store Manager Bernard Seaman testified that he just recently learned of the program, and Store Manager Jesse James Brown had heard of the program but did not know if it applied to his store.[84] Don Harris and Jim Haworth, the former and current Executive Vice Presidents of Operations, each testified that they were unaware of any plans to expand the program.[85] And while Resident Assistant Managers are eligible for promotion, Wal-Mart Stores Chief Executive Officer Thomas Coughlin testified that he was not aware of anyone being promoted from that position.[86] In sum, this program, originally implemented in part to create more management opportunities for women, appears to have little effect anymore as a route to management for employees who have personal or family commitments that tie them to a specific community geographic region.

---

[80] Walton op cit., p. 217-218.

[81] Haworth depo., p. 97-98; Curran depo., p. 24-25, 27.

[82] Curran depo., p. 25-26.

---

[83] Harper depo., p. 242-243.

[84] Butler depo., p. ; Seaman depo., p. 354-355; Brown depo., p. 226-228.

[85] Harris depo., p. 238-239; Haworth depo., p. 100; also see Jarrells Porter depo., p. 246.

[86] Coughlin depo., p. 157-158.

Wal-mart's diversity efforts are inadequate for eliminating barriers to women's career advancement

48. Organizational policies and practices that create barriers to career advancement for women and minorities, once in place, become institutionalized and rarely change in the absence of any substantial change in a firm's business, technical, or legal environment.[87] This is especially true of personnel practices and policies that are reinforced by the

---

[87] L. Stinchcombe, "Social Structure and Organizations," p. 142-93 in Handbook of Organizations, edited by J. G. March, Rand McNally, 1965; M. T. Hannan and J. H. Freeman, "Structural Inertia and Organizational Change," American Sociological Review, Vol. 43, 1984, p. 143-164; J. N. Baron, "Organizational Evidence of Ascription in Labor Markets," in New Approaches to Economic and Social Analyses of Discrimination, edited by R. Cornwall and P. Wunnava, Praeger, 1991. The concept of organizational inertia has been applied in scientific studies conducted in a wide range of industrial settings. See, for example, J. Roggema and M. H. Smith, "Organizational Change in the Shipping Industry: Issues in the Transformation of Basic Assumptions," Human Relations, Vol. 36, 1983, p. 765-790; E. Abrahamson and C. J. Fombrun, "Macrocultures: Determinants and Consequences," Academy of Management Review, Vol. 19, 1994, p. 728-755; L. Gardenswartz and A. Rowe, "Diversity Management: Practical Application in a Health Care Organization," Frontiers of Health Services Management, Vol. 11, 1994, p. 36-40; G. T. Fairhurst, S. Green, and J. Courtright, "Inertial Forces and the Implementation of a Socio-technical Systems Approach: A Communication Study," Organization Science, Vol. 6, 1995, p. 168-185; C. Doucouliagos, "Conformity, Replication of Design and Business Niches," Journal of Economic Behavior & Organization, Vol. 30, 1996, p. 45-62; and M.. Ruef, "Assessing Organizational Fitness on a Dynamic Landscape: An Empirical Test of the Relative Inertia Thesis," Strategic Management Journal, Vol. 18, 1997, p. 837-853.

firm's culture.[88] However, gender bias in the workplace is by no means inevitable, and social science research shows what kinds of policies and practices effectively minimize bias.

49. Through deliberate efforts, the effects of stereotypes can be controlled.[89] Research studies show that the effects of stereotypes and out-group bias on evaluative judgments such as those involved in recruitment, hiring, job assignment, promotion, and assessments of skills and qualifications can be minimized when decision-makers know that they will be held accountable for the criteria used to make decisions, for the accuracy of the information upon which the decisions are based, and for the consequences their actions have for equal employment opportunity.[90] However, as I described above, at Wal-

---

[88] P. Doeringer and M. Piore, Internal Labor Markets and Manpower Analysis, D. C. Heath, 1971

[89] P. G. Devine, "Stereotypes and Prejudice: Their Automatic and Controlled Components," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 56, 1989; S. T. Fiske, M. Lin, and S. L. Neuberg, "The Continuum Model: Ten Years Later," p. 231-54 in Dual Process Theories in Social Psychology, edited by S. Chaiken and Y. Trope, Guilford Press, 1999.

[90] T. E. Nelson, M. Acker and M. Manis, "Irrepressible Stereotypes," Journal of Experimental Social Psychology, Vol. 32, 1996, p. 13-38; J. L. Eberhardt and S. T. Fiske, "Motivating Individuals to Change: What Is a Target to Do?" p. 369-415 in Stereotypes and Stereotyping, edited by C. N. Macrae, C. Stangor, and M. Hewstone, Guilford Press, 1996; A. M. Konrad and F. Linnehan, "Formalized HRM Structures: Coordinating Equal Employment Opportunity or Concealing Organizational Practices?" Academy of Management Journal, Vol. 38, 1995, p. 787-829; T. F. Pettigrew and J. Martin, "Shaping the Organizational Context for Black American Inclusion," Journal of Social Issues, Vol. 43, 1987, p. 41-78; G. R. Salancik and J. Pfeffer, "Uncer-

Mart, personnel decisions regarding promotion and hourly compensation rely significantly on discretionary and subjective criteria, with little monitoring and oversight.

50. Formal written policies alone are not sufficient to minimize bias in personnel decisions. A written equal employment opportunity ("EEO") policy that is simply reactive and lacks effective accountability is vulnerable to bias against women and minorities. Often, such a system constitutes what social scientists call symbolic compliance: an exercise in "going through the motions," with little substantive impact on creating a work environment that is free of tainty, Secrecy, and the Choice of Similar Others," Social Psychology, Vol. 41, 1978, p. 246-55; C. T. Schreiber, K. F. Price, and A. Morrison, "Workforce Diversity and the Glass Ceiling: Practices, Barriers, Possibilities," Human Resource Planning, Vol. 16, 1993, p. 51-69; P. E. Tetlock, "Accountability: The Neglected Social Context of Judgment and Choice," p. 297-332 in Research in Organizational Behavior, Vol. 7, edited by L. L. Cummings and B. M. Staw, Jai Press, 1985; P. E. Tetlock and J. I. Kim, "Accountability and Judgment Processes in a Personality Prediction Task," Journal of Personality and Social Psychology, Vol. 52, 1987, p. 700-709; P. E. Tetlock, "The Impact of Accountability on Judgment and Choice: Toward a Social Contingency Model," Advances in Experimental Social Psychology, Vol. 25, 1992, p. 331-376; Reskin, op cit.; P. M. Tetlock and M. Lerner, "The Social Contingency Model: Identifying Empirical and Normative Boundary Conditions on the Error-and-Bias Portrait of Human Nature," p. 571-585 in Dual Process Theories in Social Psychology, edited by S. Chaiken and Y. Trope, Guilford Press, 1999, W. Bielby, 2000, op cit. To see how human resource professionals apply these principles in the design of personnel systems, Gatewood and Field, op cit.; and Heneman, Heneman, and Judge op cit.

---

[Footnote continued from previous page]

bias.[91] True "EEO accountability" has three key elements: (1) monitoring and analysis of disparities in career trajectories; (2) systematic evaluation of managers on their contributions to the firms' goals regarding diversity and equal employment opportunity; and (3) monitoring and analysis of employees' perceptions of discriminatory barriers and career opportunities.[92] Below, I assess the effectiveness of Wal-Mart's policies and practices on each of these dimensions.

Monitoring of Gender Disparities

51. Effective EEO policy includes the regular monitoring and analysis of patterns of segregation and differences by gender and race in pay and career

---

[91] L. B. Edelman, "Legal Ambiguity and Symbolic Structures: Organizational Mediation of Civil Rights Law," American Journal of Sociology, Vol. 97, 1992, p. 1531-1576; L. B. Edelman, S. Patterson, E. Chambliss, and H. S. Erlanger, "Legal Ambiguity and the Politics of Compliance: Affirmative Action Officers' Dilemma," Law and Policy, Vol. 13, 1991, p. 73-97; L. B. Edelman, H. S. Erlanger, and J. Lande, "Employers' Handling of Discrimination Complaints: The Transformation of Rights in the Workplace," Law & Society Review, Vol. 27, 1993, p. 497-534; L. B. Edelman, Lauren B. and S. Petterson, "Symbols and Substance in Organizational Response to Civil Rights Law," in Research in Social Stratification and Mobility, 1999; M. E. Heilman, " Sex Stereotypes and their Effects in the Workplace: What We Know and What we Don't Know," Journal of Social Behavior and Personality, Vol. 10, 1995, p. 3-26; J. S. Leonard, "Women and Affirmative Action," Journal of Economic Perspectives, Vol. 3 (No. 1), 1989, p. 61-75. Also see J. S. Leonard, Use of Enforcement Techniques in Eliminating Glass Ceiling Barriers, Report prepared for the U. S. Department of Labor, Glass Ceiling Commission, April 1994.

[92] W. Bielby, 2000, op cit.

advancement as a routine part of an organization's personnel system. Such monitoring is used to assess whether disparities are greater than what plausibly might be expected based on differences in job-related knowledge, skills, abilities, interests, availability and other job-related factors that influence an employee's contributions to the organization.

52. Gender composition in Wal-Mart jobs is tracked in several reports. Kevin Harper, Vice President of the People Division reviews the monthly People P & L report and a quarterly People Update reporting the gender composition of Wal-Mart's hourly workforce and salaried management. A quarterly Diversity Report Card compiles regional People P & L statistics in a single report.[93] However, statistics on gender composition are not analyzed to assess factors that could account for the disparity in women's representation among salaried management positions compared to the representation in the hourly workforce and in hourly department head positions. Managers testified consistently that they did not believe that women were less qualified than men for management positions in the company, and Wal-Mart has taken a similar position in its responses to plaintiffs' interrogatories.[94] Yet there have been no attempts to explain, for example, why it is that women in Division 1 represent more than three quarters of all hourly department heads but only 38% of Assistant Managers.[95] Nor is there any regular monitoring of gender disparities in compensation among hourly or managerial employees.[96] In addition, there have been no studies of whether women are less interested than men in management positions.[97] In sum, Wal-Mart's policies and practices regarding equal employment opportunity include no systematic assessment of disparities by gender in pay, promotion, and other career outcomes designed to identify possible discriminatory barriers and remedy them.

---

[93] Harper depo., p. 273-280; Ruiz depo., p. 170.

[94] For example, see Haworth depo., p. 109-110; Bosler depo., p. 120; Butler depo., p. 200-201; Curan depo., p. 100; Harris depo., p. 85; Kintzele depo., p. 188; Ludwig depo., p. 237-237; Martinez depo., p. 265-266; Perkins depo., p. 84; Schaffner depo., p. 157; Defendant's Supplemental Objections and Answers to Plaintiffs' First and Second Sets of Interrogatories, p. 7.

Evaluation of Managers on Contributions to Company EEO and Diversity Objectives

53. THE second component of EEO accountability is explicit evaluation of managers and supervisors on their contributions to an organization's EEO objectives. Nearly all medium- to large-scale organizations have a written antidiscrimination policy. Many have a written policy stating that implementing the objectives of the Affirmative Action Plan is the responsibility of every employee, a statement often repeated by top executives. However, such policies are merely symbolic unless they also delineate explicit duties and responsibilities relating to equal employment opportunity in each manager's or supervisor's

---

[95] Harper depo., p. 304-305; Jarrells Porter depo., p. 242-249; Haworth depo., p. 113; Harris depo., p. 95.

[96] Coughlin depo., p. 121-123; Harris depo., p. 175-178; Harper depo., p. 37, 88-93 (on one study of gender differences in base pay among managers), 100; Haworth depo., p. 177-178; Schwindt depo., p. 265; Shatz depo., p. 115.

[97] Curran depo., p. 89; Harper depo., p. 128, 185; Haworth depo., p. 54-55, 108-109; Monfils depo., p. 94-95.

job description, which can then be related to specific evaluative dimensions in the performance reviews of those employees.

54. One way of evaluating managers' contributions is to establish numerical goals and assess managers on progress towards achieving those goals. At Wal-Mart, goals have been established for women's representation in management, and diversity has been added to the "people" dimension of managers' performance evaluation. However, the numerical goals themselves are not based on any assessment of women's representation among those qualified and available for salaried management positions and the rate at which women would be expected to move into those positions absent any barriers to equal employment opportunity. Instead, Wal-Mart's goals for women's representation are based on the principle that they should reflect the "community" (i.e. roughly 50%), without any regard to gender composition of the relevant applicant pools.[98] In fact, the goals themselves are established in an ad hoc manner, without any guidelines. For example, in Division 1 since 2000, District Managers have devised their own goals, which are compiled and aggregated by Regional Personnel Managers into goals for each region, which are in turn compiled and aggregated by People Directors and forwarded to the People Division Vice President.[99] District Managers, RPMs, and Regional Vice Presidents are not given any instruction on how to determine their goals other than

---

[98] Harper depo., p. 291-293, 302-303.

[99] Harper depo., p. 293-294, 296-297, 299-300; Jarrells Porter depo., p. 118-120; Ellison depo., p. 179-184.

to increase representation, and there is no written document describing the goal-setting process.[100] Managers at the level of District Manager and higher are evaluated on progress towards those goals.[101] A similar process has been used for setting goals at Sam's Club.[102] Not surprisingly, Wal-Mart managers set modest goals that are slightly higher the current representation. For example, RVP Butler testified, "we look at where we are, and we select what we think — what we consider is a reasonable improvement from one year to the next."[103] Sandy Ellison testified that when she was a RPM, she would compile District Manager goals into a spreadsheet and examine whether they "made sense" and "weren't worse than the year before or something like that." District Manager Daniel Carter testified that Ms. Ellison, when she was his RPM, would review with him associate demographics reported on the People P &L, but he was never given any goals regarding women's representation in management.[104] Mr. Carter testified that the one time he was asked to develop a goal for his district, he did not want to write anything down that was "unrealistic or I knew wouldn't happen immediately."[105] Similarly, District Manager Ludwig Marcus testified that he was not aware of any company goals about promoting women into management, and that when he was a RPM the goals he set with District Managers were not any sort of target, other than an indication of a need to improve.[106] Sam's RPM Ben Dolan testified that he was looking for goals that were "realistic or achievable" from his Directors of Operations ("DO"), and that he did not know how they set their goals. He chose purposely not to give DOs guidance because he "wanted to see what they submitted back."[107] Wal-Mart Store Manager Jesse James Brown testified that he has not had any discussions with his District Manager or other Wal-Mart officials about goals and objectives for his store regarding female managers.[108] Similarly, Store Manager Arturo Mireles testified that he was not aware of any goals for promotion of women into management, and Store Manager Marvin Raps gave similar testimony.[109] At Sam's Club, Director of Operations Mark Bosler and General Manager Alan Oshier each testified that they were not aware of any goals for increasing women's representation in management.[110]

---

[100] Harper depo., p. 297-299, Butler depo., p. 203, Ellison depo., p. 184-186.

[101] Harper depo., p. 310-311.

[102] Dolan depo., p. 71-73, 240-243.

[103] Butler depo., p. 203.

[104] D. Carter depo., p. 215-219.

[105] D. Carter depo., p. 219-220.

55. In the absence of guidelines, managers who are aware that they are evaluated relative to diversity goals have an incentive to establish modest

---

[106] Ludwig depo., p. 234-235.

[107] Dolan depo., p. 243-244. Mr. Dolan testified that after assuming his position as RPM in 2001 it took him about six months to get a feel for what kinds of goals were "reasonable numbers."

[108] Brown depo., p. 207-208; also see p. 159, 161.

[109] Mireles depo., p. 219; Raps depo., p. 222-225.

[110] Bosler depo., p. 85; Oshier depo., p. 69-70.

goals, and there is little incentive to work aggressively to meet them, since evidence of improvement, rather than meeting the goal, is viewed as satisfactory performance.[111] Overall, contribution towards diversity goals is at best only weakly tied to the compensation of managers. For Store Managers and Co-Managers, performance evaluation is not a factor for either base salary or incentive pay, so evaluation on contributions to diversity goals has no impact on their compensation.[112] For others, diversity is one component of one dimension of the performance evaluation, and it is the overall aggregate score that is tied to managers' percentage raises.[113] For example, Jeff Reeves, former Vice President of People at Sam's Club, testified that managers received a "very subjective" rating of diversity contributions on a 1 to 5 scale. That rating was one component of four, which together had a weight of just 5% in the overall evaluation score for General Managers and Co-Managers. Of course, evaluation of diversity contributions has no effect at all on motivating managers' behavior if they are not aware that they are being evaluated, and there is deposition testimony suggesting that is the case for some managers. For example, District Manager John Scantlin could not recall whether meeting demographic goals had ever been discussed with him as part of his evaluations, and John Butler, formerly a Regional Vice President at Wal-Mart, did not know whether any portion of the performance evaluation score was tied to diversity.[114]

---

[111] Harper depo., p. 311-312.

[112] Arnold depo., p. 178-192.

[113] Jarrells Porter, p. 149-150. For Division 1, see Ellison depo., p. 192-194. For Sam's Club, see Grimm depo., p. 117-118.

56. The absence of a significant relationship between diversity contributions and compensation was viewed as a major weakness of the company's diversity efforts by former Sam's Club People Vice President Jeff Reeves. In his view, diversity efforts will remain "lip service" unless diversity contributions are tied in a significant way to incentive pay.[115] In the assessment of Mr. Reeves, efforts to increase the diversity of the company's management ranks will remain limited until executives and managers fully embrace diversity efforts as an integral part of the operations side of the business.[116]

57. The materials I have reviewed are consistent with Mr. Reeves' assessment. It is clear that there has been an increased emphasis on diversity issues by high level human resources executives at Wal-Mart since the late 1990s, but that commitment has had little impact on actual personnel policy and practice as it relates to compensation among hourly employees and promotion into field management. The company's diversity efforts have been weak in assessing and addressing vulnerabilities to bias created by discretionary and subjective aspects of the personnel system. The process for setting diversity goals and evaluating contributions to diversity objectives is not linked in any meaningful way to identify-

---

[114] Scantlin depo., p. 72.

[115] Reeves depo., p. 21-24, 26, 34-35, 38-40, 282.

[116] Reeves depo., p. 15-16, 34-35, 263-264.

ing and eliminating barriers to equal employment opportunity.

58. Although Wal-Mart Stores Chief Executive Officer Thomas Coughlin has testified that responsibility for diversity is shared equally by all management employees,[117] awareness of diversity goals is limited both among top operations executives and store-level managers. While operational aspects of Wal-Mart's business are run with centralized coordination and oversight, Mr. Coughlin rejects having the same kind of oversight and accountability in the area of diversity.[118] Absent this kind of accountability, true integration of diversity policy into the personnel practices in the operating divisions and genuine commitment to diversity efforts by managers and executives who oversee and make decisions about pay and career advancement is unlikely to take place. In addition, other proactive efforts that have the potential to contribute to enhanced diversity in the management ranks, such as recent efforts to identify and develop highly qualified women and minority employees,[119] are likely to have limited success.

Monitoring Employees' Perceptions of Discriminatory Barriers

59. The Third component of EEO accountability is systematic analysis of feedback from employees about perceptions of barriers to and opportunities for

---

[117] Coughlin depo., p. 199-204.

[118] Coughlin depo., p. 200-201.

[119] See, for example, Ellison depo., p. 207; Jarrells Porter depo., p. 281-282.

career advancement. Systematic monitoring of trends in employees' perceptions of barriers to career advancement and of top management's commitment to EEO can be used to identify subtle forms of bias and related problems not immediately apparent from analyses of more objective workforce data.

60. Wal-Mart surveys its employees annually as part of its Grass Roots survey program. The survey is designed to assess employees' perceptions on work-related issues. Results are tabulated by store, and the top three concerns are posted at each store. Store Managers are expected to meet with their employees to discuss those concerns and to develop specific action plans for addressing them.[120] Responses to the survey are also used to compute an Unresolved People Index ("UPI," formerly called Union Potential Index), which is used to identify stores at risk of union organizing activity. Stores scoring high on the index are targeted for intervention by company management and are subsequently re-surveyed to assess whether there is any improvement in employee morale following intervention.[121]

61. The Grass Roots Survey, which has been conducted annually since 1994, would seem to be an efficient mechanism for assessing employees' perceptions about barriers to equal opportunity associated with gender. However, the survey has never been used to assess employees' perceptions on issues such as whether they have been treated unfairly due to

---

[120] Albrecht depo., p. 56-57, 140; Coughlin depo., p. 187-188; Peterson depo., p. 68, 189-190.

[121] Albrecht depo, p. 107-109, 142-143; Hobbs depo., p. 185; Sims depo., p. 177-178.

gender (or race) or the firm's commitment to diversity. Nor have the results of Grass Roots Surveys ever been analyzed by gender or race in order to assess perceived discriminatory barriers.[122] Indeed, according to Kristi Lem Albrecht, the company's 30(b)6 deponent on surveys, there have been no employee surveys of any kind addressing diversity issues or the treatment of women employees.[123]

62. In sum, Wal-Mart has a range of diversity and equal opportunity policies and initiatives, many of them implemented in the past few years. Unfortunately, they have identifiable weaknesses that limit their effectiveness for identifying and eliminating discriminatory barriers. The process for setting goals is not linked to a systematic assessment of the policies and practices that influence the rate at which men and women advance through their careers at Wal-Mart. Evaluation of managers on contributions to the company's diversity and equal employment opportunity objectives is too weak to have any significant effect, and the company fails to use the tools available to it to systematically assess employees' perceptions of discriminatory barriers related to gender. In contrast to the centralized coordination and control that characterizes the operations side of Wal-Mart's operations, its human re-

---

[122] Albrecht depo., p. 70-72; Jarrells Porter depo., p. 147; Peterson depo., p. 189-193. Although the surveys had been conducted annually since 1994, Ms. Albrecht testified that the first and only time she was asked to do a tabulation by gender was in 2001, and at that time she discovered that the system being used for the survey at that time was not capable of producing results separately by gender (Albrecht depo., p. 70-71).

[123] Albrecht depo., p. 55-56.

sources practices regarding equal employment opportunities are too diffuse to establish meaningful oversight and accountability.

63. I have concluded that an elaborate and sophisticated system of centralized coordination, reinforced by a strong organizational culture, creates and sustains uniformity in personnel policy and practice throughout Wal-Mart's organizational units. I have also concluded that subjective and discretionary features of the company's personnel policy and practice make decisions about compensation and promotion vulnerable to gender bias. In addition, I have concluded that there are significant deficiencies in the way the company monitors its personnel policies and practices, establishes diversity goals, and evaluates managers' contributions to equal opportunity objectives. Personnel policy and practice at Wal-Mart as implemented in the field has features known to be vulnerable to gender bias. Discretionary and subjective elements of Wal-Mart's personnel system and inadequate oversight and ineffective anti-discrimination efforts contribute to disparities between men and women in their compensation and career trajectories at the company.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 21st, 2003, at Santa Barbara, California

/s/ William T. Bielby

William T. Bielby, Ph.D.

[illegible]
FILED
JAN 20 2011
[illegible]

No. 10-277

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Petitioner,

v.

BETTY DUKES, ET AL.,

Respondents.

On Writ Of Certiorari
To The United States Court Of Appeals
For The Ninth Circuit

JOINT APPENDIX
Volume 2 of 3
(Pages 578a-1157a)

THEODORE J. BOUTROUS, JR.
Counsel of Record
GIBSON, DUNN & CRUTCHER LLP
333 South Grand Avenue
Los Angeles, CA 90071
(213) 229-7000
tboutrous@gibsondunn.com

Counsel for Petitioner

BRAD SELIGMAN
Counsel of Record
THE IMPACT FUND
125 University Ave., Suite 102
Berkeley, CA 94710
(519) 845-3473
bseligman@impactfund.org

Counsel for Respondents

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI FILED AUGUST 25, 2010
CERTIORARI GRANTED DECEMBER 6, 2010

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Page

Relevant Docket Entries from the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, No. 04-16688 .... 1a

Relevant Docket Entries from the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, No. 04-16720 .... 14a

Relevant Docket Entries from the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit, No. 04-80057 .... 26a

Relevant Docket Entries from the United States District Court for the Northern District of California, No. 3:01-cv-02252-VRW 29a

Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint (Sept. 12, 2002) 47a

Defendant Wal-Mart Stores, Inc.'s Answer and Affirmative Defenses to Plaintiffs' Third Amended Complaint (Nov. 25, 2002) 81a

Exhibits to Declaration of Christine Webber in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (April 24, 2003)

Deposition of Kevin Harper (Mar. 12, 2002) (Exhibit 1) 105a

Deposition of John Butler (June 21, 2002) (Exhibit 4) 143a

Deposition of Trent Burner (July 31, 2002) (Exhibit 5) 154a

Deposition of Roxanne Wigger (Apr. 18, 2002) (Exhibit 7) 159a

Deposition of Kevin Harper (Oct. 9, 2002) (Exhibit 11) 163a

Deposition of Celia Swanson (Nov. 6, 2002) (Exhibit 14) 205a

Deposition of Thomas M. Coughlin, III (Jan. 17, 2003) (Exhibit 15) 209a

Deposition of Coleman Peterson (Dec. 18, 2002) (Exhibit 16) 222a

Deposition of Melinda Hass (Apr. 24, 2002) (Exhibit 27) 235a

Deposition of Ulonda Crawford (July 17, 2002) (Exhibit 30) 259a

Deposition of Craig Arnold (June 4, 2002) (Exhibit 31) 271a

Deposition of Jeffrey B. Reeves (Jan. 14, 2003) (Exhibit 33) 291a

Deposition of Rhonda Harper (Mar. 17, 2003) (Exhibit 36) 303a

Deposition of Kendall Schwindt (Sept. 11, 2002) (Exhibit 38) 307a

Deposition of Rose M. Reza (Jan. 3, 2003) (Exhibit 39) 321a

Deposition of Sharon M. Bilgischer (Oct. 15, 2002) (Exhibit 45) 326a

Deposition of Mark O. Bosler (May 15, 2002) (Exhibit 57) 332a

Deposition of Brenda J. Deno (Oct. 21, 2002) (Exhibit 69) 335a

2001 Company Accountability Goals (Exhibit 79) 339a

Sam Walton & John Huey, Made in America: My Story (1992) (Exhibit 87) 363a

Defendant's Supplemental Objections and Answers to Plaintiffs' First and Second Sets of Interrogatories (Nos. 11, 17, 22) (Exhibit 97) 371a

Promotional Guidelines (Exhibit 98) 390a

Memo from Andy Wilson re: Management Selection Process (Nov. 20, 2000) (Exhibit 98) 393a

Retail Benchmarks on Diversity (Exhibit 110) 397a

Bentonville '99 People Strategic Planning Session, Coleman Peterson Memo (Exhibit 111) 405a

3/4/99 Minutes of Meeting of the Compensation and Nominating Committee of the Board of Directors (Exhibit 112) 406a

Memo from Cole Peterson re: Catalyst Census of Women Corporate Officers and Top Earners (Feb. 13, 2001) (Exhibit 114) 410a

E-mail from Susan Smith re: Women in Leadership (May 13, 1996) (Exhibit 115) 414a

Diversity Ideas (Dec. 12, 2001) (Exhibit 116) 416a

Relocation Agreement (Exhibit 117) 419a

Map Identifying Locations of Each Wal-Mart Facility About Which Declarant Has Provided Testimony Relevant to Plaintiffs' Motion (Exhibit 125) 420a

Declaration of Marc Bendick, Jr., Ph.D. in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 421a

Declaration of Richard Drogin, Ph.D. in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 465a

Declaration of William T. Bielby, Ph.D. in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 520a

Declaration of Sheila Acree in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 578a

Declaration of Donna Adair in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 583a

Declaration of Gretchen Adams in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 590a

Declaration of Wanda Akley in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 603a

Declaration of Edith Arana in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 606a

Declaration of Lori Arhangelsky in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 625a

Declaration of Patricia Bebee in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 632a

Declaration of Geanette Bell in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 640a

Declaration of Sandra Berkowitz in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 645a

Declaration of Joan Berry in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 650a

Declaration of Paula Bird in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 654a

Declaration of Lisa Bourdeaux in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 660a

Declaration of Danette Brown Ballou in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 665a

Declaration of Sue Brown in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 672a

Declaration of Patricia Buckley in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 676a

Declaration of Vivian Calimee in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 679a

Declaration of Thearsa Collier in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 686a

Declaration of Jeanette Connaker in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 695a

Declaration of Rita Coones in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 702a

Declaration of Mary Crawford in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 707a

Declaration of Trudy Crom in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 716a

Declaration of Darlene Crowder in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 722a

Declaration of Laurie Dewall in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 729a

Declaration of Anna Dobbs in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 735a

Declaration of Julie Donovan in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 740a

Declaration of Betty Dukes in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 743a

Declaration of Diane Durfey in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 750a

Declaration of Micki Earwood in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 757a

Declaration of Penny Elkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 765a

Declaration of Shirley Ervine in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 772a

Declaration of Gina Espinoza-Price in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 779a

Declaration of Brenda Evans in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 789a

Declaration of Dedra Farmer in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 793a

Declaration of Jennifer Furtado in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 805a

Declaration of Anita Galentine in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 813a

Declaration of Catherine Gorba in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 817a

Declaration of Earnestine Gordon in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 822a

Declaration of Deborah Gunter in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 827a

Declaration of Sheila Hall in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 839a

Declaration of Tammy Hall in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 844a

Declaration of Rene Harkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 859a

Declaration of Cecilia Harrison in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 864a

Declaration of Teresa Hawkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 874a

Declaration of Tina Herndon in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 881a

Declaration of Susan Hitch in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 885a

Declaration of Dawn Hittle in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 891a

Declaration of Nancy Hom in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 896a

Declaration of Angela Horton in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 907a

Declaration of Amy Houchins-Post in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 916a

Declaration of Brenda Houle in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 920a

Declaration of Melissa Howard in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 924a

Declaration of Tammy Howard in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 934a

Declaration of Frances Jackson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 943a

Declaration of Joanne Jaso in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 947a

Declaration of Jennifer Johnson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 952a

Declaration of Katheryn Johnson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) ... 958a

Declaration of Lucretia Johnson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 964a

Declaration of Laverne Jones in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 970a

Declaration of Sheila Joyce in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 975a

Declaration of Gayle Kellems in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 980a

Declaration of Martha Kettle in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 992a

Declaration of Christine Kwapnoski in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 997a

Declaration of Jaime Lanois in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1007a

Declaration of Darlene Leadingham in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1011a

Declaration of Phyllis Lehman in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1016a

Declaration of Van Le-Kohler in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1022a

Declaration of Lorrina Letterer in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1027a

Declaration of Gail Lovejoy in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1030a

Declaration of Kathleen MacDonald in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1035a

Declaration of Barbara Mack in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1040a

Declaration of Sandra Marshall in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1048a

Declaration of Nancy Martin in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1053a

Declaration of Irma Mathis in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1059a

Declaration of Lori B. McCarthy in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1064a

Declaration of Alix McKenna in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1072a

Declaration of Kim McLamb in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1077a

Declaration of Umi Jean Minor in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1081a

Declaration of Michella Minton in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1088a

Declaration of Elizabeth Monroe in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1093a

Declaration of Joyce Moody in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1097a

Declaration of Denise Mott in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1104a

Declaration of Stephanie Odle in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1112a

Declaration of Cleo Page in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1124a

Declaration of Carolyn Perkins in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1131a

Declaration of Lori Pidich in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1136a

Declaration of Sue McFarland Ramirez in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1144a

Declaration of Sandra Ratliff in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1158a

Declaration of Donna Reed in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1165a

Declaration of Claudia Renati in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1168a

Declaration of Karla Rojas in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1174a

Declaration of Kathleen Schmeida in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1183a

Declaration of Ramona Scott in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1186a

Declaration of Dawnia Self in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1190a

Declaration of Susan Servatius in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1195a

Declaration of Jody Shearer in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1211a

Declaration of Barbara Steele in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1215a

Declaration of Sandra Stevenson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1222a

Declaration of Anna Stumpf in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1228a

Declaration of Patricia Surgeson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1242a

Declaration of Dawn Sweeny in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1248a

Declaration of Andrea Tallent in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1254a

Declaration of Sandra Thomas in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1258a

Declaration of Vicki Thornton in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1261a

Declaration of Melodie Underwood in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1268a

Declaration of Dawn White in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1274a

Declaration of Deanna Willard in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1279a

Declaration of Jenny Williams in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1285a

Declaration of Lorie Williams in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1292a

Declaration of Karen Williamson in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1298a

Declaration of Jan Wolsleger in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1302a

Declaration of Wei Wu-Emmert in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1306a

Declaration of Detrix Young in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1311a

Declaration of Tamara Zumbrun in Support of Plaintiffs' Motion for Class Certification (Apr. 28, 2003) 1315a

Declaration of Wei Ming Bogardus in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1322a

Declaration of Joan G. Haworth, Ph.D. in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1330a

Declaration of Charlyn Jarrells-Porter in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1576a

Declaration of Jina Jordan in Rebuttal to Declaration of Designated Class Member Katheryn Johnson (June 12, 2003) 1597a

Declaration of Marie Perkins in Rebuttal to Declaration of Designated Class Member Earnestine Gordon (June 12, 2003) 1601a

Declaration of Margaret Daniel in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1606a

Declaration of Sandy Ellison in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1612a

Declaration of Victoria Howard in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1618a

Declaration of Julie Jeneane Murphy in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1630a

Declaration of Janice Tree in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1637a

Declaration of Stacey Wiggins in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (June 12, 2003) 1647a

Declaration of Linda Donath in Rebuttal to Declaration of Designated Class Member Sheila Acree (June 12, 2003) 1652a

Declaration of Sandra Jean Ellison in Support of Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (Ellison Decl. II) (June 25, 2003) 1655a

Supplemental Declaration of Christine Kwapnoski in Reply to Defendant's Opposition to Motion for Class Certification (July 3, 2003) 1659a

Supplemental Declaration of Dr. Richard Drogin in Support of Plaintiffs' Reply Brief in Support of Motion to Strike Portions of Haworth Declaration for Failure to Comply with Fed. R. Civ. Pro. 26(a)(2) (July 11, 2003) 1662a

The following documents have been omitted in printing this joint appendix because they appear on the following pages in the appendix to the petition for a writ of certiorari:

Opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit 1a

Order of the United States District Court for the Northern District of California Granting in Part and Denying in Part Motion for Class Certification 162a

Order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit Granting Rehearing En Banc 284a

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF SHEILA ACREE IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Sheila Acree, declare:

1. I am a female former employee of Wal-Mart. I reside in Missouri.

2. Prior to my employment at Wal-Mart, I had more than 15 years' experience working in retail stores, including eight years as an assistant manager.

3. I worked at a Wal-Mart store in Chillicothe, Missouri from September 1994 to February 2000 as a Sales Associate and from May 2000 to April 2001 as a Cashier. I was interested in and qualified for management positions, but I could never find any written information about the Management Training Program or other promotional opportunities. Many hourly supervisor positions in the Chillicothe store were not posted, which prevented me from expressing my interest in those jobs. I was never mentored or encouraged toward my goal of becoming a Wal-Mart manager.

4. As a Sales Associate in the Ladies' Wear, Men's Wear, Lingerie, and Infants Departments, I gained a lot of experience in the job responsibilities of a clothing department manager. In approximately 1997, I performed all Department Manager duties for about a month while the Lingerie Department Manager (Lisa Lenhoff) was on vacation. Also in approximately 1997, Assistant Manager Linda Donath and Management Trainee Bart Gabert selected me to help train employees in the clothing departments of a new Wal-Mart that was opening in Kansas City, Missouri. In approximately 1998, Assistant Manager Karen Thomas assigned me to train new employees in the clothing departments at the Chillicothe store.

5. My qualifications and experience are reflected in several of my performance evaluations. In 1997, my evaluation was "above standard," and it states, "[Sheila] is able to step in when department manager is gone and take care of the department." (True and correct copy attached hereto as Acree Exhibit A.) In 1998, my evaluation was "above standard," and it states, "[Sheila] is a fast productive worker. . . . She does a good job in accomplishing her goals and meeting deadlines. . . . Sheila is able to take care of [the Lingerie Department] when the dept. mgr. is gone." (True and correct copy attached hereto as Acree Exhibit B.) My 1999 evaluation was "exceeds expectations." (True and correct copy attached hereto as Acree Exhibit C.) Store Manager Frank Chaney signed these three evaluations.

6. At the Chillicothe store, open hourly supervisor positions were not always posted, which meant that I could not always express my interest in open positions. I monitored job postings, and applied for some posted hourly supervisor positions, which I saw as a way to learn about management at Wal-Mart in the absence of written information. However, I often saw that management selected employees for promotion without first posting the job and allowing me a chance to even express interest in the position. For example, I recall that the Fabrics Department Manager position was not posted and was filled before I could apply. Despite my qualifications, I was never interviewed for any promotional opportunity, and I was never promoted to an hourly supervisor position.

7. To my recollection, Support Manager positions were never posted in the Chillicothe store. I never saw any written information in the store or on the internal computer system about required qualifications or the application process for Support Manager jobs. During the course of the seven years I worked at Wal-Mart, I remember only two women who held the position of Support Manager.

8. There was never an opportunity to express interest in the Management Training Program. There was no application process or procedure to sign up for interviews.

9. After each instance in which I was denied a promotion, I used the Open Door to meet with Store Manager Frank Chaney to ask why I had not been selected. Each time, Mr. Chaney told me he did not know why I was not selected. Mr. Chaney never told me that I had performance problems that would prevent my promotion. Mr. Chaney never gave me verbal or written information about the necessary qualifications for Department Manager, Support Manager, or the Management Training Program. He provided no mentoring to help me become a Wal-Mart manager.

10. In approximately 2000, after Store Manager Chaney again failed to give a meaningful response to my request for information about why I did not get a posted promotion, I used the Open Door to talk with the District Manager about being passed over for promotions. When I called the District Manager, he was unavailable to speak with me, so I left a message with his assistant. I never received a return phone call from the District Manager or his assistant, despite Wal-Mart's "Sundown Rule," which requires managers to respond on the same day to an employee or customer complaint. This confirmed my belief that Wal-Mart had no interest in promoting me.

11. During the period of 1997 to 1999, I had to take several medical leaves of absence to care for my husband, who had five heart attacks during those two years. Even during those two years, my evaluation ratings were "above standard" and 'exceeds expectations." (See Acree Exhibits A, B, C.) I received one verbal coaching for attendance issues. I was never told that my medical leaves of absence would prevent me from obtaining a promotion to Department Manager or other management positions.

12. In February 2000, I left Wal-Mart in frustration with being passed over for promotion and the lack of information about promotional opportunities, but I returned after about two months. Even though I had more than six years of experience as a Sales Associate, and even though I specifically requested a position on the sales floor, Store Manager Chaney assigned me to work as a Cashier, which was a less desirable position. I believe that Mr. Chaney assigned me to a Cashier position in retaliation for using the Open Door with the District Manager regarding promotional opportunities. I know that sales floor positions were available because I saw other newly hired employees assigned to the sales floor. I also saw Cashiers who were hired after me get transfers to the sales floor.

13. I left Wal-Mart again in April 2001 because Store Manager Chaney refused to give me a position other than Cashier. Since about August 2002, I have been working as a sales associate at Stage Department Store.

14. I love working in retail. I would consider going back to work at Wal-Mart if I knew that I would be considered fairly for promotion.

15. I have personal knowledge of each and every fact set forth in the Declaration, and if called to testify as a witness in this matter, I could and would competently testify to each of these facts.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Missouri that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on 4-11 (month and day), 2003, at Chillicothe, MO (city, state).

/s/ Sheila Acree

Sheila Acree

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES,
PATRICIA SURGESON,
CLEO PAGE,
CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI,
DEBORAH GUNTER,
KAREN WILLIAMSON
AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated,

Plaintiff,

vs.

WAL-MART STORES, INC.,

Defendant

Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ

DECLARATION OF DONNA ADAIR IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Donna Adair, declare:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge, and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein.

2. I am a female former employee of Wal-Mart, and reside in Tennessee. I am currently a store manager at Parent-Teacher Store in Franklin, Tennessee. I have been in that position since September 2001. In my position, I have responsibility for supervising employees.

3. I was employed by Wal-Mart from November 1993 to approximately April 2001. I worked in three Wal-Mart stores: in Clear Lake, California in Sacramento, California and in Franklin, Tennessee. Throughout my employment, I received above standard ratings and was commended for my ability to manage and supervise associates. I was never disciplined in any way while an employee of Wal-Mart. Despite my excellent management and supervisory skills, I was denied promotional opportunities offered to less qualified men. Also, I was paid less than men with whom I worked.

4. Prior to joining Wal-Mart, I had worked in retail at J.C. Penney and a family-owned business, Circle F Western Shop. I applied at a new Wal-Mart Store in Clear Lake, California with little knowledge of the employment opportunities within the company. Initially, I was hired to help set up the store, which had not yet opened. After the store opened, I worked as a service desk clerk. for a short time and was then promoted to Customer Service Manager ("CSM") within three months after I was hired. A month later, I was promoted to Head CSM. Both my supervisors and the associates I supervised recognized my excellent supervisory skills and how the front-end ran smoothly during my shifts while I worked in the positions.

5. I realized after joining Wal-Mart that there were opportunities to advance within the company and informed the Store Manager Randy Ward sometime in 1994 that I was interested in a promotion to Support Manager. I specifically expressed interest in a Support Manager position that was given to a male associate Simon Williams despite my qualifications. Subsequently, I expressed interest in another Support Manager to Store Manager Ward position a number of months later and was promoted to the position in October 1994.

6. While I was Support Manager, I continued to be interested in promotional opportunities and expressed this interest to Store Manager Randy Ward. In November 1995, I was promoted to the Assistant Manager in Training Program. I was in the program for approximately 16-20 weeks in the Clear Lake store and was then promoted to the position of Assistant Manager in the Clear Lake store. Each evaluation I received as an Assistant Manager rated me as "exceeding expectations".

7. I fully expected to move up within the company and be promoted to Store Manager. However, experiences I had with former Divisional Vice President Kendall Schwindt and Regional Vice President J.R. Reed made it clear to me that because I am a woman I would not be promoted to Store Manager.

8. The day after Easter in 1995 another female assistant manager, B.J. Black, and I reported to work at 4:00 a.m. to prepare for a visit from Kendall Schwindt. Randy Ward was on vacation and it was our responsibility to make sure that the store complied with company guidelines. Mr. Schwindt visited our store at approximately 9:00 a.m. that morning and toured the store with Ms. Black and me. During the tour, Mr. Schwindt ridiculed and talked down to both of us in front of associates we supervised. He told us that we were very poor examples of managers for the "fine young men" who were Assistant Manager Trainees and who were standing with us. In my experience as an employee of Wal-Mart, I had never observed anyone from Home Office speak to a manager in a store in the way Mr. Schwindt spoke to us. I had never heard Mr. Schwindt speak to male assistant managers with such contempt. I was very embarrassed by the comments Mr. Schwindt made. Ms. Black and I made an anonymous call to Mr. Maxie Carpenter, Vice-President of Personnel, in the Home Office, Bentonville, Arkansas to tell him about what had happened during the tour. I am not aware of any investigation that occurred as a result of our use of the Open Door. I did not tell any of my supervisors about what happened because I feared that I would be retaliated against for doing so.

9. Despite this experience, I continued to work hard and my performance continued to exceed expectations. In June or July of 1996, I transferred to a Wal-Mart store near Sacramento, California after my husband's job relocated him to the area. I remained at the store near Sacramento until December 1996. The store manager was Randy Ward who had been at the Wal-Mart store in Clear Lake. My responsibilities increased at the store because it was a much larger store than the one in Clear Lake.

10. In December 1996, I transferred to a store in Franklin, Tennessee after my husband accepted a new position in Tennessee. The practices and procedures I had learned in the two California stores were the same practices and policies used at the Tennessee store. The personnel policies were the same in Tennessee as in California. I did not receive any additional training in order to assume the duties of assistant manager in Tennessee. Britt Wood (male) was the store manager when I started in the Franklin store. Following Mr. Wood, the store managers were Cheryl Doyle and Keith Rinehart.

11. In approximately April of 1998, I stepped down from the position of Assistant Manager because of an incident that I felt was the last straw involving acting-Regional Vice-President J.R. Lee. Mr.

Lee made an unexpected visit to the Franklin, Tennessee store on a day when Store Manager Doyle was off. I was assistant manager over soft lines at the time and I walked over to the department where Mr. Lee was located. As I walked over, I noticed that he was tearing something up and dropping it on the floor. I walked up to him and he told me "[w]ell you have a backer that's outdated and I ripped it up. And now, you need to clean it up" referring to the paper I had watched him drop on the floor. I had never seen a regional manager treat a manager in the store in that way and I was very upset. I did not see Mr. Lee treat any of the other male assistant managers who were in the store the way that he treated me even though it was not uncommon for departments to have expired backers.

12. I immediately drafted a letter of resignation because of the treatment I received from Mr. Lee following the similar treatment from Mr. Schwindt. The two incidents convinced me that I had no future with the company as these superiors clearly did not view female managers as worthy of respect. I decided that the best thing for me to do was to leave. I agreed to stay only after Store Manager Doyle told me that I was too valuable to lose and offered me a position in the cash office. I worked in the cash office from approximately April 1998 until November 1999.

13. I went through management training again beginning in November 1999 although I performed the actual duties of an assistant manager. My duties were essentially the same as those I had performed before I had stepped down to work in the cash office. I did not post for the position and entered into the program after Store Manager Rinehart encouraged me to do so. As part of my job responsibilities, I handled the payroll and had access to salary information for the associates in the store. I discovered that Rich Hailey, another trainee who had previously worked at Wal-Mart and left for several years, was earning approximately $4000 a year more than I. I spoke to the store manager Keith Rinehart, who did not deny the pay disparity. He offered no legitimate explanation for it, and told me that it was out of his hands. He promised to take care of me in my next evaluation. However, the pay disparity was never corrected.

14. In handling payroll, I noticed that men frequently earned more money than women associates despite the fact that women were in higher positions and had worked for the company longer. For example, I observed that a newly hired male sales associate, James Ray, was paid approximately $15.00 an hour. None of the female hourly associates, including a department manager, Annie Garner, who had worked for the company for twenty years, earned $15.00 an hour at the time.

15. Throughout the time that I worked as an Assistant Manager, I worked primarily in Soft lines. I noticed that the areas that most frequently led to promotion to store manager were the Garden Center and Sporting Goods. It was my understanding that Assistant Managers were to rotate and work in all areas of the store. However, in my experience I was not given the opportunity.

16. In April 2000, I went out on medical leave after I broke my knee and did not return to work. I learned I was terminated sometime in 2001 when I received papers from the company concerning profit sharing.

17. I observed throughout my employment with Wal-Mart that associates were often selected to fill open positions within stores without job posting. In the few instances in which I recall jobs were posted, management had already decided who would fill the positions.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Tennessee that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 4, 2003, at ____________________.

/s/ Donna Adair
Donna Adair

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF GRETCHEN ADAMS IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Gretchen Adams, declare:

1. I am female and reside in Florida. I was a managerial employee at Wal-Mart Supercenters from 1993 until December 2001. My husband is totally and permanently disabled and has been disabled throughout my employment with Wal-Mart. My teen-aged son also lives with me and is an amateur golfer with aspirations of turning professional soon.

2. During my years with Wal-Mart, I relocated my family eight times at the request of the company. Despite my very strong performance as Deli Manager, Assistant Manager, and Co-Manager, I never was promoted to Store Manager. I was aware that men doing the same job were paid more, and that I was even paid less than men I was training. I experienced retaliation for using the Open Door. Managers made comments reflecting derogatory stereotyping of women. Although I observed men being mentored by other men, I never was mentored and never met a female District Manager.

3. Prior to my employment with Wal-Mart, I was a teacher and Director of Education for a trade and technical school. I also had spent several years in the restaurant and retail industries, and had managed a restaurant. I had operated a family-owned oilfield and I had lived abroad when my husband was in the service.

4. I applied for an hourly position at the Wal-Mart Supercenter in Stillwater, Oklahoma in April 1993. I was hired in a support position in the Service Deli. The Service Deli prepares and sells hot food and bakes items from scratch. Brett Donnelly, the male Manager of the Deli, hired only women to work in that department and often made inappropriate, sexually-charged comments to the Deli employees. After a month of this conduct, Mr. Donnelly escalated his harassment and began calling one female employee at home. He also made physical moves towards her at the workplace, which I, among several others, observed. Finally, as a result of that female employee coming forward with her charge of sexual harassment, he took a two-week vacation, was demoted to a Department Manager position, and transferred to another store instead of being fired as required by Wal-Mart policy.

5. With the departure of Mr. Donnelly, I was approached by Store Manager Larry Wilcoxsen and District Manager Ed Robertson and offered the position of Deli Manager. The position had not been posted, and I had not applied for it, although I had indicated at my 90-day review that I was interested in a managerial career at Wal-Mart. I did not accept the promotion at first, as I did not think the salary was adequate. Mr. Wilcoxsen and Mr. Robertson assured me that everyone started within the same salary range for this position. They told me that the salary range was $23,500.00 to $26,500.00 and they offered to start me at what they claimed was the maximum, $26,500.00. Based on that representation, I accepted the position of Deli Manager. I later learned men were started at a higher salary, as detailed below.

6. I spent the next five years as a Deli Manager, moving my family four times as I traveled to help set up new Supercenters. I managed the Deli in Stillwater, Oklahoma for almost a year before being asked to go to Florida to help open new Supercenters there. Florida was considered to be a haven of new opportunity for advancement as many new Supercenters were to open there. I was assigned to set-up and open the Deli in Cape Coral, Florida. While waiting for the Cape Coral assignment, I moved my family for approximately 3 months to Jasper, Alabama where I was assigned to clean up a Deli Department that the local authorities were threatening to close down. I then moved to Cape Coral. After a few months in Cape Coral, I was asked to move to Titusville, Florida to help set-up and open another new Supercenter. Again, I moved my family and residence.

7. I stayed in Titusville, Florida for two and a half years as I wanted a promotion and thought it would be beneficial if a District Manager had a chance to get to know me well, see what I was capable of doing, and therefore support me in my promotional efforts. I was very successful in my efforts in the Titusville Supercenter Deli. My Deli was the number one in the district, number one in the region, and number three in the entire company.

8. I asked for my well-earned promotion to Assistant Manager from everyone that I thought could facilitate it. I repeatedly and frequently approached my District Manager, Powell Wallace, and asked for a promotion. I spoke with Joe Tapper, Regional Food Vice President from the Home Office in Bentonville, Arkansas, and Mark Schwartz, Vice President of Supercenters from the Home Office. They told me it would be simple to get a promotion; I only had to speak with my Store Manager and my District Manager. I continued to speak several times with District Manager Wallace about my wish for a promotion to Assistant Manager, but he just continued to put me off. I spoke with Cathy McWherter, Regional Personnel Manager, about my career and she offered me a promotion to Assistant Manager in Dallas, Georgia. However, after she spoke with Mr. Wallace, she retracted the offer without an explanation. Finally, Store Manager Jim Roulette confided in me that District Manager Wallace was not in favor of women being in upper management and that if I wanted a promotion I should first transfer to another district. Now, instead of continuing to ask Mr. Wallace for a promotion, I began to ask him for a transfer to another district. Mr. Wallace told me he would talk about the promotion after my move to Kissimmee, Florida to open yet another Supercenter in his District. He told me that only the best employees were going to Kissimmee. I felt I had already proven myself, no longer trusted Mr. Wallace, and did not think this was fair to delay my promotion this way.

9. As my future aspirations were blocked by Mr. Wallace, I decided to use the Open Door, as I had little to lose. My understanding of the Open Door Policy was 'open door, shut the door, out the door' and I felt I was taking a risk of suffering retaliation by going above Mr. Powell in seeking a promotion. Nevertheless, my position was intolerable, and so I contacted Steve Wycoff, in Training and Development, and asked for his help. Mr. Wycoff suggested I contact Larry Patrick, Director of Personnel for Supercenters, if Mr. Wallace continued to refuse my request for a promotion or transfer. When I called Mr. Patrick, he was very protective of Mr. Wallace, defending and attempting to justify Mr. Wallace's actions. Mr. Patrick promised to look into the problem and get back to me. I never heard from Mr. Patrick again.

10. I then began a lengthy process of finding an open position in another district in which to transfer. I made countless telephone calls to Store Managers and Regional Personnel Managers to discover what openings they anticipated. Finally, in May 1997, I was able to transfer to Winston-Salem, North Carolina. I was still a Deli Manager.

11. I applied for a Meat/Deli Merchandiser position in June 1997, as I decided to try another avenue of promotion. I was not interviewed for the position even though I was told I would be by David Norman, Regional Vice President. Ken Sanford, a man I had trained as a Deli Manager in Cape Coral, was given the position. I pointed out to Ramona Truax, the Regional Personnel Manager, that a man I had trained had received this promotion. Her only response was to raise her eyebrows and say that she would see what she could do. There was no further follow-up.

12. New merchandiser positions were available in late 1997. Again, I applied and followed up with many telephone calls. David Norman, Regional Vice President, told me that I was on the "recommended" list. I expressed my strong desire for the promotion, and my willingness to relocate anywhere. Again I was passed over. A man with only three months experience with Wal-Mart was chosen for one of the openings. When I tried to discover who the other successful applicants were, and the gender of the new Merchandisers, I was told by Mary Smith, Regional Personnel Director, that it was none of my business, and that it did not matter, the damage was done. I requested an explanation for the refusal to promote me. Fred Bunch, District Manager and Mary Smith both told me they were unable to give me a good reason. One of the merchandisers, Ken Sanford, said that he knew that I should have received one of the positions but it was based on "whom you knew, not what you knew". No one told me what I should do, if anything, to receive a promotion to Merchandiser.

13. From the fall of 1997 until July 1998, I was sent to approximately ten different stores in several states to help with various problems. Throughout this period, Fred Bunch, District Manager, continued to promise to put me into the Management Training Program so that I could be promoted to Assistant Manager.

14. Finally, in July 1998, I was promoted to Assistant Manager. I did not join the Management Training Program, but instead was promoted directly to Assistant Manager. Regional Personnel Assistant Heather [last name unknown] told me that I would not receive the training because I earned too much. As Assistant Manager trainees are paid hourly, and receive overtime pay, Heather said that Mary Smith, Regional Personnel Manager, had told her to tell me that my hourly pay would be too high, and that Wal-Mart did not want to pay it. Instead, I was handed a manual and told by Debbie Plumadore, Store Manager, that I would learn on the job.

15. In November 1999, I was promoted to the position of Co-Manager by Ron Cook, after two men, Christopher Pierce and Shawn Stanley, turned down the position. I again relocated my family. I was never to receive another promotion.

16. As Co-Manager, I continued to relocate my family at the request of Wal-Mart. I was a Co-Manager in North Carolina, Nevada, and Florida, moving my family each time.

17. After I was Co-Manager in North Carolina for a few months, I learned that Supercenters were opening in Las Vegas, Nevada. I had lived previously in Las Vegas, and I knew that this was an area of expansion for Wal-Mart. I thought that a transfer to an area of growth would be beneficial for my career and my goal of becoming a Store Manager. I sought a transfer to Nevada. In April 2000, I became a Co-Manager at a Supercenter in Las Vegas. Within a few weeks of commencing my employment in Las Vegas, I learned that at least two male Co-Managers started at a higher pay rate than I did, as detailed below.

18. On or about October 23, 2000, the District Manager in Las Vegas, Chuck Salby, expressed his contempt for female managers within the first few weeks of my tenure in Las Vegas. I was in a car with Mr. Salby, Store Manager Jay Mossell, and Co-Manager Jim Eble, driving to a meeting in Utah. Mr. Salby responded to something I had said by exclaiming "Gretchen, I just want to tell you how refreshing it is to finally have a female with your intelligence and knowledge in my district." None of the, other male managers responded to this statement.

19. On or about October 23, 2000, there was a bomb threat at the Las Vegas Supercenter and the store was evacuated for several hours. When we were allowed back in, the store was in terrible shape, with full shopping carts abandoned throughout the store and pallets of merchandise that should have been unloaded left out. The following morning, the Supercenter had another bomb threat and a drive-by shooting threat. Meanwhile, even more carts were left to be re-stocked. The store was in a very chaotic state. That morning, Don Harris, Vice President of Operations from, the Home Office in Bentonville, Arkansas, and Kendall Schwindt, Divisional Director, arrived at the Supercenter for a store tour. Mr. Harris was extremely angry at the condition of the store. He got even angrier when he learned that the Store Manager, Jay Mossell, and the District Manager, Chuck Salby, were both on vacation at the same time and a crisis had happened.

20. When this happened, I had been in the process of completing my final interview plans for a position in Training and Development. I had already been through three interviews including the preparation of a videotape. I received a call from Teri Ross, Training and Development, and was told that they could not consider me now that I was on probation. She told me that the Regional Manager, Jim Wilhem, had told her that all members of management in our store were on probation for a year and that no one would be transferred or promoted. I told her we knew nothing about it. I asked Jay Mossell, Store Manager, and Chuck Salby, District Manager, if they knew anything about it and they did not. I felt that this was very unfair of upper management and decided to use the Open Door policy. I sent a letter to Jim Wilhem, Regional Director, Kendall Schwindt, Divisional Director, Lee Scott, CEO of Wal-Mart, Inc, Larry Ezell, Regional Personnel Manager and Andy Wilson, Director of Supercenter Personnel. A true and correct copy of this letter is attached hereto as Adams Exhibit A. I told these executives that respect for the individual, one of the basic beliefs at Wal-Mart, was not being followed in the way the Las Vegas store was being handled.

21. On November 10, 2000, the day after I faxed these letters to these executives, District Manager Chuck Salby came to talk with me. He said he knew about my letters and that the recipients were not happy. He told me that if I decided to send another letter, I should show it to him first. Mr. Salby said he would have advised me not to send this letter and that it was not a very "smart" move. I told Mr. Salby that we would find out if the company really supports the Open Door policy, that I had just told the truth in my letter, and that it was time for someone to stand up. Mr. Salby did not address the issues in my letter or tell me when I could expect a response.

22. On November 13, 2000 Jim Wilhem, Regional Director, came into the store. He was very angry but did not address the issues in my letter. Mr. Salby told me that Lee Scott, Wal-Mart CEO, would be in to see all of the members of management.

23. On November 24, 2000, Mr. Scott did come to the store. He did not address the particular issues of my letter but told me I was doing a good job. Mr. Scott returned on November 27, 2000 and addressed the management team. Mr. Scott said that either Mr. Schwindt or Mr. Wilhem would be back in the store within two weeks to address the issue of my ability to apply for a promotion.

24. Before there was any follow-up to my Open Door letter, District Manager Salby called me into his office on December 13, 2000. He was very abusive in his language, and called me a "worthless broad." He gave me a choice of termination or immediate transfer from his district. Mr. Salby told me that I was not going to get the position I was applying for in Training and Development, and that I needed to decide that minute where I wanted to transfer to. I asked if I could speak with my husband about such an important decision and he told me he wanted my answer right then. I asked if it was my letter to the executives that had caused this, and he refused to answer. He gave me no explanation as to why he was acting this way, or what, if anything, I had done to deserve such treatment. Mr. Salby told me that Mr. Schwindt and Mr. Wilhem were aware of what he was doing to me. I told Mr. Salby that I would return to Florida, and he collected my keys and my walkie-talkie. He sent me home to wait.

25. I became Co-Manager in Greenacres, Florida, moving my family again. Mr. Salby's efforts to retaliate for my use of the Open Door continued, even though I had moved out of his district. He sent to my new District Manager a poor evaluation of me and a written coaching which he had told me had been torn up.

26. I renewed my efforts to be promoted to a position in Training and Development. I contacted Teri Ross, Director of Training and Development, and she told me that it would just be a matter of formality, but someone would call for a final interview. However, I was required to interview two more times. I was told by Irvin Young that I had done very well. In September 2001, the prerequisites for this position changed without notice. I was told by Irvin Young that I was suddenly ineligible for the position because experience as Store Manager was now required and, as a Store Manager, one had to be on the "promotable" list. I had never been offered a Store Manager position.

27. I quit in December 2001.

28. In at least three of the stores where I worked, I learned that men were paid more than I was even though I had equal or more responsibility. In Jasper, Alabama in June and July 1994, I trained James O'Neil how to run a Deli. He was new to the company, and had no deli or retail experience. He had only worked in fast food. One week, he was sent out of town to help in a grand opening of another store, and he asked me to deposit his paycheck. When I took Mr. O'Neil's deposit slip to the bank in Jasper on July 15, 1994, I saw that he was being paid $30,000.00, approximately $3,500.00 more than I was receiving, even though I was an experienced Deli Manager and I was training him. I was concerned and spoke with the Regional Personnel Manager, Brian Hardin, the next week. Mr. Hardin explained that this was just a "fluke," and that there was nothing he could do about it. I accepted this at the time.

29. This practice of paying a male trainee more than me was repeated at the next store. When I moved to Cape Coral, Florida in 1994, I trained Ken Sanford as a Deli Manager. Again, Mr. Sanford was new to Wal-Mart and his experience was limited to bakery work. Mr. Sanford told me that he was earning $30,000.00 per year. I was being paid only $28,089, having received a yearly review with an above-standard rating. Mr. Sanford received the promotion to Merchandiser that I sought, as detailed above.

30. That this was a pattern of gender discrimination and not a series of flukes became very clear when I learned for a third time that men were being paid more than I was receiving. When I was a Co-Manager in Las Vegas, Nevada, in 2000, I learned that male Co-Managers Scott Jolley and Jim Eble were paid approximately $47,000. I was paid only $43,500.00. I had been told by District Manager Ron Cook and Regional Personnel Manager Mary Smith that all new Co-Managers were paid the same base pay. Upon learning that these two male Co-Managers, with no more experience than me, were being paid more, I spoke with Regional Personnel Manager Larry Ezell and with District Manager Chuck Salby. I asked Mr. Ezell why I had been told that all Co-Managers began at the same salary if this were not true. I received no meaningful response. Mr. Ezell and Mr. Salby agreed to give me an immediate raise to $47,000. The raise was not made retroactive to compensate me for the period when I was underpaid. I was given no explanation as to why two men, doing the same job I did, were paid more. I was given no assurance that there would be any review conducted to ensure other women were not being similarly underpaid. My request to look into past discrepancies was ignored.

31. I learned about this litigation when, as a Co-Manager, I received "talking points" from the Home Office in Bentonville, Arkansas that were to be used when Managers discussed the class action with employees. When this case was filed, I realized that my experience of gender discrimination was not unique, and that other female employees were taking action. I quit Wal-Mart six months after this case was filed, and became an organizer for the United Food and Commercial Workers International Union. I was never involved in a union activity before, but felt something had to be done.

32. I have personal knowledge of all of the foregoing and, if asked, could and would testify competently to all of these facts.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and the State of Florida that the foregoing is true and correct.

This declaration was signed by me on April 14, 2003 at Milton, Florida (City and State).

/s/ Gretchen Adams

Gretchen Adams

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF WANDA AKLEY IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Wanda Akley, declare:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein.

2. I worked at the Wal-Mart Supercenter in Calhoun, Georgia from November 2000 to July 2001 as a grocery stocker making $8.32 an hour working full-time. I was not allowed to take any weekends off. After seven months with no weekends off, I complained to both Grocery Manager Steve Walwaven and Store Manager Megan Hammer but they were both unresponsive. Shortly thereafter, a male grocery stocker [name unknown] was hired and allowed to take all of his weekends off. Because I was not allowed to take any weekend time off. I left in July 2001. I was not asked to fill out an Exit Interview.

3. In December 2001, I began working at the same Wal-Mart as a full-time overnight grocery stocker. My schedule required me to routinely work the graveyard shift. Despite my prior experience in this position, I began with an hourly rate of only $8.00, which was less than what I had previously been making. After I started, I discovered that one of my male co-workers, Russell Logan, had started at $10.00 an hour in the same position. I spoke with Grocery Managers Hank Delatorre and Doug [last name unknown] and asked why Mr. Logan was paid more than I was for the same position. They both told me that Mr. Logan was paid more because he had experience and, with experience, one could earn up to $9.00. When I told them that Mr. Logan was making $10.00 an hour and that I also had previous experience in this same position, they were completely unresponsive. I then spoke with the Grocery Department Manager Georgiana Bearden about the discrepancy in pay. I was with her when she spoke with Grocery Manager Doug [Last Name Unknown] about why Mr. Logan was paid so much more than I was. Doug then told us that pay rates were "none of [our] business." Finally, I spoke with Store Manager Megan Hammer who agreed to raise my salary to $8.72, still under the amount of Mr. Logan's hourly rate. By that point, I had spoken to a number of members of management, and I had always been told that I could be fired for discussing pay rates, so I feared pursuing the issue any further.

4. In 2002, I expressed an interest to Grocery Manager Doug, Assistant Manager Jeff [last name unknown], and Grocery Department Manager

Bearden about moving from overnights to first shift. Ms. Bearden told me I would have to have experience unloading trucks. Shortly thereafter, male Grocery Stocker Brandon [last name unknown] was transferred from overnights to first shift even though he had no experience unloading trucks. Later that year, I asked Grocer Manager Doug if I could transfer to an opening in the Shoe Department but he told me that they needed everyone to remain in Stocking. Approximately one month later, male Stocker Tommy [last name unknown] was allowed to transfer out of Stocking to another store.

5. My evaluations have always been rated "Meets Expectations" or "Exceeds Expectations."

6. As of January 2003, I am on family medical leave to care for my ill father.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Georgia that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 2, 2003, at Calhoun, Georgia.

/s/ Wanda Akley

Wanda Akley

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF EDITH ARANA IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, EDITH ARANA, declare:

1. I have personal knowledge of each and every fact set forth in this Declaration, and if called to testify as a witness in this matter, I could and would competently testify to each of these facts.

2. I was employed by Wal-Mart, Inc. from September 5, 1995 through October 19, 2001 in Duarte, California. I am female. I am the mother of five children and had more than ten years' experience working in retail and grocery stores, including supervisory and management experience, prior to beginning my Wal-Mart career. During the six years I worked at Wal-Mart, I never rose above a Support Manager position despite my consistent "above average" or "exceeds expectations" performance evaluations and constant requests for advancement opportunities.

3. I decided to become a named plaintiff in this action because I was unfairly denied promotional opportunities, training, and equal pay throughout the time I worked at Wal-Mart. My main concern is to end all those employment practices at Wal-Mart that have prevented women from obtaining management positions and to ensure equal pay for comparable work and equal access to the training and mentoring necessary to advance in the Company. I understand the responsibilities of a named plaintiff. I am prepared to fulfill my duties to the women in the class so that they achieve fair and equitable treatment

4. I first learned that a new Wal-Mart store was opening in my area in the summer of 1995. At the time, I was voluntarily unemployed but ready to re-enter the workforce. When I saw the ad in the newspaper, I knew Wal-Mart would be able to provide me a career in the field that best suits me: retail. I have always been really great with people and I love merchandising as well.

5. The new store was going to be located in Duarte, California. I applied and was hired as the Personnel Manager, an hourly position. I was surprised that my pay rate was only $7.00 an hour, given my past experience and the fact that Wal-Mart was a larger company than I had worked for in the past. I trained for the Personnel Manager position by traveling with Assistant Manager Lori Whitehead to other Wal-Mart stores and working with her and other Personnel Managers for approximately three months. I learned that each of these stores, located in Upland, Rancho, Fontana, Pomona, Corona and Colton, California operated similarly and that the personnel policies and practices were consistent from store to store.

6. The Duarte store did not officially open until January 1996. During the period from September to January, I reported to a temporary location in Monrovia, California where I was responsible for creating the personnel files for prospective employees for the new Duarte store. I also helped the Assistant Managers any way I could and was often called out on the floor to assist in the various departments. Although my scheduled shift was from 7 a.m. through 4 p.m., many days I was required to work 10 to 12 hour shifts to get all my work done.

7. In January 1996, I received an "above average" rating on my initial 90-day evaluation and a $0.40 raise. I thought I should have received an "outstanding" evaluation and asked Co-Manager Greg Boynton why he had not given me the higher ranking. His response was "payroll can't handle it."

8. As the Duarte store reached full employment, the Assistant Managers began delegating more responsibilities to me. This interfered with the time I had available to do the paper work associated with personnel and payroll so I asked Store Manager Bernie Seaman if he could provide me with an assistant. He never did this so in March 1996, I told Mr. Seaman that I did not want to continue as the Personnel Manager because I was overworked and underpaid. Store Manager Seaman apologized for not having given me additional help and assigned me to train as a Test Scanner without any change in pay.

9. My duties as a Test Scanner included checking merchandise for the correct price and ensuring that the store's inventory was correct. This was a new position for Wal-Mart and required the use of special equipment, the Telzon machine. This hand held computer allowed pricing and inventory information from each Wal-Mart store to be communicated directly to corporate headquarters in Bentonville, Arkansas. The Telzon data was available to the Store Manager through the daily Store Manager Recap Reports as well as through the STAR reports. When I finished my Telzon training, I was the only Test Scanner in the Duarte store and I continued to work as a scanner concurrently with my other positions throughout my employment with Wal-Mart.

10. In August 1996, I received my annual evaluation with a "standard" ranking and a $0.30 raise. I had been evaluated by Assistant Manager Vanessa Rico who was new to the store and who did not know my work. I told Assistant Manager Lori Whitehead and Store Manager Seaman that I did not do "standard" work. They agreed and several months later, I received a merit raise.

11. On my 1996 annual evaluation, I wrote under the "Associate Comments/Goal Setting" category: "I would like to be able to do any thing in the store—invoicing, UPC, price changes, courtesy desk, lay-away and support. The way I'm going to do that is to train and ask questions." (Attached hereto as Arana Exhibit A is a true and accurate copy of my August 1996 performance evaluation.)

12. In approximately July 1997, I overheard a co-worker talking about an open support manager position. I went to Store Manager Seaman and told him that I was interested in the position. I was not interviewed and I do not recall filling out an application for the job. Mr. Seaman told me that I had the job.

13. A Support Manager is just below the Assistant Manager and has many of the same job duties, such as handling rude customers, checking voids off the cash registers, approving checks above a certain limit, keeping keys to the registers and the back office. As Support Manager, I still had to work my regular test scanning job but would then serve as Support Manager either on Friday evening and over the weekend or by returning several weekday evenings after having completed my regular shift. For these additional responsibilities and hours, I received a mere $0.40 an hour raise. My pay rate was then $8.50 an hour.

14. On my 1997 annual evaluation, I received an "above standard" ranking and a $0.45 raise. I also received two merit raises that year, one for $0.41 and the other for $0.56. The second Associate Commendation Form read: "Edith is doing an excellent job as Support. Goes beyond what is expected. She will receive a 6% increase for merit raise." (Attached hereto as Arana Exhibit B is a true and accurate copy of an Associate Commendation Form dated December 11, 1997.) Even with excellent performance evaluations and numerous merit raises, my pay rate was then only $10.00 an hour.

15. In approximately December 1997, I told Store Manager Seaman that I wanted to apply for the Assistant Manger Training Program. Information about this training program is not posted anywhere in the store and is not included in the employee handbook. There is no formal application process. I learned about the program by hearing other associates talk about the program. I understood that the only way to be considered for the program was by asking your Store Manager to recommend you. Store Manager Seaman told me that he would recommend me to the District Manager for the training program.

16. In early 1998 I was out on sick leave due to injuries I suffered in a car accident in late December. When I returned to work, I still had not heard anything from Mr. Seaman regarding when I would start the Assistant Manager Training Program. When I asked him why, he said he did not think I was still interested since the car accident. I reassured him that I was still interested in management training and he said that he would recommend me the next time the District Manager asked for candidates for the Assistant Manager Training Program. During this same time period, I also discussed my interest in the Assistant Manager Training Program with Assistant Manager Lori Whitehead.

17. Despite having expressed interest in management training to both Store Manager Seaman and Assistant Manager Whitehead, I was not recommended for the Management Training Program at that time.

18. I worked as a Support Manager for about one year before I voluntarily stepped down from the position in July 1998. I stepped down because management repeatedly promised, but failed, to provide additional help when I worked on Friday nights and Sundays, the two busiest days at Wal-Mart. I did not mind working these days so long as I had adequate help. When management failed to provide additional support on these days, I asked to be taken off either Friday night or Sunday as I did not think it was fair that I had both of the two busiest days most of the time. Although Store Manager Seaman, and then the new male Store Manager Darren Rastad, repeatedly reassured me that I would not have to work both Friday night and Sunday, neither changed my schedule so I asked to step down. I was not being paid enough money or provided sufficient support to sacrifice my weekend time with my family.

19. In August 1998, I received another "above standard" evaluation and a $0.54 raise. I also applied for another Support Manager position when I saw one posted on Wal-Mart's computerized job posting system. I was not interviewed for the position. The promotion went to a male, Jerry Serrano.

20. Over the next two months, I worked in a number of different capacities, including the back-up UPC clerk , the UPC clerk, and as a sales associate in the Men's Wear Department. The UPC clerk and back-up clerk were responsible for implementing price changes by ensuring that merchandise was correctly priced. I received a merit raise of $0.52 cents in November 1998.

21. During 1999, I worked mostly on the sales floor in both the Women's and Men's Wear Departments and then with the Seasonal Products Department. I was still interested in management and began applying for Department Manager positions on the computer, including Manager of the Household Paper Goods Department in approximately June 1999. I was not interviewed for this position. Instead, I was passed over in favor of a male co-worker whose name I no longer remember. I was also denied Department Manager positions in the Ladies wear and Stationary Departments. In the Spring of 1999, John Kocharian replaced Bernie Seaman as the Store Manager.

22. In late July 1999, my doctor ordered me to take a stress-related leave of absence. After I returned from that leave, my husband fell gravely ill and died in September 1999. This required me to take a two month leave of absence. Upon my return, I received an "exceeds expectations" performance evaluation and a $0.57 raise from Lori Whitehead Schmidt who had been promoted to Co-Manager.

23. Early in 2000, Store Manager Kocharian asked me to return to the position of Test Scanner rather than working the floor. The store was getting ready for inventory and test scanning is very important to the inventory process. I agreed to this change and began not only test scanning but implementing the price changes in various departments whenever the department managers were unable to get this task done.

24. On January 22, 2000, Co-Manager Lori Schmidt gave me a merit raise of $0.58 an hour. On the Commendation Form, Ms. Schmidt wrote: "Edith is being given a merit increase due to going above and beyond her job performance. Edith has covered most of my departments for extended periods of time during their absences, not having any one in dept. She does an outstanding job feeling (sic) in where she is needed—anywhere, anytime." (Attached hereto as Arana Exhibit C is a true and accurate copy of the January 2000 Commendation Form.)

25. In approximately February 2000, the Department Manager position in the Paper Goods and Chemical Department became open again when the current male Department Manager moved to a different department. I was still interested in this promotion and applied again through the computerized posting system. Again I was not even interviewed.

Instead, Store Manager Kocharian informed me that he was giving the position to a male from another Wal-Mart store who had worked in that department. Later a male, Steve [last name unknown] transferred into the position from the Glendora store.

26. After the death of my husband, my interest in entering the Assistant Manager Training Program was even greater because I was now the sole support for my family. Although I do not recall the date, I told Store Manager Kocharian sometime after being denied the department manager position in the Paper Goods and Chemical Department that I wanted to apply for the Assistant Management Training Program. I told him that I had been with the store for five years and that I wanted a new challenge. Mr. Kocharian did not reply to me. He simply shrugged his shoulders and walked away from me.

27. I raised the Assistant Manager Training Program with Store Manager Kocharian again during the inventory of the store. Mr. Kocharian told me that if we had a good inventory, I would get a raise and he would recommend me for management training. I worked very hard and had excellent results. About a week after inventory was over, I went back to Store Manager Kocharian and reminded him that he had said he would recommend me for the Assistant Manager Training Program if inventory went well. He did not respond and brushed me off. I waited a few more days and went back to Mr. Kocharian. I told him very forcefully that he had promised me management training if inventory went well. He told me that he did not recall our conversation. This response really frustrated me. Although I continued to work as hard as I could, I felt that no matter how well I performed, Store Manager Kocharian was denying me the opportunity to advance with the Company because I was a woman.

28. During the months after I told Store Manager Kocharian that I wanted to apply for management training, I also told various Assistant Managers that I was interested in management opportunities, including John Moore, Jim Nolan, Nofoao Dorsey, and Dwight [last name unknown]. Each of these managers was supportive of me. One encouraged me to keep trying; another was skeptical, however, and told me that it probably would not happen in the Duarte store.

29. In August 2000, my doctor again ordered me to take a medical leave of absence due to high blood pressure and stress.

30. When I returned from leave in October 2000, Co-Manager Lori Schmidt gave me my annual performance evaluation. I received an "exceeds expectations" ranking and a $0.60 raise, which brought my pay rate to $12.85 an hour. I wrote under the Comments/Goal Settings section, "I would like more mgt. [management] duties so that I can get in mgt. training." (Attached hereto as Arana Exhibit D is a true and accurate copy of my evaluation for 2000.) At some point, I wrote a letter to Co-Manager Schmidt expressing my interest in joining the Assistant Manager Training Program. In response, she suggested that I write such a letter directly to the District Manager.

31. In October 2000, I also saw another Support Manager position posted on the computer and applied for it. Again, I was not interviewed for this position. As best I recall, this job ended up being given to several different associates, including a male, none of who held the position very long.

32. In or about December 2000, I wrote to District Manager Judy Evans informing her that I wanted to apply for the Assistant Manager Training Program. Ms. Evans wrote back to me, explaining that she was no longer District Manager but that she would forward my letter to the new District Manager, a male, Dave Riggs. I never heard anything from District Manager Riggs regarding management training.

33. In December 2000, Store Manager Kocharian personally recognized me by awarding me a merit raise of $0.65 an hour. This brought my pay rate to $13.50 an hour. On the Commendation Form, he wrote, "Edith has done a commendable job in helping store scan for inventory." (Attached hereto as Arana Exhibit E is a true and accurate copy of the Commendation Form signed by Mr. Kocharian and dated December 16, 2000.) While I certainly felt that I could use the small amount of extra money to support my family, I was frustrated because my goal was a position in management, which would really make a difference for my children's future.

34. In approximately January 2001, I called the 1-800 Wal-Mart number to complain about Store Manager Kocharian's unfair treatment of women, including his refusal to interview women candidates for department manager positions in certain departments. As far as I know, my complaint was never investigated.

35. In approximately February 2001, I spoke to District Assistant Wanda Stoke in the District Office. I asked her when the new District Manager would be hiring for the Assistant Manager Training Program. She informed me that I should apply directly to the Store Manager. I told her that my Store Manager,

John Kocharian, was not going to allow a woman into the Assistant Manager Training Program. She then told me to apply directly to the District Manager. I decided against this because Mr. Kocharian had represented to us, during the District Manager's store visits that he was a close friend with District Manager Riggs and I was afraid Mr. Kocharian would retaliate against me. Because I was the sole support of my children, I could not risk losing my job or having my hours cut.

36. In approximately February 2001, Assistant Manager John Moore asked me to travel to the Covina store to assist with the test scanning necessary for its upcoming inventory. I was told this would be a one-day assignment. While I was at the Covina store, I learned that the man in charge of my work, one of the District Loss Prevention Managers named Rico [last name unknown], was expecting me to continue working as part of a traveling inventory/test scanning team six months out of the year. I complained to Assistant Manager Moore that I did not want to do this work or be part of an inventory team. I would have complained to Store Manager Kocharian but he was not in the office. Mr. Moore told me that he thought the work was for only one day. However, he kept sending me out to be part of this "team."

37. When Store Manager Kocharian returned, I told him that I did not want to be on a test scanning crew. He responded that each store needed to provide one team member and that I did not have a choice in the matter. When I asked him why the associate who had been on the team previously could not return to that position, Mr. Kocharian informed me that she was now over a department and did not want to leave. This explanation did not make sense to me. Instead, I believed Mr. Kocharian made me continue this work because I had complained about him on the 1-800 number.

38. I was not satisfied with the traveling scanning team assignment. Even though Mr. Kocharian had denied me management training in the past, I still wanted to enter management training and I felt I would not be able to enter the Assistant Management Training Program if I was out of sight, on an inventory team going from store to store.

39. While on the traveling scanning team, I was not required to punch in and out of a time clock. Instead, I would record my hours on a form that a manager would initial after we had finished the test scanning required by that particular store. I would record my hours from the time I left my home to the time I returned home. I would then either call my time into the Duarte store or complete a time adjustment sheet for the Duarte store.

40. In May 2001, a new Co-Manager, Barbara Martin, called me into the office to explain changes that were being implemented in associate time keeping. I understood from this meeting that any deviation from a posted schedule would show up as a tardy or an absence. In other words, if I was scheduled to work from 7a.m. to 4 p.m. but an Assistant Manager told me not to come in until 9 a.m. the next day, my time the following day would reflect me being two hours late for work. I was still working on the inventory team, however, so I was not punching a time clock and did not fully understand how this new system would affect me. At some point Ms. Martin showed me a form entitled "Verbal Coaching" and told me that I had a number of unexcused absences and tardiest. To my knowledge I was not having any problems with my work schedule, attendance, punctuality, or tardiness. I asked her how the time clock could be reporting me as absent or tardy when I did not punch in to any time clock. Ms. Martin told me that Store Manager Kocharian had asked her to meet with me to discuss the new time-keeping policy and that was what she was doing.

41. After I had been working on the traveling scanning team for a few months, a male Support Manager, Randy Powers, talked to me individually about another change in Wal-Mart's time-keeping procedures for associates who traveled from store to store. Mr. Powers explained that from that point forward, I was not to record the time I spent traveling to and from my home. Instead, I was only to record the time I spent in a store. He told me that he had already explained this policy to the other traveling test scanners and the associates in his store during a meeting occurred on a day I was not working. This change in policy significantly affected my weekly pay since several of the stores I traveled to were quite a distance from my home in Pasadena, Los Angeles County. For instance, the Brea store was about a 45 mile one-way commute from my home while another store in Orange County was between a 1 1/2 to 2 hour one-way commute from my home.

42. In June 2001, this lawsuit was filed. I was not a named plaintiff at the time.

43. At about this same time, we were preparing for inventory at my home store in Duarte. When I test scanned at the Duarte store, I generally worked the 7 a.m. to 4 p.m. shift and I did punch in and out on the time clock. Immediately prior to inventory, the pace at the Duarte store was frantic. Store Manager Kocharian wanted the back room impeccable and the floor scanned as accurately as possible. He walked the floor constantly and during our daily store meetings, he routinely stated, "if the inventory goes badly, we're going to blame Edith." Although he tried to make his remarks sound comical, I very much felt he was threatening me. During this period, I am certain I worked my full shift, and many extra hours as well.

44. Sometime in September 2001, Co-Manager Martin called me while I was working at another store and asked me to bring in a record of my hours to the Duarte store. I brought my documentation to her and asked her why she needed it. (Attached hereto as Arana Exhibit H is a true and accurate copy of the time record submitted to Co-Manager Martin in September 2001.) She responded that there was a question about my hours. Aside from the May 5 meeting I had had with Ms. Martin and the September 14 meeting with Assistant Manager Rodriguez, none of my supervisors had questioned me about my hours or otherwise raised with me any concern about my attendance or punctuality.

45. On or about September14, 2001, Assistant Manager Ben Rodriguez called me into the office and handed me a "Coaching For Improvement Point." The document states, "Edith has an attendance problem. She has nineteen unapproved absences since 3-14-01 till now 9-14-01. This is unacceptable to Wal*Mart standards which is three unapproved absences in a six month rolling period. She also has twenty four tardies, five left early's." (Attached hereto as Arana Exhibit F is a true and accurate copy of this coaching form.) I asked Assistant Manager Rodriguez how could this be since I did not punch a time clock while I was on the road. I also asked him if he knew that Co-Manager Martin had already talked to me about this matter. Mr. Rodriguez informed me that Co-Manager Martin had instructed him to give me this form.

46. At about this same time, Wal-Mart began reducing my hours.

47. About two weeks later, on or about September 28, Assistant Manager Rodriguez called me back into the office again and handed me a "Verbal Coaching" form that stated, "Associate took only a 15 minute lunch on 9/25/01, which is in violation of Company policy and State Law. Associate needs to take at least a 1/2 hour lunch daily. Any further violations will result in a written type of coaching." (Attached hereto as Arana Exhibit G is a true and accurate copy of this coaching form.) I asked Mr. Rodriguez if he was kidding about this coaching. Mr. Rodriguez informed me that Wal-Mart was getting strict about how lunches and breaks were being taken so that associates could not later sue the Company because they did not get a lunch break. I explained to Mr. Rodriguez that I was the only person working the department on that particular shift and that while I was clocked out for lunch, a customer came onto the floor. I clocked back in to assist the customer and, because the store was very busy that night, it never occurred to me to return to lunch; that the night was over before I knew it. Mr. Rodriguez appeared quite uncomfortable and sheepish during this conversation, which led me to believe, he did not agree with the coaching.

48. Several days later when I was working in the Duarte store, Co-Manager Martin paged me to the back office and advised me that she had documents showing that I had been paid for hours that I had not worked at a particular store. I asked which hours and stores was she talking about and she asked about particular stores and hours. I stated that I had worked the hours recorded on the document I had given her. She next asked who had initialed my document and I replied that it was an Assistant Manager at whatever store I had worked. I did not know their names. Ms. Martin reviewed each set of initials with me but this did help me remember their names because I never knew their names. I knew they were Assistant Managers based on their badges. Co-Manager Martin then told me to return to the floor.

49. I returned to the sales floor troubled, as, by now, it was clear that Wal-Mart was trying to get rid of me. About an hour or two later, Co-Manager Martin paged me to the back office a second time. This time she told me she had documents that said I did not work the hours on my paper and indicated that if I could not provide additional information, it would be a problem. I told her that everything I had was on the paper I had given her. At some point during this discussion, someone knocked on the door and handed Ms. Martin something. I sat there for some time while she reviewed the document and took care of other things. Then she told me that she had what she needed and that I could go. My last questions to her were whether she had everything she needed, and whether she had verified what she needed to verify. She said something to the effect that she was finished, that she would communicate with Store Manager Kocharian, and that I could leave.

50. Over the next few weeks, the Company continued cutting my hours significantly. At some point, I went to the unemployment office to file a claim because I was not making enough to support my family.

51. On or about October 19, 2001, I called Assistant Manager Ben Rodriguez to complain that I had only been given one hour of work on the schedule that had been posted the day before. Mr. Rodriguez told me that he thought he had more hours for me and asked me to come to the store.

52. When I arrived at the store, I looked for Assistant Manager Rodriguez. He took me to Co-Manager Martin who informed me that I was being fired for being paid for hours I did not work. I was surprised and asked Co-Manager Martin why she had not fired me when we last met if she had evidence that I had been paid for hours I did not work. The only comment that I recall her making was that they had documents that proved I did not work the hours I was paid for. She did not show me these documents. Instead she asked for my badge, keys, and other Wal-Mart equipment. I was so furious that I refused to sign the exit interview form.

53. On or about December 14, 2001, I filed a Charge of Discrimination against Wal-Mart, Inc. alleging that the Company had discriminated against me on the basis of my gender in promotion and training opportunities. My attorneys received a Right to Sue Notice on my behalf of August 19, 2002.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of California that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 21, 2003, at Pasadena, California.

/s/ Edith Arana

Edith Arana, Declarant

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, KAREN WILLIAMSON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF LORI ARHANGELSKY IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Lori Arhangelsky, declare:

1. I am a 33 year old female who currently lives in Rogers, Arkansas. I worked for Wal-Mart on two separate occasions. Between November 1996 and August 1997 I worked at the Cherry Lane Wal-Mart store, in the Fort Worth, Texas area. From approximately January 11, 1999 until April 23, 1999 I worked at the Wal-Mart store in Hulen, Texas. During my employment at Wal-Mart, I experienced sexual harassment and discovered the Open Door did not work. I was also denied promotional opportunities and saw a less experienced male awarded a promotion. I was discouraged from pursuing a management position.

2. In November 1996 I was hired at the Cherry Lane store as a sales associate in the Health and Beauty Department. In January 1997, Assistant Manager Mike Fuller told me that because of my hard work and my attention to detail he was promoting me to Sales Associate in the Electronics Department. Although Mr. Fuller termed the move as a promotion, I did not receive a corresponding raise when I accepted the new position.

3. While working at the Cherry Lane Wal-Mart store, I suffered severe sexual harassment. Support Manager Gilbert Hill, my direct supervisor, repeatedly harassed me with comments and questions such as, "when are we going to have sex?" One day in the summer of 1997, he pushed me against some pallets and put his hands up the front of my shirt. I was so scared and distraught I left work immediately. Assistant Manager Mike Fuller later called me into the office to discuss the incident. When I arrived, Support Manager Hill was in the office. Mr. Fuller asked me to explain what was going on with Mr. Hill right there in the room. I was very intimidated by this. While we were in the office, Mr. Hill admitted to the verbal portion of the assaults. However, I never observed or was made aware of any discipline Wal-Mart took against Mr. Hill for the sexual harassment.

4. In late July or early August of 1997, I approached Store Manager Jim Brown and told him that I was uncomfortable working with Support Manager Hill after his repeated sexual harassment. I requested a transfer to the Hulen or Lakeworth stores, two other Wal-Marts in the area. Store Manager Brown told me neither store had any openings. The Store Manager told me I had two options, I could quit or just deal with it. Therefore, I gave my two weeks notice and quit.

5. With over a year break from working at a Wal-Mart store, in January 1999, I decided I would attempt once more to have a career at Wal-Mart I applied at store the Hulen, Texas Wal-Mart store because I did not want to return to the Cherry Lane store due to my damaging experience there.

6. I was hired as an Electronics Associate at the Hulen, Texas store in mid-January 1999. Within weeks of starting at the Hulen store, I talked to Assistant Manager David White and Store Manager John Jurca about becoming part of the Wal-Mart management team. When I told them I was interested in the Management Training Program, Mr. Jurca asked me if I had a college degree. I said no. He informed me that he tends to hire people with a college degree in business management for the Management Training Program. As I did not have a college degree, I understood from Mr. Jurca that I was not qualified to be a manager at Wal-Mart.

7. Because Mr. Jurca led me to believe that he would not choose me for the Management Training Program because I lacked a college degree in business management, I set my goals on a Support Manager position. Support Manager is the level of management just below Assistant Manager at Wal-Mart. I talked to Mr. White and Mr. Jurca repeatedly about being promoted to Support Manager during my time at the Hulen Wal-Mart. Neither of them would respond to me about my interest. Typically, Mr. White and Mr. Jurca changed the subject or brushed me off. Neither of them told me what I needed to do in order to become a Support Manager.

8. By the end of January 1999, Assistant Manager David White approached me and asked me to apply for a Customer Service Manager position. This is an hourly position. Almost all if not all the Customer Service Managers I observed at both the Cherry Lane and the Hulen Wal-Marts were women. I was upset because I felt Mr. White was trying to steer me toward a front end position when I had clearly let him know I was interested in a Support Manager position. He told me that because I am a woman I was better suited for the front end at that time. I asked why he thought it was alright for a woman to take care of the money at the front end but not alright for a woman to be a Support Manager over other areas of the store. Mr. White responded by saying it would be best for me to start at the front end and work my way up into a support manager position.

9. Based on Mr. White's recommendation I decided to accept the Customer Service Manager position, because I believed it would lead to a promotion to a Support Manager position. Mr. White informed me I would receive a .50 cent raise with the promotion. However my pay did not increase when I took over the position.

10. In approximately March 1999, a Support Manager opening was posted in the break room. I told Mr. White and Mr. Jurca that I wanted to be considered for the position. Neither of them would give me the code necessary to take the CBL (computer based learning) knowledge tests required by Wal-Mart for the position. Instead they ordered me back to the front end podium, my work station.

11. Toward the end of March 1999, I was asked to train Walter Cagle, an associate from the Electronics Department, in Customer Service Manager duties. I believed at this time that Mr. Jurca must have been considering me for the support manager position and that Mr. Cagle was going to take over my current position as Customer Service Manager.

12. After three weeks of CBLs and other training, Mr. Cagle had not learned the position. In my experience, I had never seen an employee take longer than three or four days to learn the position. When I participated in the Wal-Mart Customer Service Manager training, I learned the position in two days. After three weeks I felt that Mr. Cagle was incapable of learning the position. Mr. Cagle could not grasp basic tasks that were essential to the customer service manager job, such as learning the override reason codes, closing out a shift properly and maintaining customer flow through the front end. I engaged in a daily battle of helping Mr. Cagle grasp these core tasks. Finally, I approached Assistant Manager Steven Thompson and told him that Mr. Cagle was not learning the position satisfactorily and the oversight he required was so extensive that I was being prevented from completing my daily Customer Service Manager duties. Mr. Thompson informed me that I had to keep helping Mr. Cagle because Mr. Cagle needed to know the Customer Service Manager duties since he was the new Support Manager. Wal-Mart filled the Support Manager opening with Mr. Cagle, instead of me. I had not even been interviewed for the position.

13. Mr. Cagle had been hired one month before me at the Hulen Texas Wal-Mart store and unlike me, he had no prior Wal-Mart experience. He spent his five months with Wal-Mart entirely in the sales associate position in the Electronics Department before Wal-Mart promoted him. Unlike me, he had never held a supervisory or management position in the store.

14. I was devastated when I learned that Wal-Mart chose not to promote me and not even to interview me for the position before placing a male with demonstrably lesser skills and ability than me, and no Wal-Mart management experience, in the support manager position.

15. I protested to Store Manager Mr. Jurca and Assistant Manager Mr. White. I told them it was unfair that Wal-Mart did not consider me for the Support Manager position when they both knew I wanted the promotion and that it was unfair that they then expected me to train Mr. Cagle. Mr. Jurca and Mr. White did not act concerned by my frustration. Mr. White just expressed that I should be happy with what I had, a Customer Service Manager position. Again, neither Mr. Jurca nor Mr. White told me what I needed to do in order to be promoted. They offered no explanation to justify their selection of a less qualified, less experienced man for the position.

16. After Mr. Cagle was promoted instead of me, I decided to leave Wal-Mart as I felt my hard work was not recognized and that promotional opportunities were denied me because of my gender. I wrote a letter of resignation explaining that I needed to seek a job that gave me more opportunity to use my skills and earn a living than Wal-Mart was providing.

17. From the time I was placed in the Customer Service Manager position at the end of January 1999, through the end of March 1999 I approached Mr. White repeatedly about my promotion raise. Mr.

White repeatedly told me to wait until the next pay period to see if the raise would be reflected on my check. The raise did not take affect until April 3, 2003, and I never received any back pay.

I have personal knowledge of each and every fact set forth in the Declaration, and if called to testify as a witness in this matter, I could and would competently testify to each of these facts.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Arkansas that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 1, 2003, at 9:09 p.m.

/s/ Lori Arhangelsky

Lori Arhangelsky

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant.	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF PATRICIA BEBEE IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, PATRCIA BEBEE, declare that:

1. I have personal knowledge of each and every fact set forth in this Declaration, and if called to testify as a witness in this matter, I could and would competently testify to each of these facts.

2. I was employed by Wal-Mart, Inc. at Store No. 0234 in Liberty, Missouri from September 6, 1990 through June 26, 2001. I quit because of the lack of promotional opportunities. I am female.

3. Prior to joining Wal-Mart, I was employed by Pizza Hut where, during my fourteen year history, I worked my way up from waitress to shift manager to assistant manager to store manager.

4. Despite my management experience, Wal-Mart offered me a job as a sales associate in the Softlines Department at $4.50 an hour. At the time,

I was supporting two school-aged children. On my application I had indicated that I was seeking a supervisory position and that I had seven years of management experience so I was disappointed not to be offered a management position. (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit A.) However, I had worked my way up through the ranks at Pizza Hut and I was confident that I could do so again at Wal-Mart.

5. On my 90 day evaluation, I was ranked "above standard" in every category. My reward was a mere 25 cent raise, which I felt was very low and only brought my pay rate up to $4.75 an hour. Under the "career goals" section of this evaluation, I wrote, "Still would like to foresee possibility for assistant manager program." (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit B.)

6. Several months later, Store Manager Leroy Marvel asked me if I wanted to learn the Service Desk position. I said yes because I wanted to learn all aspects of the Company so that I could get promoted. This job was not posted and I only knew it was available after Store Manager Marvel offered it to me.

could get promoted. This job was not posted and I only knew it was available after Store Manager Marvel offered it to me.

7. In February 1991, I received an "above standard" mid-year evaluation. Despite this good rating, I did not receive any rate increase with this evaluation. In the "associate's comments" section, I wrote, "Would still like to know more about Wal-Mart as a company. Would like to eventually train for CSM [Customer Service Manager]; and up to MG

[management] in due time." (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit C.)

8. In July 1991, I received my first annual performance evaluation and again, I was ranked "above standard." This time I was given a 30 cent raise for my high achievement, but I was still only earning $5.05 an hour.

9. Since I was having trouble supporting my family on this low wage, I began working a second job at ASAP convenience store. At the time, I planned to work this second job only until I was promoted into management, which I still believed would happen even though none of my managers had acknowledged my written requests for management opportunities.

10. During the time, I worked the Service Desk, I learned the job requirements of Customer Service Manager (CSM) and began performing those duties as well. The CSM oversees the front end of the store, including scheduling and supervising the cashiers and checking out merchandise.

11. On my yearly evaluations in 1992 and 1993, I was ranked 4.1 and 3.8, respectively, as a Customer Service Manager. A "4" indicates a ranking of "exceeds expectations." Both years I received only a 30 cent raise.

12. On my 1992 evaluation, I wrote, "I am still interested in pursuing a higher level in this Company. Do not want to be stagnant!!" (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit D.) In 1993, I was frustrated with my lack of progress and low rate of pay and wrote: "I am very pleased with my overall evaluation. My only feedback is if you do a pretty descent [sic] job at your area, why there isn't a merit increase along with your annual?" (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit E.) After three years with the Company, I was still earning only $5.65 an hour. In August 1993, I was promoted to the position of Head Service Desk and received another 30 cent raise. But, I was still earning less than $6 an hour: $5.95. In the Head Service Desk position, I was responsible for overseeing customer service, including handling exchanges and refunds for customers, and doing the charges for organizations and churches.

13. In May 1994, I helped stop a theft in the front end of the store. For this, I received a merit raise of 20 cents an hour.

14. In July 1994, I earned another "above standard" evaluation. This time my increase was 40 cents an hour, which brought my pay rate to $6.55 an hour. In the comments section, I wrote: "Still want to learn other areas thru the store so I can better myself and possibly go to another area in the future. I believe in learning what you can about all aspects of a job so you both benefit yourself and the company. I believe I do a fantastic job on the front end even when the stress level has reached its peak. Would like to learn another area! Nite receiving and day stocker." (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit F).

15. In approximately March 1995, Store Manager Marvel asked me if I wanted to move to the Cash Office. This job was not posted and the only way I learned about it was when Store Manager Marvel offered it to me. During the approximately one and a half years I worked in this position, my hours were varied, including weekday shifts from 11 a.m. to 7 p.m. and 2 p.m. to closing, and a Saturday shift from 5 a.m. to 2 p.m. I received a merit increase of 50 cents an hour when I first took the position. That July, I received another "above standard" evaluation. In the comments section, I again stated that I did not want to stagnate but to learn all I could and to move to the next level. (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit G.)

16. In 1996, Store Manager Marvel allowed me to move to a Stocker position. When I first expressed interest in this position, Store Manager Marvel told me he did not want me to move from the Cash Office because I was too valuable in that position. I worked on the stocking crew for about two years. I received "above standard" annual evaluations both years and raises of 40 cent and 50 cents, respectively. After eight years at Wal-Mart, I was still only making $8.50 an hour. On my 1996 evaluation, I wrote, "I am still interested in learning all I can for this Company. I don't want to be stagnant in one position. I have ideas about the mgt. Program in the future. People need to develop and be able to grow to benefit the Company." (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit H.)

17. Although I had consistently stated my interest in moving up in the Company on each of my evaluations through 1996, I only recall two managers talking to me about a management career at Wal-Mart. The first, a male Assistant Manager whose name I no longer remember, told me that I needed to have a college degree. I told him that neither the Store Manager, Leroy Marvel, nor the District Manager, Jerome Schieder, had a college degree. I also remember talking to Assistant Manager Ben Abbott about my interest in management but I do not recall him giving me any encouragement or instructions regarding how to find out about or apply for management opportunities.

18. In 1998, I quit my second job at ASAP convenience store. About this time, Wal-Mart started using a computerized job posting system for some of the positions open at my store. I made a number of applications for department manager positions through this system, including the Paper Goods and Chemicals Department and Electronics Department. At one point, I was interviewed by an Assistant Manager for a department manager position. The only thing I recall about this interview was informing the Assistant Manager that I did not want to be placed in the Cosmetics Department. The Cosmetics Department was a "high shrink" area: high volume with lots of theft. It was also a department comprised exclusively of female associates and I did not view it as a stepping stone to management as I did some of the other departments, such as Electronics and Paper Goods and Chemicals, that were run mostly by male associates and male department managers.

19. I learned that I had been promoted to Department Manager when the new Store Manager, Cynthia Olah, congratulated me. At first, I was thrilled because I believed I was being promoted to the Paper Goods and Chemicals Department. Then she told me it was the Cosmetics Department and I was tremendously disappointed. In addition to considering this a dead end department, I had learned from the former Department Manager that Cosmetics was chronically understaffed. I learned later that a male, Mark Richardson, was promoted to Department Manager over Paper Goods and Chemicals.

20. During the approximately two and one-half years I was Department Manager in Cosmetics, I continued to apply for the department manager position in the Paper Goods and Chemical Department as well as other departments. I was never interviewed again. And even though I kept receiving "above average" or "meets expectations" rankings on my performance evaluations, none of the Assistant Managers or the Store Manager ever talked to me about Wal-Mart's management training program. There was no information about this program posted anywhere in the store and I did not learn about its existence until very late in my career at Wal-Mart. The management training program was not discussed at the daily store meetings I attended.

21. During this same two and one-half year period, I watched Mark Richardson and other male associates move from position to position within the Company while I stagnated as the Cosmetics Department Manager. In particular, Mr. Richardson moved from department head to department head, including in the Household Paper Goods, Electronics, and Men's Wear Departments. Another male associate, Paul Owings, who appeared to be barely out of high school and who was hired several months after I became Department Manager in Cosmetics, was promoted from a sales associate to Department Manager over the Paper Goods and Chemicals Department to Support Manager.

22. In June 2001, I quit my employment with Wal-Mart because of the lack of promotional opportunities. During my exit interview, I informed Wal-Mart that I was leaving because I was dissatisfied with the hours, working conditions, career opportunities and my supervisor. (True and accurate copy attached as Bebee Exhibit 1.) No member of management made any attempt to dissuade me from leaving or told me of any promotional opportunities that would be available.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Missouri that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on 4-14-, 2003, at 12:10 p.m.

/s/ Patricia Bebee

Patricia Bebee, Declarant

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF GEANETTE BELL IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Geanette Bell, declare:

1. I am a 34 year African-American female from Pontotoc, Mississippi. I believe that Wal-Mart has not given me an opportunity to rise within the company equal to the opportunity given to its male employees. I also feel that Wal-Mart has given male employees more support to successfully perform their job duties than it has given me and other female employees.

2. I work at the Wal-Mart store in Pontotoc, Mississippi. I have worked at Wal-Mart since October, 1989, in a variety of positions. For the past 5 years I have been a Department Manager.

3. Throughout my career at Wal-Mart, I have always received a "meets expectations" rating or higher on my performance appraisals. For four out of the past six years, I have received an "exceeds expectations" rating on my performance.

4. In 1990, I approached Jim Legge, the Store Manager, and asked him how I could get into the Management Training Program. He laughed. He told me that I would have to relocate to be in the program. Then he told me that I "wouldn't want to be in the program," ending the conversation. I was discouraged by his response, which clearly indicated that he did not consider my candidacy for the program. Therefore, I did not bother him about it again. I knew of no other way to obtain information about management training. There was nothing in writing available to me that explained the program.

5. From March of 1998 to December of 2000 I was Department Manager of chemicals and paper goods. Wal-Mart did not provide me with the full-time help necessary for the busy department. I asked Assistant Manager David LeSueur for full-time help in the department, but my request was denied. When I transferred to the infants department in December 2000, Adam Worthham, a male employee, took over as Department Manager of chemicals and paper goods. Wal-Mart scheduled a full-time associate to work in Mr. Worthham's department. In August 1998, Mr. Worthham left the department and Shauna Adams, a female employee, became Department Manager of chemical and paper goods. Wal-Mart stopped scheduling full-time help in the department when Ms. Adams took over the position, leaving her, like me, understaffed in the department.

6. For more than the last two years, I have been on Wal-Mart's hiring committee at the Pontotoc store. Wal-Mart's hiring committee is responsible for screening applicants for new hourly positions. During my tenure on the hiring committee, Personnel Manager Rena Harden sometimes has directed the committee to filter candidates into certain positions based on their gender. Commonly, Ms. Harden has instructed me to find women for cashier positions. Also commonly, Ms. Harden has instructed me to find males for cart pusher and carry-out positions.

7. In the fall of 2002, District Manager Sammy Sappington announced at a meeting that he had asked Coy Tutor to enter the Management Training Program. Mr. Tutor was a Department Manager, like me. He did not have as many years experience with Wal-Mart as I did. Additionally, I had received an "exceeds expectations" rating on my 2001 and 2002 performance evaluations. I did not think it was fair that Mr. Tutor, a male Department Manager, had been approached to enter the Management Training Program instead of me, a female Department Manager with more Wal-Mart experience.

8. I realized that I had never seen Wal-Mart announce that a female was selected for a Management Trainee position. I knew of other males who were selected by Wal-Mart. In addition to Mr. Tutor, Bill Finley was selected for the Management Training Program in 1999, at a time when he had only three years experience with Wal-Mart and no Department Manager experience. Also, Adam Worthham was put in the Management Training Program in 2002, after less than two years of experience with the company.

9. In the fall 2002, after I saw this third male, Coy Tutor, invited to the Management Training Program, I approached Store Manager Bryan Timmons to again ask how I could get into the program. Mr. Timmons told me I would not want to enter the program because I would not want to relocate my children. He would not give me any direction or information regarding what I could do to be selected for Wal-Mart's Management Training Program.

10. In my 13 years at Wal-Mart, Wal-Mart's relocation policy, which was frequently mentioned in conjunction with the Management Training Program, discouraged me at times from attempting to enter the program. However, of the males I recall entering the program, none of them were required to move from their homes in order to enter the program or become Assistant Managers. For example, Billy Finley and Adam Worthham, two males from my store who have entered the program in the past few years, were assigned to stores within commuting distance from Pontotoc.

11. A few months after expressing my interest in the Management Training Program was rejected by Store Manager Timmons, Wal-Mart posted a notice about the Management Training Program. The notice invited employees to express their interest in entering the Management Training Program. This was the first time in my 13 years at Wal-Mart that such an invitation had been posted. According to the January 2003 announcement, employees had about one week to apply for a Management Trainee position. Selected employees would then be interviewed.

12. I did not feel comfortable applying for the position because, after watching Wal-Mart hand pick its candidates for the Management Training Program for 13 years, I questioned Wal-Mart's sincerity. I was suspicious that Wal-Mart's action was solely in response to the lawsuit. I might be interested in a future opportunity to enter the Management Training Program if I was confident that I was being judged on merit, not by my gender.

I have personal knowledge of each and every fact set forth in the Declaration, and if called to testify as a witness in this matter, I could and would competently testify to each of these facts.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Mississippi that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 1, 2003, at Pontotoc, Mississippi.

/s/ Geanette Bell

Geanette Bell

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF SANDRA BERKOWITZ IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, SANDRA BERKOWITZ, declare that:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge, and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein.

2. Before I began working at Wal-Mart, I held office manager positions with Ohio Car Care and Rust Proofing, a real estate attorney, and Computer Air. For five years I was an office manager for Detailing USA. In each of these positions I supervised approximately five people at a time.

3. I was employed by Wal-Mart, Inc. in Boca Raton, Florida from June 6, 2001 through June 12, 2002. I am female.

4. I was initially hired as a cashier making $6.50 an hour. In August 2001, I received a merit raise of $.25 an hour. In September 2001, my performance evaluation rated my performance level "exceeds expectations" and I received a $.35 an hour raise. (Attached hereto is a true and accurate copy of 2001 Performance Appraisal as Berkowitz Exhibit A.) In November 2001, I was promoted to Customer Service Representative and given a 5% raise. This brought my pay rate from $7.10 to $7.46 per hour. I am single and I care for two grandchildren. On this salary I could barely support my family.

5. I did not work the same shift everyday. Some days I was scheduled for an opening shift and other days I was scheduled to close. Head Customer Service Manager Lazina Hernandez would call me when someone went on vacation or called in sick and I would work that shift. Some days I was forced to use my lunch period to pick up my 8-year-old granddaughter from school. My schedule varied because I wanted to show Wal-Mart that I could work any hours required. I hoped that this commitment would increase my chances of promotion.

6. In approximately August 2001, I saw an opening for a Personnel Manager at a Wal-Mart store in Pompano Beach, Florida posted on the board in my store and on the CBL. The Assistant Managers told us at evening meetings that if we wanted to apply for a position on the CBL we would need to let them know so they could give us a code. The Computer Based Learning system or "CBL" is the computer system in Wal-Mart stores that allows associates to apply for positions online. I asked Assistant Manager Illene Jacobs if she would help me apply for this position on the computer and she never did. I then called the store myself and the Store Manager, Mitch Brick, told me to come in for an interview. After the interview he said that he would get in touch with my Store Manager Charles Ayala and Assistant Manager Jacobs. I was sitting in the break room a few days later when I heard Store Manager Ayala and Assistant Manager Jacobs discussing the position. I learned from this conversation that they were not going to recommend me for it. I did not get the position. I received no explanation from Store Manager Ayala or Assistant Manager Jacobs for their refusal to recommend me for the position. Neither of these managers provided to me any guidance or instruction as to what, if anything, I needed to do in order to be promoted.

7. In approximately September 2001, I expressed interest in an assistant manager position in Boca Raton, Florida to Head Customer Service Manager Lazina Hernandez and Assistant Manager Illene Jacobs. Head Customer Service Manager Hernandez said that I should apply for the position. When I asked Assistant Manager Jacobs for her approval and for the code I needed for the computer, she told me that I was good at what I was doing. She attempted to dissuade me from applying for this position. I told her that I wanted to become an assistant manager and Assistant Manager Jacobs replied, "why bother, most of the Assistants are men unless you are an exceptional woman." This statement led me to believe that Assistant Manager Jacobs did not think I had an equal chance of becoming an assistant manager because I am a woman. Assistant Manager Jacobs never assisted me with applying for this position and therefore, I was never able to interview for it.

8. In approximately October 2001, Assistant Manager Bob Hall supervised the Domestics and Housewares Departments. He told me that the department manager positions for those departments were open. I was interested in applying for those positions. Assistant Manager Hall told me that to apply I would have to ask the Assistant Manager I reported to for clearance, who was Illene Jacobs. I told Assistant Manager Jacobs that I was interested in those positions and she told me she would get back to me. She never did.

9. In approximately January 2002, I saw a posting on a billboard in the back of our store for an Assistant Manager Trainee position. I told Assistant Manager Jacobs that I would like to apply for the position and needed her help to gain access though the computer. She again stated that I was good at what I did, but if I were really interested, that she would help me apply for the position when she had time. I would have asked another assistant manager but we were told that we were supposed to apply for positions with the assistance of our supervising assistant manager. I asked repeatedly for a few weeks for Assistant Manager Jacobs to help me apply. She repeatedly claimed that she never had time to help me. I eventually stopped asking Assistant Manager Jacobs to help me apply for the Assistant Manager Trainee position because a notice was posted stating that the position was closed. Later, I heard Assistant Manager Jacobs say that a man was selected for that position. This further convinced me that Wal-Mart was not interested in promoting women into management.

10. I felt that I was being overlooked for the positions that I expressed interest in because I am a woman. I felt discouraged from applying for other positions. I never rose any higher at Wal-Mart than the Customer Service Manager position.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and of the State of Florida, that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on Sandra Berkowitz, 2003 at Boca Raton, Florida.

/s/ Sandra Berkowitz

Sandra Berkowitz, Declarant

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF JOAN BERRY IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Joan Berry, declare:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge, and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein.

2. I am a female and a former employee of Wal-Mart, Inc. I reside in Georgetown, Delaware.

3. I began working as a member of the set up crew for the Newport News, Virginia Wal-Mart in 1997, and then later in October of the same year, became a stocker at the same store. I was promoted to Department Manager of Domestics in 1999 and worked in that position until I resigned in August of 2001. I was never disciplined while working at Wal-Mart, and I received "above standard" or "exceeds expectations" marks in every performance evaluation that I was given. In all but one of my evaluations, I specifically indicated in writing my desire to move up into store management. (Attached hereto as Berry Exhibits A, B, and C are, respectively, true and correct copies of my 1997 (90-day) Associate Evaluation, my 1998 Associate Evaluation, and my 2000 Performance Appraisal).

4. In 1999, I was approached by my store manager, Wayne Radcliff, and asked whether I would "take over" the Housewares Department, effective immediately. This was two days before I was scheduled and pre-approved to take time off to assist my pregnant daughter, who was about to have a baby. I did not want to be transferred to the Housewares Department with only two days before I had to leave, since in my experience, that would have surely led to a disaster in the department. When I communicated this to Mr. Radcliff, he responded by saying "I knew you would bitch about it," and then just walked away. I never heard Store Manager Radcliff speak to a male employee with such disrespect.

5. Sometime in 2000, I was approached by Assistant Manager Maria Robinson who told me that she was "on a mission from Wayne" (Mr. Radcliff, our Store Manager), and that I was selected to go into management training. Later, in April of that year, when I was set to start the training, Ms. Robinson told me that she and Mr. Radcliff had decided, since my son had died a year earlier, that it would not be a good time for me to go into training because of the anniversary of my son's death. I responded by saying that I was putting my "heart and soul" into working hard and that only I could decide whether I was ready for training after my son's death. I felt completely belittled and could not believe that management would use my son's death as an excuse for not promoting me. Two men were selected for training and thereafter were promoted to Assistant Manager positions, including Leo Kudel, who was the Department Manager over Pets & Supplies.

6. Later in 2000, I was approached by a new Assistant Manager, Jason Overton. He asked me whether I would manage the Health & Beauty Aids department instead of the Domestics Department. I told him that I did not think I was getting enough support from store management for Domestics and not enough staff were assigned to my department to help me, so I declined. He responded by saying "The majority of Assistant Manager Trainees are male, right? How many are coming from Domestics?" I responded by saying that his statement was unfair. Mr. Overton then just walked away without saying anything else. I took Mr. Overton's comments to mean that either I could not get promoted because I was a woman, or that I had to transfer out of the Domestics Department in order to get promoted. I observed several male Assistant Managers who had only worked in one department in my store and who were promoted directly to management training and assistant manager positions. Mr. Overton himself was one such person, having been promoted to Assistant Manager after several years of working in security. Another example is Leo Kudel, who had only worked in the Pet & Supplies Department before being trained and becoming an Assistant Manager at another store. I am unaware of any female Department Managers who were promoted to Assistant Manager after working only in Domestics or Health & Beauty Aids.

7. In my two years as Department Manager of Domestics, I observed that virtually all of the employees in my department were women. Other departments, such as grocery, were almost all men.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and of the State of Delaware that the foregoing is true and correct. I signed this Declaration on April 11, 2003 in Georgetown, Delaware.

/s/ Joan Berry

Joan Berry

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF PAULA BIRD IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Paula Bird, declare:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein.

2. I have a GED and a technical degree in medical office management. Prior to my work with Wal-Mart, I had been a manager at a senior center in Missouri. I currently work as a shift manager at a KFC restaurant and am also self-employed as a house cleaner. I am also responsible for raising four children between the ages of nine and sixteen along with my husband, who is on active duty with the United States Air Force.

3. I began working for a Wal-Mart Supercenter in Sedalia, Missouri in 1998 as an overnight unloader/stocker making $6.40 an hour. Between 1999 and 2000, I also worked at a Wal-Mart Supercenter in Marshall, Missouri and at a Hypermart in Kansas City, Missouri. When I left in 2000, I was making $8.73 an hour. I always worked full-time. I frequently worked night shifts and was regularly required to work weekends.

4. When I began my employment with Wal-Mart in 1998, I had high hopes that I would be able to advance into management in order to be better able to support my four small children and myself. Immediately after I was first hired, I spoke with Store Manager Steve Biermann and expressed my interest in going into management training. Mr. Biermann told me I would have to spend several years in different positions, including several department manager positions, before he would recommend me for the training program. He gave me an example of a woman [name unknown] who had been department manager in several departments for over five years, whom he was only now recommending for management training. At the time, I assumed that Mr. Biermann was telling me the truth about the time it would take to reach management training. I had never seen anything written about promotional requirements so I had nothing against which to compare Mr. Biermann's statements. Because I had been told that advancement into management at Wal-Mart would take at least five years, in the "Associates Comments/Goal Settings" section of my 1999 Performance Appraisal, I wrote, "My goal is to make it into management within 41/2 years." Attached hereto as Exhibit A is a true and correct copy of my Performance Appraisal dated November 24, 1999. In fact, during my tenure, I saw men who were put in management training after a much shorter period of time and without serving in different department manager positions. For example, when I worked in the Hypermart in Kansas City, Missouri, Store Manager William Fryman told me he had moved from customer service manager to store manager within one and a half years.

5. While I worked in Sedalia, Missouri, I was not allowed to unload off of trucks, only off of the conveyer belt. My supervisors, including male Unit Lead Jesse Spencer, rarely allowed women to unload off of the trucks. In my experience, it was much more physically strenuous for workers to unload off of a moving conveyer belt because it required much more rapid and coordinated movement.

6. In 1999, Store Manager Biermann allowed me to transfer to a Wal-Mart Store that was closer to my family. Even though I would remain within the same district, Mr. Biermann told me that transferring would force me to lose my annual bonus. I transferred to the Wal-Mart in Marshall, Missouri and spoke with the Store Manager Garry Goldammer about moving into management and the management training program. He told me to "start" as a stocker, which I did. It seemed as if I was starting over, having to prove myself all over again.

7. In early 2000, I volunteered to work at the Wal-Mart convention in Kansas City, Missouri to help set up a demonstration of upcoming merchandise because I felt it would be a good way for me to continue to gain experience in order to move into the management training program.

8. A few months later, still in 2000, I was promoted to a support manager. At the time, Mr. Goldammer told me this was not an official position but, because there were no management trainees in the store at the time, they really needed someone to complete a trainee's tasks. As a result, not only was I responsible for supervising customer service managers and cashiers, I was also trained by Mr. Goldammer and all the assistant managers to complete the tasks of a management trainee. This included making cash deposits and bank pick-ups, and learning alarm codes to close the store. I often completed these tasks alongside, or in place of, assistant managers. Even while I was trained and treated like a management trainee, and expected to perform the same tasks, I was not allowed the title or salary of an assistant management trainee, nor was I ensured a promotion into an assistant manager position after the training period. Store Manager Goldammer told me that accepting this support manager position would help me get promoted to the management training program and I wanted to believe him.

9. Also at this time, I continued to work on my days off as a customer service manager at the Kansas City Hypermart because Mr. Goldammer told me that the more experience I had, the better it would be to help me gain entry into the management training program. I spoke with the Kansas City Hypermart Store Manager Fryman about the opportunities for moving into management training. He told me that if I agreed to transfer permanently to his store, he would assist me in getting into management training. Despite a much longer daily commute and concerns about the high-crime area surrounding this store, I agreed to transfer because Mr. Fryman promised to help me advance in my career.

10. In June 2000, when I started work as the department manager of Hardware in the Kansas City Hypermart, Store Manager Fryman gave me one week to clear out all the overstock. I had only been there one week before the department had a bad inventory. The inventory issue had arisen long before I arrived and I could not have done anything to fix in the few days that I had been responsible for the department. Nonetheless, Mr. Fryman berated and criticized me. I did not believe that the treatment that I received was appropriate. That same day, I also personally observed him yelling at another female department manager in front of coworkers until she was in tears. That day, I wrote a letter giving my notice and describing what had happened. Attached hereto as Exhibit B is a true and correct copy of my letter of resignation, dated July 20, 2000. I gave the letter to Assistant Manager Sheila Compton. She told me to speak with the male District Manager [name unknown] at the Lee's Summit, Missouri Wal-Mart Store. I called the district manager and he asked me to come to the store to discuss what happened. I went to the Lee's Summit Wal-Mart and explained what had happened, including describing Mr. Fryman's poor treatment of myself and the other female department manager. The district manager then told me he was "outraged" at Mr. Fryman's behavior, that I had a right to be upset, and he promised he would speak with Mr. Fryman over the weekend and that I should return to work on Monday to meet with Mr. Fryman about this incident.

11. When I returned on Monday, Mr. Fryman looked at me and asked, "What are you doing here, I have nothing to say to you." I felt that I was being retaliated against for using the Open Door policy. I called the district manager to ask whether he had spoken to Mr. Fryman over the weekend but he was unresponsive only telling me that I had a bad attitude. Finally, I insisted on having a meeting with

Mr. Fryman and Ms. Compton to discuss Mr. Fryman's behavior but he refused to acknowledge any of my concerns. He just kept repeating, "Well, I don't see it that way." When I realized that my concerns about mistreatment were not going to be addressed, I gave my notice and said goodbye. I really felt cheated because Mr. Fryman had assured me that, if I transferred to his store, he would assist me in advancing my career. Instead, I believe that he was looking for a scapegoat for existing problems in my store.

12. Despite the fact that I had been an excellent employee for Wal-Mart, I was never asked to fill out an Exit Interview and no one contacted me again about the reasons why I felt that I had to leave.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Missouri that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 10, 2003, at Knob Noster, Missouri.

/s/ Paula Bird

Paula Bird

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF LISA BOUDREAUX IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, LISA BOUDREAUX, declare that:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge, and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein.

2. I am a female and a current employee of Wal-Mart, Inc. I reside in Alabama.

3. In August 1995, I began working at a Wal-Mart store in Bessemer, Alabama as a produce sales clerk.

4. In July 1996, I was promoted to Produce Assistant Manager. The position was not posted. Produce Manager Wayne Terwilliger offered me the position.

5. In 1996, Store Manager Bruce Abbott told me that he was placing me in the produce manager training program. This position was not posted. In 1997, when my training was near completion, Produce Manager Arthur Honeycutt announced his resignation. I told Store Manager Abbott that I was interested in the produce manager position and he told me that I could not have the position because I was not able run a high volume store. I was trained to be a produce manager in this store so I did not understand why the Store Manager thought I was incapable of doing this job.

6. In approximately July 1997, District Manager Banwarth offered me a produce manager position in a Hartselle, Alabama store. My father had recently passed away and I was not ready to move to a city where I did not know anyone so I declined the offer.

7. Just before Mr. Honeycutt stepped down and my training was complete, a male, John Marshall, had been hired for the assistant produce manager position so that position was no longer available to me. District Manager Banwarth and Store Manager Abbot refused to consider me for the open produce manager position in my store so I was forced to take an hourly produce clerk position.

8. I asked Store Manager Abbott if I could manage the Produce Department for six months to prove that I was capable of working as produce manager. I was not allowed to manage the department. Assistant Produce Manager John Marshall, who had less experience with Wal-Mart than I did, became the acting Produce Manager. Unlike me, he had not completed the Produce Manager Training Program. I told District Manager Banwarth that I did not think it was fair for John Marshall to be running the Produce Department when I, an employee who had just completed a Produce Manager Trainee program, was willing and able to manage the Produce Department. District Manager Banwarth then placed a male produce manager from Oneonta, Alabama, Charles Fairly, in the position as acting Produce Manager. Produce Manager Fairly worked in the Bessemer, Alabama store for one month before transferring to a Supercenter in Homewood, Alabama.

9. In approximately March 1998, Produce Manager Fairly asked me to transfer to Homewood and to be his assistant. I accepted this position and transferred to an assistant produce manager position in the Homewood, Alabama store.

10. In March 1999, a full year later, I was promoted to Produce Manager. After talking to two men Shelton Woods and John Marshall who had recently entered the Produce Manager Trainee Program; I learned that my Produce Manager salary was the same as what they said their salaries as Produce Manager Trainees were. This lead me to believe that I was not being paid an appropriate amount for a Produce Manager. I asked Store Manager Gary Jones for a pay increase that would increase my salary above what these male trainees were paid. He told me that District Manager Banwarth refused to the authorize a pay increase.

11. In September 1999, David Johnson replaced District Manager Banwarth. I again asked for a pay raise. District Manager Johnson approved a pay raise to $29,500 that would "bring [my salary] up to Wal-Mart standard for the position." (Attached hereto is a true and accurate copy of Associate's Commendation Form as Boudreaux Exhibit A.)

12. I have never been disciplined. On all of my performance evaluations as a produce manager my performance level either "meets expectations" or "exceeds expectations." (Attached hereto is a true and accurate copy of 2001 Management Performance Appraisal as Boudreaux Exhibit B.) In September 2001, I received a commendation, which stated, "Lisa has done an exceptional job in leading the Produce Department to a much higher level of performance than it has ever seen . . . Lisa not only performs well numerically, but demonstrates a great Wal-Mart spirit each day she works." (Attached hereto is a true and accurate copy of Associate's Commendation Form as Boudreaux Exhibit C.)

13. At the end of every year, District Manager David Johnson and Merchandiser Steve Mulford select Produce Manager of the Year and Produce Department of the Year. In 2001 I had the number one profit and the number one produce department in the district. I also had the number one profit in the region. At that time I was the only female produce manager in the district. Despite the fact that my department out-performed the other Produce Departments in the district, a male, Borris Owens, was awarded Produce Manager of the Year. His store had been open for less than one year. I think my department was not chosen because I am a woman; the man I replaced won numerous awards. In my store, male managers, including Meat Manager Kenneth Cook and Dairy Manager Rufus Clyde, were both awarded Department of the Year.

I have not been selected to be in the Rising Star program although I meet the qualifications listed on the computer in "The Manager's Workbench." I wanted to be on the Rising Star list because I understood that once an employee was on that list he/she would be considered for promotion within 18 months. An employee is eligible if he/she has an evaluation rating of 3.5 or higher, above average financial results, a high level of leadership skills, and is recommended by an immediate supervisor as an individual who has the capacity and desire to move into positions of greater responsibility within 18 months. All of my evaluation ratings exceed 3.5, I have the number one profit for a produce department in the District, and on all of my evaluations I commented that I would like to eventually move into a Co Manager, Store Manager or District Manager position. Yet, my Store Manager has not recommended me for the Rising Star program. Male assistant managers in my store have been placed in the program. In 2001 the Meat Manager Kenneth Cook was put in the Rising Star program and in 2003, Assistant Manager Johnny Harris was placed in the program. I have been working at the Homewood, Alabama store longer than both of these men. I believe I have not been placed on the Rising Star list because I am a woman.I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and of the State of Alabama, that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 12, 2003 at Midfield, Al, 35228.

/s/ Lisa Boudreaux

Lisa Boudreaux, Declarant

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF DANETTE BROWN BALLOU IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Danette Brown Ballou, declare:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge, and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein.

2. I am a forty-one year old woman currently employed as the Health and Beauty Aids Department Manager at a Wal-Mart store in Bentonville, Arkansas. I have been an employee of Wal-Mart for over twenty-two years. I was first hired in September 1980 in El Reno, Oklahoma during the early days before Wal-Mart became the large company that it is today. During most of my time at Wal-Mart, I have received above standard performance evaluations.

3. I applied for a position with Wal-Mart because I wanted to work for a company where I thought there were opportunities for advancement with the company. When I first started with Wal-Mart, I worked as a part-time cashier. I worked in several positions in the store, working whatever hours were required of me, including weekends.

4. While I was in the El Reno store, I told store manager Marv Simon in approximately 1985 or 1986 that I was interested in entering the Management Training Program. I had not been aware, initially, of the Assistant Manager Training Program but had observed that management trainees came to the store for training during my time at the El Reno store, which had been a training store. I expressed interest in management training to Mr. Simon because it appeared to me that there was no potential for advancement in the El Reno store due to its size and low turnover in more responsible positions. I was willing to relocate to another store in an effort to take a more responsible position in the company.

5. Mr. Simon informed me that he would make some calls. However, when I was offered two new assignments, neither was an offer to enter the Management Training Program. Instead, I was offered other hourly positions: a cash office job in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma and a position in Lay-Away in Kingfisher, Oklahoma.

6. I accepted the cash office job in Oklahoma City in approximately October 1986 in the hopes of gaining more experience and job responsibilities and so be promoted into a managerial position. My job responsibilities during this time period also included working as relief for claims and the District Secretary for District Manager Chuck Myers. While I worked in the Oklahoma City store, I expressed interest in becoming an assistant manager to Assistant Manager Clayton Crosby. Mr. Crosby did not tell me what I needed to do to be promoted. I am not aware of any action Mr. Crosby or any other member of management took to promote me into the Assistant Manager Training Program.

7. In October 1987, I accepted a job in the cash office and as a Support Manager in Fort Smith, Arkansas after my then husband Jack Brown, who was an Assistant Manager, was transferred to a Wal-Mart store in Sallisaw, Oklahoma. As a Support Manager, I performed many of the same duties as those of an Assistant Manager. I observed, however, that another female Support Manager, Karla Buck, and I performed the same duties, but a male Support Manager, Jerral was allowed to close the store, a responsibility neither Ms. Buck nor I were given while I was at the store. The only apparent reason that Jerral was allowed to close when Ms. Buck and I were not allowed to do so was because he is a man.

8. In September 1988, I transferred to the Home Office in Bentonville, Arkansas to work in the data communications department after my husband was transferred to the Fayetteville, Arkansas store. I worked in the Home Office for approximately four years. Initially, I supported what is now known as the SMART system and handled calls from Wal-Mart stores all over the country. During the years that I was in this position, computerized information available on the SMART system was available in each of the stores. Cash reports, payroll and warehouse orders were transmitted to the Home Office through the system.

9. My next assignment in the Home Office was in an area called Components supporting Telxon and Bass systems for Wal-Mart stores nationwide. Both Telxon and Bass are hand held devices used to order merchandise in the stores. The job required me to answer calls concerning problems with both devices from associates in the field. I was in this position for approximately a year and then went out on maternity leave. When I returned, I returned to components to a position in which I took messages. I was, soon after, assigned to the position of operator where I took messages from Wal-Mart stores nationwide for any problem in the stores. Finally, I moved to the point-of-sale group where I took calls from Wal-Mart stores nationwide in which the cash registers in the stores were inoperative. My responsibilities included ordering hardware for the stores and in other instances calling vendors for service.

10. My final assignment required me to answer calls and take messages for any problem in Wal-Mart stores nationwide.

11. I requested a transfer out of the Home Office because I did not feel that there were any other opportunities for me in the Home Office except continuing in field support. In July 1992, I transferred to the Supercenter store in Bentonville, Arkansas where I have been for the last eleven years. When I transferred there, I did not receive any additional training to work in the store. The store ran in the same manner as the three other Wal-Mart stores had before I transferred to Bentonville.

12. The positions I have held in the Bentonville store have included UPC clerk, invoice clerk, cash office manager, CSM, cost invoice clerk, deli clerk and, finally, Department Manager for Health and Beauty Aids. Each of these positions is one typically held by female associates. I received a promotion to Department Manager of Health and Beauty Aids in November 2002. I have continued to be interested in management positions while I have worked in the Bentonville store. However, I have been discouraged from seeking the position of Assistant Manager Trainee because of the relocation requirement that exists within Wal-Mart. I observed that my former husband, Jack Brown, and other trainees were required to relocate. Because I was a single mother for much of the time I have been at the Bentonville store, I did not feel that I could enter into the Assistant Manager Trainee Program because it would require me to relocate and uproot my son. Moreover, the Resident Assistant Manager program, which allows an Assistant Manager to remain in the same store, was not an option because of the requirement that only one Resident Assistant Manager may work in a store. The Bentonville store has a male Resident Assistant Manager, Ron Evans, who has been with the company many years.

13. In an effort to broaden and expand my experience and responsibilities, I have expressed interest in working in departments that are typically filled by men. Throughout my employment with Wal-Mart, I have observed that the departments in the stores that are predominately staffed by men are hardware, automotive, sporting goods, the meat department, produce, receiving and unloading, and Tire and Lube Express ("TLE"). This observation has been reinforced by comments from Managers to whom I have expressed an interest in transferring into these departments. For example, in approximately late 1996 or early 1997, I informed TLE manager Steve Smith that I was interested in a Support Manager position. He discouraged me and did not give me the position.

14. I also expressed interest in working in the produce department to Assistant Manager David Schuler sometime in approximately the summer of 2000. I was particularly interested in learning why primarily men worked in the area. Assistant Manager Schuler responded that the department needed men because of the lifting of heavy boxes of fruit and women could not or would not do the work. In the last year, I expressed interest in a position in sporting goods that was not posted to Store Manager Gary Rains. Store Manager Rains responded "what do you know about sporting goods?"

15. In November 2002, after my deposition was taken in this case, I was promoted to Department Manager for Health and Beauty Aids after I applied for the position. On March 21, 2003, I learned from District Manager Joe Mains that after 22 years I had been accepted into the Assistant Manager Training Program that started on April 5, 2003. This only occurred after I was allowed to apply on the Pipeline, the company's centralized computerized system, for the position in January 2003. This is the first time there was an opportunity to apply for the training program. Finally, I feel that I am being given an opportunity that I deserved long ago.

16. For most of the 22 years I have been with Wal-Mart, available positions have been rarely posted. The posted positions on Pipeline I viewed prior to late last year were frequently out of date. In each store where I have worked, I have frequently observed management making job assignments and promotional decisions without posting open opportunities or interviewing interested candidates.

17. I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Arkansas that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 10, 2003, at Rogers, AR.

/s/ Danette Brown Ballou

Danette Brown Ballou, Declarant

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, KAREN WILLIAMSON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF SUE BROWN IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Sue Brown, declare:

1. I have worked as a full-time sales associate in electronics in Wal-Mart, Inc.'s store # 1269 in Louisville, Kentucky, since October 1997. I have never been promoted.

2. I am a retired school teacher with a Master's Degree.

3. My starting rate of pay at Wal-Mart was $5.40. After 90 days, my pay was increased to $5.70; at my first annual evaluation in September 1998 it went up to $5.93; during my second year it was increased again to $6.24, and at my two-year evaluation in September 1999, I got another increase to $7.05; in September 2000, at my three-year evaluation, I got another raise to $7.35; and at my four-year evaluation, my pay went to $7.64, and finally, at my five-year evaluation in September 2002, I got another increase to $7.95.

4. Sometime in mid-2000, I discovered that at least one of the high-school-age boys working in the electronics department was making more money than I was. His name is Ben Risner, then age 17. He was hired by the General Manager, Martin Wagner, and I trained him in our department. He told me he was making more money than I was and had started at a higher rate than I was making at that time. He recently told me that he is now making $8.35.

5. In June 2000, I asked my department manager, Judy Kuhn, why my pay was lower than a high school boy's and she said, "You don't have the right equipment." When I asked what she meant by that, she said, "You aren't male, so you can't expect to be paid the same."

6. One young man in the department, Joe [last name unknown], frequently used foul language and made lewd remarks in my presence. I asked him to stop talking like this in my presence, and he just said, "then don't listen." I complained to Ms. Kuhn, the department manager, but she just said "boys will be boys" and did not talk to Joe. I spoke with a male Assistant Manager, Chris Klein, who told me to put my complaint in writing, and when I did, he told me to take it to the General Manager, Mr. Wagner. He read it, laughed and said "whatever." None of these managers ever said they would talk with Joe, and as far as I know, none of them ever did. He continued to tell lewd stories in my presence throughout the time he worked there.

7. I am required to clean and stock the electronics department, but the boys working alongside me are not.

8. In July 2000, I asked my new department manager, Janet Chandley, why I have these additional responsibilities, and she told me that the boys' main job is "to service the customers." I believe that is my main job as well, but only Barbara Bartley and I, the only female sales associates in the electronics department, have these additional tasks, even though we have both worked there longer than any of the young boys.

9. On or about June 15, 2001, I talked with my department manager, Ms. Chandley, about getting a merit raise. I asked because I had learned from Ben Risner that he and Alex Young, another very young man, had gotten merit raises, and they were laughing and talking in my presence about having done nothing to deserve them. I had been at Wal-Mart almost four years and still was not making what these young men were making. Ms. Chandley told me that I probably would not get the raise I asked for, because she was the department manager and even her hourly rate was "lower than the guys' in the department."

10. A few weeks later, when I complained again to Ms. Chandley about my pay being so much lower than the young boys', she told me that she could not help me because she herself was also paid less than the male department managers in the store.

11. I was terribly discouraged by these comments and, as a result, and because of my bad experience when I complained about Joe's inappropriate conduct, I did not talk with anyone other than my department managers about the pay disparity.

12. Despite the fact that I have a Master's Degree and significant life experience, no one at Wal-Mart has ever encouraged me to seek a management position. Until January 2003, I had never seen any information in my store about a management training program, and I am not aware of any women in my store who have gotten into any program like that.

13. I did not actually see a description of the management training program that was announced in January 2003. I was out during that month for two weeks due to a severe sprained ankle, and when I returned to work, I saw a brief full color announcement next to the time clock announcing a new management training program for women and that application could be made on the store computer. The announcement had not been posted before I took my medical leave. However, I soon learned that the deadline for applying had also passed while I was on leave. If a longer application time had been given, I could and would have applied when I returned to work and saw the announcement.

14. I have personal knowledge of each and every fact set forth in the Declaration, and if called to testify as a witness in this matter, I could and would competently testify to each of these facts.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Kentucky that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on March 22nd, 2003, at Louisville, Ky.

/s/ Sue M. Brown

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, KAREN WILLIAMSON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiffs, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF PATRICIA BUCKLEY IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Patricia Buckley, declare:

1. I am a female who lives in Noble, Oklahoma. From July 2000 to August 2001, I worked at the Wal-Mart Supercenter in Norman, Oklahoma.

2. When I applied at Wal-Mart, I was pursuing a degree in business management from Moore Norman Technology Center. I was looking for an opportunity to develop a career in business management

3. During my interview at Wal-Mart, I told Assistant Manager Mark that I was interested in management at Wal-Mart and that I was concurrently seeking my degree in that area. He told me that the only positions available in the store were cashier or people greeter positions, and that a cashier was a good place to begin if I wanted to become a manager. He explained to me that the first thing managers need to learn is how to run the front end of the store, including the cashier, lay-away and customer service positions.

4. I took the cashier position believing that it would be a stepping stone to a management position. Once I learned the cashier position, I began asking Assistant Manager Mark and Assistant Manager Landon for training in customer service and lay-away to prepare myself to become a manager. Although I requested cross-training repeatedly, I was never provided any training in either of these areas for the entire year I worked at Wal-Mart.

5. I observed that most of the cashiers at the Supercenter were female. In contrast, most of the managers were male. The Store Manager, the Co-Managers and the majority of Assistant Managers at my store were male.

6. During my employment at Wal-Mart, I spoke to Assistant Managers Mark and Landon several times about my interest in business management. I even noted on my annual performance appraisal in June, 2001, that I wanted to "move up in the company."

7. Despite my interest in a promotion to the management level, neither Assistant Manager Mark nor Assistant Manager Landon offered me an opportunity to apply for the Management Training Program. I never saw any written information about the program, and during my time at Wal-Mart, I was never even told that this program existed. I was given no information concerning how to be promoted to management training, or what I needed to do to be promoted. To my knowledge, there were never any positions posted for the Management Training Program during my employment at Wal-Mart. I also never saw any written information regarding any prerequisites for joining management at Wal-Mart.

8. After a year in the cashier position at Wal-Mart with no opportunity to gain additional knowledge or experience of store operations, and no encouragement from management, it was apparent that Wal-Mart was not going to advance me past my current hourly, non-management position. I terminated my employment with Wal-Mart in August 2001.

9. I would consider returning to work for Wal-Mart if I was assured that I would be provided fair opportunities for advancement, fair wages and a non-discriminatory work environment

I have personal knowledge of each and every fact set forth in the Declaration, and if called to testify as a witness in this matter, I could and would competently testify to each of these facts.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Oklahoma that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on 4/3, 2003, at Noble, Oklahoma.

/s/ Patricia A. Buckley

Patricia Buckley

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF VIVIAN CALIMEE IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, VIVIAN CALIMEE, declare that:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein. While employed by Sam's Club, I have also used the name Vivian Bowie.

2. I was hired to work for a Sam's Club in Joliet, Illinois in 1988 as a Sales Representative at $7.00 an hour. In 1990, in order to become an assistant manager, I was required by General Manager Louis Johnson and my Director of Operations [name unknown] to relocate to a Sam's Club in Madison, Wisconsin. Since 1990, in order to maintain my position as an assistant manager, my General Managers and/or Directors of Operations have required me to relocate to several Sam's Clubs, including those in Streamwood, Illinois, Naperville, Illinois, Matteson, Illinois and Joliet, Illinois. I understood that I did not have a choice but to transfer to wherever management required.

3. My evaluation ratings have always been "met expectations" or "exceeds expectations."

4. Since I started at Sam's Club, I was interested in advancing my career into management. As early as 1991, I began expressing an interest in management to my supervisor. In my 1991 evaluation, I wrote that "I would love the opportunity to become Regional Marketing Director." Attached hereto as Exhibit A is a true and correct copy of my Management Performance Appraisal and Plan of Action signed on August 2, 1991.

5. The following year, I wrote, "My goal is to become a Gen. Mgr. within a year . . ." Attached hereto as Exhibit B is a true and correct copy of my Management Performance Appraisal and Plan of Action dated December 4, 1992.

6. Even though I was not promoted as I had hoped in 1992, I continued to believe that, with hard work and perseverance, I would reach my career goal of becoming a general manager. In my 1993 evaluation, I again wrote that my goal was to "[b]ecome a General Manager within a year." Attached hereto as Exhibit C is a true and correct copy of my Management Performance Appraisal and Plan of Action dated July 28, 1993.

7. Beginning in 1995, I regularly spoke with Director of Operations Brian Collins during my evaluations about my desire to move up in management. In my 1995 evaluation, I again wrote that my goal was "[t]o be promoted to Gen. Mgr. this year or begin[ning] of 1996." Attached hereto as Exhibit D is a true and correct copy of my Assistant Coach Performance Appraisal and Commitment to Success dated June 6, 1995. I also had many informal meetings with Mr. Collins asking him for advice about what I could do to advance in my career. He once told me to learn operations and keep up with the merchandise. I followed his advice to the letter assuming that these extra efforts would finally bring me a promotion. Again, I was disappointed.

8. In 1995, I spoke with Regional Marketing Manager Gina Schieck during my evaluations and in various informal conversations about my interest in advancing in my Sam's Club management career. I also expressed concern to Ms. Schieck that I felt I was being blocked from further advancement. I told her I was not sure why I had not been promoted above an assistant manager position, despite having an excellent record and consistently expressing my interest over several years. She reassured me that she would assist me but gave me no specific advice or information about how I would be able to advance. I am not aware of any actions that she took to assist me after this conversation.

9. By 1996, I had been very vocal with several members of management about my desire to move up in management at Sam's Club. In a meeting with both General Manager Jeff Kulesa and Director of Operations Mr. Collins, I expressed concern over why I had not yet moved up in management, despite having been an assistant manager for six years and having an excellent record. I expressed frustration that, had I been promoted when I should have been, I would have been making more money and would have been much more advanced in my career. Shortly after this meeting, I received my first and only coaching for what Mr. Kulesa called a "lack of follow-up" and "lack of urgency." I later heard from a male Assistant Manager [name unknown] that he had overheard a conversation between Mr. Kulesa and Mr. Collins about me and specifically about my repeated requests to move up in management. This assistant manager told me that, in this exchange, Mr. Collins suggested to Mr. Kulesa that I receive a write-up to "cool [me] down."

10. In 1998, while I was working as an assistant manager in the Naperville, Illinois Sam's Club, the General Manager Gilda Amoroso-Eboli quit and I was told to assume her responsibilities for several months. The store also had no co-manager and I assumed these responsibilities as well. I spoke with Director of Operations Collins when he visited the store about my interest in the open co-manager position. Despite having been an assistant manager for eight years and having successfully fulfilled my duties as acting co-manager and general manager, a male, Ron Suggs, was brought in from another store to fill the co-manager position. He was a good friend of Mr. Collins.

11. In 1999, Trip Gannon replaced Brian Collins as the Director of Operations. I spoke with Mr. Gannon about my interest in being promoted, including my goal of running my own store as a General Manager. Mr. Gannon told me that if I wanted to be promoted, I would have to prove myself to him. I felt this was unfair because I had spent the previous nine years proving myself in my position as an Assistant Manager and I had an excellent record.

12. By 2000, I had been an Assistant Manager for 10 years. Despite repeatedly expressing an interest in moving into a general manager position since 1992, I had not yet been promoted. In my 2000 evaluation I again wrote, "I look forward to becoming a General Manager in the near future." Attached hereto as Exhibit E is a true and correct copy of my Sam's Club Performance Planning and Review for Business Manager dated March 10, 2000. I continued to regularly speak with Mr. Gannon about my interest in becoming a general manager. I told him that I felt I was being blocked from advancing in my career and that I did not feel listened to or supported. Mr. Gannon promised me he would look into my concerns but he never got back to me.

13. Feeling that my own supervisors were indifferent to my concerns, I decided to speak with the Director of Operations of a different region, Bob Miller. I set up a meeting with him but he failed to show up, later claiming that he had forgotten about it. I then scheduled a second meeting with him. When we finally met, I told him about my interest in moving up in management and running my own Sam's Club as a General Manager. He told me that he liked my attitude and spirit but he did not commit to helping me, only stating that he needed more time to get to know my skills. I also asked whether there was anything I could do to improve my chances for a promotion. Mr. Miller told me that, with my character and ambition, I would become a General Manager "soon." It was frustrating to me that those to whom I had expressed an interest in advancing in my management career continued to be promoted and replaced so that I was left having to prove myself over and over to each new group of supervisors.

14. Later in 2000, I learned that the General Manager position of the Joliet, Illinois Sam's Club was open. I spoke with Director of Operations Collins about my interest in the position but he told me it was not my "time" yet. He told me, "timing is everything." I did not understand what he meant by that, especially since I had been an Assistant Manager already for 10 years. I finally asked him what was it about me he did not like. I told him I had done everything he asked me to do, including implementing programs, learning about operations, etc. In desperation, I asked, "What more could I do?" Mr. Collins was vague and unresponsive. This was extremely discouraging to me, especially when I found out that a less qualified male, Rodney Crockett, got the General Manager position. Less than six months later, Mr. Crockett left but, before I even knew the position was open, another male, Duane Ebach, got the position. The position was never posted and I did not have an opportunity to express my interest. I complained to the new Director of Operations, Larry [last name unknown], who told me there was nothing he could do about it because it had been decided before he came. I contemplated complaining to a higher level of management but I continued to be concerned about retaliation and did not want to risk it.

15. During my time as an assistant manager, I trained males who were hired after I was and who were promoted to co-manager and general manager positions while I was being told it was not "my time" yet. They included Dave Tanner, the General Manager of the Joliet, Illinois Sam's Club, whom I trained while we were in Matteson, Illinois, and Billy Herod, the General Manager of a Sam's Club in Detroit, Michigan, whom I trained in 1989 in Joliet, Illinois.

16. In 2000, I injured my back while carrying boxes at the Joliet, Illinois Sam's Club. I have had to take several leaves of absence and, as of February 2002, I have been unable to work due to this injury. In May 2002, my doctor released me for light duty, but I was told that Sam's Club would not take me back until I was fully healed. I am currently not employed.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and of the State of California, that the foregoing is true and correct. I signed this on March 19, 2003 in March.

/s/ Vivian Calimee

Vivian Calimee, Declarant

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, CLEO PAGE, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, DEBORAH GUNTER, KAREN WILLIAMSON AND EDITH ARANA, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF THEARSA COLLIER IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Thearsa Collier, declare:

1. I make this statement on the basis of my personal knowledge, and, if called as a witness, could and would testify competently to the facts herein.

2. I was employed by Wal-Mart, Inc. from January 2000 until January 2001. I am female. I have a Bachelor of Science degree and a Master's in Public Administration. I reside in Virginia.

3. Prior to working at Wal-Mart, I was in the United States Navy for nine years, and then I worked in retail. During my tenure in the Navy, I worked in the pediatric trauma unit, was responsible for a $260,000 annual medical budget, and supervised as many as 40 people. I also received leadership training in two separate courses entitled Total Quality Leadership and Total Quality Management. I was honorably discharged as a Hospital Corpsman, Third Class. After my discharge from the Navy, I worked in retail as a sales associate for the Army Air Force Exchange Service (AAFES). At AAFES, I received training in customer service, stocking, zoning and running the cash registers.

4. During my time at AAFES, I fell in love with retail work and decided that I wanted to make a career out of it. Both my father and brother had worked for Wal-Mart, and I was impressed with what I thought was the Company's culture of valuing its associates and creating a good working environment.

5. In November 1999, I applied to be an Assistant Manager Trainee at Wal-Mart. I was interviewed by Bob Hart, a District Manager. During that interview, Mr. Hart stated that as a manager in Wal-Mart, I would be required to move from store to store. I explained to Mr. Hart that my father had just passed away, and that I needed to work in Northwest Florida so that I could be near my mother and help to take care of her. I explained that I would be glad to move from store to store, as long as those stores were in the Florida panhandle. Mr. Hart said 'okay', and I understood that I would only be relocated to locations within Northwest Florida. He said that he would be sending me a letter regarding relocation that I would need to sign, and I assumed when I signed it that it encompassed my understanding with Mr. Hart. Indeed, I thought that I would not have been hired if what I told Mr. Hart about needing to stay in that region was a problem.

6. In January 2000, I became an Assistant Manager Trainee at a Supercenter store in Crestview, Florida. I trained there for sixteen weeks with Mike Whittaker, an Assistant Manager. Mr. Whittaker was primarily a manager of hardlines, so I received extensive training in hardlines. I never received any written evaluation, but sometime in March, District Manager Hart provided an oral training review. He told me that both my Store Manager, Jon Kurpil, and Mr. Whittaker were impressed with my people skills and how fast I learn. Mr Hart also indicated that trainees usually complete all training before becoming a full Assistant Manager.

7. Toward the end of my training, Judy Langford, a District Manager from Alabama, and Steve Lawrence, a Store Manager from a store in Geneva, Alabama came to speak with me about an Assistant Manager position in Mr. Lawrence's store. The Geneva store was about 80 miles from where I was living, and outside of the area I had requested to work in. Additionally, it was not a Supercenter, so I knew I would not be able to work my way up to Co-Manager. When I asked to stay in the Crestview, Florida store, or relocate closer to my home and my widowed mother, I was told by Store Manager Kurpil that if I did not go to the store in Geneva, I could be sent anywhere, including California. I also asked District Manager Hart again about openings in the Florida panhandle, but he just became agitated and said that I had to be able to move within a five hour radius. Because I was afraid of getting transferred even further, I agreed to go to Alabama.

8. I was very disappointed that I had to move to a store in Alabama, and I was especially confused about what the relocation policy required in light of what I learned from some men. First, Jesse Hill, a male manager of the meat department told me that I could stay in the Crestview store if Mr. Hart or Mr. Kurpill wanted me to stay; he said they could make it happen if they wanted. When I asked Mr. Hart about this statement, he did not specifically deny it, and his silence made me think it was true. Likewise, other male members of management told me that they were able to choose their stores. Specifically, Scott Suczes, a Store Manager, told me during a leadership training I attended in May 2000, that he was able to stay as an Assistant Manager in the store he trained in; similarly, Mike Whittaker told me he was able to choose the Crestview store, and David Moody, an Assistant Manager at Crestview, told me he was transferred to Ft. Walton Beach at his request. I was never informed exactly what the policy really required; after hearing all the conflicting stories, I felt like there was no real policy and that I just had no choice but to go to Geneva.

9. When I arrived in the Geneva, Alabama store in April 2000, I was given a position over softlines by Steve Lawrence, the Store Manager. There was one other Assistant Manager in the store, a male named Carl Gassett, and he was assigned to hardlines. In the Geneva store, the Assistant Managers did not rotate, and I was disappointed in being assigned to softlines. I had understood, based on my training at the Crestview store, that Assistant Managers rotate, but Mr. Gassett told me he never worked over softlines. I preferred hardlines because Mike Whittaker told me that managers over hardlines are normally promoted faster and given more opportunity for promotion; I hoped that I could move to hardlines soon. During a managerial meeting District Manager Judy Langford asked Store Manager Lawrence why he always put the female Assistant Mangers over softlines, and he told her "because that's what women know." Ms. Langford did not respond or disagree with his comment. District Manager Langford did not instruct Store Manager Lawrence to change the assignments, or to base assignments on any factors other than his stereotypical prejudices. Again, I believed I had no choice but to stay in softlines in that store.

10. Prior to beginning at the Geneva store, I had been scheduled to attend a leadership training school. Once in Geneva, Mr. Lawrence did not think I should attend, but District Manager Hart intervened and advocated on my behalf. After that, I was touring the store with Mr. Lawrence, and -- in a tone of disgust -- he told me that as a "black" and as a "woman", I would go far with Wal-Mart. I knew from his tone of voice that he would never give me a fair chance to succeed.

11. During this leadership training, I learned that there is no policy requiring an Assistant Manager to stay in a given store for a certain amount of time, and that, in fact, moving can help with promotion. More specifically, Mr. Scott Suczes told me that there are no set limits for how long one had to stay in a store, and that he moved several times in order to make himself more knowledgeable and promotable. Because of what he told me, because I felt like I could not advance as far as an Assistant Manager of softlines in the smaller Geneva store, and because of my continued need to help my mother, I requested to be transferred back to Florida as soon as I returned from leadership training. I made the request to Mr. Lawrence, the Store Manager. My request was denied. Contrary to what I had been taught at the leadership training, Mr. Lawrence told me that I had to stay in his store for a minimum of eighteen months to two years. I made several other requests after this, and each time I was again told by Store Manager Lawrence and/or District Manager Langford that I would have to wait to be transferred even though I had been told differently by the men at the leadership training program.

12. During this time, I attempted to use the Open Door policy to address my concerns. This policy provides that any employee can discuss with any superior, up to and including the CEO, any concerns the employee has, and that the employee can expect a fair and responsible exchange. I called Regional Personnel Managers Steve Schultheis and Rudy Eckerman, several times to discuss my inability to be transferred, as well as continuing problems I was having with Store Manager Lawrence. In particular, I explained to them that Mr. Lawrence yelled at me on nearly a daily basis and embarrassed me in front of the associates. In contrast, Assistant Manager Carl Gassett made frequent mistakes and often could not work a register properly, but when I expressed concerns about him, Mr. Lawrence would say "that's just Karl." Admittedly, Mr. Lawrence had a loud voice, but his harsh tone, severe looks and bullying demeanor were generally reserved for me. Additionally, I was the only one he told: "We're all rednecks here, so you might as well get used to it." Mr. Eckerman told me that he had investigated the complaints by asking Mr. Lawrence about it, and that he believed Mr. Lawrence. I later found out that Wal-Mart had confirmed that Mr. Lawrence made the statement about everyone being a redneck, as well as the statement about blacks and women advancing.

(Attached hereto as Collier Exhibit A is a true and correct copy of a memo from Mr. Eckerman to Torn Coughlin, the President and CEO of Wal-Mart).

13. In late July 2000, I purchased some plants on my lunch hour. There was a pricing discrepancy, and the associate gave me a discount on one plant. Charles Howell, the Support Manager on duty then reviewed the policy on the computer and told me that I should get the lower price on all my purchases. When I asked the service desk for the discount for all the purchases, the associate was unable to re-ring the purchase with all the discounts. I then learned from one of the associates who was present, Theresa Bryant, that I should not have received any discount for any purchase. Again, however, the service desk associate was unable to re-ring the purchase to take off the discount before the store closed. As soon as I returned to work, I informed the new Store Manager, Kathy Searcy, about the error. I had been trained that Wal-Mart policy provides that if you learn of an error that has occurred, you are to inform management so that they can correct the situation, and that no form of retaliation will take place if you do so. Despite this policy; I received a written disciplinary note, or coaching, stating that my attempt to get the discount was "contrary to company policy." The coaching indicated that I had 45 days to show significant improvement. I had never seen any male Manager have their mistakes held against them in this way; in fact, it was Support Manager Charles Howell who gave me the wrong information on the company policy, and nobody said anything to him about that.

14. Shortly after this incident, I again called Mr. Eckerman to complain about my working conditions. I said that it was not right that I had been disciplined for an honest error I had tried to correct, and that I was being discriminated against. In response to this attempt to use the Open Door, Mr. Eckerman told me that I would be transferred to a store in Thomasville, Georgia, a store that was three hours from where my mother lived and even further than the Geneva store. He also said that I would be monitored for six months instead of forty-five days, and that if I performed well during the six months, he would remove the coaching from my record. I told Mr. Eckerman that the coaching should be removed immediately altogether, but he said that was the best he would do. Mr. Eckermon expressed no concern with my report of discrimination nor did he indicate that there would be any investigation or followup. There was no indication of how long I would have to remain in Georgia, nor when, if ever, I could return to Northwest Florida.

15. In August 2000, I wrote a letter to the President and CEO of Wal-Mart complaining of discrimination based on gender and race. I never received any response to this Open Door effort. Instead, I was transferred to the Thomasville store in September, where I felt like my every move was being watched. I realized that the Open Door policy at Wal-Mart was a façade and resulted only in retaliation.

16. Sometime in December 2000 or early January 2001, Mitch Day, the District Manager for the Thomasville store, told me that he "did not believe what he had heard" and that I was a very good worker with a good personality. I knew that my use of the Open Door had not been confidential, and had resulted in my new District Manager receiving unfair reports against me before I had any chance to defend my reputation. His comments solidified my belief that I was a victim of a good 'ole boys club.

17. As soon as I was told that I had to be monitored for six months, I gave up hope of making my career at Wal-Mart and began pursuing other jobs. In December 2000, I was offered a position at the AAFES, where I had worked prior to Wal-Mart. The position paid better, and I felt I would have a more fair chance to advance. I told Wal-Mart that I was leaving for a better job because I realized that Wal-Mart would not listen to my concerns, and that my efforts to address the discrimination that I had faced resulted only in retaliation and additional discrimination. After giving proper notice, I left Wal-Mart in January 2001.

I declare under penalty of perjury of the laws of the United States and State of Virginia that the foregoing is true and correct.

This Declaration was signed by me on April 11, 2003 at Hampton, Virginia.

/s/ Thearsa L. Collier

UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT

NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA

BETTY DUKES, PATRICIA SURGESON, EDITH ARANA, DEBORAH GUNTER, CHRISTINE KWAPNOSKI, CLEO PAGE, KAREN WILLIAMSON, on behalf of themselves and all others similarly situated, Plaintiff, vs. WAL-MART STORES, INC., Defendant	Case No. C-01-2252 MJJ DECLARATION OF JEANETTE CONNAKER IN SUPPORT OF PLAINTIFFS' MOTION FOR CLASS CERTIFICATION

I, Jeanette Connaker, declare:

1. I was employed at Wal-Mart from August 1994 until September 17, 1999. I worked at store No. 1507 in Wichita, Kansas, which was originally a regular Wal-Mart store and later became a Supercenter.

2. Before I began my employment at Wal-Mart I had retail work experience at Sears and several years of management experience. My first management opportunity was at Olive's East, a retail gift shop and cafe in Aurora, Colorado, where I worked as an Assistant Manager. I also worked as an Assistant Manager of Milo Beauty and Barber Supply when I lived in St. Louis, Missouri.

3. I excelled in all of my positions at Wal-Mart. Wal-Mart recognized my contribution to the store through promotions, raises and awards. However, despite my proven performance and my repeated communication that I wanted to become a support manager or assistant manager, Wal-Mart would not give me the opportunity to progress past the department manager/zone manager positions. After five years of service to Wal-Mart I finally realized I had reached a dead-end and left to pursue other opportunities to further my career goals.

4. Initially Wal-Mart hired me as a fulltime cashier. Within 90 days of being hired, I was promoted to customer service manager supervising the cashiers. In 1995, after working as a customer service manager for about a year, I decided that I wanted to work my way into a support manager and then assistant manager position with Wal-Mart. Since support managers and assistant managers had to be familiar with several different departments and positions in the store, I decided to step down from the customer service manager position in order to familiarize myself with other departments and positions in the store.

5. The first position I took was a sales associate position in electronics. In July 1996 I was evaluated as "above standard" on my performance in that position. On that evaluation, I communicated and recorded the career goals I had developed at that time, which were to learn the store "from front to back.," to work toward my fullest potential at Wal-Mart, to become a department manager and to work toward obtaining a support manager position. See Jeanette Connaker's July 1996 Associate Evaluation, a true and correct copy hereto attached as Exhibit A.

6. In September of 1996 I reached my goal of becoming a department manager when I was selected for the position of department manager of toys by Store Manager Mike Davison. In July of 1997 I was evaluated in the toy department manager position. Again I was rated as an "above standard" employee. And once again I informed Wal-Mart that I planned to continue to "strive for excellence" in my employment and to continue to obtain positions with "increase[d] responsibility." I set the goals of obtaining a promotion to Zone Manager, an hourly supervisory position, and to reach Assistant Manager within two years, which I stated on the evaluation. See Jeanette Connaker's July 1997 Associate Evaluation, a true and correct copy hereto attached as Exhibit B.

